

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE

THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA was completed in 1913; the INDEX VOLUME, with supplementary articles, in 1914. Since then the editors have published "The Catholic Encyclopedia and Its Makers," containing biographies of the contributors and others engaged in producing the work, and a volume containing the revisions in the New Code of Canon Law. This, therefore, is the first SUPPLEMENT in the real sense. It was impossible to issue one sooner, owing to war conditions. With great difficulty the volume is published now, owing to the delays in correspondence, and the impossibility of getting in touch with many former contributors. This volume shows that THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA is a work of permanent value that in substance many of its articles on Art, Education, Law, Literature, Philosophy, Religion and social questions need scarcely any revision, that additional or supplemental matter is needed chiefly in biography and geography, to cover the changes that have come about in territorial boundaries and in the establishment of new nations, in the constitution of new dioceses and the opening up of new missions; the origin of new social, political and religious organizations and movements and the development of those that were already in progress. The articles on these subjects bring the whole work up to date, making it actually more valuable than ever as a work of reference.

In size, form and style, editorial and typographical, this volume conforms in every particular with the original volumes of the Encyclopedia and we trust its readers will find it as useful as a source of information as well as a record of progress.

Abbees (cf. C. E., I-7b).—A nun is ineligible for the office of abbees unless she is of legitimate birth, and is at least forty years old; ten years, moreover, must have elapsed since her first profession in the order. These are the only requirements laid down by the Code, which, however, confirms whatever more rigid qualifications are prescribed by the Constitutions of the various orders. The Council of Trent was less rigorous, as it fixed the years of profession at eight, and authorized lowering the age to thirty and the period of profession to five years, when no suitable candidate possessing the stricter qualifications could be found.

Abbir, a titular see in Proconsular Africa, formerly Abbir-Cella or Abbir Majus, to distinguish it from Abbir Minus in the same locality. It was a suffragan of Carthage. One of its Bishops, Felix, is mentioned in the lists of African prelates as having taken the Catholic side in the great Carthaginian conference of 411 between Catholics and Donatists. Its ruins exist to-day at Henchir-en-Naam, about forty miles southwest of Tunis.

Abbot (cf. C. E., I-15d).—An abbot is the superior of an autonomous community of monks comprising as a rule at least twelve religious. There are two chief classes of abbots: regular abbots de regimine, that is, superiors having jurisdiction only over the persons lay or ecclesiastical, attached to their abbey, and abbots nullius (i. e., of a territory belonging to no diocese) whose jurisdiction extends also over the faithful and churches of a district around the abbey entirely separated from any diocese. The territory thus ruled is called an abbey nullius and has its own clergy, who are not necessarily members of the monastic institute and its own parishes. If it has less than three parishes it is governed by special laws, just as the religious chapter of the abbey is governed by its own laws and constitutions. The erection, circumscription, division, union and suppression of abbeyes nullius are reserved to the Holy See. An abbot nullius must have the qualifications required for the episcopacy. He is nominated and instituted by the pope, unless the right of election or presentation has been granted to a particular organization or person, in which case he must be confirmed or instituted by the pope. At the election he is chosen by an absolute majority of the valid votes cast, unless there is a special law requiring a greater percentage. If the canons or the constitutions of his order require him to be blessed, he must receive the abbatial blessing, from a bishop, whom he is free to select, within three months after receiving his Apostolic letters, unless he is legitimately prevented; otherwise he is by the very fact suspended from jurisdiction.

Abbots nullius are included under the term ordinary when it is used in canon law, unless they are expressly excluded; they are also included under the term bishop when the circumstances or the context do not show a different intent on the part of the lawgiver. After their appointment they may not interfere for any reason in the government of their abbey personally or through another before taking canonical possession of it; if they interfere they incur a canonical disability, and persons who admit them before they have shown their Apostolic letters are by the very fact suspended from the right of electing during the pleasure of the Holy See.

Abbots nullius have the same ordinary powers and obligations as a residential bishop in his own diocese. Even though they have not been consecrated, they can, if they have received the abbatial blessing, consecrate churches and fixed altars when necessary, and within their own territory and during their term of office they may impart all the blessings reserved to bishops, except the pontifical blessing; they can consecrate chalices, patens, and portable altars, with holy oil blessed by a bishop; grant indulgences of fifty days; administer confirmation, and confer first tonsure and minor orders on their own subjects, even secular, and on others who have the requisite dimissorial letters, but orders conferred by them in any other case would be invalid.

As long as they possess local jurisdiction abbots nullius can give dimissorial letters to seculars, even for the reception of major orders. They can impart the papal blessing with a plenary indulgence while within their own territory, but only on one of the more solemn feasts each year (bishops on the other hand may grant it on two days, one being Easter Sunday); they can designate and declare a daily perpetual privileged altar in any church of their territories if there is none there already, but they cannot do so in public or semi-public oratories, unless these are united to a parochial church or subsidiary to it, nor in a private oratory. Abbots nullius in their own territory, even when they are not bishops, use the pontifical insignia with throne and canopy, and may lawfully hold Divine services there according to the pontifical rite; they may wear the pectoral cross, the ring, and the violet zucchetto, even when they are outside their territory.

Abbots nullius, the abbot primate and abbots superior of monastic congregations have a right to assist at ecumenical councils and the right to a decisive, not merely to a consultative, vote. Abbots nullius, furthermore, must attend the quinquennial meeting of the local ordinaries of their province. On being promoted they must make a profession of faith according to the formula approved by the Holy See, in presence of an Apostolic delegate; if they fail to do so without a just cause, they are to be warned, and if the warning is fruitless they are to be punished, even by deprivation of office and dignity, and of the enjoyment of its fruits for the time being. On the death of an abbot nullius, the religious chapter succeeds to the government, unless the constitutions of the abbey provide otherwise; within eight days it must designate a vicar capitular to rule the abbey until the new abbot is elected; if it fails to do so the metropolitan is to appoint one, unless other provision is made in the constitutions.

A regular abbot de regimine lawfully elected is to receive the blessing of the bishop of the diocese where his monastery is situated within three months after his election. Abbots who are not exempt are blessed by the authority of their own bishops, whereas for the benediction of exempt abbots the consent of the pope is required. Since the Benedictines are exempt, being engaged in many distant lands, it has not infrequently occurred that the abbatial blessing has had to be deferred for a long time while awaiting the mandate from Rome authorizing the bestowal of the blessing. Consequently on 19 June, 1921, Benedict XV granted a general mandate in virtue of which the benediction may be imparted to any abbot of the confederated Benedictines by the diocesan bishop without a special mandate, or by any bishop in communion with the Holy See if the diocesan bishop is dead, or if there is written proof either that he has given his consent or that he is legitimately prevented from bestowing the blessing. If a regular abbot de regimine is a priest and has received the abbatial benediction legitimately, he can confer tonsure and minor orders on his own professed subjects; under any other circumstances, ordination conferred by him would be void, unless he possessed the episcopal character, all privileges to the contrary having now been revoked. Regular abbots de regimine, like abbots nullius, may pontificate and have a throne and canopy; they may wear a pectoral cross and a ring, but not the violet zucchetto. In conclusion, it may be noted that no one may now become an abbot under the age of thirty.

In 1921 there were eighteen abbeys nullius: Monte Cassino, Subiaco, Monte Vergine, Cava dei Tirreni, and St. Paul-without-the-Walls (all in Italy), New Nurcia (Australia), Our Lady Help of Christians (Belmont, North Carolina), Santa Maria de Monserrato (Rio de Janeiro), Martinsberg (an archabbey, Hungary), Einsiedeln (Switzerland), Saint Peter (Muenster, Canada), all ruled by Black Benedictines; Monte Oliveto Maggiore (Italy) under the Olivetans; St. Maurice-en-Valais (Switzerland) under Augustinians; Wettingen-Mehrerau (Vorarlberg, Austria), under Cistercians; Nonantula, which is perpetually united to the Archdiocese of Modena; San Martino al Monte Cimino and Saints Vincent and Anastasius near Rome, formerly under Cistercians, Miridite or St. Alexander de Oroshi (Albania), formerly under Benedictines, are now governed by secular abbots. In 1920 Benedict XV made the sanctuary of Santa Maria di Polsi in Calabria, Italy, formerly belonging to the Basilian monks, a titular abbey nullius. Its rector, who is removable at the will of the Bishop of Gerace, is ipso facto a titular abbot nullius, with limited special powers and privileges, including authorization to administer Confirmation during his term of office.

Abbreviators (cf. C. E., I-28c).—In the reorganization of the papal chancery under Pius X the college of abbreviators of the greater presidency disappeared. As the abbreviators of the lower presidency had been suppressed in the reforms of Pius VII, the last chapter in the history of ecclesiastical abbreviators has now been written.

Abduction (cf. C. E., I-32b), is viewed in the canon law either (a) as a crime or (b) as a diriment matrimonial impediment. (a) The crime of abduction is committed when a man with a view to marriage or to the gratification of his lust carries off any woman by force or fraud against her will, or a female minor who consents, but does so without the knowledge of or against the orders of her parents or guardians. The law now explicitly requires for the crime of elopement or abduction by seduction that the woman should be minor. Formerly the crime of abduction was punished among other ways by excommunication incurred ipso facto and perpetual infamy; now there is no excommunication, but the abductor is excluded from legitimate ecclesiastical acts and is to be punished otherwise according to the gravity of his offense.

(b) There can be no marriage between a man who abducts a woman with a view to marrying her, as long as she remains in his power; if the woman, however, after being separated from him and restored to liberty in a place of safety consents to wed him, the impediment ceases. The Code extends the Tridentine legislation by enacting that the same impediment arises also when a man with a view to marriage detains a woman by physical force in a place where she lives or to which she had gone of her own accord.

Aberdeen, DIOCESE OF (ABERDONENSIS; cf. C. E., I-41d).—The fourth bishop, Rt. Rev. Aeneas Chisholm, d. 13 January, 1918, was born at Inverness in 1836, studied at Blairs College, Aberdeen, and at the Gregorian University, Rome, being ordained in 1860. After serving in various missions in Scotland he was made rector of Blairs in 1880, the new buildings being erected during his incumbency. He was consecrated Bishop of Aberdeen in 1899. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. George H. Bennett, b. in Antigua, B. W. I., 1875, ordained 1898, consecrated 1918.

The Catholic population of the diocese is about 12,000. It has 43 churches, 39 missions, 16 stations, 1 abbey (Fort Augustus), 7 convents for women, 47 secular priests, 26 monks, 16 lay brothers, 1 seminary with 120 seminarians and 9 professors. The congregations of women include the Religious of the Sacred Heart, the Sisters of Nazareth, the Sisters of Mercy (3 houses), the Franciscans and the Sisters of St. Joseph. St. Mary's College, at Blairs, Aberdeen, is under the conduct of diocesan clergy. There is a school for girls with higher and junior grades with 8 teachers and an attendance of 100. There are 17 elementary schools with 50 teachers and an attendance of 1931. Under the Education Act of 1918 all the elementary schools are now taken over by the local education authorities and supported by the public funds. Nazareth House, Aberdeen, is an industrial school for girls, with four teachers and an attendance of 100. There are likewise a home for old men and women, an orphanage for boys and one for girls.

In September, 1911, the centenary of the death of Bishop Hay, who did so much for the restoration of the Church in Scotland, was celebrated with great solemnity at Fort Augustus. During the World War three secular priests and several of the Benedictines served as army or navy chaplains.

Abjuration (cf. C. E., I-44c).—As schism, like apostasy and heresy, is now punished with excommunication reserved specially to the Holy See, the ordinary may not absolve from the censure if it is brought before him in the external forum unless the culprit has juridically abjured his schism, that is in his presence or in that of his delegate and at least two witnesses, as in cases of apostasy or heresy.

Abortion (cf. C. E., I-46d).—Those who actively and efficaciously bring about an abortion, the mother herself included, incur excommunication latae sententiae, that is inflicted by the law without the formality of a sentence, absolution from which is reserved to the ordinary; if one of the guilty parties is a cleric he is, moreover, to be canonically deposed. The Code, it may be remarked, in speaking of co-operation says that those who command or induce another to perform an action, or who aid him in such a way that the crime would not have been committed but for their assistance, share equally in the guilt with the principal culprit, and so incur the same penalty.

An irregularity, that is, a hindrance to the reception or exercise of orders in the Church, from which an ordinary cannot dispense, even in the case of his own subjects, is incurred by those who procure the abortion of a human fœtus, and their co-operators. The Code does not restrict the penalty to the case of an animated fœtus as was formerly the accepted doctrine. It should be noted that these penalties are imposed only for abortion, not for other operations even when they are sinful or criminal.

Abrytus, a titular see of Lower Mœsia, a country of ancient Europe loosely corresponding to modern Bulgaria, and suffragan of Marcianopolis. This city is first mentioned by the historian Dexippus as the place near which the Emperor Decius was killed in his pursuit of the invading Goths in 251. A bishop of Abrytus, Marcian, defended Nestorius at the Council of Ephesus (431). Some historians identify the ancient city with Aboba, seven miles northwest of Jenibazaar and north of Shumla; others with Abtaat in Dobrudja.

Abstinence (cf. C. E., I-67b).—The law of abstinence regards only the quality of food, while that of fasting is concerned now merely with the quantity of food that may be taken. The law of abstinence is binding on all those who have completed their seventh year; it forbids the eating of flesh meat or soup made from meat, but not the use of eggs, milk, butter, cheese, or of condiments even when made from animal fat. The prohibition against eating fish and flesh at the same meal has been abolished. Abstinence is now obligatory only on Fridays, Ember Days, the vigils of Pentecost, the Assumption, All Saints', and Christmas, on Ash Wednesday and the Saturdays of Lent; but the obligation ceases on Holy Saturday at noon, and also on all feasts of precept, except those falling on week-days in Lent; furthermore, if one of the vigils mentioned above falls on Sunday there is no abstinence on the Sunday, or on the preceding Saturday as was formerly the case. For ages the Holy See had persistently refused to abolish the Saturday abstinence, though in many places indults dispensing from it had been granted; but now abstinence, as noted above, is obligatory only on the Saturdays of Lent and the vigil of Pentecost. In some countries an indult has been granted to transfer Saturday abstinence in Lent to Wednesdays, excepting Ember Saturday. There is no mention in the Code of abstinence on Rogation Days nor of the Advent fast or abstinence as such. The regulations set forth in the Code do not affect special indults or obligations imposed by vow or by the rules of religious or of communities not bound by vow.

Local ordinaries may appoint a special day of abstinence for their own territories as an isolated occurrence. They and parish priests can in individual cases and for just reasons dispense from abstinence persons or families subject to them, even if they are outside of their territories, and also travelers, possessing a domicile or quasi-domicile elsewhere, who happen to be within their territories. An ordinary can dispense the entire diocese or a particular locality for reasons of public health or on the occasions of a large gathering of the people; superiors of exempt clerical religious have the same power as parish priests over their subjects and those living day and night in their houses.

In reply to a query concerning the doctrine that since the publication of the Code it is permissible to eat meat more than once on days of fast only, the Commission for the interpretation of the Code said that it could not be safely held in conscience

(Acta Ap. Sedis, 1919, p. 480). In answer to another query the Sacred Penitentiary said that when in virtue of an indult certain meats are allowed to be eaten on days specified in the indult, persons who by reason of age or labor are not bound to fast may eat meat as often as they like on such days; many years earlier a similar reply was given in the case of people excused from fasting through illness. Apart from these instances, in virtue of a special indult in the United States "workingmen and their families are permitted to use flesh meat once a day on all fast days and days of abstinence throughout the year, with the exception of Fridays, Ash Wednesday, Spy Wednesday, the forenoon of Easter Saturday, and Christmas Eve."

Abuse of Power or Office.—The power placed in the hands of the clergy being so very great, we find the Church, as might be expected, insisting strongly that it shall not be misused. Anyone, therefore, who misuses his ecclesiastical office or power is to be punished in whatever way seems proper to his lawful superior, unless a definite penalty is laid down by the canons. Thus, vicars capitular and all others, whether members of a chapter or not, who, personally or through others, remove, destroy, conceal or substantially change any document belonging to the episcopal curia, incur excommunication reserved simply to the Holy See; in addition they may be deprived of their office or benefice by the ordinary. Again, should a person who is officially entrusted with the compilation or care of the records of the ecclesiastical curia or of the parish registers, presume to falsify, forge, destroy, or conceal any of them, he is to be deprived of his office, and if the circumstances demand it, he should be otherwise severely punished by the ordinary. If anyone betrays his trust in transcribing, transmitting or showing acts, documents, or books, when his services have been lawfully asked, he may be punished by the ordinary by privation of office, suspension therefrom, and by a fine, according as circumstances demand. Persons who endeavor to bribe curial officials or ecclesiastical administrators, judges, advocates, or procurators, are to be punished, and compelled to make restitution if they have caused any injury. Anyone who charges more than the lawfully approved fees for voluntary acts of jurisdiction, or for the administration of the sacraments or sacramentals, or the legal costs of a suit is to be heavily fined, and if it is his second offense he is to be suspended or removed from office, as circumstances demand, and in addition he must restore what he thus unjustly obtained.

A vicar capitular who grants dismissorial letters for ordination, without the consent of the chapter, when the see has been vacant more than a year, or if, when it has been vacant less than a year, he grants them to anyone except a person who is obliged to receive orders by reason of a benefice he has obtained or is to obtain or by reason of an office which the interests of the diocese require to be filled without delay, is by that very fact suspended from the exercise of his sacred orders. If a religious superior unlawfully presumes to send dismissorial letters for ordination to a bishop other than the ordinary of the diocese in which the house to which the candidate belongs is situated, or if he defrauds the diocesan bishop by sending the candidate to another house or deliberately delays granting the dismissorial letters unto such time as the bishop is away or is not ordaining, he is by that very fact suspended from saying Mass for a month.

If the superior of an exempt religious house or church, on being admonished, does not correct abuses that have crept in, the local ordinary must immediately inform the Holy See. In houses not fully established, if abuses have crept in and scandalize the faithful, the local ordinary can in the meantime act by himself. Again, religious superiors who admit to the novitiate aspirants who have not the requisite qualifications or the proper testimonial letters, or who allow a novice to be professed when it is uncertain whether or not he is suited for religious life, should be punished, even by privation of office.

A superioress of nuns, even exempt, is to be punished by the ordinary, by privation of office if necessary, if she presumes to spend the dowry of a nun before her death, or if she omits to notify the local ordinary about the approaching admission of a candidate to the novitiate or to profession. A religious superior, male or female, who, without the visitor's consent, transfers a religious after a canonical visitation to another house, and all fellow-religious, whether superiors or not, who personally or through others, directly or indirectly, induce a religious to remain silent or to conceal the truth in any way, or not to be frank when interrogated by the visitor, or who under any pretext molest a religious on account of the information he or she has given to the visitor, are to be declared by the visitor incapable of holding any office entailing the government of others, and the superior is to be deprived of his position. If a mother superior violates the canonical rights of a subject to confess to a priest other than the ordinary chaplain, she is to be admonished by the local ordinary; if she repeats the offense, she is to be deprived of her office by the ordinary, who must thereupon inform the Sacred Congregation for Religious about the occurrence.

Abyssinia (cf. C. E., I-75b).—A kingdom in northern Africa with an area of about 350,000 square miles, and an estimated population of about 10,000,000. It is divided into the following nine provinces: Harar and dependencies, Wollo, Kassa and Magi, Gore, Tigre, Damot and Gojam, Equatorial provinces, Gondar, Gima or Jimma. Menelik, the ruler from 1889, died in December, 1913, and was succeeded by his grandson, Lij Yasu. On 27 September, 1916, Lij Yasu was deposed by public proclamation and Waizeru Zauditu, daughter of Menelik, was nominated empress, and Ras Tafari proclaimed regent and heir to the throne. The empress was crowned at Addis Abbaba on 11 February, 1917. The new government has been recognized by Great Britain. In August, 1919, Cabinet Government was introduced after more than a year's personal administration by the regent. There are reports, however, that the splendid work done by King Menelik in developing the country, and which would probably have continued under his chosen successor, Lij Yasu, has fallen into decay and that Abyssinia is relapsing into a state approaching barbarism. Under the Arms Convention of 1919, France, England, and Italy bound themselves not to supply munitions to the Abyssinians for fear that they would be used for slave raiding purposes. During the World War Abyssinian troops served with the British in the East African campaign.

There is a railway of meter gauge from the port of Jibuti in French Somaliland to Dire Dawa (about twenty-five miles from Harar), in the south-east of Abyssinia. In January, 1909, a new company was formed to complete the line from Addis Abbaba, taking over the portion completed on French territory; and the section to the Hawash River, 150 miles from Dire Dawa, and the same distance from Addis Abbaba, reached the capital in 1917.

EDUCATION.—Education, heretofore restricted to the secular and regular clergy, was extended in October, 1907, an edict being issued enjoining compulsory education on all male children over the age of twelve. This is, however, a dead letter. There is one school in Addis Abbaba, directed by a few Coptic teachers, introduced by the Abuna; it has 100 pupils, but the attendance is irregular.

AGRICULTURE.—The production of Harari coffee is on the increase, the supply being practically unlimited. In 1914, 3,810 metric tons were exported; in 1915, 5,121 tons; in 1916, 6,364 tons.

ABYSSINIA, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (ABYSSINIÆ), is one of the three missionary divisions of Abyssinia in Africa. It comprises Tigre, Amhara and Gondar and is entrusted to the Lazarist Fathers, the present Vicar Apostolic being Rev. Edward Grusson, C. M., who was appointed in 1906. By latest statistics there are 2,000 Catholics in this territory out of a total population of 4,000,000; 6 parishes, 6 churches or chapels, 12 native secular priests, 5 European and 3 native missionaries, 16 native religious, 1 seminary with 9 students, 2 secondary schools for boys with 60 pupils, 1 for girls with 20 pupils, 4 elementary schools with 90 pupils, 1 mission, and 3 dispensaries. Owing to the almost constant persecution to which the missionaries are subjected, the progress of this vicariate is very slow. See GALLA, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; KAFFA, SOUTHERN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF.

Accession (cf. C. E., I-95d), Latin accessus, a procedure in voting at papal elections, was abolished by Pope Pius X in his Constitution "Vacante Sede Apostolica," 25 December, 1904.

Accomplice (cf. C. E., I-100a).—The absolution of an accomplice in a sin against the sixth commandment is invalid, unless the accomplice is in danger of death; even if there is danger of death such absolution would be illicit on the part of the confessor except in case of necessity, i. e., if no other priest was present, or could be got, or if he could not act without danger of scandal or loss of reputation on the part of the guilty priest, or finally if the penitent refused to confess to any other priest. A priest absolving or pretending to absolve in violation of these provisions incurs excommunication reserved in a very special way to the Holy See; formerly the censure was reserved only specially.

Acerenza (ACHERONTIA), ARCHDIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., I-101a), in the province of Lecce and Potenza, Italy, is united with the diocese of Matera. The episcopal residence is maintained at Acerenza from May to October, and at Matera from November to April. The present incumbent is Most Rev. Anselmo Pecci, Benedictine, b. at Tramutola, 1868, ordained priest 1891, appointed Bishop of Tricarico 22 June, 1903, promoted to the see of Acerenza 18 September, 1907. In 1920 the Catholic population of Acerenza numbered 128,200; there were 28 parishes, 140 secular and 6 regular clergy, 28 seminarians, 20 religious, and 140 churches or chapels. At Matera there were 19,700 Catholics, 4 parishes, 25 secular priests, 26 seminarians, 28 sisters and 27 churches or chapels.

ACERRA, DIOCESE OF (ACERRARUM), in the province of Caserta, Italy, suffragan of Naples. The first bishop recorded for this see is Concordius in 499, and after a lapse of centuries we find Bartholomæus in 1179, but the list does not become regular until 1247, with Luca. The see was united in 1818 to that of Santa Agata-dei Goti, but was again made a separate see, 30 November, 1854. It is dedicated to Our Lady of the Assumption. Its present bishop, Rt. Rev. Francesco di Pietro, b. at Naples, 1844, was appointed 14 December, 1899. By 1920 statistics the diocese comprises 38,000 Catholics, 12 parishes, 98 secular and 15 regular clergy, 25 seminarians, 44 churches or chapels, and 28 religious women.

Achonry, DIOCESE OF (ACADENSUS; cf. C. E., I-102d), in Ireland, includes portions of Mayo, Sligo and Roscommon, and is suffragan of Tuam. Upon the death of Most Rev. Dr. Lyster, bishop of this diocese, 17 January, 1911, the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Patrick Morrisroe, succeeded him, being consecrated 3 September, 1911. Dr. Morrisroe, b. at Charlestown, County Mayo, 1869, ordained 1894, after a year of parish duty, became professor of the Classics and English at the diocesan college, Ballaghderreen (1895-96), and (1896-1911) was dean and professor of liturgy at Maynooth. He contributed numerous articles on liturgical subjects to the original edition of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Within recent years a new diocesan college, costing about £20,000 and accommodating about eighty students, has been opened for boys. A parochial church has also been completed and dedicated in the parish of Straid. Among the clergy who have died were two prominent workers, Rt. Rev. Mgr. Loftus (d. 30 October, 1908), and Rt. Rev. Mgr. Staunton (d. 6 November, 1910). During the World War three of the clergy of this diocese served as chaplains.

In 1921 the total population of the diocese was 76,983, all Irish, and of this number only 1,927 are non-Catholics. There are 22 parishes, 43 churches, 55 secular priests, 8 convents of women, 1 seminary, 1 college for men, and 3 high schools. Among the charitable institutions are hospitals at Swinford and Tubbercurry. The college and three intermediate schools are aided by the government. The Apostolic Union, "Pia Unio Cleri," and two missionary societies are organized among the clergy, and the Sacred Heart League and Total Abstinence League among the laity. The Sisters of Mercy, of Charity, of the Sacred Heart, of St. Louis, the Marist Sisters and the Brothers of the Christian Schools are established here.

Acì-Reale (JACA REGALIS), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., I-105a), in the island of Sicily, is immediately subject to Rome. The third bishop, Rt. Rev. Salvatore Bella, who succeeded Bishop Giovanni Battista Arista-Vigo (d. 27 September, 1920), in 1921, died 29 March, 1922, and the see is now vacant.

By present (1921) statistics it comprises 18 parishes, 300 churches, 1 monastery for men, 2 for women, 5 convents for men, 287 secular and 80 regular clergy, 1 seminary with 90 seminarians, 3 colleges for men with 670 students and 6 for women with 300 students. Among the charitable institutions are 2 homes under Catholic auspices; 10 societies are organized among the laity and 1 among the clergy and 2 Catholic periodicals are published.

Acoustics is that branch of natural science which treats of the phenomena of sound, and the term "sound," as used in physics, is vibration that may be appreciated by the ear. For the purpose of this article the subject will be confined to its relation to church edifices, as these buildings must possess the proper acoustical properties to render them thoroughly serviceable for Divine worship.

Many churches which are architecturally beautiful have failed to fulfill the expectations of the builders in their acoustical quality, this being due primarily to a general lack of knowledge of the science of architectural acoustics. However, a search through literature on the subject shows there have been learned writers and investigators in many countries adding valuable contributions to the subject, which made possible the classified knowledge existing to-day. A few of the more noted among the early investigators and writers have been Bulfinch, Strickland, Mills, Joseph and Jacques in America; Eichhorn, Haage, Orth, Strumhofel in Germany; Williams and Lord Rayleigh in England. In later years in America among the many physicists who have contributed to the further development of the science are Wallace C. Sabine, W. S. Franklin, G. W. Stewart, H. O. Taylor and Jacob Maser. The foundation laid by these scientists and many others, combined with recent inventions of combinations of materials architecturally suitable, has brought the development of architectural acoustics within the scope of rational engineering problems.

The subject is necessarily complex; in order that hearing may be good in any church, it is necessary that the sound should be sufficiently loud, that the simultaneous components of a complex sound should maintain their proper relative intensities, and that the successive sounds in rapidly moving articulation, either of speech or of music, should be clear and distinct, free from each other and from extraneous noises. As an engineering problem it involves the shape of the auditorium, its dimensions and the materials of which it is composed, and this latter property is by far the one that most controls the acoustical conditions.

The researches above mentioned and the contributions of other physicists have made it possible and practicable to determine, given the plans of a church and the kind of materials of which it is to be constructed, the acoustical conditions in the finished building, and to make the necessary provisions to overcome faults.

Of acoustical defects, the most common is excess reverberation, including, as a special case, the echo. Sound being energy will, when produced in a confined space, continue until it is either transmitted by the walls, or transformed into some other kind of energy, generally heat. This process of decay is called absorption. Sound, following the same general law as light, is transmitted by the intervention of a medium capable of being set in vibration. Solids and liquids, as well as gases, transmit sound vibrations. If we take a membrane similar to a drum-head and expose it to the light, some of the rays will penetrate the membrane, some will be reflected from it, and others will be absorbed by it. So it is with sound waves when they strike any surface. Some are reflected, some are absorbed by it, and some will penetrate it and continue their motion to the other side. But as reverberation, due to multiple reflection, enters so largely into the subject of acoustics as applied to auditoriums, a closer study of this phenomenon will assist in the proper appreciation of the difficulties occasionally encountered in auditoriums or churches.

By the term "reverberation" is meant the continuation of sound in a room after the source that produced it has ceased to operate. This is due to the reflecting quality of the walls. The principal cause of the gradual diminution of sound is the absorption of the surface. The length of time that sound will endure after the source has ceased to function is also spoken of as the duration of audibility. The continuation of sound after it is produced is obviously essential to hearing, but produces indistinctness when the continuation is for too long or too short a period. If a speaker is to be heard distinctly, the syllable he has just spoken must not be too much in evidence when he utters the next one. On the other hand, there must be an amount of reverberation which will produce a sufficient volume of sound.

That reflection, with its consequent reverberation, is necessary, is readily understood if one considers the difference in volume of sound produced indoors and out of doors. Reflection is essential; too much reverberation is detrimental. Just how much reverberation will produce the proper effects is not entirely a matter for scientific demonstration, but is rather a decision to be reached by those who have the correct taste. Inasmuch as the objection to excess reverberation is the resultant confusion, the element of rapidity of succession in the sounds to be differentiated enters into the question. Here we have a hint that the requirements of an auditorium depend upon its intended use.

Nearly all the investigators on the subject have arrived at the conclusion that the time of reverberation in an auditorium depends upon the volume of the room and upon the absorbing power of the surfaces. This will seem reasonable enough when one observes that if sound loses a part of its energy by reflection, then the fewer the number of reflections per second, the less the loss per second and the longer the sound will last. An increase in the volume of the room of course increases the length of the paths between reflections, thus decreasing the number of reflections and extending the time of reverberation. Again, the amount lost by a reflection will depend upon the absorbing quality of the surface. Consequently the greater the absorbing power of the surfaces, the less will be the time of reverberation. Professor Sabine gave a numerical value for the absorbing power of various materials.

In certain known instances the duration of audibility has been computed to be as long as twelve seconds, which means that the ear is capable of hearing the same sound twelve seconds after the source has become quiet. You can readily see how such a condition produces great confusion, indistinctness and discomfort. A deliberate speaker will utter about four average syllables per second. Nature has provided a "factor of safety" of about twice as many in the ear. That is, the ear can hear without confusion about ten syllables per second. Therefore, it can readily be understood that if an auditorium has a duration of audibility of more than two and one-half seconds, it is very close to the time where confusion of hearing will result.

The ideal duration of audibility in an auditorium varies greatly. It depends upon the uses to which the auditorium is put, and its size. The ideal time of audibility is slightly less for speech than it is for vocal music, and slightly different for piano music from orchestral, etc. Oftentimes it is found that an auditorium, when empty, has a long time of audibility which diminishes very rapidly as the size of the audience increases, and becomes practically normal when an average attendance is reached.

As the volume increases it is necessary to increase the duration of reverberation. Unfortunately, a reduction in the reverberation produces a corresponding reduction in the intensity. For this reason, in a room having a volume of say 400,000 cubic feet, it would not be advisable to reduce the reverberation below 2.7 seconds. This duration of reverberation is slightly excessive for an untrained speaker but necessary to insure sufficient intensity in the furthestmost parts of the room. In a small room there is less need to augment the sound, for the auditors are situated near the speaker and also near to reflecting surfaces. In the average room used only for speaking, when the volume is approximately 150,000 cubic feet, the reverberation under average audience conditions should be not more than 1.9 seconds, nor less than 1.3 seconds. For most forms of music it is desirable to have the reverberation exceed 2.1 seconds. When a room is to be used for both speaking and music, as in a church, it is usual to compromise, having the reverberation slightly excessive for ideal speaking conditions, and slightly less than that demanded for ideal musical conditions. The solution can be varied, of course, to suit the special conditions presented by each case.

Besides the duration of audibility, or time of reverberation as it is often called, refraction of sound waves, diffusion, interference, a lack of resonance, concentration of sound energy due to curved surfaces, corners, pockets, etc., must be considered. However, it usually happens that if the duration of audibility can be reduced to a proper time all the other defects will automatically cease, since they are to a more or less extent its functions.

As in most instances a long time of audibility is directly due to the non-absorbing qualities of the interior surfaces of the room, and our present construction is tending toward harder and more rigid interior surfaces, which have a greater capacity for reflecting sound; it is necessary in order to obtain good acoustical results to replace or surmount some of the reflecting surfaces with surfaces which have the property of absorbing a great amount of the sound striking upon them. The surfaces to be replaced with absorbing materials must be scientifically chosen, otherwise the effect will be nullified or discounted; as the distribution of the absorbing material in the structure is of greater importance than the quantity. Various combinations of materials have been used as absorbing surfaces, but possibly the best of these is matted hair felt about one inch thick covered with a tightly stretched membrane of light canvas, which latter is secured to well braced and rigid frames, built before erection and applied to the surface requiring the absorbing element. When properly decorated or painted, these materials serve a purpose equally as good as plaster, wood or other interior building materials, and are architecturally practical.

It is very important to have an air space of about one-quarter of an inch between the tightly stretched membrane and the hair felt, since it has been found that it is not enough to have absorbing surfaces alone to prevent reverberation, but the absorbing surfaces should possess the quality of multiple absorption, by being able to vibrate and thus have a certain resonance to respond to the overtones of the sound waves, and give that quality to the auditorium which corresponds to the resonance quality of a violin body or the sounding board in a piano. It is the advance made in the study of how to obtain in the wall and ceiling covering, this important quality that makes it possible to predetermine the acoustical success of a church and to correct the bad conditions which now exist in so many of our churches. Based upon the data which have been obtained in connection with hundreds of installations throughout the United States and Canada of "acoustile" pre-built panels on the walls and ceilings of churches and auditoriums, the number of square feet of treatment required in the average auditorium can be roughly estimated at from 2% to 3% of the number of cubic feet in volume, depending on the sound-absorbing value of other materials in the auditorium.

It can thus be seen that regardless of the shape, it is so far possible to obtain good acoustical results in a church, that the architectural design may include domes, high groined vaults and other features formerly looked upon as having a distinctly injurious effect upon the acoustical properties of a building.

Further, those churches whose acoustics are defective can be remedied by the application of the absorbing panels above referred to. Prominent among the buildings in which this system has been installed is the United States Supreme Court Chamber, Washington, D. C.; House of Commons, Ottawa, Canada; State Capitol Building, Cheyenne, Wyoming; St. Columba's Church, Johnstown, Penn.; St. Cecelia's Church, Hastings, Neb.; Church of the Immaculate Conception, Toledo, Ohio; and the Church of the Holy Redeemer, Detroit, Michigan. Still another method of preventing excess reverberation is to construct the ceiling, or vaults, and upper portions of the walls of a church or auditorium, with a permanent fireproof material, such as Acoustical sound-absorbing tile. The following churches have this material built in either the vaults, or walls, or both: St. Thomas' Church, 5th Ave. and 53rd St., New York; First Congregational Church, Montclair, New Jersey; Church of St. Vincent Ferrer, New York; Notre Dame Church, New York; St. Bartholomew's Church, Park Ave. and 50th St., New York.

Acquapendente, DIOCESE OF (ACQUAPENDENSIS; cf. C. E., I-109a), in Italy, at the present time (1921) has 13 parishes, 80 churches, 5 monasteries for men with 15 religious, and 3 for women, 40 secular priests, 45 nuns, and 10 seminarians. The Catholic institutions conducted in the diocese include 1 asylum, 1 home, and 2 hospitals; these institutions as well as the Catholic schools receive some support from the government. Rt. Rev. Tranquillo Guarneri, titular Bishop of Europus, was promoted to the see 8 March, 1920, succeeding Bishop Gislenti Veneri, resigned.

Acqui, DIOCESE OF (ACQUENSIS; cf. C. E., I-110b), in the province of Alexandria, Italy, is suffragan of Turin. The present bishop (1921), Rt. Rev. Disma Marchese, b. at Camogli, 1844, was appointed bishop 16 April, 1901, and made an assistant at the pontifical throne 26 May, 1918. In 1920 there were 181,200 Catholics in this diocese, 126 parishes, 317 secular and 42 regular clergy, 30 seminarians, 459 churches, or chapels, and 96 religious, 75 sisters.

Acro and Purus, a prelature nullius erected by the Apostolic Constitution of 4 October, 1919, from territory taken from the Diocese of Amazonas. It comprises the Brazilian civil provinces of Alto Arca and Alto Purus, and is separated from Peru and Bolivia by the territory of the province of Alta Pardua. According to the Brief it is to be the nucleus of a diocese and is endowed at once with diocesan privileges. Its titular has episcopal rank and jurisdiction and is to be supported by the funds of the Church in this region and the offerings of the faithful. The prelature must maintain two pupils at the South American College in Rome. It is in charge of the Servite Fathers.

Acta Apostolicæ Sedis, the official organ of the Holy See for the publication and promulgation of its laws, decrees, and decisions. It was established in accordance with the wish of Pius X expressed in his Constitution "Promulgandi pontificias," dated 28 September, 1908, and appeared first in January, 1909. It is published by a board of editors with offices in the Palazzo della Cancelleria, and is printed at the Vatican Press, Rome. It is issued once or twice a month, and forms an annual volume of from 600 to 1,000 octavo pages, 7½ in. by 10 in., the cost to subscribers being 12 lire a year in Italy and 15 francs in other countries. It is printed in Latin, though occasionally it contains documents in Italian or French. Its contents consist of the encyclical and decretal letters, motu proprio and similar communications, as well as occasional homilies or consistorial addresses of the sovereign pontiff; the decrees and decisions of the various Sacred Congregations, the ecclesiastical tribunals, and the Biblical Commission; and diary of the Roman Curia, together with the names of all the officials throughout the world appointed or honored by the Holy See, and a necrology of the bishops and cardinals. The "Acta Apostolicæ Sedis" has taken the place of the Acta Sanctæ Sedis (q. v.). In accordance with the Code of Canon Law, legislative acts of the Holy See are promulgated by their appearance in the "Acta Apostolicæ Sedis," except in particular cases where another method of promulgation is prescribed; they begin to bind only three months after the date of the number of the "Acta" in which they have been published, unless from the nature of the case their binding force arises at once, or when a shorter or a longer interval is expressly prescribed in the law itself (can. 9).

Acta Sanctæ Sedis (cf. C. E., I-111c), a Roman periodical for the publication of ecclesiastical documents, was begun in 1866 and from May, 1904, was acknowledged to a certain extent as an organ of the Holy See. It is no longer published and was replaced by the "Acta Apostolicæ Sedis" in 1909.

Acts, LEGAL ECCLESIASTICAL.—In one form of canonical punishment an offender is prohibited from performing legal or legitimate ecclesiastical acts. He may be forbidden to act under penalty of invalidity, as is the case of one who is infamous by law, or merely of illegitimacy, as happens to a Catholic who contracts a mixed marriage without a dispensation. In this connection the expression legal or legitimate ecclesiastical acts refers to: the office of administrator of church property; the functions of judge, auditor, relator, defender of the bond, promoter of justice or of the faith, notary, chancellor, cursor, apparitor, advocate or procurator in ecclesiastical law suits, or of sponsors at Baptism or Confirmation; voting in ecclesiastical elections; and the exercise of the right of patronage.

Acuña, CRISTOBAL DE, Spanish Jesuit and South American missionary, b. at Burgos, 1597, d. at Lima, date uncertain. At the age of fifteen he entered the Society of Jesus; having completed his studies he went to America, where he became rector of the Jesuit College at Cuenca. In 1869 the viceroy of Peru ordered him to accompany the Portuguese general, Pedro Texeira, on his second journey of exploration along the Amazon River, and to write an account of his observations. On his return he went to Spain to present his work to the king, Philip IV, who received him coldly, fearing that the Portuguese, recently revolted from Spain (1640), would profit by the information his work contained. Later Acuña became provincial of the Jesuits in Rome, and subsequently returned to Madrid as censor of the Inquisition. Re-crossing the ocean he died at Lima probably soon after 1675. His "Nuevo Descubrimiento del Gran Río de las Amazonas" was published in Madrid in 1641.

Adamawa, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF, in Central Africa, erected 28 April, 1914, from territory taken partly from the Vicariate Apostolic of Khartum, partly from the Prefecture Apostolic of Ubanghi-Chari, and partly from the Vicariate Apostolic of Kamerun. Its boundaries are as follows: on the north 10° N. lat.; on the east, the boundaries between the former German and the French colonies from the 10° to the 7° N. lat.; on the south, the 7° N. lat. and the line which separates the civil districts of Nganduere, Banjo, Bamum, Bamenda, and Ossidinge forming part of the new prefecture, from the districts of Ober-Sanga-Ubam, Dume, Jaunde, Jabassi, Dshang, Johang, Johann, Albrecht shore and Rio del Rey remaining in the vicariate of Kamerun; on the west by the former Anglo-German boundaries. This vast tract of land, nearly 60,000 square miles, was the northern part of the colony of Kamerun. It is traversed by a mountain chain whose peaks reach an altitude of 6,000 feet, situated to the south of Lake Chad, on the two shores of the Benue river, a tributary of the Niger. By the Treaty of Versailles Adamawa became a French colony. The prefecture is entrusted to the Priests of the Sacred Heart of St. Quentin. The first prefect Apostolic was Rev. François Lennartz, succeeded in July, 1920, by Mgr. J. Plissonneau, the present incumbent, who on account of the devastating effects of the war and the retirement of the German missionaries, had to begin a practically new work. Contrary to his expectations he was received with great kindness by the Sultan, who granted him a plot of land and sent workmen to help him to replace the demolished mission buildings.

Adana, DIOCESE OF (ADANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-135d), in Asia Minor (Asiatic Turkey), belongs to the Armenian Rite. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Pascal Keklikian, b. at Kutahia, 1857, ordained 1884, was appointed Bishop of Adana 27 August, 1911, to succeed Bishop Terzian, who had been promoted to the Patriarchate of Cilicia. In 1920 there were in this diocese 3,100 Catholic Armenians, 3,000 Catholics of other rites, about 100,000 heretics and infidels, 8 secular priests, 7 churches or chapels and 10 Catholic schools.

Adelaide, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ADELIDENSIS; cf. C. E., I-140a), in South Australia, was created an episcopal see in 1843. After years of struggle and privation the diocese started on an era of prosperity with the introduction of religious orders. Although the Passionists were never introduced as a community, two came in 1846 and worked as secular priests; in 1868 the Dominican nuns from Calva, Dublin, were established; in 1879 the Christian Brothers; in 1881 the Carmelite Fathers and Sisters of Mercy; in 1882 the Dominicans of the Third Order; in 1898 the Dominican Fathers; in 1902 the Good Samaritan Sisters; in 1905 the Loretto Nuns; in 1912 the Little Sisters of the Poor; and in 1913 the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart.

The present archbishop is Most Rev. Robert William Spence, O. P., D. D., who became coadjutor 16 August, 1914, when he was consecrated titular Archbishop of Pessinus. On the death of Archbishop O'Reilly, 6 July, 1915, Archbishop Spence succeeded to the see.

By the present (1921) statistics the English-speaking Catholic population is approximately 55,000. There are: 33 parishes, 94 churches, 6 convents for men and 36 for women, 42 secular and 27 regular clergy, 7 lay brothers, 404 Sisters; 16 high schools with an attendance of 1,074 boys, 2 college-academies with 16 teachers and attendance of 418 boys, 1 industrial school with 9 teachers and 13 inmates. Among the charitable institutions are: 1 home for aged poor with 93 inmates, 1 House of Providence with 26 inmates, 1 prisoners' home with 5 inmates, 2 orphanages, 1 hospital and 1 female refuge with 98 adults and 39 children. The Adelaide public hospital, home for incurables, convalescent home and old folks home, permit the priests to minister in them. The Sick Priests' Benefit Fund and Eucharistic League are established among the clergy, and the Catholic Federation, Hibernian Australian Catholic Benefit Society, Sacred Heart, Holy Family, Rosary and Holy Childhood Confraternities, the St. Vincent de Paul Society and the Catholic Women's League are established among the laity. A Catholic periodical, "The Southern Cross," is published in Adelaide. During the World War two of the priests of the diocese served as chaplains.

Administrator Apostolic (cf. C. E., I-143b), a cleric, generally one who has received episcopal consecration, to whom the Holy See for grave and special reasons entrusts the government of a diocese with or without its own bishop, temporarily or permanently. His rights, duties, and privileges are set out in his letters of appointment or in the Code of canon law. If his position is permanent he enjoys the same rights and honors and has the same duties as a residential bishop; if it is only temporary: (a) he has the rights and duties of a vicar capitular, and if the see is not vacant he can make a canonical visitation of the diocese, but he is not bound to say Mass for the faithful; that obligation remains incumbent on the bishop; (b) if he has been consecrated, he enjoys the honorary privileges of a titular bishop; if he has not been consecrated, he has a right to the honors and privileges of protonotaries Apostolic de numero participantium, but only during his term of office and while within their territory.

If the administrator is a bishop who, on being transferred to a new diocese, retained the administration of his old see, he has, when he is in the latter diocese, a right to all the honorary privileges of a residential bishop. If he is appointed administrator when the see is not vacant the jurisdiction of the bishop and his vicar general is suspended; but the administrator must not meddle in affairs relating to the bishop himself, nor proceed against the vicar-general, nor concern himself with the acts of the previous administration. If his jurisdiction is impeded or if he dies, the Holy See is to be notified at once; meanwhile the regulations for the government of vacant sees are to be followed, if the diocese is vacant or the bishop incompetent, otherwise the bishop is to take charge of affairs, unless the Holy See has provided differently. Finally it is to be noted that the administrator's jurisdiction does not cease with the death of the pope or the bishop; but continues till the new bishop takes canonical possession of his see. In the United States in accordance with the decrees of the third plenary Council of Baltimore bishops designated administrators to take charge of the dioceses in case of their death, but this practice was abrogated by the Code of Canon Law. A vicar or prefect Apostolic on assuming office must name a pro-vicar or pro-prefect who is to take full control if his rule is impeded or terminated, and if the party chosen succeeds he, too, must delegate someone to take his place in a similar emergency; if this was omitted and the necessity for an administrator arises, the position devolves on the senior missionary in the territory.

Administrators of Ecclesiastical Property (cf. C. E., I-144b).—To secure the proper administration of church property, the ordinary is to appoint in his episcopal city a diocesan council, consisting of himself as president and two or more persons, preferably persons having a knowledge of civil law; they are to be chosen by the ordinary after consulting the chapter, unless provision for this selection has been made otherwise. No one, however, may be an administrator if he is related to the ordinary in the first or second degree of consanguinity or affinity, except with special permission of the Holy See. In administrative acts of greater moment the ordinary is to consult the members of the council, though he need not follow their advice, except in special cases expressly provided for in the canons or where the terms of a foundation require their consent. The members of the council must bind themselves by oath in presence of the ordinary to be faithful and diligent in this discharge of their duties.

In addition to this diocesan council, the ordinary is to name a council to administer the property belonging to churches or holy places, if administrators have not been provided by the law or the terms of the foundation. They hold office nominally for three years only, and must swear before the ordinary or the vicar forane to fulfil their duties faithfully. After expressly or tacitly accepting office, administrators are held to restitution, if by abandoning it arbitrarily they injure the church. They must exercise the degree of care that a prudent man would take in regard to his own property; hence they are to see that the church property is neither destroyed nor injured; that the requirements of the canon and civil law are observed; and that the conditions imposed by the founder, the donor, or the lawful authorities are fulfilled; that the income is duly collected, deposited, and properly expended, that the surplus of the church money is invested or deposited, for the benefit of the church with the ordinary's consent; that the books showing the receipts and expenditure are kept accurately; that all documents and papers dealing with the church property are in good order and deposited in the archives of the church or other suitable place, and that an authentic copy of these titles is placed in the curial archives, if this can be conveniently done.

Administrators, clerical or lay, of any church, including the cathedral, or of a pious place canonically erected, or of a confraternity must make an annual accounting to the local ordinary, any custom to the contrary being reprobated. If by any particular law the accounting is to be made to others, the ordinary or his delegate must be admitted to it. Administrators must not take part in any litigation in the name of the church without the written permission of the ordinary or, in urgent cases, at least, of the vicar forane, who under such circumstances must inform the ordinary at once. Unless they have first obtained the written permission of the local ordinary, administrators act invalidly in going beyond the limits of ordinary administration; and the church is not responsible for contracts entered into by them without the proper superior's permission, except when and in as far as it adopts them.

Administrators of ecclesiastical property are under an obligation to see that the employees receive adequate compensation; they must see, especially, that they have suitable time for their religious and family duties, and that they are not overworked or employed in work for which their age or sex unfits them.

Admonitions, CANONICAL (cf. C. E., I-144d).—Under normal circumstances no member of a religious institute of men, who has been perpetually professed, may be dismissed unless he has been three times guilty of a serious offense, and has been twice admonished by his immediate higher superior, that is after the first and the second offense. A canonical admonition is to be administered also before the imposition of a censure ferendæ sententiæ in order to give the culprit an opportunity to abandon his contumacy and repent. Admonitions are also expressly required by the Code in proceedings against clerics for violating the law of residence or the regulations governing association with women. A canonical admonition is given either orally in presence of the chancellor or other curial official or of two witnesses, or by registered letter, a record of the admonition being preserved in the archives. It may also be public or secret; if public, it should be given before a notary or two witnesses, or by letter, but in this case there should be documentary evidence of the receipt and of the contents of the letter.

Adolescence.—Pre-adult life is commonly divided into four distinct periods: infancy, childhood, boyhood or girlhood, and youth or adolescence. Infancy reaches to nearly the beginning of the third year, childhood to the beginning of the ninth, and the next ten or eleven years are divided almost equally between boyhood and youth. However, no hard and fast line can be drawn between any period and its successor. The transition is gradual and it is only by degrees that the characteristics peculiar to each period manifest themselves. Again it must be noted that there are in this respect, as in others, striking differences between the sexes, the races and individual cases. Boys and girls mature more rapidly in the South than they do in the North, the girl everywhere more rapidly than the boy, and it is a matter of common, everyday observation that a boy or a girl may be more advanced physically and mentally than other boys and girls who are their seniors by one, two or even three years; this fact is being taken into consideration more and more in the grading of pupils by the American elementary schools.

Each period is distinguished by certain characteristics, which are determined by nature and must not be overlooked by parent or teacher under penalty of at least partial failure in their work as educators. Mentally, even more strikingly than physically, the child differs from the youth and must be dealt with accordingly. It is chiefly because of its strong, eloquent insistence on this fact that Rousseau's "Emile" has retained its place among educational classics. Unfortunately, the author's views concerning man's nature and destiny betray not only an extremely poor psychological insight, but what is far worse, an utter lack of sound religious and moral principles. Man is not, as Rousseau would have us believe, at the outset and for many years nothing else than a creature of feeling, a mere animal, but from the very beginning, a being made to the image and likeness of God. Just as the form of the tree and all its properties are contained in the seed, so the faculties, tendencies, abilities, which are to unfold during life, are potentially present in the new-born child; they all grow and develop simultaneously, though not with the same rapidity. Thus, e.g., the child's first efforts to speak show glimmerings of his reasoning powers and tendency to imitate; his thirst for knowledge and truth is constantly evidenced by his questions, at time so embarrassing for parents and teachers; his social and moral nature, the craving for the companionship of others, sympathy, love of justice, fair play, tendency to obey, are plainly manifested in play with other children. Infancy, childhood, boyhood and youth, should not then be thought of independently of one another; each period is the outcome of what preceded it and the preparation for what will follow it. The child in swaddling-clothes is the product of pre-natal life and a long line of ancestors; if it is true to state that youth begins around the fifteenth year it can be no less true to say that it is rooted in infancy and is prepared by childhood and boyhood.

The chief business of infancy and early childhood is pure growth; what the child needs most at this stage is freedom of movement, plenty of fresh air, sunlight, pure digestible food, and careful safeguarding against any untoward influence which might disturb the natural growth and development of this young and as yet very tender organism. During these early years of its life, the child is quieter than at any of the subsequent periods; the power of locomotion is not acquired perfectly until long after the faculties of sense perception have reached maturity; imagination soon becomes very active, but draws little or no distinction between fact and fancy. The next six years, corresponding to the primary and early grammar grades, might appropriately be called a motor period. In the preceding period the ever recurring question was: "What is this?" now it is: "What is this for?" The child is very anxious to do something, to use his hands at all kinds of little tasks, but is still very clumsy, because the motor centers are as yet far from being completely developed. This superabundance of activity, coupled with the fact that much of the latent energy is still needed for growth, explains why the child is so easily tired before reaching his teens. His senses are alert and keen, his imaginations and memory are craving for exercise, but logical thought is still very weak. It is also during this period that some of the fundamental instinctive tendencies ripen into maturity; chief among these tendencies is imitation, which for good or evil plays such a large part in the upbuilding of character.

Youth or adolescence is ushered in by puberty, the importance of which has been recognized in all ages, and among savages and semi-civilized peoples has been celebrated by strange, curious customs. It is a period of deep physical and mental changes leading to the metamorphosis of the child of the lower grades into the boy or girl of the upper grades and high school. The process does not begin exactly at the same time in all individuals. It varies according to the racial stock, climate, sex, temperament, environment and occupation. It begins earlier among the peoples of the Semitic race than among those of the Indo-European group, earlier in the tropics than in the temperate or frigid zone, earlier in the girl than in the boy. A warm, sanguine temperament is likely to accelerate it and a phlegmatic one to retard it. It is more tardy among those who have been accustomed from childhood to plain living and hard work, than among those who have been brought up in luxury and idleness. On the North American continent the process takes place in the majority of cases between the eleventh and fifteenth year. Adolescence in this country may thus be said to begin around the sixteenth year, perhaps a little earlier in the southern states and a little later on the northern border, but whatever may be the variations in time, the characteristics of the period are the same everywhere. It is a time of great physical and mental expansion. The girl by the eighteenth year has practically attained her full height and weight, but the boy still has somewhat to gain in both respects. The brain has reached very nearly its full size and weight. The logical powers are fast increasing; they crave exercise and the boy often argues quite as much from the love of debate as from the desire to attain truth. It is doubtful whether the memory is either as quick or as retentive as in earlier years. Boy and girl are led more by their impulses and feelings than by the dictates of cold judgment. Authority no longer has the same hold on them as in earlier years, but they are very loyal and generous to their friends. Their conception of the realities of life, of the meaning and value of time, are rather hazy; they see the future in roseate colors and idealize human nature. This is the period of the hero, of romance and fiction, but it is also the period of genuine religious growth, of religious vocations.

THE PEDAGOGY OF ADOLESCENCE.—The treatment of the pedagogy of adolescence within the limits of this article is of necessity restricted to a brief consideration of a few principles which are nothing else than logical deductions from the facts, so far brought out, interpreted in the light of the goal to be reached, viz., strong, healthy, Christian manhood and womanhood. Youth is a period of rapid growth in every direction; plenty of food, sleep, sunshine, fresh air, freedom of muscular movement are no less needed in these years than heretofore. The hard bed with light covering in the cool or cold room should be the rule for the healthy boy. Personal cleanliness should by this time have become a fixed habit. Vigorous exertion in the form of play, gymnastics and work, not only on physical grounds but on intellectual and moral grounds as well, is also greatly needed. It will not only prepare the youth to meet efficiently the test of real life, but will fortify him against the diseases which cause the rise of the death rate at nineteen and later. Gymnastics can do much to develop the finer muscles, the higher motor centers and to correct the defects that have outlasted or come in with puberty. Play is just as useful now as it was in childhood, but it takes on the form of contest and competition, teamwork, which not only affords useful physical exercise but develops habits of self-control, obedience to rule, swiftness of decision as well as consideration for others.

Most essential, however, is the discipline of genuine hard work, requiring close attention, diligence, application, the putting forth of all one's energy, the conscious strenuous effort of the will, bent on completing the task once undertaken, no matter how difficult it may seem at the time, nor how disinclined one may feel to perform it. The time was when there seemed to be general agreement as to the soundness of this principle, but in the last hundred years it has been challenged by a "new school" of educators, the so-called school of interest. According to their tenets, the chief function of the teacher is to arouse the interest of the pupil in the subject to be taught, or the task to be performed; he should study the native tendencies and the acquired interests of the child and take these tendencies and interests as his starting point in every school activity, because this is the surest way of securing attention which alone guarantees apprehension; compulsion is to be avoided as much as possible, not only because it weakens the child's activity but because his right to happiness is sacred and his personality should be respected. It cannot be gainsaid that the discussion of the value of interest in school life has done much to soften the harshness, at times extreme, of the old school; that it has contributed to broadening and enriching a curriculum which had become extremely narrow; that it has helped the teacher in gaining a better understanding of the problem of attention; that it has brought about a better adaptation of the teaching process to the capacities of the growing mind. However, when all has been said in the favor of interest, the fact remains that there is in the school and still more in life much of an uninteresting nature that must be done and on the other hand there are many things in themselves alluring that must be avoided. Life for most of us is no path strewn with roses; it is full of difficulties, setbacks, disappointments, hard knocks, and on the whole more bitter pills to swallow than sugar plums to taste. If the school is to be a preparation for life, the motto of its work should not be interest but effort, for the chances are that the child who has been fed on the diet of interest will be found sadly wanting when confronted with the realities of the workaday world.

Much has been said, and rightly so, on the necessity for the teacher of appealing to and training the senses of his pupils, of proceeding from the concrete to the abstract, from the particular to the general, from the empirical to the rational. This signifies that in learning his mother-tongue the child will approach grammar through the literary product; in the study of a foreign language, that he will start with a maximum of conversation and a minimum of formal grammar; in mathematics that he will proceed from the concrete example to the general definition or proposition; in geography, that he will study first the particular features of the locality in which he lives as a starting point for wider and broader generalizations; in history that he will first be acquainted with the great national personalities and events; in science, that experiment and laboratory will illustrate and supplement the lecture; in the teaching of every subject, that the pedagogue will try to appeal to the senses and imagination of his class by means of objects, maps, globes, pictures, diagrams and vivid language. The principle has found its widest and most successful application in the elementary school but it has also been adopted with good results by the high schools and the college. What is not always realized however, or at least not sufficiently stressed, is that the principle is but a means to a higher end. Knowledge of the concrete is but a beginning, a stepping-stone to concept building, judgment and reasoning, which are the real prerogatives of man and should therefore receive the greatest attention from the teacher at every stage of the educative process, but especially during the period of which we treat. Adolescence, as we have seen, is a period of expansion of the entire being, nowhere more striking perhaps than in the intellect. The youth is eager for vigorous mental exertion, eager to tackle with genuine difficulties, and he finds great delight in the solution of any question calling for keen intellectual insight and close reasoning. The natural manner of dealing with the young intellect is not then, to burden it with a mass of concrete facts, but to develop by appropriate exercise its powers of abstraction, generalization, judging and reasoning. And after all that is the best preparation for intellectual leadership. The master mind in any field of human endeavor is not the walking encyclopedia, but he who can analyze any given situation, abstract its essential elements and from these reach a sound generalization, be it law or principle or decision.

Intellectual education, however useful or desirable it may be, is secondary to religious and moral education, which looks to the formation of good habits. Such at least is the position of the Catholic Church. She has ever consistently taught that man's worth is not to be found in what he knows or thinks, but in what he does; that a virtuous life in not only the logical preparation for eternal salvation, but the best guarantee of happiness in this life; that a sound moral education is impossible without religion.

The means to be employed for moral training are many, but they can all be brought under one or the other of the following headings: example, supervision, ethical and religious instruction, and certain means provided by the Church, such as the Sacraments. The first two only will be briefly considered here, the others having been treated at length in the first edition of this work. The educative value of example can hardly be overestimated; it has been recognized in all ages; it has been insisted upon by all leading educators; it has found its way into the language of every civilized nation in some such adage as: "Verba movent, exempla trahunt," "A man is known by the company he keeps." Example is the great teacher of all of us throughout life, but its influence is perhaps nowhere felt more lastingly than in the home. The mother, burdened by cares, regrets that she cannot give more time to instructing her children. She forgets that in the example of her virtues they are taught a lesson a hundred times more valuable than any instruction she may give them in the school branches. This influence of example has its explanation in the deep-rooted human tendency to imitate whatever captivates the attention, be it good or bad or indifferent. Hence follows the sacred duty of parent and teacher to set none but good examples before their charges, to guard them against all evil influences, to supervise their readings and relationships. Neglect of watchfulness in this regard is indeed sad enough, but to expose a youth to moral contagion, or as the phrase goes, to allow him "to sow his wild oats," on the assumption that he stands a better chance of growing to be a respectable citizen, is a folly that passes all description.

Adoption (cf. C. E., I-147c).—The canon law now conforms to the civil law in each country regarding the effect of legal adoption on marriage. Where, therefore, the civil law looks upon the legal relationship as rendering a marriage invalid, adoption is a diriment matrimonial impediment; where the civil law considers the marriage valid but illegal, the impediment is merely prohibitory; in any other country adoption has no effect on marriage.

Adraa, a titular see of Arabia, suffragan of Bostra in the patriarchate of Antioch, identical with the Biblical city of Edrai, one of the two capitals of Og, King of Basan, near which he was defeated by the Israelites (Num. xxi, 33-35; Deut. i, 4; iii, 1-10), when the country passed to the half-tribe of Manasses. Prior to this time it was inhabited by the Raphaim, a race of giants of whom Og was one of the last descendants. It is probable that the many curious dungeons at Deraat, the modern name of Edrai, are remains of the work of this primitive people. Eusebius places this "important city" of Arabia twenty-four or twenty-five miles from Bostra and six miles from Astaroth. Christianity was introduced into Adraa at a very early date under the form of Ebionism and spread rapidly. Bishops of the city appear from time to time in various chronicles down to the Middle Ages, notably Proclus, who condemned Eutyches at the Synod of Constantinople (448). To-day Deraat is the seat of a sub-prefecture and is the principal station on the road from Damascus to Caifa, a city of about 5,000 inhabitants.

Adramyttium, a titular see in Proconsular Asia on the Gulf of the same name, according to Baudrand, a suffragan of Cyzicus; Baudrillart assigns it to Ephesus. The city was reputed to be a Lydian foundation and to owe its name to Adramytus, brother of Croesus. Later it was colonized by the Athenians, who in 496 were victims of a Persian massacre. Recovering from this disaster the city prospered under Roman rule until its alliance with Mithridates, when it was saved from destruction only by the eloquence of Xenocles, who pleaded its cause before the Senate. Adramyttium is identical with the Adrumetum of the Bible (Acts xxvii, 2), and it is probable St. Paul visited the city in going through Mysia on his way from Galatia to Troas (Acts xvi, 6, 7). Eight bishops of the see are known; the last, George, assisted at a synod of Ephesus in 1230. To-day it is the principal town in the vilayet of Brusa with 1,400 inhabitants. It is called Adramyti by the Turks.

Adrana, a titular see in Bythynia, suffragan of Nicomedia, according to Baudrand the ancient city of the Emperor Adrian. Comanville identifies it with Achyrac on the Hellespont. To-day it is a small village of Anatolia, called Edrenos. It is not certain if this city is the same as Adrianotera spoken of by Charles de St. Paul as having a bishop, Patricius, present at the Council of Chalcedon (451). The title was last borne by Mgr. Téofilo Andrés Melizan, O.F.M., who, at the time of his death (1905), was Archbishop of Colombo, but had been titular bishop of Adrana while vicar apostolic of Ceylon.

Adrassus, also known in ancient documents as Darasos and Adrassos, a titular see of Isauria, suffragan of Selucia in the Patriarchate of Antioch. It appears in the Notitia episcopatum of Antioch in the second century as one of the suffragans of Seleucia, according to the "Echos d'Orient" (1907). The ecclesiastical province of Isauria is known to have been reunited to the patriarchate of Constantinople in the eighth century, under Leo the Isaurian, and from that time until the tenth century mention of Adrassus is found in several documents. The see is known to have had three bishops: Zoticus, who according to Le Quien in his "Oriens Christianus" was present at the Council of Chalcedon; Paul, who attended the fifth oecumenical council (Mansi, "Conciliorum Collectio," IX., 177); and Stephen, who is also reported by Mansi to have been present at the council in Trullo.

The exact position of the city is not known, but Ramsay in his "Historical Geography of Asia Minor" says that it was found near the Taurus Pass on the road from Lycaonia to Celenderis, very probably some miles south of Meliss-Tepe-Meloe or Melouos, on the Calycadnus. In 960 Leo Phocas, brother of the Emperor Nicephorus, reported a great victory over the Saracens in the Pass of Kylindros or Adarassos (Schlumberger, "Un empereur byzantin au XV^e siècle," Paris, 1890). The name seems to have been preserved in the Adras-Dagh, a mountain situated between Ermenek and Mout. Ramsay (op. et loc. cit.) identifies Adrassus with Dsu-l-Kala, a fortress mentioned by Arab historians of the Middle Ages, falsely identified with Sideropolis, which has never been found.

Adria, Diocese of (ADRIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-155a), is suffragan of Venice and has its episcopal residence at Rovigo. The Rt. Rev. Anselmo Rizzi, the present bishop (1922), was born at Ponterra Cremonese, 1874, and appointed bishop 4 June, 1913, to succeed Bishop Boggiani, who came to this see in 1908 and was promoted to the titular see of Edessa in 1912. There are 91 bishops recorded for this see since its foundation. In 1920 there were 203,000 Catholics in the diocese, 75 parishes, 250 secular and 12 regular clergy, 72 seminarians, 300 churches or chapels, and 9 religious women.

Adrian IV (cf. C. E., I-156c).—In treating of the Donation of Ireland to Henry II, Arthur Ua Clerigh, the writer of the article on Adrian IV in the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA declares that in his judgment there is no controverted matter in history about which the evidence preponderates in favor of one view so decisively as it does in favor of the genuineness of the Donation. He bases his conclusion mainly on a passage in the "Metalogicus" of John of Salisbury in which this writer declares that he visited Adrian IV at Beneventum and obtained from him a grant of Hibernia to Henry II of England. Adrian's Bull "Laudabiliter," in which the Pope expressly approves of Henry's invasion of Ireland, is also accepted as genuine. As the matter is one on which historians are divided it is fitting to consider the reasons which have led a scholar like Cardinal Gasquet to reject Ua Clerigh's conclusions. In brief, he holds both the Bull and the passage in the "Metalogicus" to be undoubted forgeries, made later to uphold the claim of Henry II to Ireland. John of Salisbury says that he obtained the Bull of Henry in 1155. This seems untrue because Henry II who came to the throne in 1154 sent Bishop Rotrod of Evreux with the Abbot of St. Albans and the Bishops of Lisieux and Le Mans on a mission to Adrian a few months later. John of Salisbury is not mentioned in connection with this mission, and in Adrian's reply of 27 February, 1155, nothing is said about Ireland. Again, John of Salisbury does not seem to have been known to Henry II till after the publication of his "Polycraticus" in 1159, dedicated to the English Chancellor, Thomas a Becket. It is most improbable then that he had been sent on a royal mission to Rome in 1155. In the "Polycraticus" he speaks of his visit to the pope at Beneventum, but his description of his familiarity with the pope renders his statement most improbable; in any case, he makes no mention therein of the donation of Ireland. This would be incomprehensible if he obtained the grant, as the "Polycraticus" was evidently written to win the Chancellor's patronage, and the mention of it would have served to get him the favor of king also. If then no mention of the Donation occurs in the "Polycraticus," published four years after the supposed event, how then can its inclusion in the "Metalogicus" a later work, be accounted for?

Assuming that the Donation is spurious, the passage in the "Metalogicus" would be a deliberate forgery by Salisbury to gain Henry's favor—and Salisbury's letters show he could play a double part—or an interpolation at a later period. Cardinal Gasquet accepts the latter solution. The forty-second or last chapter of the "Metalogicus," in which mention is made of the Donation, has absolutely nothing to do with the preceding forty-one chapters which deal with the study of logic and metaphysics. It gives details of a most unlikely familiarity between Adrian and Salisbury, and differs in style from his other writings; the description of the interview with Adrian diverges considerably from that given in the "Polycraticus"—which has no mention of the Donation or of the fine emerald ring sent for the investiture; so that the conclusion forces itself on one that the chapter is spurious. The work was written not later than 1161; no mention was made by Henry of the Donation till 1175—fourteen or fifteen years of inexplicable silence; for the Bull would have been most useful in 1167 to justify Norman interference in Ireland, and it could hardly have escaped mention at the Council of Cashel in 1172, at which a papal legate presided.

The Bull "Laudabiliter" is not given in Salisbury's work; it first appears in 1188 in the "Expugnatio Hibernica" of Giraldus Cambrensis, a writer whose ambitions to become archbishop of St. David's, through the patronage of Henry II, have destroyed his value as a trustworthy historian; he candidly admits he wrote his "Expugnatio Hibernica" to glorify Henry, and the work is looked upon more as an epic poem than as sober history. The testimony of Matthew of Paris, Roger Wendover and Raoul de Diceto in favor of the Bull being based on Giraldus Cambrensis does not strengthen the case, and incidentally it may be said that the Vatican document on which Baronius later based his agreement favoring the Bull is only a MS. of Matthew of Paris.

There are three letters of Alexander III written from Tusculum in which reference is made to Ireland. The letters are all dated 20 September; no year is mentioned, probably it was in 1172. They ignore the existence of the Bull: they recognize no claim of Henry to Ireland except the right of might and the submission of the Irish chief; they speak, it is true, of the pope's right over all islands, but there is no known authentic document containing this claim; they refer to certain papal rights but make no mention of Peterspence which Adrian's Bull charges Henry to establish in Ireland. The Bull was evidently unknown then in Rome. Again though in 1316 the pope insists on the English king doing homage to him as he held England as a fief from the Sovereign pontiff, he said nothing about doing homage for holding Ireland.

Alexander's III's reputed Bull confirmatory of Adrian's grant is no more reliable. It was issued from Rome in 1172; but Alexander was not in Rome in that year; he was in Tusculum and did not return to Rome till 1178. Again it is most improbable that Alexander would have shown this favor to Henry, who had supported two anti-popes against him and who had but two years earlier abetted the murder of St. Thomas a Becket. It is known, moreover, that Henry did not hesitate to manufacture or adapt papal documents to serve his purposes. There is little independent testimony upholding the authenticity of the documents; Cambrensis says that the Bulls were produced at a synod of the Irish clergy at Waterford in 1175, but the Irish annals make no reference to such a synod.

So far from the pope having abetted Henry in his attempt on Ireland it is almost certain that when the proposal was made to him he rejected

it. About 1158 Henry II and his avowed enemy, Louis VII of France, suddenly became friends. Thereupon they despatched Rotrod, Bishop of Evreux, on a new mission to Rome to ask the blessing of the pope on a hostile expedition they were about to undertake. They presented that the invasion of a certain land, referred to merely as H—, was a crusade of religion. Internal evidence would indicate that H— did not mean Hispania but Hibernia. Adrian refused to approve of the plan and in a letter to Louis set out at length the reason that led him to this decision. Granting that H— refers to Ireland, as is almost certain, it is difficult after reading this letter to believe that Adrian donated Ireland at John of Salisbury's request. And here a remarkable fact may be noted. The resemblance between the opening ten or fifteen lines of this authentic letter of Adrian refusing to bless Louis and Henry's proposed expedition and the opening of the Adrian's alleged Bull "Laudabiliter," is too close to be the result of an accident. Taking this with the incidents mentioned above it seems almost certain that Adrian's letter of refusal was used as a basis for the Bull which was forged later to uphold Henry's conduct. Naturally, Henry could not rely on the forgery during the lifetime of Louis without it coming to the knowledge of the French king. Louis, however, did not die until 1180, and it is only after that event that we find the wording of the Bull for the first time. The annalist of Archin seems to have known of Pope Adrian's refusal, for writing of the year 1171, he says: Henry, King of England, puffed up with pride, and usurping things not conceded: striving, for things he had no business to do, prepared ships and called together the soldiers of his kingdom to conquer Ireland.

Cardinal Gasquet sums up his study thus: "Whether this theory as to the origin of the 'Bull' be current or not, it can safely be said that the evidence upon which the authenticity of the document has so long been held is at best very doubtful, and should be accepted with extreme caution. A careful examination will, we believe, induce most inquirers to reject the 'Bull' as an undoubted forgery, and to consider it more than probable that Pope Adrian IV, so far from granting any approbation to Henry in his design on Ireland, or making any donation of the country to the English crown, in reality positively refused to be a party to rush an imposture.

Adriane, also known as Adirnas or Adriana, a titular see of Asia, in Pamphilia. It was suffragan of the metropolitan see of Perga.

Adult.—In the matter of baptism canon law now considers as adults all those who have attained the use of reason.

Advent (cf. C. E., I-165b).—Marriage may be celebrated during Advent, but the solemn nuptial blessing is forbidden during this period and on Christmas Day, though for a just cause the ordinary may allow it.

Adventists (cf. C. E., I-166c).—I. EVANGELICAL ADVENTISTS (the original stock).—As the older members died many of the younger families joined other evangelical denominations and the number of churches and members diminished rapidly. In 1906 they reported 18 organizations with 481 members, and 8 ministers. In 1916 all the churches, except a few in Pennsylvania, had disbanded or discontinued all services. Apparently even these few churches in Pennsylvania were moribund, for the United States Government in compiling religious bodies (1916) could get no information from the ministers, and this branch of the Adventists accordingly was dropped from the aforesaid report for 1916.

II. ADVENT CHRISTIANS.—In 1916 this body reported 418 churches (a decrease of 10 from 1906), 30,597 members, and 287 ministers engaged in pastoral work. In the foreign field 12 stations are occupied (1916), in addition to some out-stations, in India, China, and Japan. They reported in 1916, 20 American missionaries, 10 churches with 889 members; 11 schools with 433 scholars; 1 hospital; 1 orphanage with 80 inmates.

III. SEVENTH DAY ADVENTISTS.—This denomination reported at the end of 1916, throughout the world, a membership of 141,488 with 3,987 churches, 1,678 ministers and 113 organized mission fields. In the United States the membership was 79,355, organizations 2,011, churches 1,231, ministers 582. At the close of 1916 organized work was carried on outside the United States in 249 mission stations and 353 sub-stations, in 92 countries, by a working force consisting of 880 American missionaries, and about 2,000 native helpers.

IV. THE CHURCH OF GOD.—This denomination reported in 1916, 848 members and 46 ministers, and 8 church edifices.

V. CHURCHES OF GOD IN CHRIST JESUS.—In 1888 various organizations, such as the Age-to-Come Adventists, Church of God, Restitution Church, and some others, formed the association known as "Churches of God in Christ Jesus." This organization is in general accord with the Adventist bodies, though the term "Adventists" does not appear in its title. In 1916 this body reported 87 organizations, 3,457 members, 52 church edifices, and 50 ministers.

SUMMARY: H. K. Carroll's statistics for 1921 ("Christian Herald," 7 March, 1921) listed for the five Adventist bodies, 1,665 ministers, 2,984 church edifices, and 134,725 members in the United States.

Advocates (cf. C. E., I-167d).—In criminal suits in the ecclesiastical courts an accused party should always have an advocate either chosen by himself or appointed by the judge; so, too, in contentious cases when minors or the public welfare are involved, if either the plaintiff or the defendant has none, the judge should appoint one, and, should circumstances so require, he may appoint an additional advocate for either side. In any other case a party may dispense with the services of an advocate, unless the judge deems it necessary for him to have one. The same person may appear in a suit both as advocate and procurator. An advocate should be a man of good repute, not under twenty-one years of age, a doctor or at least an expert in canon law; unless in exceptional circumstances or in case of necessity he must be a Catholic. A religious may act as an advocate with leave of his superior, but that is allowable only if his order is involved in the suit and if his constitutions do not forbid him to undertake such a task. To be recognized officially as an advocate in a suit, a party requires the approbation of the ordinary, or of a papal delegate when the latter is acting as judge. If the suit is between members or provinces of the same exempt clerical order, or between monasteries of the same congregation, the advocate must be chosen from the order and must be approved by the judge; in any other case a religious of a different order may be appointed. Before acting as such an advocate must be commissioned by a litigant or by the judge, and his appointment must be noted in the record of the case; he may be dismissed from the suit by his client, who, however, has to notify his adversary and the judge, if the case has begun. If one of the parties in a suit is poor the judge must appoint an advocate from amongst those authorized to practice before him to take up his case gratuitously, and he can compel the advocate to do so under penalty of suspension from office.

Advocates possessing more rigorous qualifications than those mentioned above are required also in causes of beatification and canonisation; they must be doctors of canon law or at least licentiates of theology; they must have been trained under advocates of the Congregation of Rites or by the general sub-promoter of faith, and, in addition they must have been officially admitted as advocates of the Rota.

Advocates of St. Peter (cf. C. E., I-168a).—The corporation of the Advocates of St. Peter, canonically instituted at Rome in 1878 to defend and promote the interests of the Church and the Apostolic See, was abolished by the motu proprio "Id præclaro semper" of Pius X on 26 May, 1909.

Affinity (cf. C. E., I-178b).—Affinity, in canon law, is now a relationship arising exclusively from valid marriage, whether consummated or not; before the promulgation of the Code it arose, on the other hand, solely from intercourse, whether lawful or illicit. From this it will be seen that the nature of the relationship is quite changed. It exists only between the man and the woman's blood relatives on the one hand, and between the woman and the man's blood relatives on the other; the line and degree of relationship between the husband and his blood relatives are those adopted in computing the line and degree of affinity between them and the woman, and vice versa. Affinity is a diriment impediment to marriage to any degree in the direct line, but in the collateral line it annuls marriages only to the second degree inclusively, whereas formerly it invalidated them in the third or fourth degrees also; affinity in the second degree of the collateral line is a minor impediment. The impediment of affinity is multiplied as often as the impediment of consanguinity from which it proceeds is multiplied, and also by successive marriage with a deceased spouse's blood relatives. It may be noted that the law of England invalidating marriage with one's deceased wife's sister was repealed by the Parliament in 1907.

Afghanistan, a monarchy in central Asia, between parallels 29° and 38° 28' north latitude and 61° and 72° east latitude, with a narrow strip running to 75° east longitude, bounded on the west by Persia, on the east by tribal districts under the government of India, on the north by Russian territory and Bokhara, and on the south by British Baluchistan. The extreme breadth of Afghanistan from northeast to southwest is about 700 miles; its length from the Herât frontier to the Khyber Pass, about 600 miles; the area is about 245,000 square miles. There are five larger and two smaller provinces, in addition to the province of Kábul, each under a governor and each possessing its own army. The population is about 6,300,000. The majority are Iranian-Aryan Tadjiks, who inhabit the settlements and large towns, the Mongolian Hazaraks, who roam the mountainous central regions of the country, and the Turkomans and Usbegs of northern Afghanistan. The real Afghans, or Pahtos (Pathans) as they call themselves, live in the high ranges stretching from the Solimans past Ghanzi and Kandahar to the west toward Herát. Though the language of the Afghan originated from the old Iran, it now shows the mark of Indian influence. In writing the Afghan uses an Arabic character; Persian and Pushtoo are the leading tongues. The largest cities are Kábul, the capital, with a population of 150,000; Kandahár, 31,500; and Herát, 20,000. The mountainous character of Afghanistan allows agriculture only in the fertile plains and valleys, and sheep-raising in the highlands.

RELIGION.—The establishment of Christian missions has never been permitted in Afghanistan. The various tribes are overwhelmingly Moslem and are of the Sunni sect of Islam. Their caliph is the Turkish Sultan who, according to the sacred law, should be an independent sovereign, wielding an effective guardianship over the great Moslem holy places at Mecca, Medina, and Jerusalem. The Turkish caliph has been made a virtual prisoner of the British in Constantinople and the holy places taken away from him. Mecca and Medina are in the hands of the King of Hijaz, who is subsidized by the British; and Jerusalem is held by the British themselves. This new state of affairs has been bitterly resented by all of Sunni Islam (except the Arabs) as a destruction of its most sacred institutions, and as a result, Afghanistan has been greatly inflamed against the British government of India. In the Turco-Afghan treaty which the Afghan mission to Angora signed in April, 1920, the Turkish caliphate was recognized and an alliance was made between the two parties against "any alien imperialism," presumably meaning the British empire. Djemal Pasha, one of Turkey's triumvirate during the war, was made Minister of War in the Afghan Cabinet, and has founded a military college at Kábul and imported forty Turkish officers to whip the Afghan army into shape.

EDUCATION.—The Government contributes nothing to maintain public schools. The better families often send their sons to be educated in the universities of India.

HISTORY.—Afghanistan, a part of ancient Aria, was included in the conquests of Alexander the Great, who founded Alexandria, Arion (Herát), Kandahar, and a settlement in Kábul. Various barbaric dynasties succeeded one another, the most notable monarch being Kanishka (Kanerkes), who ruled vast domains stretching over the Upper Oxus basin, Peshawar, Kashmir, and probably India. On the decline of the Bagdad Caliphate, Afghanistan formed a part of the domains of the Samanides, a Mohammedan dynasty which was overthrown by a Turkish tribe, founder of the Ghaznevide dynasty. It was included in their realms until 1186, when it was overrun by the Mongols of Genghis Khan. In the last quarter of the fourteenth century it was subjugated by the Tartar chief Timur. A descendant of this Timur, Baber, founder of the Mogul Empire, made Kábul his capital. Its decline dated from 1722, when Mahmud, an Afghan chief, invaded Persia, captured Ispahan and dealt a blow to the permanent prosperity of Afghanistan. During the wars which followed the Afghans were defeated and driven out by Nadir Kuli, a Persian, one of the conquerors of Afghanistan, who later became Shah. After the assassination of Nadir Shah (1747), one of his officers Ahmed Shah, founded the Durani dynasty in Afghanistan, which has since maintained an independent existence. In 1800 the Tsar of Russia and the Emperor Napoleon concocted a scheme to invade India. This led to the intervention of the British government which sent an ambassador to Peshawar and in 1809 concluded a treaty. The Barakzai tribe, under the leadership of Fateh Khan, deposed Shah Shujah, who fled from Peshawar to seek protection at Lahore.

In 1826, Dost Muhammad became Amir of Afghanistan, founding the present dynasty of Afghan rulers. Attaining supreme power, he entered into negotiations with Russia. The British intervened and the first Afghan War began in 1838, partly to counter the Russian advance in central Asia and partly to place on the throne at Kábul in place of Dost Muhammad the dethroned ruler Shah Shuja. The latter object was easily attained and for two years Afghanistan remained in the military occupation of the British. Later Dost Muhammad regained the throne. In a war with Persia in behalf of the ruler of Afghanistan, the British finally restored the province of Herát to Afghan rule. At the death of Dost Muhammad in 1863, a rebellion broke out, and for some time the elder sons of the Dost reigned conjointly as heirs. Finally Shir Ali emerged master of the land. He was suspected of intriguing with Russia, and this fact, coupled with the repulse of a British mission, led to the second Afghan war (1878) in which the British were victorious. The murder of the British envoy caused the third Afghan war (1879). Abdur Rahman was finally left undisputed Amir of Afghanistan, until his death, in 1901.

Abdur Rahman agreed to leave the control of his foreign relations to the British government which, on its part, undertook not to interfere with the internal government of Afghanistan, and in case of unprovoked aggression on Afghan dominions, to aid the Amir in such a manner as to them might seem necessary. In 1893 this position was confirmed in a conference between the Amir and Sir Mortimer Durand. Chitral, Bajaur, and Swat were to be included in the British sphere of political influence, while the Amir was to retain Asmar and the Kunar valley above it, as far as Arunwai; also the tract of Birmal. Káfristán was included within the countries under Afghan control and to be garrisoned by the Amir's troops. The Amir had withdrawn his pretensions to Waziristán. The Durand Agreement settled the border of the country on the British side, except for a small section to the west of the Khyber, which remained a fruitful source of trouble between the Afghans and the British and led to the war in 1919. This agreement was confirmed in a formal treaty signed on 21 March, 1905, between the British and Amir Habibulla Khan, who accepted unreservedly the engagements into which his father had entered with the British government.

In the Anglo-Russian agreement of 31 August, 1907, Great Britain undertook neither to annex nor occupy any portion of Afghanistan nor to interfere in the internal administration of the country, provided the Amir fulfilled his engagements toward the British government. The Russian government declared that Afghanistan was outside the sphere of Russian influence and arranged that its political relations with Afghanistan should be conducted through the British government. The principle of equality of commercial opportunity was to be observed. During the Great World War the Amir maintained strict neutrality. In 1918 the new Russian government at Moscow abrogated the 1907 treaty, and with London's concurrence in Moscow's abrogation, Afghanistan automatically became "officially free and independent, both internally and externally." The Amir Habib Ullah Khan, who had been a loyal friend of Great Britain, was murdered. Thereupon ensued a competition for the throne. At Jelalabad, a proclamation was issued that Nasr

Ullah had assumed the throne but in Kábul the power was seized by Aman Ullah Khan, third son of the late Amir. Aman Ullah soon showed that he had control of the situation. Owing to the intrigues of the Russian government, the new Amir did not keep his promise of preserving the friendship of Great Britain, and in May a large Afghan army crossed the Indian frontier and commenced pillaging on a large scale. Strong British forces moved up the Khyber and seized Dacca. Jelalabad and Kábul were repeatedly bombed from the air. In ten days the Afghans were severely defeated by General Sir Arthur Barrett, commander of the British forces. A peace conference was opened at Rawalpindi on 26 July, 1920, and a preliminary treaty of peace was signed on 8 August. The Amir's subsidy was withdrawn and its arrears confiscated. The Afghan privilege of importing arms and ammunition from India was also withdrawn. The frontier line of the Khyber region was demarcated by the British government. A clause that aroused much criticism was the withdrawal of the stipulation that the Amir's government was to have no relations with any foreign power except England. Naturally, on 23 February, 1921, the newly independent Afghan government signed a Russo-Afghan treaty at Moscow providing for a Russian subsidy for its Amir, for five Russian consulates within its frontiers, and other arrangements so favorable to Russia that the British demanded an immediate discontinuance of Russian propaganda in Afghanistan. Negotiations have been made for a new Anglo-Afghan treaty. Afghanistan has taken advantage of its independence, also, to proclaim the first Code of Criminal Law, the initial step toward constitutional government.

Africa (cf. C. E., I-181b).—RECENT HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY.—African territory is entirely under European control, with the exception of the independent monarchy of Abyssinia and the Republic of Liberia. In Abyssinia during 1917, 1918, and 1919 civil war produced unstable conditions. Under the British protectorate proclaimed over Egypt in 1914 there has been considerable unrest and dissatisfaction, the Egyptians desiring greater independence than the terms of the protectorate provide. A compromise is under consideration. In the 1921 elections in the Union of South Africa the secession issue failed. This was a critical event in the history of the country, determining its continued dependence on Great Britain. In Morocco during 1920 there were uprisings of the natives, which were successfully brought under control by the French and Spanish troops. Melilla was the center of fierce fighting between the Moors and Spaniards in 1921, with unfortunate results to the latter, though their losses were later retrieved. Strong French sentiment in Tangier opposed Spanish propaganda recently active there. Extensive railway construction throughout Africa has done much towards the development of the continent. The countries of Africa are listed in the following paragraphs under the nations on which they are dependent.

England.—Egypt, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Somaliland, Kenya (formerly British East Africa) Uganda Protectorate, Tanganyika Territory (formerly German East Africa), Rhodesia, Bechuanaland Protectorate, Basutoland, Swaziland, Union of South Africa (including Cape of Good Hope, Natal, the Transvaal, and Orange Free State), with a mandate over former German Southwest Africa, Nigeria, with a strip of Kamerun (formerly German) along its southern border, Gold Coast, part of Togo (formerly German), Sierra Leone, Gambia, and the islands of Mauritius, Zanzibar, Pemba, Ascension, Saint Helena, and Seychelles.

France.—Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, French West Africa (including Senegal, French Sudan [formerly Upper Senegal and Niger], Upper Volta, French Guinea, Ivory Coast, Dahomey and Mauretania), part of Togo (formerly German), part of Kamerun (formerly German), French Equatorial Africa (formerly French Congo), French Somaliland, Madagascar, Mayotte and Comoro Islands, and Reunion Island.

Spain.—Rio de Ordo and Adrar, Spanish Guinea, Spanish Morocco, Ifni, and the islands of Fernando Po, Annabon, Corsico, Great Elobey, and Little Elobey.

Portugal.—Angola (Portuguese West Africa), Mozambique (Portuguese East Africa), Portuguese Guinea, part of former German East Africa known as "Kionga Triangle," Cape Verde Islands, Principe and St. Thomas Islands.

Belgium.—Belgian Congo, and the provinces of Urundi and Ruanda in former German East Africa.

Italy.—Tripolitania, Cyrenaica, Libia, Eritrea, and Italian Somaliland.

Former German Colonies.—Togo (divided between Great Britain and France), Kamerun (divided between Great Britain and France), German East Africa (provinces of Ruanda and Urundi under Belgian occupation, and Tanganyika Territory under British occupation), German Southwest Africa (under mandate of Union of South Africa).

POPULATION.—The most recent statistics give the population of Africa as from 137,000,000 to 200,000,000, of which 180,000,000 are blacks. According to the "American Jewish Year Book" for 1921, there are about 360,000 Jews in Africa, distributed as follows: Abyssinia, 25,000; Egypt, 38,635; Tunisia, 54,665; Algeria, 70,271; Morocco, 103,712; Tripoli, 18,860; Rhodesia, 1,500; Union of South Africa, 46,919. The following figures for the Mohammedan population, taken from the "Moslem World" for 1914, are the latest available: Algeria, 4,175,000; Tunisia, 1,660,000; Morocco, 3,100,000; French West Africa, 5,705,000; Wadai and the Sudan, 2,120,000; Somaliland, 345,000; Egypt, 10,269,445; Zanzibar, 190,000; total, 42,039,000, including those in the interior of Africa. According to the "Egyptian Annuaire" for 1916, there are 667,036 Orthodox Copts, 14,576 Catholic Copts, and 24,710 Protestant Copts in Egypt.

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS.—The most recent religious statistics for the whole of Africa are as follows: Animists and Fetishists, 98,000,000; Mussulmans, 51,000,000; Jews (including the Falashes of Abyssinia), 360,000; other non-Christians (Parsees, Buddhists, etc.), 11,000; Copts of Egypt, 706,322; Abyssinian Church, 4,000,000; Schismatic Greeks, 3,800,000; Armenians, 14,000; Protestants, 2,750,000; Catholics, 2,500,000; total Christians, about 14,000,000. In 1916 there were 119 Protestant missionary societies in Africa, with 1,761 ordained missionaries in a foreign staff of 4,893, 1,641 ordained missionaries in a native staff of 29,546, and 726,823 communicants. The important Protestant Norwegian mission at Betseleo in Madagascar has 24,417 communicants.

Catholic Missions.—Since 1905 the Catholic Church has made great progress in Africa, though missionaries still have to contend with primitive barbarity in some localities, as in Bahr-el-Gazal (the Sudan), the prevalence of slavery often practiced secretly under the guise of religious ritual or business transactions, the custom of polygamy difficult to abolish because of the desirable "price" a bride brings her father's household, sorcery, the power of Mohammedanism (especially in Nigeria), the orgies of paganism, as well as anti-Catholic propaganda particularly rife in South Africa. Treacherous climatic conditions and financial need enhance the hardship of the missionary. This latter was felt especially during the war, due to the cessation of contributions from nations at war. The enlistment of missionary priests and students, the closing of seminaries (Paris, Lyons, Steyl, etc.), left comparatively few to carry on the evangelization of the African native. Especially did the missions in the former German colonies suffer. The German clergy were deported or interned, the missions left desolate. In Kamerun the Pallotines were replaced by the Fathers of the Holy Ghost; the prefecture of Adamawa was assigned to the priests of the Sacred Heart; in German East Africa the White Fathers carried on the work of the Bavarian Benedictines. Untrained African minds with difficulty reconciled the war in which they took part with the Gospel of Peace preached to them. But in spite of these hardships of war Catholicism flourished. The abandoned missions are regaining their former prosperity. In Khartum some of the interned priests have returned. That Americans are now sharing the task of evangelization is witnessed by the American members of the Holy Ghost Order in Africa, the La Salette priests ordained in 1920 for African missions, and the women who have taken their vows in African sisterhoods. One of the glories of the Church in Africa is the beatification (6 June, 1920) of the martyrs of Uganda. On the same date three natives of Uganda were ordained priests at Villa Maria and four others received minor orders. The Congo and Nigeria have each ordained a native priest. In Madagascar the Jesuits have erected a seminary for natives. These native clergy, through their knowledge of languages and customs, as well as their example, are a great help to the missionaries. The catechists also are zealous aids. The leper colonies are a special labor of charity, this dread disease being prevalent along the east coast of Africa. In lesser ailments, curing the body to save the soul is also a great work of the missionary. Among the tribes converted in great numbers to the Church are the Baganda, the Babemba of Rhodesia, and the Kabyles. The king and queen of the Mendes tribe in Sierra Leone are Catholics, as is also the supreme chief of the Basutos, who recently visited London. In Belgian Congo the missions are flourishing. A special effort is being made to evangelize the schismatic Copts of Egypt, and among the Americo-Liberians and in Nigeria there is great scope for work. On board the ship "Africa" which sank 6 January, 1920, were one bishop, ten priests, six brothers, one seminarian, and one nun, all members of the Holy Ghost Order, bound for Africa. An official document of importance to African missions is the mandate for East Africa recently issued, by the terms of which complete religious liberty is granted in that territory. Many new vicariates and prefectures have been erected in the last several years. The Catholic missions in Africa are listed in the table below, with date of establishment, title, and the society in charge of each. The table following gives the number of dioceses, vicariates and prefectures apostolic assigned to each society.

Agathopolis, a titular see in the province of Hemimontus, now Akhtebolu, not far from the Black Sea. It was first a bishopric, then an archbishopric, and finally a metropolitan see, but nothing more is known of its ancient history, except that it had its own coinage. In the Middle Ages the city is mentioned by Byzantine historians; it is identified with the Gatapoli which appears in the ancient Italian geographical writers and is also mentioned in 1204 in the "Partitio Romanie." To-day Agathopolis, called by the Turks Akhtebolu, is one of the principal cities of the province of Adrianople and counts about 3,000 inhabitants, the majority of whom are Greeks. In 1760 it was raised to an archbishopric and in 1803 was united to the see of Sozopolis to form a metropolitan see. The following are the names of some of the titulars of this see: Anthony (1596); Metrophanes (1620-24); Gregory, resigned in 1650; Philotheas (1650-59); Macarius (1660-73); Lawrence (1673); Sophronius (1673); Romanus (about 1700); Neophites (1767-74); Gabriel (1806).

Agaunum (now St. MAURICE-EN-VALAIS), an Abbey Nullius in the Diocese of Sion, Switzerland. It is the seat of the Abbey of St. Maurice of Agaunum, the oldest monastery in the world, having existed without interruption for over fifteen centuries. King St. Louis gave to the abbey, a thorn of Christ's crown in exchange for certain other relics, and the thorn is still preserved there, while the king's original letter is extant in the abbey archives. The Abbey exercised a strong influence in the political life of Gaul, and in the eighth century took part in negotiations between the papacy and the Carolingian kings. The mixture of politics and religion brought about great abuses, and in 1128 St. Hugh, Bishop of Grenoble came to St. Maurice to reform the monastery. It was he who introduced the Canons Regular of St. Augustine into the abbey, where they have remained ever since. During the Reformation the abbey remained true to the Faith owing largely to the courage of Abbot Bartholomew IV, but suffered severely during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries as a result of the intrusion of Valais statesmanship into the inner life of the monastery. However in the seventeenth century the reforming zeal of two holy abbots, Peter IV, Odet (1640-57) and Joseph I, Franc (1669-86), brought about a renewal of activities. For centuries it has never been as prosperous as it is to-day (1922). It is immediately subject to the Holy See, and since 1840 the abbot has carried the title of titular Bishop of Bethlehem. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Joseph Mariétan, born in Val d'Illicz, Switzerland, 1847, studied at St. Maurice and the University of Fribourg, entered the Canons Regular of St. Augustine in 1894, was ordained in 1899, appointed abbot 13 August, 1914, and consecrated bishop 6 December following. The bishop has under his jurisdiction 6 parishes and a rectorate, comprising about 3000 souls. There are twenty clergy of the Order who act as teachers in the school of St. Maurice, which counts about 3000 pupils. Eight other parishes which are under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Sion, are also served by these priests.

Age (cf. C. E., I-206d).—To be bound by ecclesiastical law one must be at least seven years old, unless it is otherwise expressly stated; below that age one is termed child, baby, or infant (puer, parvulus, infans), and is not held responsible; after the age of seven a person is presumed to have the use of reason. Puberty begins in males at fourteen complete, in females at twelve complete. However, marriage is invalid if contracted by males under sixteen or females under fourteen. The imputability of crime is to be considered lessened by minor age in proportion as the person is nearer to infancy, unless the contrary is clear. Persons who are below the age of puberty are excused by the Church from all canonical penalties latæ sententiæ, that is those incurred independently of a judicial sentence; however, if the children have reached the use of reason, they are to be corrected for their faults just as children are corrected at school. Persons who have reached the age of puberty and who induce these younger children to commit an offense or who concur with them in a crime incur the penalties attached to the violation of the law. Minors reach their majority on completing their twenty-first year.

The law of abstinence binds all those who have completed their seventh year; that of fasting is obligatory only on those who have finished their twenty-first but not their fifty-ninth year. Sponsors at baptism or confirmation should as a rule have reached their fourteenth year. In the Latin Rite children ordinarily are not to be confirmed until they are about seven. Children should receive Holy Communion when they understand in a way suitable to their years the mysteries necessarily (necessitate mediæ) to be believed for salvation, and when they can receive it with due reverence, their confessors and parents or guardians being judges of this. The obligation of confession begins with the use of reason. No one can begin his religious novitiate validly before completing his fifteenth year; hence sixteen years complete are required for a first profession and twenty-one complete for a perpetual profession, whether simple or solemn. The law by which a higher age was required in the cases of lay-brothers has now been abolished. A master of novices must be at least thirty-five years old, though his socius or assistant need only be thirty. Ordinary and extraordinary confessors of nuns, whether they be secular or religious priests, must as a rule have completed their fortieth year. While respecting the constitutions of religious institutes requiring more stringent qualifications, the Code prescribes that generals of orders or superiors of monasteries of nuns with solemn vows should be at least forty years old; but other higher superiors need only be thirty. It is unlawful for anyone to receive tonsure before beginning his theological studies, and the ages of twenty-one, twenty-two, and twenty-four are required for the reception of the sub-diaconate, the diaconate, and the priesthood respectively. Finally bishops, vicars capitular, diocesan officials (i. e. judges), and canons penitentiary must have completed their thirtieth year.

Agén, DIOCESE OF (AGINNUM; cf. C. E., I-209b), comprises the Department of Lot-et-Garonne in France and is suffragan of Bordeaux. The present incumbent (1921), Rt. Rev. Charles-Paul Sagot du Vauroux, has filled the see since 1906. Born in the diocese of La Rochelle 1857, he was ordained in 1881, made titular chancellor of La Rochelle 1894 and director of the "Bulletin religieux," and appointed bishop 21 February, 1906.

Since the year 348, when the regular appointment of bishops to this see commenced, there have been 82 bishops, of whom 4 have been canonized, 2 were patriarchs and 3 cardinals. In 1920 there were 268,083 Catholics in the diocese, 47 parishes and 397 succursal parishes.

Agra, ARCHDIOCESE OF (AGRAENSIS; cf. C. E., I-225a), in British India, is bounded on the North by the Archdiocese of Simla, on the east by the Diocese of Allahabad, on the south and west by the Diocese of Ajmer. Upon the erection of the Archdiocese of Simla, 13 September, 1910, the Diocese of Lahore and the Prefecture Apostolic of Kashmir and Kafiristan, which had formerly been suffragans of Agra, were made suffragans of the new archdiocese.

Most Rev. Charles Gentili, who was appointed Archbishop of Agra 27 August, 1898, died 31 December, 1916, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Raphael Bernacchioni, b. in Tuscany, 1854, who went to the mission of Agra in 1884, and was appointed Archbishop of Agra 7 August, 1917. The episcopal residence is at Agra in the winter and at Barlowganj in the summer.

Besides the Capuchins who have charge of this mission, the Brothers of St. Patrick, Sisters of Jesus and Mary, and Sisters of St. Francis of Assisi are also established here. In addition to the parochial schools at Sashkar there are in all thirteen schools conducted by these religious orders, with a total of 1,668 children under instruction. In 1920 there were 8,915 Catholics in this territory, 27 parishes, 30 Capuchin Fathers and 12 native priests, 115 sisters, 27 churches or chapels, 22 principal mission stations and 26 secondary ones, and 7 orphanages with 800 orphans.

Aguas Calientes, DIOCESE OF (AQUÆ CALIDÆ; cf. C. E., I-232b), a Mexican see comprising the province of Aguas Calientes, is suffragan of Guadaluajara. The first bishop of this diocese, Rt. Rev. José María Portugal, O. F. M., appointed 28 May, 1902, died 27 November, 1912. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Ignatius Valdespino y Diaz, b. at Chalchihuites, 1861, appointed Bishop of Sonora, 19 September, 1902, and transferred to Aguas Calientes 10 January, 1913, in which year new Catholic schools and a beautiful building for a seminary were begun, the old ones having been usurped and destroyed by the Revolutionists. New choir stalls have been placed in the cathedral and handsome gratings replace the old ones in the doors. During the World War the clergy, assisted by many of the laity, carried on an active campaign against Socialism, Bolshevism and Protestantism, with the result that many Catholic syndicates are now organized.

The diocese comprises 11 parishes, 54 churches, 3 monasteries for women, 58 secular and 10 regular clergy, 42 brothers, 1 seminary with 45 seminarians, 2 secondary schools for boys with 14 professors and 300 students, 5 elementary schools with 30 teachers and 1,500 pupils and 1 home for the aged. The Knights of Columbus are organized in the diocese.

Aikenhead, MARY (cf. C. E., I-234b).—The cause of her beatification was introduced 15 March, 1921.

Aila (ÆLA), a titular see in Palæstina tertia, situated on the Red Sea at the foot of the Gulf of Akabah, and now known as Dasr-el-Akahab, suffragan of Petra, in the Patriarchate of Jerusalem. This place is mentioned first in Deuteronomy (ii, 8) in connection with the march of the Hebrews around the mountains of Seir. It was then joined to Idumea and later fell into the hands of David (II Kings, viii, 14; III Kings xi, 15, 16), and Solomon used its port with that of Asiongaber in setting sail for Ophir. The city revolted, with all the rest of Idumea, against Jehoram, but was retaken by Azarias who rebuilt it and returned it to Juda (IV Kings xiv, 22; II Par. xxvii, 2). A little later we find that Rasin, king of Damascus, drove the Jews from the city and restored it to Idumea (IV Kings xvi, 6), thus greatly benefiting the commerce of the kingdom of Juda, as the ports along the Mediterranean were occupied by the Phœnicians and Philistines. In spite of these many changes the city held its important position and the gulf, formed by a branch of the Red Sea, is named from it.

The city has been known under many names, Elath, Ailat, Ailath, Aela, etc., and is mentioned by Josephus (Ant. IX, XIII, 1), Pliny (Hist. natur., V, 65, VI, 156), and by Stratonieus (XVI, 11, 30), who fixes its distance as 1,200 furlongs from Gaza. Eusebius and St. Jerome tell us that the tenth legion charged and took this garrison.

At least three bishops of this see are known: Peter, in 325, who attended the Council of Nicaea (Gelser, "Patrum nicenorum nomina, Leipzig, 1898), Beryl (451), present at the Council of Chalcedon (Mansi, "Conciliorum ampl. collectio," VII, col. 32), and Paul (536), who attended the Council of Jerusalem (Mansi, op. cit., VIII, col. 1175).

Conquered by the Arabs upon their entrance into Palestine, Æla became one of their principal fortresses as well as an important commercial city because of its location on the road to Mecca. Occupied by the French in 1116 it was retaken in 1175 with the Island of Graye, now called Djézireh Faraoun, from which it is separated by a narrow arm of the sea and upon which stands a chateau.

In 1182 Renaud of Chatillon, Lord of Kerak and of the territory of the Upper-Jordan, vainly attempted to take possession of the city when he organized his adventurous expedition against the holy cities of Islam. To-day it is called Akaba, as is also the gulf upon which it is situated; the name is taken from a rough slope (Akaba) which faces the city, and which the Sultan Ibn-Ahmed-Ebn-Touloun in the ninth century made passable by the construction of an excellent road. It was first called Akabah-Æla, then the Slope of Akaba, and finally simplified to Akaba.

Aire (ATURUM), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., I-237a), comprises the territory of the Department of Landes, in France, and is suffragan of Auch. From 1906 to 1912 the episcopal residence was at Saint-Sever, but by a decree of 22 April, 1912, the bishop was authorized to reside at Dax until he should find suitable quarters for himself and the seminary at Aire, which remains the seat of the diocese.

Rt. Rev. Eugène-François Touzet, who was appointed to this see 21 February, 1906, died 23 September, 1911, and was succeeded by the present (1922) bishop, Rt. Rev. Marie-Charles-Albert de Cormont, b. in Paris, 1847, ordained 1876, appointed Bishop of Martinique 1899, transferred to Aire 27 November, 1911. In 1920 this diocese had a Catholic population of 288,902, 28 parishes, 293 succursal parishes and 41 vicariates.

Aix, ARCHDIOCESE OF (AQUENSIS; cf. C. E., I-237d), in the Department of Bouches-du-Rhône, France. Most Rev. François-Joseph Bonnefoy, who was appointed to this see 18 April, 1901, died 20 April, 1920, and was succeeded by Mos. Rev. Marie-Louis-Maurice Rivière, b. at Paris, 1859, appointed Bishop of Périgueux 1 June, 1915, and promoted to this see 9 July, 1920.

The total Catholic population of this territory is approximately 200,000. The diocese comprises 129 parishes, 226 priests and 17 religious orders: Capuchin and Carmelite Fathers, Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, Visitation Sisters, Sisters of Mercy, of St. Thomas, of St. Vincent de Paul, of the Holy Ghost, of the Presentation, of St. Joseph, of the Good Shepherd of Notre Dame (Auxiliaries), Sisters of the Seven Dolors, of St. Francis of Assisi, of Mercy, Franciscan Sisters of Lyons, and Trinitarians.

Among the educational institutions are 2 seminaries, a higher seminary with 5 professors and 30 students, a lower seminary with 7 professors and 80 students; 2 colleges for boys (the College of the Sacred Heart at Aix, with 12 clerical professors, 6 lay professors, and 300 students, and the College of St. Etienne at Arles, with 5 clerical and 6 lay professors); 8 boarding schools for girls, 15 free schools for boys and 14 for girls, with a total of 286 instructors and 6,000 pupils. The charitable institutions include 50 patronages for boys and 80 for girls, 14 hospitals, 5 orphanages, 2 nurseries and 14 day nurseries. The principal societies formed in the diocese are the Cercle Saint-Mitre, the Catholic Association, the Association of Catholic Youth, the Association of Catholic Teachers of the Public Schools, conferences of St. Vincent de Paul, the Tabernacle Society, catechetical and mission societies. A number of Catholic periodicals are published here: "La Semaine Religieuse," "Croix de Provence," "Memorial d'Aix," "L'Echo de Bouches-du-Rhône," "Le Forum Arlésien," "Tablettes de la Schola d'Arles," and "Bulletins paroissiaux."

Ajaccio, DIOCESE OF (ADJENSIS; cf. C. E., I-238d), comprises the island of Corsica and is suffragan of Aix. Bishop Desantis, who came to this see in 1906, died 12 February, 1916, and his successor, Rt. Rev. Augustin-Joseph-Marie Simeone now (1921) fills the see. Born at Marseilles 1863, ordained 1888, he was appointed bishop 27 May, 1916, and consecrated in the cathedral of Marseilles 31 August following. In 1920 there were 288,820 Catholics in this diocese, 511 priests, 441 succursal parishes, 1 parish of Greek Catholics with 378 members, and 55 religious of five congregations who are engaged in various charitable works.

Ajmer, DIOCESE OF (AJMERENSIS; cf. C. E., XII-635b), in India, was erected from the Prefecture of Rajpootana on 21 May, 1913, Rt. Rev. Fortunatus Caumont, Prefect Apostolic of Rajpootana being appointed the first bishop (consecrated 28 October, 1913). The total area of the diocese is 158,500 square miles and the total population (1921) is 12,950,000, comprising 6,000 Catholics, 11,200 Protestants, 996,800 Mussulmans and 11,936,000 pagans (Hindus, Animists, Jains and Parsis). Of the Catholic population 500 belong to the British Army, 1,200 are Anglo-Indians, 1,800 are Indians emigrated from the south, and 2,500 are natives of the diocese. There are now 12 churches and 12 chapels served by 1 Indian secular priest and 36 Capuchin Fathers of the Province of Paris, assisted by 7 lay brothers. The Franciscan nuns number 59.

Various institutions included in the diocese are: the Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis of Assisi with 75 members, besides confraternities numbering about 700 members; the Mission Sisters of Ajmer, with a novitiate for Indian and Anglo-Indian girls, with 15 members; the "Prabhudasi" (Hand-maids of the Lord) with a novitiate for Hindu-speaking girls, at Thandla, with 20 members. The Franciscan Nuns of St. Mary of the Angels conduct these two novitiates as well as the following institutions for the education of girls: Convent of St. Mary Magdalen, Ajmer, with 19 Sisters, a high school with 38 boarders and 168 day scholars; the Convent of the Assumption, Mhow, with 22 sisters, a high school with 23 boarders and 90 day scholars; St. Joseph's School, Mhow, with 26 free boarders; St. Ann's School, Mhow, with 67 free boarders; and mission schools at Mariapur and Mikelpura. Under the Mission Sisters are: St. Angela's School, Ajmer, with 16 free boarders; Sophia School, with 45 pagan girls of high caste; girls' schools at Jhabua and Parbalpura. Under the Prabhudasi: the girls' school at Thandla; in addition to these are orphanages and sewing classes at Mikelpura, Thandla, and other towns; St. Catherine's Hospital, Jhabua, conducted by a medically qualified mission sister; Surgical Home, Indore, with Franciscan Nuns as nurses; dispensaries in 10 places; co-operative banks for the Bhils at Thandla. "The Crusader," the monthly organ for India of the Enthronement of the Sacred Heart and of the Archconfraternity of the Three Holy Marys are published in the diocese.

Akra, DIOCESE OF (AKRENSIS; cf. C. E., I-376a), is a Catholic diocese of the Chaldean Rite in Kurdistan, Turkey, in Asia. It was formerly united to the diocese of Amadia, but by a decree of 24 April, 1910, it was separated and is now temporarily administered by the Chaldean Patriarch of Babylon, His Excellency Emmanuel Joseph Thomas. In 1920 there were 2,390 Catholics in the diocese, 16 priests, 7 mission stations, 15 churches or chapels and 7 schools.

Alabama (cf. C. E., I-240a).—The State of Alabama has an area of 51,998 square miles, of which 719 are water surface and 51,279 land surface. Its area in acres is 33,278,720.

POPULATION.—The fourteenth federal census (1920) gave the population of the state as 2,347,295, or more than eighteen times that of 1820. The rate of increase of 1920 over 1910 is 9.8 per cent. The average number of persons to the square mile was, in 1910, 41.7, in 1920, 45.8. The urban population was 509,317, including 312,410 whites and 196,833 colored; the rural population was 1,838,857, including 1,134,622 white and 703,819 colored. The population of cities was: Anniston, 17,734; Birmingham, 178,806; Huntsville, 8,018; Mobile, 60,777; Montgomery, 43,464; Selma, 15,589.

RESOURCES.—The principal crop of the state is cotton, the yield in 1920 being 660,000 bales, giving the state the eighth position in cotton production. The following are mineral statistics for 1917: iron ore, 7,037,797 tons; coal, 20,413,811 tons; coke 4,868-593 tons; pig iron, 2,953,705 tons. In 1919 there were in the state 3,654 manufacturing establishments with a capital of $452,912,000, employing 3,914 officials and 107,159 wage earners, and turning out a product valued at $492,731,000. The following are the statistics of railroad mileage (1919): 5,441.87 miles of main track; 1,760 miles of side track; total value of main line, side track and rolling stock, $55,000,000. The public debt of the state (1919) was $15,351,702; the state expenditure in the same year was $12,702,744.

EDUCATION.—At present (1920) about one-fourth of the state's revenues goes to the support of public or common schools and the higher institutions of learning. A tenth agricultural school and experiment station has been recently opened at Lineville, a state training school for girls at Pinson, and a school of trades and industries at Ragland.

The state laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: English shall be the only language employed and taught in the first six grades of the elementary schools; every teacher employed in the schools giving instruction to pupils within the compulsory attendance age shall after 1 October, 1920, hold a teacher's certificate issued by the State Department of Education; in every elementary school in the state there shall be taught at least reading, spelling, handwriting, arithmetic, oral and written English, geography, history of the United States and Alabama, community civics, agriculture, elementary science, hygiene, sanitation and physical training; no money shall be appropriated for the support of sectarian schools (XIV, 263); parochial schools shall by 10 October of each year register with the State Department of Education, and report enrolment, instruction, course of studies, property, funds, tuition, etc.; officers of parochial schools must make reports required by superintendent with reference to attendance.

For the fiscal year ending 1 June, 1918, the state spent for educational purposes as follows: public or common schools system, $5,725,772; Alabama Polytechnical Institute, $50,000; University of Alabama, $66,000; deaf, dumb and blind institutions, $48,000; Alabama Industrial School for White Boys, $41,000.

HISTORY.—Alabama's recent development has been along industrial lines, especially during the war (1917). The federal government began the construction of an experiment plant at Sheffield for the manufacture of nitrogen from the air, and later, by means of a vast dam across the Tennessee River at Florence, proceeded to utilize the latent water power energy at Muscle Shoals, near Sheffield, with the purpose of recovering the nitrogen for use in the manufacture of explosives. In 1917 the Warren River was opened to navigation, the first steel ship going from Birmingham by water to Mobile. The importance of Mobile as a port was greatly increased by the opening of the Panama Canal. Alabama's contribution to the World War was 74,678 soldiers, or 1.99 per cent of the United States Army. They trained either with the 31st Division at Camp Wheeler, Georgia, or with the 82d Division of the National Army at Camp Gordon, Georgia. Of the casualties in the Expeditionary Forces, 46 officers and 1,205 men died; 5 officers and 40 men were taken prisoners; 156 officers and 3,705 men were wounded.

RELIGION.—According to the most reliable information, the Southern Baptists in Alabama number 207,603; the Methodist Episcopalians, South, 167,938; the Southern Presbyterians, 20,428. The Catholic population of the state in 1920 was about 40,000. Convents and schools are conducted in Montgomery by the Sisters of Loretto, in Selma by the Sisters of Mercy, in Cullman by the Sisters of the Sacred Heart, and in Birmingham by the Sisters of St. Benedict.

On 5 March, 1911, Catholic Mobile, under the leadership of its Bishop, Rt. Rev. Edward P. Allen, celebrated the bi-centenary of the foundation of the city, by a solemn pontifical Mass at which the late Cardinal Gibbons presided, followed by other imposing ceremonies.

LEGISLATION.—The sale of liquors has been prohibited by state and federal legislation. Alabama was the thirtieth state to ratify the prohibition amendment, 14 January, 1919, but refused to ratify the suffrage amendment, 2 September, 1919. After the passage of the Federal Suffrage Act, an extraordinary session of the legislature was called (1920). It was decided that the same conditions which applied to male voters were to extend to women voters, and an amendment was proposed providing that in order to register or to vote the elector must be of good character and must understand the duties and responsibilities of citizenship under a republican government. This was designed to prevent the voting of undesirable females of the negro race.

Alaska (cf. C. E., I-246c).—AREA AND ACCESSIBILITY.—According to the census of 1920, Alaska embraces, inclusive of the islands, 590,884 square miles. The total area including water surface is 378,165,760 acres. There is a railway of 112 miles from Skagway to the town of White Horse in the Canadian Yukon region; thence transport is by coach or, in summer, by steamer. The Copper River and Northwestern Railway completed its line from Cordova to Kennecott, a distance of 197 miles, in 1911. In 1915 the route for the Alaska railroad was decided upon, to run from Seward to Fairbanks, a distance of 471 miles. Of this 398 miles are already being used.

POPULATION.—The census of 1920 revealed a surprising decrease in population from 64,356 in 1910 to 54,899.

RECENT HISTORY.—Intensely patriotic, the first thought of the Alaskans during the World War was service to their country, and by the end of 1918 the exodus assumed the proportions of a typical Alaska stampede. Alaska's contribution was 2,102 soldiers, or 1.06 per cent. The heavy drain of man power resulted in curtailing the output of many industries and in the interruption of all new development, with the exception of the fishing and lumbering industries, which were enlarged to meet the demand for food and airplane material. The production of gold dropped nearly 45 per cent between 1916 and 1919, and the labor employed in all forms of mining was cut in half. Considerable parts of Alaska are passing through the stage of the deserted mining camp. The adoption of a broad constructive policy that will make for the rational development of Alaska through the peopling of the country and the financing of industries will do much, indeed, for the nation.

RESOURCES.—In 1918 the output of canned salmon was 6,605,835 cases, and the total value of the fisheries of the territory was $59,099,483.

The output of gold for the fiscal year 1918 was $9,108,500; 1919, $9,036,300. The national forests of Alaska have an area of about 20,579,000 acres (30 June, 1920). The total wealth accruing to the United States from its Alaskan possessions between 1867 and 1919 is calculated at nearly $600,000,000. During the fiscal year 1919 the bulk of trade, export and import, amounted to $135,115,025. There are 180,000 animals farmed out in herds to the various mission centers.

GOVERNMENT AND REVENUE.—By Act of Congress, approved 24 August, 1912, Alaska became a territory with a legislative assembly consisting of eight senators and sixteen representatives. Congress reserved to itself the right to legislate on certain subjects, so that the territory is now governed conjointly by Congress at Washington and its local legislative assembly. The delegate to Congress participates in the debate but has no vote. Regular sessions are held biennially at Juneau, the capital. Special sessions are called by the governor, who is appointed by the President of the United States for four years, and is assisted by a surveyor-general, who is ex-officio secretary of the territory. In November, 1916, Alaska voted for territorial prohibition. The judicial power of the territory is vested in the United States District Court for Alaska, and in probate and juvenile courts and courts of justice. The District Court is divided into four divisions. There is no provision for taxation of real or personal property, except in municipalities (2 per cent only). The revenues are derived from business licenses. There is no funded debt. The governor's message to the Alaska legislature urged the revision of the act to regulate marriage and marriage licenses, in order that any person authorized to solemnize marriage between parties living more than twenty-five miles away from the office of the United States Commissioner could issue marriage licenses as agent for the commissioner.

EDUCATION.—The federal (Nelson) law provides for schools outside of incorporated school districts and receives for their maintenance 25 per cent of the Alaska fund. The territorial laws provide for schools in incorporated towns, one-fourth of the cost of maintenance being borne by the town or district by taxation of real and personal property; this includes night schools. The Board of Education, which is composed of the governor and four senators, appoints the territorial commissioner of education. The schools for the education of the natives are under the supervision of the United States Commissioner of Education in Washington. In 1920 there were 67 schools in Alaska with 3,418 enrolled pupils and 163 teachers. The total cost of instruction was $330,038. An appropriation of $60,000 has been made for the uncompleted Alaska Agricultural College and School of Mines near Fairbanks. The report on education for 1918 (156-57) enumerates in Alaska three schools of the Russian Mission ministering to Indians of their own communities and to Russian white children.

CATHOLIC MISSIONS.—The Prefecture Apostolic comprising the 586,400 square miles that make up the Territory of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands was erected into a Vicariate Apostolic 22 December, 1916. The Prefect Apostolic, Mgr. Joseph Crimont, S.J., became the first Vicar Apostolic and was consecrated titular bishop of Ammedara, 25 July, 1917. There are at present (1920) 20 Jesuit Fathers and 10 coadjutor Jesuit brothers, 20 stations with chapels, 17 churches with resident priests; 17 Sisters of Charity of Providence from Montreal, 26 Sisters of St. Anne of Sachine and 8 Ursulines. The total population is about 72,000, of which 12,000 are Catholics, about one-half of these being natives. The total number of children in Catholic institutions is 1,000.

Alatri, DIOCESE OF (ALATRINENSIS; cf. C. E., I-251a), in the province of Rome, Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. In 1909 Bishop Bevilacqua came to this see as successor to Bishop Spila who had retired, and he filled the see until his transfer to the titular see of Rhithymna, when he was succeeded on 1 July, 1915, by Rt. Rev. Michel Izzi. Bishop Izzi died 31 December, 1917, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Anthony Torrini, was appointed Bishop of Alatri 23 December, 1918. Born in the diocese of Fiesole, 1878, he served as vice-rector of the seminary of Strada and then rector of the seminary of Fiesole, until his appointment as bishop. In 1920 the Catholic population of this diocese numbered 33,000 and there were 16 parishes, 62 secular and 42 regular clergy, 52 seminarians, 77 churches or chapels, 31 brothers, and 86 sisters.

Alba Julia, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See FOGARAS AND ALBA JULIA.

Alba Pompeia, DIOCESE OF (ALBÆ POMPEIÆ; cf. C. E., I-252c), in the province of Cuneo, Italy, is suffragan of Turin. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Francesco Re, b. in the diocese of Turin, 1848, was appointed to this diocese 30 December, 1889. The number of Catholics recorded for the diocese in 1920 was 150,500 and there were 101 parishes, 316 secular and 11 regular clergy, 43 seminarians, 675 churches or chapels, 6 brothers, and 180 sisters.

Albania (cf. C. E., I-253b), a country in the Balkan Peninsula, corresponding to the ancient Epirus and Illyria, and consisting, under the Turkish régime, of the provinces of Scutari and Yanina and parts of the vilayets of Kossovo and Monastir. It is bounded on the north and east by Jugoslavia; on the south by Greece; on the west by Adriatic; on the southwest by the Ionian Sea; and has an area of about 11,000 square miles. The exact boundaries of the country have not yet been settled. The principal cities are Durazzo, Scutari (largest town), Elbasan, and Tirana. The principal ports are Valona and San Giovanni di Medua. About two-thirds of the Albanians are Moslems (chiefly of the Bektashi sect); of the remaining one-third the Christians in the north are for the most part Catholic; those in the south belong to the Greek Church. There is a total of 121,440 Catholics. The estimated population is about 825,000, but the Albanians, as a race, are not confined to Albania alone, for there are 25,000 Albanians in Italy, and 200,000 in Greece.

ECCLESIASTICAL DIVISION.—Albania is divided ecclesiastically into the Archdiocese of Scutari, where the Jesuits have their seminary with suffragan sees of Alessio, Pulati, and Sappa; the Archdiocese of Durazzo with the suffragan see of Croia; Uskub, without suffragans, and the abbey nullius of St. Alexander of Orosci or Miridite (q. v.). Durazzo and Uskub depend directly on the Holy See. An Apostolic Delegation was erected in Albania November, 1920, with its seat in the city of Scutari.

Mgr. Ernesto Cozzi was the first Apostolic Delegate. In 1921, following much political and religious animosity, Albania's complete separation from the Greek Church took place. This final exosion of the Albanians from religious connection with the Greek Patriarchate was accomplished by Fan Roli, who won much prestige as president of Albania's delegation to the League of Nations.

GOVERNMENT.—The foundations of the present Government were laid by the Convention of Lusnia, January, 1920, when it was decided that the governmental authority should be lodged in three distinct but correlative bodies. First in rank comes the Regency Council—composed of two Christians and two Moslems—which takes the place of the chief executive. Its authority is not very wide. The second body is the Council of Ministers, or Cabinet, composed of the departmental heads of the Government; it is responsible to the third body, Parliament. The Parliament consists of seventy-two members forming one chamber and elected by the people. The Cabinet is in reality the body that wields the executive power, subject to the dictates of Parliament and to the exigencies of the party system. As to the future government, plans are unsettled, the probability being in favor of a constitutional monarchy.

RECENT HISTORY.—At Valona on 28 November, 1912, the independence of Albania was proclaimed and on 20 December, 1912, at the London Ambassadorial Conference it was guaranteed. The crown was offered to Prince William of Wied by an Austrian deputation at Newied on 21 February, 1914, and accepted. The government of the country was vested in the hands of the Prince, supported and advised by an International Commission of Control. At the outbreak of the European War, however, the Prince and nearly all of the Commission left the country, which fell into a state of anarchy. An attempt by Essad Pasha Topdani to establish a military government failed (October, 1914). He had been expelled from the country in May, but returned with the departure of the Prince of Wied. In the secret treaty of London, April, 1915, Albania was partitioned among Italy, Greece, and Servia. During the European War the Austrians overran Albania, capturing San Giovanni di Medua in January and Durazzo in February, 1916. On 3 June, 1917, General Ferrero, the commander of the Italian Expedition in Albania, officially declared the independence of Albania under the protection of the Italian Crown and set up a provisional government at Durazzo. In December, 1918, however, the Albanians convened the national Albanian Assembly at Durazzo, and elected the first governor of the re-established Albanian state in the face of the opposition of the Italian authorities. The Italians retaliated by interfering with the cables and telegraphs, and suppressing the news about the new Albanian government. Again, in 1919, the partition of Albania was proposed and roused great indignation, especially that of President Wilson of the United States, who forced the abandonment of the proposals. In January a National Congress of Albanians gathered at Lusnia and elected a Regency Council of notables to act in the place of a prince, and also a Government under the premiership of Suleiman Bey Delvina. Shortly afterwards the seat of the administration was moved to Tirana. The Italians came to an agreement with the Albanians at Tirana on 2 August, 1920, and evacuated the Valona district, which they had held for several years, retaining no hold on Albania, except the right to fortify Cape Linguetta and Cape Trepanti. Italy retained the island of Sasseno, and also recognized the independence of Albania. In this protocol the provisions of the secret Treaty of London partitioning Albania were annulled and the French troops were forced to withdraw. On 17 December, 1920, Albania was admitted to membership in the League of Nations. The Albanian frontiers of 1913 are again being considered as the boundaries of the present Albania, which means that Scutari, Koriza, and Argyrovastron are to belong to her. This, however, leaves out the 1,500,000 Albanians in the provinces of Chameria, held by Greece, and in Kossovo and Dibra.

Albano, DIOCESE OF (ALBANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-255d), a suburbicarian diocese in the province of Rome, in central Italy. The see is now (1922) filled by His Eminence Granito Pignatelli di Belmonte, b. at Naples, 1851, ordained 1879, attached to the office of the Secretary of State, 1893, and ablegate to France the same year, appointed titular archbishop of Edessa, 10 November, 1899, made apostolic nuncio in Belgium the same year, and in Austria-Hungary, 1904, returned to Rome, 1911, and made cardinal priest 27 November of that year. He represented the pope at the coronation of King George V of England (1911), and in 1914 attended the Eucharistic Congress of Lourdes as papal legate. He was promoted to this see 5 January, 1916, as successor to Cardinal Agliardi, d. 19 March, 1915. By 1920 statistics the Catholic population of the diocese numbers 50,000 and there are 12 parishes, 60 secular and 100 regular clergy, 35 seminarians and 62 churches or chapels.

Albany, DIOCESE OF (ALBANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-256b), comprises 10,419 sq. miles in the State of New York, U. S. A., and is suffragan of Buffalo. For more than twenty years this see was filled by Rt. Rev. Thomas Burke, born in Utica, N. Y., in 1840, ordained in 1864, and appointed bishop 15 May, 1894. In 1902 he was made a knight of the Grand Cross of the Holy Sepulchre and took the cross as his coat of arms; on 30 May, 1914, he was named an assistant at the pontifical throne. Bishop Burke died suddenly on 20 January, 1915, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Cusack, born in New York City 1862, ordained 1885, made superior of the New York diocesan missionaries in 1897, appointed titular Bishop of Themyscira and auxiliary to the Archbishop of New York, 11 March, 1904, and transferred to Albany, 5 July, 1915. Upon the death of Bishop Cusack 12 July, 1918, his successor was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Edmund Gibbons, 10 March, 1919, and consecrated by Mgr. Bonzano in Buffalo, 25 March following. Born in White Plains, N. Y., 1868, Bishop Gibbons made his final studies at the American College in Rome in 1887, and was ordained in the church of St. John Lateran, 27 May, 1893. He served as episcopal-secretary and pastor, and was appointed to the episcopacy 10 March, 1919, and consecrated 25 March following. He is the sixth bishop of this see.

The religious orders established in the diocese include: men, Minor Conventuals, Franciscans, Paulists, Redemptorists and Brothers of the Christian Schools; women, Religious of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of St. Dominic, of Mercy, of the Holy Name, of the Good Shepherd, Little Sisters of the Poor, Daughters of Charity, Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet, and Presentation Nuns. By latest statistics (1922) the Catholic population of this territory numbers 215,412; comprising Germans, Austrians, Poles, Ruthenians, Slovaks, Italians, French, and Lithuanians, besides the American born. The diocese comprises 254 secular and 52 regular priests, 202 churches (1 of the Maronite Rite), 47 missions with churches, 64 mission stations, 30 chapels, 82 clerical students, 2 colleges for men and 1 for women, 30 parochial high schools with 4631 pupils, 6 academies with 639 boys and 601 girls, 2 normal schools with 12 teachers and 100 students, 60 parishes with parochial schools with 22,812 pupils, 6 orphan asylums, 2 refugees, 3 day nurseries, 3 hospitals, and 6 homes; 12 public institutions permit the priests to minister in them. A total of 23,321 children are under Catholic care. The Clerical Fund Society is established among the clergy, and the Knights of Columbus, Catholic Daughters of America, Knights of St. John, Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association, and National Catholic Welfare Council are organized among the laity.

Albenga, DIOCESE OF (ALBIGANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-258c), in the Province of Genoa, Italy, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Genoa. Rt. Rev. Filippo Allegro, who came to this see in 1879 and filled it for thirty-one years, died 2 December, 1910. His successor, Rt. Rev. Joseph Cattaroni, was appointed 11 April, 1911, but transferred to Belluno in November, 1913. The next incumbent, Bishop Carletti, was appointed in July, 1914, consecrated 13 September, and died 23 October of the same year, before he had been installed. He was succeeded by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Angelo Cambiaso, b. at Genoa, 1865, ordained 1889, appointed bishop 22 January, 1915, and consecrated 21 March following. The diocese has a Catholic population of 125,000, 167 parishes, 258 secular and 86 regular clergy, 50 seminarians, 354 churches or chapels, 50 brothers and 190 sisters.

Albi, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ALBIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-267a), in France, comprises the Department of Tarn. At the time of its re-establishment in 1882, it united the ancient Bishoprics of Castres and Laveur. The first monastery founded in the archdiocese was that of St. Salvy near Albi. Many of its parishes are very ancient, having existed before the time of Charlemagne. The cathedral of St. Cecelia is southern Gothic in architecture, though it gives the impression of a fortified church. The ancient Benedictine Abbey of Sorèze was founded 26 August, 816, by Pepin, son of Louis the Pious. The Abbey of Castres, which later gave birth to the city of Castres, dates from 819, its founder being St. Benedict of Aniane, acting under the patronage of Louis the Pious. The monastery was originally called St. Benedict of Belle-Celle, the name of Castres being added in the middle of the ninth century.

The present (1922) Archbishop is Mgr. Pierre-Célestin Cézérac, who succeeded the late Mgr. Mignot in 1918. Born in 1856, at Caussens in the Diocese of Auch, he was ordained in 1880, was made vicar general of the diocese in 1900, and consecrated bishop of Cahors, 4 January, 1912. Six years later he was promoted to the titular archbishopric of Caesarea Mauretaniae and made coadjutor of the Archdiocese of Albi. On 27 June, 1919, Mgr. Cézérac promulgated the Brief erecting into an archconfraternity the confraternity of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary established for some time in the Church of St. Mary Magdalen; and the decree of the Congregation of Rites granting a votive Mass of the Sacred Heart. A diocesan synod attended by more than 140 priests, was held from 23 to 26 August, 1920, the first to be convened since 1881.

The Church in France suffered a great loss in the predecessor of Mgr. Cézérac, Mgr. Mignot, who died 18 March, 1918. Born in 1842 at Brancourt, he was ordained in 1865, became vicar general of the diocese of Soissons, in 1887, and three years later was made Bishop of Fréjus, whence he was promoted to Albi in December, 1899. His episcopate was marked by the great impetus given to doctrinal studies amongst the clergy, and by the development of the Catholic press and of social organizations, notably L'association de la jeunesse française. Under his wise guidance the difficult application of the Associations and Separation Laws took place with very little change in the religious life of the diocese. The schools were reopened with a secularized personnel, no churches were closed, and the numerous secular clergy were supported either by state pensions or the funds of the diocese.

The apostolate of Mgr. Mignot was peculiarly an intellectual one, and his published works, "Lettres à son clergé sur les études ecclésiastiques," "L'église et la critique," "Quelques accusations portées contre l'église," "La nécessité de l'enseignement chrétien," etc., testify to his enlightened scholarship and his worth as philosopher, theologian, and apologist.

Other prominent people of Albi recently deceased are Mgr. Gabriel Cazes (1849-1920), arch-priest of Castra; the Baroness Renée Reille, foundress of the French Patriotic League; Jean Jaurès, deputy from Tarn, head of the United Socialists and enemy of religion, who was assassinated during the war.

Of the 863 priests in the diocese, besides 56 seminarians, 349 were mobilized during the World War: 7 as chaplains, 41 as volunteers, 15 as commissioned, and 32 as non-commissioned officers. The Cross of the Legion of Honor was conferred on 10, the Military Medal on 5, and the War Cross on 90, while there were 150 citations. Sixteen secular and fifteen regular priests and nine seminarians gave up their lives.

The statistics for 1921 are as follows: 507 parishes, 49 first class, 452 second class and 6 vicarial chapels; 720 secular and 50 regular priests, 60 brothers, all secularized, 1 monastery of Benedictines, 1 convent of men of the Third Order Regular of St. Francis; 15 convents of women, 3 Carmelites, 2 Poor Clares, Benedictines, Sisters of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of the Holy Agony, Sisters of the Cross, Daughters of Jesus, Religious Adorers of the Most Blessed Sacrament, Sisters of the Presentation, Sisters of St. Dominic, Sisters of St. Joseph of Oulias and the Institute of the Immaculate Conception. Since the Associations Law went into effect, many of the 2,500 members of these communities have been doing missionary work in other countries. There are 1 theological seminary with 7 professors and 60 students, and 3 preparatory seminaries with 580 students. The educational institutions include, 3 colleges for boys, professors 15, pupils 600; 18 academies for girls, teachers 80, pupils 1,000; 186 free elementary schools, teachers 431, pupils 10,496. Charitable works comprise 1 orphanage, 3 infant asylums, 1 insane asylum, 1 free dispensary, 15 hospitals in charge of Sisters, 1 house of refuge. Missionary work in the diocese is done by the Franciscans of Ambialet.

Organizations amongst the clergy are: The Relief Fund, Priestly League, Diocesan Mutual Association, Pious Association for the Relief of Deceased Priests, and the Third Orders. For the laity there are, The Association for Catholic Young People, Third Orders Secular of St. Francis and St. Dominic, Patriotic League, Professional Association of Catholic Railroad Workers, and Christian Workers.

Catholic periodicals are the "Croix de Tarn," "Le Semeur," "La Semaine Religieuse," and numerous parochial bulletins.

Albini, CHARLES DOMINIQUE, priest and missionary b. at Mentone, 26 November, 1790; d. in Corsica, 21 May, 1839. On the completion of his early studies he entered the theological seminary at Cimiez, where he was distinguished by his intelligence and piety. After his ordination in 1815, the bishop entrusted him with several important missions, and later made him superior of the seminary. Desiring to lead a life of greater perfection, he entered the Society of Oblates of Mary Immaculate at Aix in 1824. His virtue was such that by apostolic indult he was professed after a few months novitiate. Sent to Marseilles, he labored with great zeal and remarkable results, and later founded and took charge of the Italian Missions. In 1835 he was sent to Vico, in Corsica, to open a new house of his congregation; his indefatigable work in the pulpit and in the confessional gained many souls to God. Exhausted by his untiring labors, he died a saintly death at the age of forty-nine, receiving the Last Sacraments from Father Guibert, later Cardinal Archbishop of Paris. The cause of Father Albini's canonization was introduced 14 April, 1915, and confirmed by the Pope.

Albright Brethren (cf. C. I., I-270b).—I. EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—This body, known variously as "New Methodists," "Albrights," "Albright Brethren," numbered 155,114 members in 1916. In the United States it had 120,756 members, 1,582 church edifices and 1,051 ministers. It supports missions in Japan, China, Germany, Switzerland, Russia and Canada, employing 24 American missionaries, chiefly in Asia, conducting 15 hospitals and 1 orphanage.

II. UNITED EVANGELICAL CHURCH.—In 1894, due to a schism, this sect broke away from the Evangelical Association. In doctrine it does not differ essentially from that body nor from the Methodist Episcopal Church. In recent years there has been a movement toward reunion with the parent body, the Evangelical Association. In 1916 it claimed 89,774 members, 905 church edifices, and 610 ministers. Its foreign mission work is confined to the province of Hu-nan, in China, where there are 28 missionaries, 8 churches, 13 schools, and 2 hospitals or dispensaries.

H. K. Carroll's statistics for the two bodies in 1921 ("Christian Herald," 7 March, 1921), listed 1,597 ministers, 2,399 church edifices, and 209,047 members in the United States.

Aleppo, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ALEPPENSIS; cf. C. E., I-283b), in Syria, is governed by four Catholic archbishops for the Melchite, Syrian, Armenian and Maronite Rites. Those of the Latin Rite are governed by a vicar apostolic, who is at the same time apostolic delegate of Syria, with residence at Beirut, and constitute the Vicariate Apostolic of Aleppo, which was separated from the general Vicariate of Constantinople in 1762. This territory has about 2,350,000 Latin Catholics and 10,250 of other rites. In 1920 the archdiocese counted a Catholic population of 23,476 (Greeks, Uniates or Melchites, Syrians, Armenians and Maronites), 700,000 Mohammedans, 20,000 Jews, 30,000 Armenian Schismatics, 15,000 Greek Schismatics, 4,000 Protestants and 6,000 of the sect of Jezides. There are 6 parishes, 16 missions, 5 regular priests, 5 churches and 5 schools with 370 pupils, for the Armenian Rite; 16 secular and 2 regular clergy, 2 churches and 3 schools for the Greek Melchites; 7 parishes, 16 priests, 5 churches, 6 seminarians, 4 schools, 3 of which are free, and the Institute of Notre Dame de Lourdes at Aleppo under the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, for the Maronites; 14 secular priests, 5 parishes, 4 missions and 5 churches, 1 secondary school for boys (200 pupils), 1 for girls (160 pupils), and 1 orphanage for the Syrians. Rt. Rev. Denis-Ephrem Naccachi, appointed Archbishop for the Syrians 5 April, 1903, died 13 March, 1920, and on 28 August, 1921, the diocese lost Dr. Philippus Shaaal, chorepiscopus. A Syrian Catholic fills the post of Minister of Economics and Agriculture. The diocese is now administered for the Syrians by Most Rev. Theophilus-Gabriel Tappouni, transferred to this diocese in September, 1921; for the Armenians by Most Rev. Augustin Sayeghian, appointed 6 July, 1902, for the Greek Melchites, by Most Rev. Peter Macarios Saba, promoted 23 June, 1919, and for the Maronites by Most Rev. Michael Akras, appointed 24 February, 1913. During the World War the Syrian archbishop, with several of the clergy, was imprisoned for three and a half months, while the churches and other buildings were seized by the soldiers. Since the war all the territory included in this diocese has been freed from the Turkish yoke.

Ales and Terralba, DIOCESE OF (UXELLENSIS AND TERRALENSIS; cf. C. E., I-283d), in the province of Cagliari, Italy, is suffragan of the Archdiocese of Oristano. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Francesco Emanuelli, b. at Andagno, 1863, served as rector of the seminary of Cagliari and was appointed bishop 29 August, after a vacancy of four years, to succeed Bishop Garau-Onida, d. 1906. The episcopal residence is at Ales. In 1920 there were 59,530 Catholics in the diocese, 42 parishes, 83 secular priests, 16 seminarians and 108 churches or chapels.

Alessandria della Paglia, DIOCESE OF (ALEXANDRINENSIS STATIELLORUM; cf. C. E., I-282d), in Piedmont, Italy, a suffragan of Vercelli. Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Capecci, who was appointed to this see 19 April, 1897, died 16 July, 1918, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Giosuè Signori, b. at Commenduno 1859, appointed Bishop of Fossano 15 April, 1910, transferred to Alessandria della Paglia, 23 December, 1918, and installed 10 March, 1919. In 1920 the Catholic population of this diocese numbered 140,500 and there were 63 parishes, 210 secular and 25 regular clergy, 50 seminarians, 200 churches or chapels and 160 sisters.

Alessio, DIOCESE OF (ALEXIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-284c), in Albania, suffragan of Scutari. Bishop Dedë, who was made coadjutor to Bishop Malczyński in 1904, succeeded him as Bishop of Alessio 21 April, 1908, and filled the see until his death 8 October, 1910. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Louis Bumci, b. at Scutari, 1872, was appointed bishop 18 September, 1911. Within the diocesan limits is the quasi-episcopal abbey of Miridite (q. v.). In 1920 there were 15,000 Catholics in the diocese, 9 secular and 3 regular clergy, 13 churches and 5 sisters.

Alexandria, DIOCESE OF (ALEXANDRINENSIS; cf. C. E., I-302d), in Ontario, Canada, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Kingston. Its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Alexander MacDonell, who came to the see in 1900, d. 29 May, 1905, and the second bishop, Rt. Rev. William Andrew MacDonell, b. in St. Andre, 1853, was appointed 21 March, 1906. Bishop MacDonell died 17 November, 1920, and on 28 June, 1921, the third and present bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. Felix Couturier, Dominican, titular Bishop of Myriophytos, was appointed to succeed him. By 1921 statistics there were 21,000 Catholics in the diocese, 22 priests, 80 religious women, 17 parishes, 23 churches, 6 convents, and 1 hospital. The religious orders established in the diocese are: Sisters of Notre Dame, Sisters of Providence, Sisters of the Holy Cross and Seven Dolours and Brothers of the Presentation.

Alexandria, DIOCESE OF (ALEXANDRINA IN LOUISIANA; cf. C. E., X-710b), created in August, 1910, from the former See of Natchitoches, is under the direction of Rt. Rev. Cornelius Van de Ven, D. D., who was consecrated Bishop of Natchitoches 30 November, 1904, and was instrumental in having the see transferred. It includes the same territory as Natchitoches and has a Catholic population of about 44,500, comprising 25,000 whites of French descent; 2,500 Mexicans; 2,000 Italians; 9,000 other whites; and 6,000 negroes. There are 25 parishes and 50 missions with 75 churches in all, 27 secular priests, 11 regular; 8 lay brothers and 10 seminarians; 2 convents for men; 18 for women with 197 sisters; 2 colleges for men with 15 teachers and an attendance of 450; 1 college for women with 5 teachers; 4 academies for girls with a total attendance of 762, and 1 normal school. An orphan asylum for boys and girls was founded in 1917 near Pineville by the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word, of Galveston, and now has 56 inmates. There are two Catholic hospitals in the diocese, one under the direction of the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word, the other under the Franciscan Sisters of Calais, France, and the priests of the diocese are admitted to minister in the Louisiana Hospital for the Insane and the United States Public Health Hospital. During the World War one priest, the Rev. F. J. Plutz, served as a chaplain in the army, and the laity did its full duty in all respects. The various societies established in the diocese are: The Knights of Columbus, Catholic Knights of America and the Holy Name Society.

Alexandria, PATRIARCHATE OF (ALEXANDRIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-299d), in Egypt. It comprises the Coptic, Latin and Armenian Rites, the head of the first named being Patriarch of Alexandria with residence at Cairo. This rite is at present under an Apostolic administrator, Bishop Sedfaoui, the last patriarch, His Excellency Mgr. Macaire having retired in 1908. Belonging to this rite there are 5,500 of the inhabitants, 11 priests, 21 churches or chapels, 1 seminary, 9 secondary schools and 19 elementary schools. The patriarchate for the Latin Rite is titular, the patriarch, Mgr. Paul De Huyn, residing in Rome. Mgr. De Huyn was appointed successor to Mgr. Marinangeli, who died 6 March, 1921.

A diocese is established for the Armenian Rite which comprises the whole of Egypt with the episcopal seat at Cairo. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. John Couzain, born at Mardin, 1875, was appointed, 27 August, 1911, to succeed Bishop Kojoumian, promoted to the titular see of Chalcedon. In 1920 there were in this diocese, 2,300 Armenian Catholics, 70,000 of other rites, 9,500,000 infidels, 650,000 Schismatics, 87 missionaries, 5 native regular clergy, 2 primary stations, 2 secondary stations, and 3 churches.

Alexian Brothers (cf. C. E., I-306d).—In 1865 Brother Bonaventura Thelen established the Alexian Brothers in the United States, in Chicago, Ill., where in the first fifty years of its existence the Brothers' hospital cared for 101,633 patients, of whom 50,905 were Catholics, 37,775 Protestants, 6,430 Jews, and 6,523 of no religion. Of this number 35,082 were nursed free of charge. The present hospital, erected in 1895, ranks with the best equipped hospitals in the country. Connected with it is the mother-house and novitiate of the Alexian Brothers for the United States, and the training school for the members of the community. Candidates for admission to this order are received between the ages of eighteen and thirty-three years, are trained in hospital work as well as in the duties of the religious state, and observe the Rule of St. Augustine. The Brothers also conduct hospitals in St. Louis, Mo., Elizabeth, N. J., and Oshkosh, Wis.

On 22 May, 1906, at the meeting of the General Chapter of the Alexian Brothers, at Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany, Brother Paulus Overbeck was elected as superior general, to succeed Brother Quirinus Bank, who had held that position for fifteen years. In 1911 Overbeck was re-elected and remained superior general, by special permission of the Holy See, until 1920, as owing to the World War it was impossible to hold a general chapter for an election of the general council of the community. At that date Brother Alexius Jansen, who had been provincial rector of the American province, was elected superior general. The general chapter resolved a series of alterations in the statutes of the community demanded by the new Canon Law; these changes are now awaiting the approval of the Holy See.

During the World War and its subsequent upheavals the growth of the community was very much retarded, but since then several new branch hospitals have been opened; one at Malseneck near Munich, Bavaria, another at Viersen, Rheinprovinz, Germany, while a branch house and novitiate are to be established in Ireland. In the United States the number of candidates for the Brotherhood is on the increase, and the Brothers contemplate starting a training school for male nurses in connection with the hospital at Chicago. The present training of nurses being restricted to members and candidates of the community only, and there not being such a school in existence in the United States, this institution would be of great benefit to the public.

Algeria, a French province in northern Africa, comprising two great divisions: Northern and Southern Algeria, which are in turn divided into departments and territories as follows: Northern Algeria, consisting of Civil Territory and Territoire de Commandement, 17 arrondissements and 269 communes, besides 74 mixed communes; Southern Algeria, consisting of four territories, Ain Sefra, Ghardaia, Tuggurt, and the Saharan oases, organized by decree of 14 August, 1905, 12 communes of which 5 are mixed and 7 native. The total population in 1911 was 5,563,828, of which 494,306 belonged to the southern territories. This included 4,411,276 natives, 492,660 French, 70,271 Jews and descendants, 2,375 Tunisians, 23,115 Moroccans, 135,150 Spaniards, 36,791 Italians, and 23,927 other foreigners. The largest towns with their population (1912) are: Algiers, 172,397; Oran, 123,086; Constantine, 65,173; Bône, 42,039; Sidi-bel-Abbes, 30,942; Tlemçen, 39,874; Mostaganem, 23,166.

RELIGION.—The majority of the inhabitants are Mohammedans. There are about 70,000 Jews, with 6 Jewish rabbis sharing in government grants. The Protestant pastors number 13. The Catholic Church in the province of Algeria is divided into the Archdiocese of Algiers and its suffragans, the dioceses of Oran and Constantine (q.v.). When the Law of Separation went into effect in the French possessions (1906), a special decree (1907) empowered the Governor General, where public and national interests required it, to grant temporary indemnities to the clergy who conducted public worship in conformity to the law. These indemnities were to cease after ten years. In 1917 the suppression of all state aid to the clergy of Algeria would have resulted most disastrously, as many parishes, too poor to support themselves, would have disappeared, and the numerous Catholics of Spanish, Italian and Maltese origin would naturally have appealed to their mother-lands for priests and subsidies, leading to the ultimate disappearance of the French clergy. In response to a petition of the archbishops and bishops of Northern Africa, which was supported by the Governor General and the financial delegation, the French government granted an extension of the indemnities for five years.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The European War contributed largely to the development and prosperity of Algeria. At the outbreak of hostilities France looked to Algeria for her food supply and since the war its power of production, far from showing any falling off, has enabled it to tide over the critical period that threatened to paralyze its activities. Notwithstanding the difficulties of transport, its products realized high prices in France and abroad, and the growing wealth of the country is attested by the volume of foreign trade which in 1919 reached a total of 2,288 milliards, or 759 milliards more than in 1919. Of the imports in 1919, 61.1 per cent came from France; of the exports, 88.2 per cent went to France. In 1920 the chief imports were cottons, clothing and linen, machinery and parts, wine, and tobacco. In 1919, 8,170 vessels of 5,807,632 tons net entered, and 8,107 vessels of 5,704,719 tons cleared Algerian ports. The mercantile marine consisted on 1 January, 1920, of 364 vessels of 29,505 tons. On 31 December, 1919, there were 2,221 miles of railway open for traffic (807 privately owned). However, the lack of development of the immense resources of Algeria is due to inadequate transportation facilities. Motor routes are being established and motor transport is being utilized in every branch of trade. The soil is, under various systems, held by proprietors, by farmers, and by métayers or khammés. Most of the state lands have been appropriated to the colonists. In 1920 the yield of wine was 157,136,452 gallons; wheat, 243,000 tons; barley, 207,397 tons; oats, 73,422 tons. The forests cover 6,560,232 acres, of which 645,000 acres are devoted to cork trees. In 1919 the mineral output amounted to 1,019,824 tons.

EDUCATION.—In 1919-20 there were 496 Mohammedan schools with 35,578 pupils, also higher schools (medersas) at Algiers, Tlemçen, and Constantine. For secondary education, Algeria had 16 establishments with 9,837 pupils (7,180 boys and 2,651 girls). There were also 1,298 primary schools and kindergartens, public and private, with 132,617 pupils, two normal schools for men with 29 professors and 230 students (54 Mohammedan), and three for women with 21 professors and 200 students. The university at Algiers has an attendance of 1,428 pupils, 614 for law, 359 for medicine and pharmacy, 189 for science, 266 for art. Besides the university there were schools for commerce, agriculture, hydrography, and fine arts.

GOVERNMENT.—The administration of Algeria is centralized at Algiers under the authority of a general government and the control of the Minister of the Interior. The Governor-General, nominated by decree of the President of the Republic, is assisted by a conseil de gouvernement which deals in a deliberative or consultative manner with certain affairs, and by a conseil supérieur, whose principal duties include the examination of the budget proposals and the division of the taxes. The financial delegations comprise three groups of members or delegations, one of officials, one of French colonists, and one of native taxpayers. Algeria is divided into three departments: Algiers, Oran, and Constantine, each headed by a prefect, assisted by a conseil de préfecture and a conseil général. The civil territory is divided into arrondissements. The four territories of the south: Ghardaia, Aïn-Sefra, the Oasis, and Tuggurt, form a separate colony. In each of these the military commander directs all administrative services under the authority of the governor. They have an autonomous budget distinct from that of Algeria. The great aid rendered by Algeria to France during the War led the French government to cause a new reform program to be voted by the Chambers. The law of 4 February, 1919, accords French citizenship to all Algerian natives who have fulfilled one of the following conditions: to have served in the French Army or Navy, to be a proprietor or farmer or be inscribed on the license charts, to know how to read and write French, and be holder of a French decoration. The Mohammedan Algerian natives who are not French citizens are represented in all Algerian assemblies by elected members holding the same rank and privileges as the French members. They are admitted by the same right as the French citizens to all public functions, except certain authoritative positions defined by decree of 26 March, 1919. Since January, 1919, colonists and natives are subjected to the same taxation. The military force in Algeria constitutes the XIXth Army Corps, consisting of three divisions. French residents are under the same military obligations as in France; the natives must serve three years with the colors and can be called upon as reservists at any time in case of mobilization.

Alghero, DIOCESE OF (ALGERENSIS; cf. C. E., I-310d), in Italy, is suffragan of Sassari. Rt. Rev. Ernest Piovela, who was appointed to this see 15 April, 1907, was promoted to the Archdiocese of Oristano 15 April, 1914, and the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Francesco d'Errico was appointed his successor, 12 August, 1914. In 1920 the Catholics of this diocese numbered 54,300; there were 26 parishes, 80 secular priests, 20 seminarians, and 120 churches or chapels.

Algiers, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ALGERIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-311a), comprises the province of Algeria in French Africa. The Catholics number 300,000, of whom 200,000 are French, 30,000 Italians, 40,000 Spaniards and 5,000 Maltese. Since 1917 the archdiocese has been administered by the Most Rev. Augustine Fernand Leynaud, b. at Ollières, 26 August, 1865, ordained 24 June, 1888. In 1901 he was made pastor at Susa where in 1903 he discovered the famous catacombs of Hadrûmêtum, which to-day attract a great number of visitors from all parts of the world. He is the author of a learned and widely circulated work on these catacombs, to which is due the fact that they are so well known. He was elected archbishop 2 January, 1917, consecrated at Carthage 6 March, published 22 March following and enthroned on the same day. During his administration many charitable institutions have been established in the archdiocese. The auxiliary bishop, Rt. Rev. Alexandre Piquemal, a devout and zealous prelate, died in 1921, as did also Sister Chabanne, Visitatrix of the Sisters of Charity, who was a member of the order for seventy-eight years and died at the age of ninety-eight.

At the present time (1922) the archdiocese consists of 125 parishes, 150 churches, 5 mission stations for the Mussulmans of Kabylia, 1 monastery of the White Fathers, 5 monasteries and convents for women with 200 sisters, 150 seculars, 40 regulars, 1 seminary and 35 seminarians, also the mother-house and novitiate of the White Fathers, missionaries in Africa. The following schools exist in the archdiocese: 2 colleges for men with 15 teachers (250 students), 5 for women with 40 teachers (500 students), 10 elementary schools with 40 teachers (1,400 students). Some of the schools as well as the hospitals are supported by the government. There is one Catholic periodical published in the archdiocese. The Little Sisters of the Poor have established an asylum. There are also in the archdiocese the following institutions: 3 hospitals and a small lyceum which admit the ministry of priests, 1 settlement house, 1 refuge, 2 day nurseries. The following associations have been formed by the laity: Conference of St. Vincent de Paul, Association of Catholic Youths, Tertiaries of St. Francis and Les Hommes de France au Sacré Cœur.

Alicante, DIOCESE OF. See ORIHUELA.

Alife, DIOCESE OF (ALIPHANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-312b), in the province of Caserta, Italy, is suffragan of the Archdiocese of Benevento. Rt. Rev. Settimio Caracciolo who was appointed to this see 24 March, 1898, was transferred to the diocese of Aversa, 10 April, 1911, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Felix Del Sordo, was appointed his successor. Born at Nusco, 1850, he was appointed titular Bishop of Claudiopolis and made auxiliary to the Bishop of Nusco, 14 October, 1906. He was transferred to Venosa 15 July, 1907, and 12 October, 1911, he was again transferred to the see of Alife. In 1920 there were 25,140 Catholics in this diocese, 17 parishes, 50 secular and 8 regular clergy, 20 seminarians, 54 churches or chapels, 8 brothers and 14 sisters.

Alinda, a titular see in Caria. Alinda was one of the largest districts of Caria and was surrendered to Alexander by Queen Ada, but he allowed her to retain the government. The see was suffragan of Staupolis and is mentioned in the "Notitiæ" of Epiphanius, Basil, and Parthey. Four bishops of the see are known: Promachus, present at the Council of Ephesus (431); John, present at the Council of Chalcedon (451); Theodorus, at the Council of Constantinople (536), and Theophilus, at the Council of Constantinople (879).

All Hallows College (cf. C. E., I-314d), in Dublin, founded in 1842, for the education of missionary priests for foreign countries, especially those countries to which Irish people emigrated. The college is at present (1922) presided over by Rev. Thomas O'Donnell, of the Congregation of the Missions, this congregation having been entrusted with the direction of the institution in 1892. In 1908, upon the establishment of the National University of Ireland, the curriculum of studies of All Hallows was somewhat changed. Although the university is neutral, from a religious point of view, most of its professors and students are Catholic, and as clerics graduate from the university in large numbers, the students of All Hallows are also required to do so. Before entering the college, they matriculate, and after entrance attend daily lectures at the university, reading a three years' course in arts and philosophy. At the end of that period they are graduated, and take their B. A. degree in the pass or honors course of classics, philosophy and educational science. A selected number subsequently take an advanced course in the theory and practice of education, with a view to special efficiency in missionary work; these are given a higher diploma, and M. A. degree in that subject. During their theological course the students receive lectures on educational methods, and their practical application to the duties of the priesthood.

All Souls' Day (cf. C. E., I-315d).—On 24 June, 1914, Pius X granted a plenary indulgence applicable to the Holy Souls to be gained by the faithful, on the usual conditions, for each visit to a church, or public, or semi-public oratory on All Souls' Day. The privilege of saying three Masses on that feast, which Benedict XIV granted for the dominions of Spain and Portugal, was extended to the whole world by Benedict XV in his Constitution "Incruentum Altaris," of 10 August, 1915. When the three Masses are celebrated, one must be said for the repose of the Holy Souls, a second for the intention of the pope, and the third for whatever intention the priest chooses; however, only one Mass stipend may be accepted. All altars are privileged on that day. The first Mass to be said is the one given in the Roman Missal for the Feast of All the Faithful Departed; the second is the Mass for the Anniversary of the Deceased with the Dies Iræ; the third is the Daily Requiem Mass, also with the Dies Iræ. Special prayers for the second and third Masses were prescribed by a decree of the Congregation of Rites on 11 August, 1915. When only one Mass is said it must be the Mass for the Faithful Departed; the same Mass is prescribed when Mass is to be sung, and in this case the celebrant may anticipate the second and third Masses. If the Blessed Sacrament happens to be exposed for the Forty Hours' Adoration on this day, the requiem Mass, which must necessarily be said with violet vestments, must not be celebrated at the altar of Exposition. By a decree of 28 February, 1917, the Feast of All Souls' was raised to a double of the first class for the whole Church, so that it excludes all local feasts or feasts of churches, religious orders or institutions. However, if 2 November is a Sunday, the commemoration of All Souls is transferred with all its privileges to 3 November.

Allahabad, DIOCESE OF (ALLAHABADENSIS; cf. C. E., I-316c), in India, is suffragan of Agra with episcopal residence at Naini-Tal in the summer and Allahabad in the winter. It is entrusted to the Capuchins of Bologna, Italy, the Rt. Rev. Angelo Giuseppe Poli of this order being the present bishop. Born at Casola Valsenio, Italy, 1878, he came to India as a missionary in 1901, was elected regular superior in 1913, appointed titular Bishop of Curium and coadjutor to the Bishop of Allahabad 13 March, 1915, and on 18 December, 1917, took possession of the see upon the death of Rt. Rev. Petronius Gramigna, who had filled the see since 1904. In 1920 there were 10,557 Catholics in the diocese, 28 Capuchin priests, 6 belonging to other orders and 4 seculars and 66 religious women. The 1921 statistics credit the diocese with 25 churches, 10 chapels, 22 stations, 41 sub-stations, 4 secondary schools for boys with 798 pupils, 8 for girls with 954 pupils, 5 free schools with 298 pupils, 1 native school with 47 pupils, 4 orphanages with 452 orphans, 1 industrial school, 6 dispensaries and 1 hospital. A Catholic press is established at Cawnpore. The sisters of the Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Sisters of Loretto, Sisters of St. Joseph, and Native Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis conduct the educational and charitable institutions. The most notable event of the diocese in recent years was the celebration in 1921 of the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of St. Joseph's Cathedral at Allahabad. Most Rev. Peter Pisani, Apostolic delegate to India, and many other prominent churchmen of India attended the ceremonies.

Almeria, DIOCESE OF (ALMERIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-328a), in Spain, is suffragan of Granada. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Vincent Casanova y Marzol, born at Borja, 1854, was appointed bishop 19 December, 1907. In 1920 the population of this diocese, entirely Catholic, numbered 290,200; there were 110 parishes, 239 priests, 1 seminary, 47 chapels, 20 convents with 39 nuns and 298 Sisters.

Alms (cf. C. E., I-328c).—As the support of the poor and the works of religion devolves largely upon the faithful, inspired by motives of charity to give freely, it has become necessary in view of the increasing number of calls made upon the laity to protect them from unnecessary solicitation and to prevent their generosity from being played upon by the unscrupulous. The following regulations, therefore, have been laid down governing the collection of alms by means of personal appeals to the general public (they do not, however, refer to appeals by letter or personal appeals to a few persons). (1) No private individual, whether lay or clerical, may collect for any pious or religious institute or object, without the written permission of the local ordinary or of the Holy See. (2) No pious association may collect alms unless its statutes authorize or necessity requires it to do so; even then it must obtain the local ordinary's permission and follow his instructions; furthermore, if the collection is to be made outside of the diocese, the written permission of both ordinaries is required. (3) Mendicant regulars, properly so-called in virtue of their institute, need only the permission of their superior for collecting alms in the diocese where their house is situated; in other places they require permission of the local ordinary also. If the alms which they obtain in their own diocese are insufficient for their support, the local ordinaries of other places, especially of the neighboring dioceses, must not refuse or withdraw from them permission to collect, except for grave urgent reasons. (4) No other religious of pontifical institutes may collect alms, except in virtue of a special indult, in which case they must have the written leave of the ordinary of the place of collection, unless the indult provides to the contrary. (5) Religious of diocesan congregations before collecting alms must obtain permission of the ordinaries of their place of residence and of the place of collection, but this must not be granted unless there is no other way in which their pressing needs can be met, and they must be restricted to their own diocese if possible. This regulation is to be rigorously enforced in dioceses in which there is a mendicant order properly so-called. (6) Finally, ordinaries of the Latin Rite must not allow any person belonging to an Oriental Rite to collect in their territories nor may they send any of their subjects into an Oriental diocese for that purpose, except when the collector has a recent authenticated rescript from the Sacred Congregation for the Eastern Church.

The collections must be made by the religious themselves and not by seculars; superiors must select for that purpose professed religious of mature age, and never those who are still engaged in study. As far as possible collectors should not go unaccompanied; if they cannot return home at night, they should lodge with the parish priest, or with other religious, or where that is not possible with a good Catholic family; they must not remain away from their house more than a month when collecting in their own diocese, or two months if in another diocese, and they must not be sent out again until the lapse of a period equal to that of their previous absence. If sisters are sent to collect they must always go in twos and must have sufficient funds to bring them home; furthermore, before going anywhere they must notify the person to whom they have to present the bishop's letters, so that he may secure proper accommodation for them.

Alpheus, BROTHER (PATRICK J. COFFEY), b. in Co. Tipperary, Ireland, 1846; d. in New York, 20 February, 1921, one of the oldest educators in the Archdiocese of New York. In 1864 he came to the United States and entered the Order of the Christian Brothers, spending the first years of his career at St. Mary's School and the old Cathedral School, New York. His next charge was the junior class of old De La Salle Institute, whence he was appointed to Albany Academy. In 1881 Brother Alpheus was named director of De La Salle Institute, where Archbishop Hughes of New York, Archbishop Mundelein of Chicago, and the late Bishop McDonnell of Brooklyn were among the many prominent men who came under his influence. For the past twenty years he had been connected with the Clason Point Academy and the New York Catholic Protectory.

Alsace-Lorraine (cf. C. E., I-341d), the former German Imperial territory acquired by France by the treaty of Versailles, signed 28 June, 1919, the possession dating from the Armistice of 11 November, 1918. It is divided into the departments of Bas-Rhin, containing 1,848 sq. miles and a population of 700,738; Haut-Rhin, 1,354 sq. miles, population 517,865; and Moselle, 2,403 sq. miles, population 655,211. The largest cities with their population in 1910 are: Strasburg, 178,891; Mülhausen, 105,488; Metz, 79,318. In 1910 in German Alsace-Lorraine (Reichsland) there were 1,428,343 Catholics, 408,274 Protestants of various German churches, 3,868 Christians of other denominations, 30,483 Jews, and 3,046 adherents of other religions or unclassified. In Kreis Zabern the Protestants were in the majority, as also in Strasburg. In Lower Alsace the Catholics were about 62 per cent of the population; in Upper Alsace they formed 84 per cent; in Mülhausen they outnumbered the Protestants by six to one, in Gebweiler by 25 to 1, and in Altkirch by 44 to 1. In German Lorraine the proportion of Catholics was about 90 per cent, Protestants were strongest in Metz, which had more than 1 to 3 Catholics and weakest in Kreis Bolchen, where there was only one Protestant to one hundred Catholics. The Jews have declined steadily from 40,812 in 1871 to 30,483 in 1910.

According to the census of 1910, 1,634,260 persons spoke German; 3,395 were bilingual; 204,262 spoke French. Compared with the figures of 1905 there is a decline of bilinguals, and of French speakers in German Lorraine, but an increase in Alsace, especially in the towns. German had been the official language for business, was used in the schools, and was the only language heard by the vast majority of the conscripts from Alsace-Lorraine during their three years of military service; the surprising thing is that there has been any increase in the use of French in Alsace, a result which can be traced to the nationalist (Francophil) movement. During the war the French language was totally prohibited in Alsace-Lorraine, French names being superseded by German names, and the native soldiers of the garrison of Strasburg being forbidden to speak French in the streets.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The economic importance of Alsace-Lorraine centers chiefly around her potash mines. They were discovered in 1904, and by 1913 there were 160 borings. Alsatian salts contain more potash in a pure state, viz., 20 per cent as against 12 to 13 elsewhere. The shafts had nearly all come to a working order by the outbreak of the war, and in 1917, if conditions had remained normal, each shaft would have produced 1,000 to 1,200 tons a day, about 6,000,000 tons for the whole area. The deposits in Upper Alsace are estimated at 300,000,000 tons. In 1920 about 591,000 tons of potash salts were mined, an increase of 65 per cent over the products of 1913. The amount of pure potash mined was 96,546 tons. In August, 1920, the French Chamber passed a bill providing for the acquisition and equipment by the state of the potash mines of Alsace. According to a decree issued by the commissary-general of the French Republic at Strasburg, the railway system of Alsace-Lorraine was to be reorganized and operated by an administrative body with headquarters at Strasburg under the authority of the commissary-general. From 1871 to the end of the war, they were the only imperial railways in the German Empire, the other state railways being owned by the different states within the empire.

EDUCATION.—In 1914, besides the University of Strasburg, which had in that year 176 professors and 2,220 students, the following educational institutions existed: 18 gymnasia, 3 progymnasia, 6 higher realschulen, 7 realschulen, 4 realschulen united with gymnasia, 1 agricultural school, 1 technical school, 7 seminaries, 5 preparatory schools for teachers, 68 girls' higher schools, 2,850 elementary schools, 68 private elementary schools, 504 infant schools, 52 intermediate schools, 5 institutions for the deaf and dumb, 2 institutions for the blind and 2 for imbeciles. About 1,800,000 marks were spent on the University of Strasburg. In their haste to re-introduce the French language into the schools, the French have encountered difficulties. The Alsatian teachers had been formerly in German normal schools and therefore were regarded with suspicion. The Germans had left nothing undone that could bestow on them a German mentality and so combat the influence of the French priests. About 80 per cent did not understand French nor much about French literature, all they knew about France and her people being derived from hostile German sources, in the German normal schools. The question was how to replace them until they were assimilated to the French civilization.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—In recognizing the French sovereignty in Alsace-Lorraine, the Pope accepted the resignation of the German Bishops of Strasburg and Metz and appointed them archbishops in Partibus. In April, 1919, President Poincaré nominated Monsignor Ruch, Bishop of Nancy, for the Bishopric of Strasburg, and Monsignor Kelb for that of Metz. This caused an animated debate in the French Chamber and led the Foreign Minister, M. Richon, to explain that the policy of France was to uphold the Concordat in Alsace-Lorraine. The nominees were given canonical institution by the pope.

For religious statistics see STRASBURG, DIOCESE OF; METZ, DIOCESE OF.

CIVIL HISTORY, 1910-1920.—The recent history of Alsace-Lorraine has been one continual agitation for its return to France. In the first decade of the twentieth century the German Government felt that the arrangements of the Government of Alsace-Lorraine were not satisfactory, for the spirit of opposition seemed to grow. Therefore, in June, 1911, a new Constitution was granted. It was declared that the sovereign power in Alsace-Lorraine was vested in the emperor, at the head of the Government was placed the Statthalter, nominated and removable by the emperor. The task of legislating for the country was taken from the Bundesrat and Reichstag and entrusted to the emperor and a Landtag of two Chambers. The Upper Chamber included thirty-six persons, representatives of bodies controlling religious and economic interests, such as the Catholic Archbishops of Strasburg and Metz, etc. The proposed Constitution fell short of the program formulated by the Autonomists, who demanded that Alsace-Lorraine be placed on equal footing with the other States of the empire, although it might have proved feasible if the German Government had not been suspicious of French tendencies. In 1913 occurred the Zabern (Saverne) incident, the bullying of a defenseless cripple by a young German officer. The disproportionate violence which at once placed the town under a state of siege, the explanation given that the German garrison felt they were camping in an enemy country, the acquittal of the young officer for wounding the lame cobbler on the incredible ground that he was acting in self-defense, all showed the position of Alsace-Lorraine in the eyes of the military party. A vote of censure was passed by the Reichstag, but it was actuated by a dislike of the German military methods, not by sympathy with Alsace-Lorraine, where the repressive measures continued until the outbreak of the war.

Further hostility toward Germany is proved by the treatment of Alsace-Lorraine at the outbreak of the European War. As early as 20 July, 1914, the country was placed under martial law, and hundreds of persons who figured in the police lists as suspects were instantly arrested and imprisoned without trial. On their first entry into Mülhausen (8 August, 1914) the French troops were received "with transports of joy, while the inhabitants behaved like a lot of lunatics" (Breisgauer Zeitung, 10 October, 1915). During the first two years of the war forty-eight persons were convicted of high treason, fifty-four of aiding and abetting desertion, 317 of anti-German sentiments, and about 6,000 were deprived of their German nationality. At the end of 1916 the number of desertions (Alsatian) exceeded 30,000, and according to the French more than 20,000 Alsatians were serving in the French army. For the details of the French campaign in Alsace-Lorraine during the European War see WAR.

By a decree of 26 November, 1918, the French Government took over the administration of the territories until peace should be signed, French troops meanwhile having occupied the country. French officers were placed in charge of affairs and on 22 March, 1919, M. Alexandre Millerand was appointed governor-general. This acquisition was confirmed by the Treaty of Versailles. In 1919-20 the administrative system was centralized under a commissary general, aided by an advisory council. The unity of the region is retained, a species of regionalism which seems very successful. Justice will be administered under the Ministry of Justice at Paris, M. Poincaré having decided that henceforth the redeemed province shall be treated like the old department, eliminating the German laws and courts code. As might have been expected, some friction took place in the passing of the region from German hands. The local administration and particularly the administration of justice was good; the railway system and the industrial wealth of the country were largely developed; and in Strasburg a large amount of money had been spent on the improvement of the city, and above all, on the university, whose endowments were on lavish scale, all of course in the interest of Germanizing the country. This talent for organization and administration was missed by the inhabitants under the first years of French rule and made the change from German to French rule one of greater difficulty than was anticipated. Such will be the existing situation for a few years to come.

Altamura and Acquaviva (ALTAMURENSIS ET ACQUIVAVENSIS; cf. C. E., I-315d), an exempt archiepiscopate in the province of Bari, in Southern Italy. In 1920 Altamura had 19,333 Catholics and 4 parishes; Acquaviva, 8,527 Catholics and 1 parish; there are about 80 priests for the whole territory.

Altar (cf. C. E., I-346a).—Every fixed altar should have its own name, the high altar having the same title as the church; this name, unlike that of a portable altar, may not be changed even with the ordinary's consent. No altar may be dedicated under the title of one of the beatified except by special permission of the Holy See. Care must be taken that an altar is never used for any profane purpose; if a corpse has been interred within a metre of an altar, Mass may not be celebrated there until the body has been removed.

Bishops, abbots and prelates nullius, vicars and prefects Apostolic, and higher superiors of exempt religious orders are now authorized by the common law to designate and declare privileged daily and perpetually one altar in their cathedrals, abbeys, collegiate, conventual, parish or quasi-parish churches, provided the privilege has not been conferred already on another altar in such church. They cannot do this, however, in public or semi-public oratories unless these are united to or are subsidiaries of a parish church. All altars are now privileged on the feast of All Souls and in churches on the days during which the Forty Hours' Adoration is being held there.

Among recent instances in which the privilege has been granted to members of pious associations are the following: in November, 1918, to the Pious Union of the Clergy; in June, 1920, to the Holy Name Society; in April, 1921, to the Apostolic Union of Priests; to each on four days a week; and in July, 1921, to the Society of the Three Hail Marys for three days each week. In rare cases the Church grants the favor of a privileged altar for the benefit of the living; thus on 15 June, 1917, Pope Benedict XV conferred it on members of the sodality called "A Transitu S. Joseph," as often as they said Mass for the agonizing. This probably means that a plenary indulgence is applied to the dying person for whom the Mass is offered, provided he is in the state of grace and has the requisite intention of gaining the indulgence.

Nothing is to be inscribed on an altar to show it is privileged except altare privilegiatum (privileged altar), with a word indicating whether the favor has been granted perpetually or temporarily. Needless to say it is strictly forbidden for anyone to ask a larger stipend for Masses offered at a privileged altar than for those said elsewhere.

Alton, Diocese of (ALTONENSIS; cf. C. E., I-367b), comprises 15,139 sq. miles in the State of Illinois. It is at present (1922) under the administration of its third bishop, Rt. Rev. James Ryan, consecrated 1 May, 1888. The Franciscan Fathers are established in this diocese and conduct Quincy College and Seminary in Quincy, St. Francis Monastery and novitiate and St. Joseph's Seminary at Teutopolis. The religious orders of women include the Ursuline Sisters, Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, Sisters of the Precious Blood, Hospital Sisters of St. Francis, Sisters of the Holy Cross, Sisters of Misericorde of Montreal, School Sisters of Notre Dame, Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis and Sisters, Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ.

By 1921 statistics this diocese comprises a Catholic population of 87,000; 170 secular and 38 regular clergy, 119 parishes, 42 missions with churches, 20 chapels, 21 ecclesiastical students, 1 seminary with 105 students, 2 colleges and academies for boys with 219 students, 5 academies for young ladies, 67 parochial schools with 10,465 pupils, 2 orphan asylums with 288 orphans, 12,360 young people under Catholic care, 11 hospitals, and 3 homes for the aged.

Altoona, Diocese of (ALTUNENSIS; cf. C. E., I-368b).—Bishop Eugene A. Garvey, the first bishop of Altoona, consecrated 8 September, 1901, died 22 October, 1920. He organized the diocese, his special attention being devoted to Christian education and the care of the orphans of the diocese. He built orphanages at Cresson, Pa., for boys and for girls. He won the esteem of non-Catholic and Catholic alike, and rendered valuable service to the country during the war.

He was succeeded by Bishop John Joseph McCort, a native of Philadelphia, who was consecrated auxiliary to the Archbishop of Philadelphia 17 September, 1912. He was appointed coadjutor with the right of succession to the Bishop of Altoona 27 January, 1920, and succeeded him in the see 22 October of the same year. Bishop McCort had in view two great objects: the building of a cathedral worthy of the growing diocese and provision for the higher education of the youth of the diocese, both of which aims were received with generous approval by priests and laity and are at present well under way. A site for the cathedral has been secured and two central Catholic high schools will open in September, 1922. The bishop has also taken a firm stand on primary education, directing that where it is possible every parish shall be provided with a Catholic school.

The total population of the city of Altoona was given at 60,331 in 1920. The Catholic population of the diocese (1921) is 135,241. There are 103 parishes, 131 churches, 35 missions, 12 stations; 3 monasteries for men; secular priests 116, regulars 44; 128 Sisters; 1 seminary with 55 seminarians; 1 college for men with 15 teachers and an attendance of 160; 9 high schools with 28 teachers and an attendance of 307 (160 boys, 147 girls); 1 academy for girls (Mount St. Aloysius at Cresson conducted by the Sisters of Mercy) with 17 teachers and an attendance of 160; 1 training school; 46 parochial schools with 256 teachers and an attendance of 12,710; 1 home for working girls (the Casa Regina Sodality Home at Altoona, conducted by Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary), 3 asylums (St. Joseph's Infant Home at Ebensburg, conducted by Sisters of St. Joseph, St. John's Orphan Asylum for boys and St. Mary's Home for girls, both conducted at Summit by Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary); 1 hospital (Mercy Hospital at Johnstown, conducted by the Sisters of Mercy). The Pennsylvania State Sanitarium for Tuberculosis at Cresson has a Catholic chaplain and the various hospitals admit the ministry of priests. The Priests Eucharistic League, the Young Men's Institute, the Knights of Columbus, and the Knights of St. George are established in the diocese. The Catholic periodicals are the New Guide, published at Altoona, and the Altoona Monthly, under the editorship of Rev. Morgan M. Sheedy, LL.D.

In 1908 the diocesan community of Franciscan Brothers at Loretto, Pa., were admitted to solemn profession in the Third Order Regular of St. Francis, and in 1910 their institute at Loretto was made the provincial house for the newly erected province of the Sacred Heart.

During the World War, although limited in priests, the diocese sent six chaplains to the army, each of whom made an excellent record. Each parish sent its quota of young men into the ranks and there is hardly a congregation that did not lose one or more, killed in the war. Priests and prominent laymen made stirring addresses, urging their hearers to subscribe for Liberty Bonds and take their full share in the burdens the war imposed. The laity, both men and women, and even the children in the schools, did splendid service.

Amadeus of the Heart of Jesus, MOTHER MARY (SARAH THERESA DUNNE), foundress of the Ursuline Missions in Montana and Alaska, b. at Akron, Ohio, 2 July, 1846; d. at Seattle, 10 November, 1920. She was descended from the O'Dunne's of Iregan, Ireland; her father John O'Dunne, sailed for America in 1820, having bought a tract of land in upper Canada upon which he intended to found a Catholic colony from Ireland. Finding too much opposition from Orangemen he sold out in 1836 and moved to the United States, where he settled in the Western Reserve, Ohio. When Sarah was ten years old he moved to California, leaving her and her sister Mary at school in the Ursuline Convent at Cleveland. Here her character was moulded to heroism and she acquired that fearlessness in undertaking great things for God that distinguished her in after life. After graduation she entered the novitiate of the order at Toledo, where she pronounced her vows, 23 August, 1864. Upon the death of the foundress, in 1874, she was elected superior and unanimously re-elected. Her term of office was a period of flourishing growth for the Ursulines; in 1876 she built a new novitiate; in 1878 she restored the enclosure prescribed in 1607 for the Ursulines of Paris; and in 1879 she re-established the convent at Youngstown.

In 1883 there was an urgent call for missionary and educational work among the Indian tribes in the far West. Bishop Brondel, then Vicar Apostolic of Montana, appealed to the bishops in the East for aid and especially for sisters to establish schools among the Indians. Bishop Gilmour of Cleveland responded by sending him six Ursulines, with Mother Amadeus at their head, saying "I am sending you a Christmas present of six Ursulines with the Flower of my Flock at their head." They left Toledo in January, 1884, arriving 17 days later at Miles City, Montana, where Mother Amadeus founded her first house in the West. A few months later with two of her nuns she went to a mission in the Tongue River Reservation, founded the previous year by Father Barcelo, S.J., among the Cheyennes. Thanking God for the privilege of their apostolate the Sisters bore the privations of their primitive surroundings and the outbursts of vengeance of the absolutely untamed tribe, when even the priests succumbed and left the mission. The personal magnetism and winning firmness of the Mother won over the chiefs of the Cheyenne, who never after wavered in their loyalty to her. She soon extended her work to other tribes, and during her twenty-three years in Montana founded twelve flourishing missions.

In 1900, at the request of Leo XIII, she attended the first chapter general of the Ursulines in Rome, and was elected Provincial Superior for all the northern portion of the United States. She was five times a delegate to the general chapter, enjoying the personal esteem and appreciation of Popes Leo XIII, Pius X, and Benedict XV. In 1905 she sent three sisters to Alaska to open the first mission in the Yukon delta. Mother Amadeus joined them in 1907, realizing at last the ambition of her life. At the cost of terrible hardships she founded a second mission at St. Michael's; then, at the request of Bishop Crimont, she journeyed to southwestern Alaska to establish a mission at Valdez. This was an environment more adapted to ease and comfort, and a large and well-equipped building was soon completed. She returned, however, to her beloved Innuits every year; on her trip to St. Michael's in 1918 she was thrown from her berth by the storm and severely injured. While still confined to her bed in the convent, the house was burned to the ground and the nuns had barely time to escape. She never recovered from these repeated shocks and in the following June was brought to the home of the Ursulines in Seattle, where she died a few months later. In accordance with her expressed desire, her body was brought back to the scene of her labors and rests at the mission of St. Ignatius.

Amadia, DIOCESE OF (AMADIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-376a), a diocese of the Chaldean Rite in Kurdistan, Turkey, in Asia. In 1895 this diocese was united to that of Akra, but by a Brief of 24 February, 1910, it was separated. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Francis David, b. at Aradene 1870, ordained 1893, was appointed to this see 25 January, 1910, to succeed Bishop Sakkar, d. 13 June, 1909. In 1920 there were in the diocese 4,970 Chaldean Catholics and 4,000 Nestorians, 19 priests, 15 churches or chapels, and 10 schools.

Amalfi, ARCHDIOCESE OF (AMALPHITANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-379b), in Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See and has its seat at Amalfi, not far from Naples. Rt. Rev. Antonio Maria Bonito, who was appointed to this see 17 June, 1907, retired and was appointed titular Bishop of Axum 5 August, 1910. His successor, Rt. Rev. Angelo Maria Dolci, appointed 27 January, 1911, was made Vicar Apostolic at Constantinople and transferred to the titular see of Hierapolis 16 November, 1914. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Ercolano Marini succeeded him 2 June, 1915. Born at Matelica, 1866, and ordained 1889, he was appointed titular Bishop of Archelais 29 June, 1904, and transferred to Norcia, 11 December, 1905, filling that see until his transfer to Amalfi.

The church of the Assumption at Ravello (diocese from 1087-1818) was made a minor basilica 31 June, 1918. Among the relics preserved in this church, which is a gem of medieval architecture, is a sealed vessel containing the blood of St. Pantaleon, martyred at Nicomedia 27 July, 303. In 1920 the Catholic population of Amalfi was counted at 46,000 and divided into 54 parishes.

Amazonas (or MANAOS), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., I-381b), in South America was formerly dependent on San Salvador of Bahia but is now suffragan of Belem de Para, with the seat at Manaos. Rt. Rev. Frederick de Souza e Costa, who was appointed to this see 8 January, 1907, was transferred to the titular see of Tubuna, 16 April, 1914, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. John Irenæus Joffily. Born in the diocese of Parahyba in 1878 he was ordained in 1901, became director of the College of St. Anthony at Natal in 1903, and of the College of Pius X at Parahyba 1908, was made a domestic prelate in 1913, appointed titular Bishop of Sufetula, 18 August, 1914, and transferred to Amazonas 4 May, 1916. In 1906 a large portion of the territory of this diocese was detached and united to the Abbey Nullius of Monserrate in Brazil. There are no recent statistics for this diocese.

Amelia, DIOCESE OF (AMERINENSIS; cf. C. E., I-406d), in the province of Perugia, Central Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Francesco Maria Berti, b. at Popilio, 1868, ordained 1890, was appointed bishop 31 August, 1907. In 1920 there were 19,650 Catholics in the diocese, 20 parishes, 30 secular and 21 regular clergy, 17 seminarians, 78 churches or chapels, 30 brothers and 64 sisters.

America (cf. C. E., I-409b).—With the exception of the purchase of the Virgin Islands from Denmark by the United States for $25,000,000 in a treaty proclaimed 25 January, 1917, the status of the American republics and the colonial possessions of the Old World in America remains the same. However, there has been in the last decade, as a result of the European War (1914-1918), a closer connection between the Old World and the New. The sympathy of the Americas with the Allies was attested in the continuous stream of men, munitions, and food from the British possessions as well as from the countries which had broken relations with Germany. America's concern with the economic rehabilitation of Europe after the war sent her representatives to the Peace Conference at Versailles and the beginning of 1922 witnessed the unusual spectacle of the foremost statesmen of the world gathered in Washington to discuss not only the limitation of armaments, but the vexing problems rising from the European War in the Far East and the Pacific. Historical details will be found under the titles of the various countries of North, South and Central America.

It is difficult to give accurate statistics of the Catholic population of America, for even in the United States the number usually given, "about 17,000,000," is a conjecture more or less accurate. The United States of America alone contains 14 archbishoprics, 86 bishoprics, and 1 vicariate apostolic. The remainder of America divides into 213 dioceses, 51 of which are seats of metropolitans. There are to-day four American cardinals: Joaquim Arcoverde de Albuquerque, Archbishop of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, created in 1905; William O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston, created in 1911; Louis-Nazaire Bégin, Archbishop of Quebec, Canada, created in 1914; Dennis J. Dougherty, Archbishop of Philadelphia, created in 1921.

American College, Louvain (cf. C. E., I-424d).—During the war the American flag flew constantly over the portals of the college, and the building was spared. The few students who remained in August, 1914, formed themselves into ambulanciers, and the college was used as a hospital. Monsignor De Becker, with the heads of the University, was roughly handled by the Germans and taken to Brussels as a hostage, but Brand Whitlock, United States Minister to Belgium, insisted on his release and the rector was allowed to return. In October, 1919, the college reopened with some twenty students, fourteen of whom were Americans, Rev. Charles C. Curran, of Providence, being appointed vice-rector. The numbers have increased since the reopening, but are far below the pre-war roster. The American College course of studies forms the schola minor of the faculty of theology at the University, and includes two years of philosophy and four of theology. The professors are all members of the faculties of the University, teaching in both the schola minor and the schola major.

The library is the gift of the friends of the college and contains especially a fine collection of books in English on philosophical and theological subjects from the late Archbishop John Spalding, the founder of the college.

There is no museum. A monthly publication, The American College Bulletin, was founded by Rev. Joseph Van der Hayden, a priest of the diocese of Boise City, who has lived in Louvain for the past twenty years.

American College, THE SOUTH (cf. C. E., I-425d), in Rome (legal title, Collegio Pio Latino Americano Pontificio). The present rector is Rev. Juan Bigazzi, and the cardinal protector is His Eminence Cardinal Billot. The college is under perpetual direction of the Society of Jesus and draws its students from the many different countries of the New World, where Spanish and Portuguese is the language spoken. In 1922 there were 104 students sent to Rome from dioceses in the following countries: Ecuador 1, Argentina 15, Bolivia 3, Brazil 7, Chile 11, Colombia 5, Costa Rica 1, Cuba 3, Guatemala 2, Mexico 36, Paraguay 2, Peru 8, the Philippines 5, Porto Rico 2, San Salvador 1, Uruguay 1, and Venezuela 1. There is an increase of 25 students over the number of last year. Twenty students are priests, 6 deacons, 3 sub-deacons, and 75 without orders; of these 17 are students of canon law, 45 of theology, 39 philosophy, and 3 of the humanities.

The benefits derived from this college, which gathers together students from so many countries to study in the shadow of the Vatican, can readily be seen by reading the lists of honors conferred on its 1122 graduates (among whom is Cardinal Arcoverde, Archbishop of Rio de Janeiro) and the good works effected by them, especially in instructing in diocesan seminaries.

American Federation of Labor, THE, was organized at Columbus, Ohio, 8 December, 1886, by a convention composed of representatives of the national and international trade unions. The sixth annual convention of the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions of the United States and Canada (founded at Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1881), then in session at Columbus, voted to dissolve and merge with the Federation. In 1889 the convention of the Federation declared that the "continuity of the American Federation of Labor be recognized and dated from the year 1881 in all future documents"; therefore it is usually stated that the Federation was founded in 1881. The primary object of the Federation is the thorough organization of the wage-earners into local trade and labor unions, the federation of the local unions into central trade and labor unions, the combination of the central bodies in state and provincial organizations, the establishment of national and international unions, and the federation of all the organizations in the American Federation of Labor. The general object of the Federation is the protection and promotion of the economic, political, and social rights of all working people. Proceeding from the principle that the economic interests of all workers are identical and can only be safeguarded by associated effort, the Federation urges the workers to unite in trade unions regardless of nationality, sex, color, creed, race, or politics.

As the name implies, the American Federation of Labor is a federation of labor organizations. The affiliated bodies enjoy complete self-government, craft autonomy of each trade being the basis upon which the national and international unions are established. The jurisdiction of the international unions is limited to the United States and Canada, these countries being also the jurisdiction limits of the Federation itself. The powers of the Federation are conferred upon it by the constitution and the annual conventions. The convention, which is a delegate body elected by the affiliated organizations, is the supreme legislative and judicial authority. The government of the Federation is administered by the executive council, composed of the president, secretary, treasurer, and eight vice-presidents, all elected annually by the convention. In addition to executing the laws the executive council may take the initiative in matters affecting the interests of the workers which arise between conventions; these interim actions, however, are subject to the approval of the subsequent convention.

The affiliated bodies consist of national and international unions, state federations, city central bodies, and directly affiliated local trade and federal labor unions. The local trade and federal labor unions are composed of wage-earners employed in crafts and callings in which no national union is established. They are directly affiliated to the Federation. Since 1896, eighty-five national and international unions have been formed out of the directly affiliated local unions. The Federation has affiliated with it (in 1922) 112 national and international unions, representing 36,247 local unions; 49 state federations, 910 city central bodies, and 658 local trade and federal labor unions. There are also five trade departments, with 783 local department councils.

The average dues-paying membership of the affiliated bodies was 548,321 in 1900; ten years later the number was 1,562,102, rising to 4,078,740 in 1920. The prolonged unemployment of 1920-21 reduced the average dues-paying membership to 3,906,528 in the latter year. Although most of the trade unions in the United States are affiliated with the Federation, the railway brotherhoods are not. The railway department of the Federation, however, includes railway workers' unions with a membership of 600,000.

The revenue of the Federation is mainly derived from charter fees and taxation. The charter fee for national and international unions is five dollars; for state federations, city central bodies, and local trade and federal labor unions, fifteen dollars. The national and international unions pay a per capita tax of one cent per member per month; the state federations and city central bodies pay a tax of ten dollars per year; the directly affiliated locals pay a per capita tax of 25 cents per member per month, 17½ cents of which is set aside for strike benefits and subscription to the official journal of the Federation, leaving but 7½ cents for the Federation's general expenses. The total revenue of the Federation for 1900 was $71,125; in 1910 the revenue rose to $193,470; in 1920 it was $921,255, and in 1921, $832,169.

The political policy of the American Federation of Labor is non-partisan. This principle is applied both in qualifications for representation in the conventions as well as in contemporaneous political action. The 1890 convention declared that "a political party of whatsoever nature is not entitled to representation in the American Federation of Labor"; the 1895 convention declared that "party politics . . . shall have no place in the conventions of the American Federation of Labor." Subsequently this declaration was made a part of the Federation's constitution. In its contemporaneous political action the Federation recommends the defeat of candidates for public office who are hostile to the trade union movement and the election of those who may be relied upon to support measures favorable to labor. The Federation's test is not the candidate's political party, but his record. The same test is applied to political parties. In practice the Federation submits its legislative demands to the party conventions, reporting to the workers whether the convention declarations are favorable or unfavorable to labor. With respect to candidates for public office, the Federation compiles each candidate's record on the question of fairness or unfairness to labor and submits the report to the candidate's wage earning constituency. Should there be no fair party candidates the Federation recommends the nomination of independent labor candidates. In 1920 the Federation expended $53,934 in this advisory work.

Although affirming the inherent and constitutional right of the wage earners to quit work for any reason whatsoever, the Federation is not authorized to declare strikes. With respect to the affiliated national and international unions, the strike-declaring power rests with the unions themselves. With the directly affiliated local trade and federal labor unions, the executive council's power is limited to approving or authorizing a strike contemplated by the locals. The Federation may give its moral support to a strike declared by an affiliated organization, and may issue appeals for strike funds; the executive council has the constitutional power to levy an assessment of one cent per month for not exceeding ten months in one year to assist an affiliated union in a protracted strike or lockout; fifteen such assessments have been levied since 1881; in seven of them one cent was the total levy, the maximum of ten cents having been called for in but one instance. Under its authority to raise strike funds by appeals for voluntary contributions, the executive council collected $426,823 in support of the iron and steel workers strike in 1919-20.

The contemporaneous demands of the Federation include the recognition of principles regarded as fundamentally necessary for the freedom of the workers. Among the more important are: the right of the working people to organize in trade unions, to practice collective bargaining through representatives of their own choosing, to work and cease work collectively, to collectively bestow or withhold patronage, and to exercise collective activities in the furtherance of the welfare of labor. In the legislative field the Federation demands legal protection against the conception that there is a property right in human labor power; prohibition of injunctions in labor disputes where they would not apply in the absence of such disputes; suitable laws to prohibit the courts from declaring Acts of Congress unconstitutional; election of judges; exemption of trade unions from anti-combination laws; legislation prohibiting courts from holding trade unions and individual trade unionists liable for damages for the unlawful acts of others; legislation declaring that labor organizations are not co-partnerships; repeal of state industrial court laws; prohibition of immigration for two years and restricted immigration thereafter; the general application of the initiative and referendum in federal and state political affairs; public administration of credit; inauguration of a federal employment service; abolition of child labor under sixteen years; equal wages for equal work of men and women wage earners; graduated tax on usable lands above the acreage cultivated by the owner; government aid for farm and home ownership and home building; progressive inheritance, income, and land value taxes; state monopoly of workmen's compensation insurance; state colleges for workmen's children; complete freedom of press, speech, assemblage, and association; substitution of state-use system for contract convict labor system; democracy in industry and education as well as in government.

In 1920 and 1921 the Federation convention declared in favor of "government ownership and democratic operation of the railroad systems of the United States." It also favors government ownership and development of water power, government ownership and operation of wharves and docks connected with public harbors, and government ownership and operation or control of public and semi-public utilities. The Rochdale plan of productive and distributive co-operation was approved by the 1917 convention as necessary for the protection of the wage earners "in their relations with the merchants and business men in the same sense that the trade union movement protects them from employers." The Federation has a special fund for promoting co-operation. It also supports farmers' co-operatives, such as dairies, canneries, packing houses, grain elevators, and distributing houses.

For the adjustment of disputes between employees and employers the Federation favors voluntary arbitration applied by collective bargaining, under which the organized workers, through representatives of their own choosing, deal directly with the employers or their representatives. The Federation is opposed to compulsory arbitration in every form, claiming that it re-establishes compulsory work similar to that of the slave and feudal periods. In the interests of federal labor legislation the Federation maintains a special bureau. The state federations maintain state bureaus to look after state labor legislation.

The headquarters of the Federation are situated at Washington, D. C. It publishes a monthly official journal, the "American Federationist"; the "American Federation of Labor Weekly News Service" for the benefit of the labor press, and maintains an information and publicity service. The officers of the American Federation of Labor (1922) are: president, Samuel Gompers; vice-presidents, James Duncan, Joseph F. Valentine, Frank Duffy, William Green, W. D. Mahon, T. A. Rickert, Jacob Fischer, Matthew Woll; treasurer, Daniel J. Tobin; secretary, Frank Morrison.

Americanization, also known as civic education and citizenship training, was one of the problems which received the widespread attention of the American people at the entrance of the United States into the World War. Prior to that time formal instruction in civics was given almost solely in secondary schools and higher institutions of learning. The discovery of millions of unassimilated immigrants, revelations of disloyalty to America and of hostility to organized Government by radical groups of our population, disclosures by the Selective Draft of an astoundingly high rate of illiteracy among the men recruited for service in the army and navy, all focussed public attention upon the necessity of evolving an educational program which would make America more American. The wave of patriotism which swept over the United States at the outbreak of the war caused the average and previously indifferent American citizen to realize that while enjoying all the privileges of American citizenship he had not been shouldering his full share of its duties and responsibilities, and that he and his Government had done little to bring about the assimilation of 13,000,000 or more unnaturalized immigrants who were included in our war-time population.

The seriousness of the problem was first impressed upon the military authorities of the country as a result of psychological tests conducted in various cantonments by the War Department. One significant result may be quoted: Of 1,566,011 men examined, 25.3 per cent were unable to "read and understand newspapers and write letters home" (Memoirs of the National Academy of Sciences, XV). Thirty-one per cent of this number were native-born Americans. The presence of 2,953,011 foreign-born whites over ten years of age (census of 1910) who were unable to speak the English language was regarded as a potential handicap to the winning of the war and a menace to our national unity, security and progress. The publication at that time of nearly 1500 foreign-language newspapers (there were 1244 such papers listed by the Census Bureau in 1920) was regarded as an influence which, to a certain extent, served to keep in ignorance of the English language, American institutions and American laws, literally millions of unassimilated immigrants, living in the United States and profiting financially through employment in American industries. This ignorance on the part of a great number of foreign-born, who were employed in what the Government designated as essential war industries, made them the easy prey of agitators who opposed the Government's war policy, with the result that many disturbances were fomented among foreign-born war-workers to the disadvantage of America's war program.

These and other circumstances impelled the Federal Government, the various states, and communities to formulate programs of Americanization with the intention of correcting the unfavorable conditions. A great variety of agencies immediately took up the work and co-operated with the Federal Government and other official agencies in carrying on the movement. These co-operating groups included well known semi-public organizations, chambers of commerce, church societies, labor unions, industrial corporations, councils of defense, philanthropic societies, lodges and fraternal organizations, racial organizations, and a great variety of small groups scattered throughout the country. The report of the Commissioner of Naturalization for 1921 lists 3526 communities as co-operating with the Naturalization Bureau in the work of citizenship training. As a result, Americanization work became one of the most widespread educational movements ever launched in the United States.

The Americanization Bureau of the United States Department of Education divided the work of Americanization into four phases: educational, social, racial, and informational. The educational phase took cognizance of the problem of illiteracy, the non-English-speaking groups, and the training of Americanization teachers. The function of the United States Bureau of Education in this connection dealt with the working out of methods of instruction, the preparation of text-books, the organization of schools and classes, the encouraging of the states and communities to activity in Americanization work and the bringing about of a co-ordination of the educational facilities of the Bureau of Education and of the educational agencies of the various States. The social phase dealt with such related problems as housing and sanitation, community recreation, public health, prevention of the exploitation of the immigrant, protection of his savings, and the education of our native-born people to a sympathetic and tolerant understanding of the problems of the foreign-born. The racial phase of Americanization work took into consideration co-operation with racial organizations, with the foreign-language press, and with the foreign-born generally. The informational service dealt with publications and bulletins explaining technical methods of Americanization, organization of speakers' bureaus, and dissemination to the press of general propaganda in reference to the needs, the aims and purposes, and the methods of carrying on the work.

The Americanization work of the reconstruction period expressed itself in two distinctly different schools. One reflected the negative attitude, which assumed that the immigrant constituted the sole problem of citizenship development. This group advocated a compulsory Americanization process for all aliens; disregarded the history of the democratic strivings of immigrant peoples and their nationalistic language, customs and traditions; tried, through drastic police power, restrictive legislation and irritating espionage, even by imprisonment, to inculcate Americanism by implanting a fear of America rather than by cultivating an understanding of and a belief in America and its democratic institutions.

Under the pretence of attacking Bolshevism, there developed in some localities organizations which made sinister attempts to control programs of Americanization for the purpose of promoting special interests and thwarting efforts toward social justice. The terms "Americanism" and "Americanization" were in several instances found to be mere cloaks for un-American undertakings. Most of these pseudo-Americanization schemes overreached their mark and were exposed in due time. These activities created in many quarters, especially in the minds of the immigrant, distrust for the very idea of Americanization.

The other school brought to the work of Americanization a saner, more sympathetic and more constructive point of view. The proponents of this school realized that neither the indifferent native-born citizen nor the unnaturalized immigrant could be forced into a mould of good citizenship. They held that democracy is a co-operative undertaking and that upon the measure of co-operation given by the individual citizen depends the failure or success of our American political institutions. This school advocated that good citizenship should be promoted among native-born and immigrant alike, for the purpose of fixing an ideal of social justice and civic responsibility toward which all might strive in practical fashion. It realized that the foreign-born alone should not be shouldered with the entire responsibility of America's deficiency in true citizenship and it held that the foreign-born, simply because they were foreign-born, were not responsible for all radical and Bolshevistic movements. It stated that the native-born must share the responsibility for both these unfortunate conditions. It believed that the ideals of fair play and the square deal, freedom of expression, freedom of religious worship, appreciation of the duties and responsibilities of citizenship and co-operation in democracy's work should be held before the American people and be made the goal of their strivings as individuals and as citizens. This school looked upon the teaching of English as an instrument by which the ideals of American citizenship may be acquired, but it did not overlook the native tongue as a vehicle of expression of democracy and of Americanism.

It recognized that sympathy, interest, and the manifestation of a spirit of real brotherhood, on the part of the native-born American toward the foreign-born were necessary if the aims contemplated by the Americanization movement were to be attained; that a greater knowledge by the native-born of the immigrant groups in America—of their racial characteristics, of their patriotic struggles for democracy at home was required; that their racial contributions to the literature, art, sciences, and general culture of the world, as well as the spiritual richness of their national lives, must be taken into consideration. This school reflected, and in fact was greatly influenced, by the Catholic attitude toward the work of Americanization as evidenced by nation-wide campaigns for better citizenship carried on by the National Catholic War Council and the Knights of Columbus, the two organizations recognized by the United States Government as the official agencies of the Catholic Church in welfare activities growing out of the war. Through lectures delivered by such well known men as Dr. James J. Walsh, Condé B. Palles, Peter Collins, Joseph Scott, and David Goldstein, the Knights of Columbus, with the co-operation of their 2000 councils, carried on an effective campaign against Bolshevism, Socialism, and other forms of radicalism. The Knights of Columbus night-schools and correspondence courses were sources of constructive Americanization work. There is grave need to defeat the destructively anti-American propaganda, which is carried out under the cloak of re-writing American history more accurately, and in order to do this effectively the Knights of Columbus have planned the publication of a standard American history, in which the story of America will be told for Americans and the traditions of America perpetuated.

The nation-wide program of the National Catholic War Council, jointly directed by John A. Lapp, LL.D., a well known authority in the field of civics, and by the writer of this article, was likewise a positive and constructive movement in behalf of better citizenship. The N. C. W. C. program was based on the following principles: that every youth should have before leaving school adequate training in the duties, obligations and rights of citizenship, to which end such training should be given in the elementary grades; that a broad program of instruction in social science should be given in the high schools and colleges for the development and more extensive training of civic leaders; that all persons, native or immigrant, who had not had courses in citizenship, should have the opportunity of taking such courses in order better to fulfil their obligations to the community; that immigrants who come to this country with the intention of staying for any great length of time should assume their part of the common burdens of society by seeking citizenship and by performing the tasks of citizenship with understanding; and finally, that development of individual character, the teaching of correct moral principles, and the inculcation of religion are essential to the making of good citizens. A series of Americanization pamphlets, the total issue of which exceeded one million copies, was widely used in explaining the principles underlying the administration of our American Government, the privileges, opportunities, rights and duties of American citizens, the process of naturalization and the means of acquiring citizenship.

Realizing that in the elementary school system

the subject of civics had been universally neglected and that only 10 per cent of the elementary school graduates eventually reach high school, where the subject is formally taught, the directors of the N. C. W. C. campaign brought about the introduction of a simple course in patriotism and civics in the 6551 Catholic elementary schools. The "Fundamentals of Citizenship," a short text explaining the A B C's of our American democracy, and the "Civics Catechism," a question-and-answer exposition of the rights and duties of American citizens, were widely used both in the Catholic schools and in community Americanization work. These texts were also reproduced in installments in the leading Catholic papers and periodicals of the country and in many secular newspapers as well, thereby reaching millions of our population. The "Catechism" was published in the language of several of the leading nationalistic groups, the English text appearing in parallel column form with the foreign translation, thereby permitting the stranger to read in his own language of the privileges, opportunities and rights of American citizenship, the process of naturalization, and at the same time to obtain a knowledge of the English language. Many foreign-language publications co-operated in printing both the English and foreign-language texts of these two pamphlets. There was employed effectively a series of motion picture programs, utilizing short-reel subjects which visualized the opportunities of America, industrially and educationally, and provided entertaining pictures of a patriotic, dramatic and educational character. The motion picture features were most successfully employed in industrial centers where large populations of immigrants were found. The "Speakers' Outline of Talks on Citizenship" instructed speakers in the preparation and delivery of short talks, both in English and in the native language of the group, dealing with the simple facts of government, and set forth full instructions to pastors, community leaders and others for organizing civic education activities. Educational features contributed by the foreign-born groups themselves added to the appeal and interest of these entertainments.

In all the Americanization work of the N. C. W. C. it was pointed out: that the success of a democracy depends on knowledge, moral character and religious faith; that the Catholic Church has always taught the fundamentals of good citizenship and emphasized the social rights and responsibilities of citizens; that in all teaching of civics it should be kept in mind that religion supplies the only adequate and stable as well as the highest and the noblest motives for the discharge of civic obligations; and that our democracy cannot long endure unless all the people are animated by motives of religion in their dealings with one another. Citizenship was defined as "our duty to God, fulfilled in our care and solicitude for our country whose welfare God has placed in our hands." The Catholic program pointed out America to the foreigner as a land of freedom and of opportunity. It told the American-born that a knowledge of the constitution is necessary if he is to become a desirable citizen, and that this knowledge is equally necessary to the foreign-born if he is to take up the task of faithful citizenship. It pointed out that a democratic government is not secured simply by assuming the name, but that democracy demands a knowledge and sense of responsibility, respect for human rights, and personal interest in the affairs of government.

The Catholic program of Americanization, therefore, emphasized four practical aspects of the work of citizenship training: first, training of children of the Catholic school system, citizens of the next generation, in the elementary principles of democracy and in the rights, duties and privileges of citizenship under a democracy; secondly, educating America's immigrant population in the workings of our government and instilling in them the desire to become American citizens and to take part in our civic, political and social life; thirdly, arousing the average citizen to a more active performance of his civic duties; and fourthly, emphasizing to all persons the fact that religion supplies the only effective motives for the conscientious discharge of civic obligations.

The constructive features of the Catholic Americanization work soon won recognition from many organizations outside the Catholic Church, and its program and literature were utilized by many of them. Americanization leaders, editors, and educators referred to the program of the N. C. W. C. as the most constructive and practical one presented to the American public. A typical editorial comment is the following from the "Post-Intelligencer," Seattle, Washington: "It is reassuring to other religionists and provocative of public confidence to be assured that the Americanization work of the Welfare Council is free from denominationalism of any kind; that the Council is planning in the most constructive way that it can devise to make Americans, actual and potential, realize that good citizenship is a matter of great concern to them not only on election day, but on every other day. . . . But beyond the immediate work of the Welfare Council is the assurance that the effective machinery of the Roman Catholic Church is exerting its great influence in these fretful days of reconstruction in the direction of better Americanism and better citizenship. The Church itself is international, but its hierarchy and its membership in America is American. This speaks in many ways, but in none more plainly and forcibly than in the work of the N. C. W. C."

One of the problems closely related to the work of Americanization was that of immigration. Ecclesiastical authorities recognized that lack of proper attention to the needs of Catholic immigrants at the various ports of entry to the United States, and failure to follow them up after their arrival in America, had in past years resulted in a great leakage from the Church and delay, if not failure, in their becoming good citizens of the country. Prior to the war, inadequate facilities prevented proper care of Catholic immigrants arriving in America. The authorities of the National Catholic Welfare Council determined upon a national bureau of immigration as one of the main activities of that organization. Assisting Catholic immigrants, both at the principal ports of embarkation and entry, aiding immigrants to their destination, co-operation with local Catholic agencies, co-ordination of Catholic immigration activities, distribution of Americanization and religious literature and aiding the immigrant to final naturalization, were the principal functions and "follow-up" activities of this bureau.

Probably the greatest hindrance to the civic assimilation of immigrants is the trickery and fraud perpetrated by the unscrupulous upon the newcomers. Some of the things which the N. C. W. C. citizenship program recommended to be done to prevent the exploitation of immigrants were: the purging of the police courts and other petty courts of every practice of injustice; the establishment of small claims courts where claimants, native as well as immigrant, may secure their rights without cost; the discontinuance of arbitrary methods of police and inspection departments and the substitution of uniform treatment of all persons, citizens and immigrants; the prohibition of the business of private and personal banking, except where such is under government supervision; the encouragement of the use by immigrants of United States Postal Savings Banks; the scrutiny of employment agency methods to prevent immigrant exploitation; the careful supervision of business agencies, such as steamship companies, loan societies, etc., catering to foreigners, the prohibition of payment of tributes for the right to work or for the securing of jobs, and protection by voluntary agencies from such exploitation; and the establishment of legal and business aid bureaus by welfare organizations.

Under the new Immigration Law passed by the 67th Congress, the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted to the United States in any fiscal year was limited to three per centum of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States, as determined by the United States Census of 1910. The effect of this Act was a lessening of the acuteness of the immigration problem, both as regards Americanization work generally and as regards the aid and follow-up work of the Catholic body in behalf of the immigrants coming from Catholic countries.

The average number of immigrants entering the United States annually during the ten years prior to the enactment of the new Immigration Law was 573,581. Under the new law the alien influx will be approximately 250,000 per year. According to the 1920 census, the total foreign-born population of the United States on 1 January, 1920, numbered 13,920,692, an increase of 404,806, or 3 per cent since 1910. Of this total 6,493,088 were naturalized, 1,223,490 had taken out their first papers, and 5,398,605 were aliens, and for the remaining 805,509 the citizenship status was not ascertained. Expressed in percentages the distribution was: naturalized, 46.6 per cent; first papers, 8.8 per cent; alien, 38.8 per cent; not reported, 5.8 per cent. Wide differences in citizenship status appear among the natives of the various foreign countries, the proportions naturalized among those twenty-one years of age and over ranging from 74.4 per cent for the Welsh to 5.5 per cent for the Mexicans. For the five countries which contributed the largest numbers of immigrants, the percentages naturalized were as follows: natives of Germany, 73.6; of Ireland, 66.1; of Russia, 42.1; of Italy, 29.8; and of Poland, 28.9. The natives of these five countries formed more than half of the total foreign-born white population of the United States in 1920. Limiting the comparison to persons twenty-one years of age and over, the natives of Germany numbered 1,648,884; of Italy, 1,408,933; of Russia, 1,211,337; of Poland, 1,048,050; and of Ireland, 1,021,677. Of the total white population twenty-one years of age and over 22.7 per cent were immigrants and 11.3 per cent were naturalized immigrants. Thus in the white population of voting age there were 146 naturalized immigrants to every 1000 natives.

According to the 1921 Annual Report of the Commissioner of Naturalization, 18,981 foreign-born residents of the United States (10 per cent of the total applicants) were refused certificates of naturalization during the fiscal year (30 June, 1920, to 30 June, 1921), for the following reasons: already a citizen, immoral character, incompetent witnesses, insufficient residence, ignorance, no certificate of arrival, declaration invalid, no jurisdiction, motion of petitioner to deny, premature petition, want of prosecution, inability of petitioner to produce witnesses or depositions, deceased, and miscellaneous reasons which include denials because petitioner claimed exemption from military service on account of alienage. The number of certificates granted during the last fiscal year was 163,656.

According to the 1920 census, of the 13,497,886 foreign-born whites ten years of age or over, 1,488,948 or 11 per cent were reported as unable to speak English. Both the number and the per cent are about one half as large as in 1910, when 2,953,011 foreign-born whites ten years of age and over, or 22.8 per cent of the total, were returned as unable to speak English. Of the 105,710,620 persons shown by the 1920 census as constituting the population of the United States, 4,931,905 persons ten years of age and over are listed as illiterates. Of this figure 1,242,572, or a percentage of 2.0, are native whites; and 1,763,740, or 13.1 per cent are foreign-born whites. Of the total number of illiterates twenty-one years of age and over (4,333,111) the native white males form 13.0 per cent and the native white females 11.0 per cent. Of the total negro population of ten years and over, 8,053,225, the illiterates are given as 1,842,161, or 22.9 per cent. Illiteracy among the rural population of the United States is found to be 3.3 per cent greater than in the cities. Of the 4,931,905 illiterates ten years of age and over in the United States, 2,976,793 reside in the rural district, as against 1,955,112 in the cities. In the cities illiteracy is slightly greater among the females while in the rural sections the reverse is true. Figures furnished by the Bureau of the Census based on the 1920 census show that illiteracy is decreasing. The decennial illiteracy percentage for the years 1880 to 1920 are 17.0, 13.3, 10.7, 7.7, and 6.0.

The decrease in illiteracy and in the number of persons unable to speak the English language is explained partly by the decrease in immigration during the war and an increase in the facilities supplied through the Americanization movement, especially those enabling the immigrant to learn the English language. Twenty-six states have recently enacted laws requiring the use of the English language as the sole medium of instruction for all common school subjects. Catholics and organizations representing them unquestionably carried out a program of practical and constructive Americanization work unexcelled by that of any of the numerous groups and organizations participating in this great movement. Especially was this true of the Catholic schools, whose Americanism during and after the crisis of the war, measured up to the highest standards of patriotic duty. The war gave the Catholic school another chance to prove beyond a doubt that its teaching of religion and of practical morality develops the finest type of citizenship. It proved that the Catholic school believes in America, teaches love and respect for America, and is second to no other American institution in its promotion of American ideals. During the period of the World War the Catholic school engaged in every form of national aid and patriotic endeavor. It sent its product, the parish school boy, into the service in numbers out of all proportion to the strict demands of loyalty. The spirit of patriotism as developed in the Catholic school has probably never been better stated than in the historic pledge of the American Hierarchy delivered to President Wilson at the entrance of America into the World War by the late Cardinal Gibbons, a product of the Catholic school. The following is an excerpt from this pledge: "Standing firmly upon our solid Catholic tradition and history from the very foundation of this nation, we reaffirm in this hour of stress and trial our most sacred and sincere loyalty and patriotism toward our country, our Government, and our flag. . . . Acknowledging gladly the gratitude that we have always felt for the protection of our spiritual liberty and the freedom of our Catholic institutions under the flag, we pledge our devotion and our strength in maintenance of our country's glorious leadership in those possessions and principles which have been America's proudest boast. . . . We stand ready, we and all the flock committed to our keeping, to co-operate in every way possible with our President and our national Government, to the end that the great and holy cause of liberty may triumph, and that our beloved country may emerge from this hour of test stronger and nobler than ever. Our people now, as ever, will rise as one man to serve the nation. Our priests and consecrated women will once again, as in every former trial of our country, win by their bravery, their heroism and their service, new admiration and approval. We are all true Americans, ready, as our age, our ability, and our condition permit, to do whatever is in us to do, for the preservation, the progress, and the triumph of our beloved country."

Some of the outstanding results of the movement for better citizenship may be stated as follows: Development of special teacher-training courses, methods and textbooks dealing with the teaching of citizenship to aliens; introduction of an elementary course in civics in 6551 Catholic elementary schools and in many other public and private schools; establishment of numerous night schools and other special schools affording facilities to the immigrant for the study of the English language and for preparation for the naturalization process; organization of community Americanization activities by Catholic and other agencies in many centers of foreign population; a closer understanding and a more sympathetic attitude by the native-born toward the unassimilated groups of our foreign population; education of the immigrant peoples to a sense of their duty to become American citizens while enjoying the opportunities and benefits of our country; a general awakening of the American people to a keener sense of their obligations and responsibilities as citizens; a reduction in illiteracy among both the native-born and foreign-born population; a more widespread appreciation and a greater usage of the English language, especially by non-English-speaking immigrants; an increase in the number of naturalized citizens; enactment of legislation restricting immigration and the consequent debarring of many undesirable aliens from the United States; adoption of protective measures against immigrant exploitation; establishment by Catholics and others of immigrant agencies at ports of embarkation and entry; co-ordination throughout the United States of follow-up work aimed to protect the faith of Catholic immigrants and to hasten their assimilation as American citizens; and a more general recognition of the fact that religion is the foundation upon which good government and good citizenship rest. The pioneer efforts of those engaged in Americanization work during the war and reconstruction period have laid the foundations for its continuance in the schools and elsewhere as one of the permanent and necessary forces of education in the interest of the public welfare.

CHARLES A. McMAHON.

Amette, LÉON-ADOLPHE, Archbishop of Paris, Cardinal, b. at Douville, Eure, 6 September, 1850, d. at Antony, Paris, 29 August, 1920. He made his early studies at Evreux, whence he entered the seminary of St. Sulpice, and was ordained in 1873. His first appointment was to the cathedral at Evreux; in 1880 he was made private secretary to the bishop. Later he became a titular canon and vicar general of the diocese, and in January, 1899, was consecrated Bishop of Bayeux. In February, 1906, he was raised to the titular Archbishopric of Sida and made coadjutor to the Archbishop of Paris with the right of succession. On the death of Cardinal Richard, January, 1908, he succeeded to the see, and 27 November, 1911, was created cardinal-priest. Entering on his episcopate shortly after the passage of the law of Separation, he faced the delicate and difficult task of a general religious reorganization. At the head of a body scorned by the ruling powers, he yet won his way to the hearts of the people and conquered the respect and confidence of those in authority by his rare qualities of heart and head and sheer devotion to duty. To this huge work Cardinal Amette brought unflinching tact, an innate gift of graceful conversation and eloquent public speaking, and a rare faculty of realization and adaptability. His policy was one of conciliation wherever possible; his preoccupation, problems of practical action for the glory of God; his aim, the re-establishment of harmony between religious and secular society.

During the World War Cardinal Amette never left his diocese and was everywhere a pillar of strength and consolation. Taking his place in all public functions, he was one of the most ardent apostles of the Sacred Union and one of the most notable figures in the Committee of National Aid, where every political party and religious belief were represented. He was likewise the champion of the workman, being instrumental in obtaining much beneficial legislation in his behalf.

One of the great joys of Cardinal Amette's episcopate was the consecration of the Basilica of the Sacred Heart at Montmartre, 16 October, 1919, at which the papal legate, nine cardinals and nearly all the bishops of France assisted. Before all a man of God and a true shepherd of souls, under his leadership 46 churches were erected in the diocese, and five are in the course of construction; parish committees and parish unions have been formed; free primary instruction, abolished by the proscription of religious orders, has been given a new existence, while an organized hierarchy by its vigilant and apostolic action has established the best of material, moral and spiritual conditions.

Amida (DIARBEKIR), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., I-429c), of the Armenian Rite, in Mesopotamia, Asiatic Turkey. It comprises also the Chaldean and Syrian Rites. Rt. Rev. Suliman Musa Sabbagh, appointed 6 June, 1897, is bishop for the Chaldean Rite.

For the Syrian Rite the diocese is united to that of Mardin and is administered by Mgr. Rahmani, Syrian Patriarch of Antioch. For the Armenian Rite the see is vacant, Rt. Rev. Elie Andre Chelebian, who filled it from 1899, having been thrown into the Tigris in 1915. In 1920 there were 5,000 Armenian Catholics, 300 Syrians, 4,180 Chaldeans, 100 Melchites, 132,000 Schismatics and 16,000 Mohammedans in the diocese. There are 18 missionary priests, 10 parishes, 10 churches or chapels and 12 schools for the Armenian Rite; 12 native priests, 9 churches and 10 schools for the Chaldean Rite.

Amiens, DIOCESE OF (AMBIANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-429d), comprising the department of Somme, France, is suffragan of Reims. Rt. Rev. Jean-Marie-Léon Dizien who came to this see in 1896, died 27 March, 1915, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. André du Bois de La Villerabel, appointed 1 June, 1915. Bishop de La Villerabel was transferred to Rouen 9 December, 1920, and Canon Lecomte, Vicar General of Lille, was appointed to succeed him 9 March, 1921. In 1912 the church of Notre Dame de Brebieres, at Albert, a minor basilica, was granted a Gregorian altar, i. e., the same benefits are attached to Masses for the deceased as to those offered at the privileged altar of the church of St. Gregory on Monte Coelio in Rome. By a decree of 12 December of the same year no more Gregorian altars are to be granted. In 1920 there were 520,161 Catholics in this diocese, 60 primary parishes, 609 succursal parishes, 173 chapels and 772 churches.

Ammedara, a titular see of Africa now known as Haidra, north of Tebessa, not a suffragan of any metropolitan see. The city was of Byzantine origin and its name appears under numerous forms: Ad Medera, Admedera, Almedera, Ammedara, Ammedera, and Metridera. The city is identified with the modern Haidra, situated about twenty-two miles northeast of Tebessa. It was originally a colony of veterans founded by Vespasian or his sons, whence the name, Colonia Flavia Augusta Emerita Ammedara. Despite the ruins to which it was reduced by the Arab invasion, or by modern excavations, important remains are still found on both banks of the river Oued Haidra, but principally on the left bank. The Council lists show many bishops of Ammedara, where Christianity seems to have penetrated at an early date. The first of these known is Eugenius, a contemporary of St. Cyprian, who assisted at the Council of Carthage (256). Like most of the other African cities, Ammedara was invaded by the heresy of Donatism and at the conference of Carthage in 411 the Catholic bishop Speratus found his schismatic rival, Crescentianus, also there.

Amovibility (cf. C. E., I-437a).—The Code of Canon Law prescribes that all dioceses are to be divided into parishes, each having its own priest, termed a rector, who enjoys fixity of tenure, not absolute fixity, however, as he may be removed in a legal way. Rectors, consequently, are classed as irremovable or removable, according to their greater or less stability of tenure. As a rule all new parishes are to have irremovable rectors; once a rector has been made irremovable all his successors enjoy the same privilege. Among the reasons for removing rectors of either class are ill-health, mal-administration, loss of reputation, or public hatred, even when unmerited, if it is such as to interfere seriously with the spiritual welfare of the parishioners. In the legal procedure for the removal of rectors, the chief difference between the two classes is that the irremovable may demand a second investigation of their case by the bishop and two synodal examiners, and may even then appeal to a tribunal composed of the bishop and two diocesan consultors, whereas a removable rector if he is dissatisfied with the first decision has no remedy but an appeal to the Holy See.

Amoy, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (AMOENSIS; cf. C. E., I-437c), in China, is entrusted to the Spanish Dominicans. Formerly the island of Formosa formed a part of this vicariate, but in August, 1913, it was made an Apostolic Prefecture, the civil prefectures of Lonyen-tcheou, Yung-tchoen-tcheon, Hing-hon-fou, the island of Nanjik and the small islands dependent on the prefecture of Hsing-houn-fou, being joined to it. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Emanuel Prat, titular Bishop of Mactaris. In 1920 the total population of this territory was 4,500,000, of whom 10,582 are Catholic, and of this number 2,143 are in Formosa. There were 5,214 catechumens, 21 European and 10 native priests, 15 churches, 24 chapels, 96 stations, 1 seminary with 30 students, 23 schools for boys, 18 for girls, 50 orphanages, and 13 religious of the Order of St. Dominic.

Ampurias (or CASTELSARDO AND TEMPIO), DIOCESE OF (AMPURIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-440c), in Sardinia, is suffragan of Sassari. The see was vacant from 1907 until the appointment of the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Giovanni Maria Sanna, b. at Oristano, 1873, appointed bishop 22 December, 1914. During its vacancy the see was administered by Mgr. Parodi, Archbishop of Sassari. In 1920 Ampurias had 11,200 Catholics, 8 parishes, 20 secular priests, 5 seminarians, 34 churches or chapels; Tempio had 29,200 Catholics, 18 parishes, 42 secular priests, 5 seminarians and 73 churches or chapels.

Amyzone, a titular see in Caria, Asia, now known as Mazyn-Kalchsi, suffragan of Stauropolis. Until the Roman epoch the little city of Aymzone had its own coinage, bearing the insignia of a head, two specimens of which are preserved in the British museum. Amyzone appears as a diocese, suffragan of Stauropolis in all notices of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, under various forms of the name. Several ancient bishops of this see are known: Philetus, who signed at the council of Ephesus (431); John, present at the Council of Chalcedon (451); and Andrew, present at the Council of Constantinople, under the Patriarch Menas (536). Theophylact attended the second Council of Nicaea (787), and in the biography of St. Paul the Younger a certain Bishop of Amyzone is mentioned among the benefactors of the monks, but his name is not given. The diocese is mentioned in a judgment of Isaac Angelus (1185-95), and we find an Act of the Patriarch, Manuel II (1244-45), exempting the monks of St. Paul of Latros from the jurisdiction of neighboring bishops, particularly the Bishop of Amyzone, who is mentioned three times. At this time the see bore a double title, in addition to the name Amyzone it added that of a neighboring locality, Coracia or Coracium. The city cannot have survived long after the time at which it is mentioned in the documents, and must have been destroyed by the Turkish invasion. The ruins of the ramparts of the fortress can be seen at the summit of a hill on the eastern slope of Mount Latros (to-day Bech Parmak Dag), above the village of Kafarlar in the province of Symrna. The Turks call the remains Mazyn Kalehsi, i. e., fortress of Amyzone.

Anagni, DIOCESE OF (ANAGNINENSIS; cf. C. E.,

I-448d), in the province of Rome, Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. Leo XIII conferred upon the bishops of this see the perpetual right to the pallium. Bishop Sardi di Rivisondoli, who was appointed to this see in 1908, was transferred to the titular see of Caesaria in Palestine and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Silvio Gasperini, b. at Bevagna, 1852, appointed to the Congregation of the Consistory 2 December, 1912. In 1920 the Catholics of this diocese numbered 41,700; there are 26 parishes, 60 secular and 52 regular priests, 20 seminarians, 50 churches or chapels, 23 brothers and 113 sisters.

Anatolia.—For early history see ASIA MINOR (C. E., I-782c).—The present confusion in Anatolia lies in the eagerness of the great powers to share in the after-war despoliation of Turkey. Even as early as 26 April, 1915, in the Pact of London arranged between Italy and her allies, France, Great Britain and Russia recognized Italy's desire to maintain a political balance of power in the Mediterranean and her right to take over, at the break-up of Turkey, a portion equal to theirs in the Mediterranean, namely, in that part which bordered on the Province of Adalia, where Italy had already acquired special rights and interests laid down in the Italo-British convention. In the Treaty of Sèvres, August, 1920, Smyrna with the surrounding strip, comprising Tireh, Odemish, Magnesa, Akhissar, Bergama, and Aivali was to be administered by Greece under Turkish sovereignty, but in five years a plebiscite was to decide to whom the district was to be annexed. The Turkish Nationalists objected to the loss of their part of western Anatolia, and immediately commenced a campaign for the revision of the treaty. They overran Anatolia and soon had 300,000 troops there. To the powers it became evident that the Treaty of Sèvres could not be executed without a prolonged struggle, and a conference was called in London in February, 1921, to revise the treaty. The question of Smyrna was compromised, the demilitarized zone in the Straits was reduced considerably, and a substantial arrangement of the financial clauses of the treaty was made. It is doubtful whether these proposals will stand, as hostilities have broken out between Turkey (q.v.) and Greece (q.v.).

At present the country is in a bad condition economically, as foreign interests have been confiscated and destroyed during the past five years. The resources of the country were placed at the disposal of the military authorities, who have seized the crops and live stock at their discretion. The population has suffered enormous losses; Mohammedans have been drafted into the army whose casualties have been heavy; the Armenians have nearly all been massacred, and of the other Christians nearly all suffered severely from deportation, forced labor, and Turkish cruelty. In the late years of the European War there was an increased demand from the Central Empires for Anatolian products, and vigorous measures were taken to stimulate production. The effect of this has been permanent and beneficial, a new market being opened up for Anatolian products. There are no trustworthy statistics regarding the population of Anatolia.

For Catholic statistics see ASIA MINOR, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF.

Anchialos, a titular see in the province of Hemi-montus in Thrace, suffragan of Adrianople. The ancient city of Anchialos originated in a little Greek colony situated in Thrace on the western side of the Black Sea, which belonged to the inhabitants of Apollonia, now called Sizébolou. From the reign of Trojan it was known as Ulpia and the coinage of the imperial epoch, from Domitian to Gordian III, is stamped with a head. With the invasion of the Slavs and Bulgars in the sixth and following centuries the city was the scene of repeated sieges and battle and 17 June, 762, the Byzantines won an important victory over the Bulgars, but they were completely defeated in 766; Anchialos had suffered so severely during these conflicts that the Empress Irene rebuilt the city in 784. On 20 August, 917, the Byzantines underwent a bloody defeat, and at this time the city was called Achelos, which was the popular form of the name, and by modern historians Acheloiis. In 1423 the city, which had till then belonged to the Greeks, was conquered by the Turks and remained in their possession until 1885, when it was annexed to the province of Rumélia in the principality of Bulgaria. The city, populated principally by Greeks, was almost entirely wiped out during the summer of 1906 by an internal war between two factions.

The exact date of the introduction of Christianity into this city is not known, but it seems to have been very early; according to the legend of St. Sebastian there were Christians there as early as the end of the first century. In any case it is certain that an organized Church did exist here in the last half of the second century, whose bishop, Sotas, wished to exorcise Priscilla, the companion of Montanus. Anchialos appears as an archdiocese in the province of Rhodope, directly dependent on Constantinople; it remained so until the sixteenth century. At the present time (1922) the Greek metropolitan of Anchialos, situated in Bulgaria, is directly subject to the Greek Patriarchate of Constantinople in Turkey. For the Roman Rite Anchialos is a titular see. The list of bishops of this see from Sotas, in 170, is quite regular.

Ancona and Umana, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ANCONITANA ET HUMANA; cf. C. E., I-463d), in the province of Ancona, Italy. In 1904, upon the occasion of the episcopal jubilee of Cardinal Manara, Pius X raised this see to the dignity of an archdiocese without suffragans; the bishops of this see are ipso facto given the title of count. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. John Baptist Ricci, b. at Montenuovo, 1895, and transferred to Iesi 9 June, 1902, and promoted to this see 15 July, 1906, to succeed Cardinal Manara. By 1920 statistics there are 90,964 Catholics in this diocese, 37 parishes, 82 secular and 28 regular priests, 30 seminarians, 85 churches or chapels, 10 brothers and 115 sisters.

Andresis, FELIX DE (cf. C. E., I-470b).—The decree of the introduction of the cause of his beatification received the papal approbation 25 July, 1918.

Andria, DIOCESE OF (ANDRIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-475c), in the province of Bari, Italy, is suffragan of Trani. By a decree of 9 June, 1916, the Congregation of the Consistory accorded the title of cathedral to the basilica of St. Savinus at Canossa. Bishop Staiti di Braceleone, who was appointed to this see in 1899, died 14 December, 1916, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Eugenio Tosi, b. at Busto Arsizio, 1863, appointed bishop of Squillace 5 April, 1911, and transferred to Andria 22 March, 1917. In this diocese there is preserved a thorn of the crown of Our Lord, the tip of which bears brown stains, the inhabitants holding the tradition that whenever Good Friday falls on 25 March these stains become actual blood. This coincidence occurred in 1911 and upon examination of the thorn by civil and church authorities the facts were proven to be true to tradition. In 1920 the diocese counted 101,000 Catholics, 15 parishes, 200 secular and 5 regular priests, 15 seminarians, 53 churches or chapels, 6 brothers and 60 sisters.

Angers, DIOCESE OF (ANDEGAVENSIS; cf. C. E., I-489b), comprises the department of Maine-et-Loire, in France, and is suffragan of Tours. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Joseph Rumeau, b. at Tournon, 1849, ordained 1872, was made secretary to the Bishop of Agen and vicar general, 1881, and appointed bishop 28 November, 1898. By 1921 statistics there are 502,200 Catholics in the diocese. There are 37 first class parishes, 377 succursal parishes and 129 vicariates with salaries formerly paid by the state. A legally constituted lay society has bought back the lower seminary, which was taken from the diocese as a result of the Law of Separation in 1906. The municipality of Angers, with the authorization of the Government, showed a great spirit of justice and liberality in the negotiations just completed, and the lower seminary of Beaupreau in the same diocese has also been bought back.

Anglicanism (cf. C. E., I-498d).—In 1914 a Welsh Church Act was passed by Parliament, disestablishing the Church of England in Wales. Owing to the war this act was not put into effect until 1919, when another act completed the disestablishment of the Church of Wales and Monmouthshire as from 31 March, 1920. Wales was made a separate archbishopric. Property belonging to the Anglican Church in Wales, and a sum of £1,000,000 have been assigned to a temporary body, "Welsh Commissioners," for distribution to a body representing the Welsh Church, and to certain other authorities, including the University of Wales. This disestablishment was bitterly opposed by many Anglicans, who fear that it forebodes the disestablishment of the Church in England. In Canada the proposal (1918) to change the name of the "Church of England in Canada" to some broader title has not as yet been adopted.

It is difficult to estimate the total number of Anglicans in the world, since the returns for England and the United States (Protestant Episcopal Church) list communicants and not the total constituency. On the basis of marriages in England (59.7% in 1919 were Anglican), there are probably about 20,000,000 at least loosely affiliated with the Anglican Church in that country. The 1,104,000 communicants in the United States may represent 3,000,000 constituents; there are nearly 5,000,000 constituents in the rest of the world, and as many of the statistics are no later than 1911 it is fair to estimate the entire Anglican constituency in the world in 1922 as about 30,000,000. The following figures are for total membership (constituents) except for England, Scotland, and the United States, for which only communicants are listed. British statistics are taken from the Statesman's Year-Book, 1921; in some cases they show a decrease from the earlier figures of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA. England, 2,360,000; Scotland, 56,000; United States, 1,104,000; Ireland, 576,000; Canada and Newfoundland, 1,121,000; Australia, 1,731,000; New Zealand, 459,000; South Africa, 542,000; India, 493,000.

The doctrinal tendency of Anglicanism in recent years is epitomized in the Kikuyu incident. In June, 1913, a conference of Protestant missions with the Church Missionary Society (Low Church Anglican) was held at Kikuyu, British East Africa, the chief object apparently being to arrange a common basis of work among the various Protestant missionary bodies there. An interdenominational compact was drawn up whereby one district was to be assigned to each church exclusively. Doctrinally the "Federation" acknowledged the Bible as the rule of faith and practice; the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds as a general expression of belief; and "the vital importance of belief in the atoning death of our Lord as the ground of forgiveness." The Anglican bishops of Mombasa (in which Kikuyu is situated) and Uganda were present and with the representatives of the other churches pledged themselves: to recognize common membership between federated churches; to establish a common form of church organization; to admit to any pulpit a preacher recognized by his own church; to admit to communion a recognized member of any other church; to draw up and follow common courses of instruction both for candidates for baptism and candidates for ordination. Finally at the end of the conference the Anglican bishop of Mombasa (although theoretically the agreement needed ratification by the authorities in England) "celebrated the Holy Communion," according to the Anglican ritual, in a Presbyterian Church, and admitted to communion as many of the Protestant delegates as presented themselves. In this he was not without precedent, for the bishop of Hereford in England had about a year before acted in a similar manner.

The action of the two bishops, on the two points of the proposed federation and the intercommunion service, was criticized by the High Church Bishop of Zanzibar, who had refused to attend the conference. His complaint was referred by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Consultative Body of bishops, the question being whether "due consideration being given to precedent and to all the facts of the case, the action of the bishops who arranged and conducted the admittedly abnormal service was consistent or inconsistent with principles accepted by the Church of England." The decision was substantially as follows: (1) Ministers of other bodies may be welcomed as visitors to preach in Anglican churches, if accredited by the diocesan bishops; (2) non-Anglicans may be admitted to communion in Anglican churches under authority of diocesan bishops, on acceptance of the Apostles' and Nicene creeds, the deity of Christ, and the absolute authority of the Scriptures; (3) Anglicans must not receive the communion from ministers not episcopally ordained or whose orders are otherwise irregular; (4) it is wisest to abstain from such services as the closing service held at Kikuyu. The Archbishop of Canterbury in 1915 issued a statement embodying the report of the Consultative Body. The controversy which had arisen when the Kikuyu incident first came to light, broke out again, the High Church clergy objecting to what they considered a minimizing of Anglican doctrine. The archbishop refused to prosecute the bishops of Uganda and Mombasa, and the Anglican Church had once more clearly shown its policy to be that of laissez faire.

The incident, with two other cases cited also by the bishop of Zanzibar in his complaint, the widespread controversy, and the decision in the matter, seem to indicate plainly that the preponderance of authority and of opinion to-day in the Anglican Church leans toward the "Protestant" or Low Church party. Of the Kikuyu incident the bishop of Zanzibar said "there has not been a Conference of such importance to the life of the Ecclesia Anglicana since the Reformation," while another advanced Anglican likened it in importance to the Savoy Conference of 1661, "the work of which the Kikuyu Conference has set itself to undo."

In the "Open Letter" of the bishop of Zanzibar, attacking the Kikuyu Conference, there was also complaint made against the book "Foundations," written by seven Oxford men, and the attitude of the church authorities toward its editor was severely criticized. This book treated as open questions to be accepted or rejected freely by Anglicans: the necessity of the episcopate in the Christian Church; the institution by Christ of any church at all and of any sacraments; the reliability of the Bible as a witness; the Resurrection of our Lord from the dead, and His divinity. No public official condemnation was taken in the case, although six of the authors were Anglican clergymen. The editor, who had also contributed one of the essays, was merely asked to resign his chaplaincy "privately and quietly." The fact that in these controversies a fight was made for conservative doctrine and practice is interpreted by many as evidencing the presence of a strong High Church or "Catholic" party in Anglicanism; the truth is, however, that in each case the point at issue was not High Church doctrine as such, it was merely the traditional Anglican doctrine that was at stake, and the fact that only 700 clergymen were found to request a definite pronouncement by the church authorities on the doctrines called in question by "Foundations" shows only too clearly that the drift is toward liberal Protestantism or doctrinal indifference in the Anglican Church to-day. (For the third point of complaint voiced by the Bishop of Zanzibar see RITUALISM.)

This same tendency is also somewhat apparent in the attitude of the Anglicans on the question of church unity. In 1920 the Lambeth Conference issued an appeal and some resolutions differing somewhat from the Lambeth Quadrilateral. The Conference (1) speaks of union of communions rather than of churches; of the communions of the East and the West, of episcopal and non-episcopal communions; (2) it speaks of ministries of grace in all of them; (3) it disclaims the idea, even the right, of pronouncing upon the validity of the sacraments of other communions; (4) it considers that the Creed does not impose a test, but that it is offered and accepted as a symbol of unity. Actually these proposals bear considerable resemblance to the "federation plan" of Kikuyu. No results are as yet (1922) apparent and in fact, broad as are the conditions, the Federal Council of Free Churches and the National Free Church Council, both of Scotland, practically rejected them as standing too strongly for episcopacy, while the Methodists have formally rejected the overtures, refusing to consider reordination of their clergy.

In missionary work the Church of England has maintained its attitude against Protestant propaganda in Catholic countries, notably in the World Missionary Conference of 1910, at Edinburgh. As a consequence the American missionaries devised the "Panama Conference" (see Protestantism) for the purpose of furthering Protestant work in Latin America. (See also RITUALISM and BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER.)

Anglona and Tursi, DIOCESE OF (ANGLONENSIS ET TURSIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-512c), in the province of Potenza, Italy, suffragan of Acerenza. Rt. Rev. Vincent Pisani, who came to this see 5 February, 1908, retired 5 September, 1910, and was made administrator apostolic of Thebes and on 3 January, 1912, titular bishop of that see. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. John Pulvirenti, b. at San Antonio, 1871, appointed Bishop of Anglona and Tursi 27 November, 1911. In 1920 there were 96,000 Catholics in the diocese, 107 secular priests, 19 seminarians, 40 parishes, 120 churches or chapels and 4 sisters.

Angola and Congo, DIOCESE OF (ANGOLENSIS AND CONGENENSIS; cf. C. E., I-512d), also known as Santa Cruz de Reino de Angola, and São Paulo de Loanda, in Portuguese West Africa, suffragan of Libson, with episcopal residence at São Paulo de Loanda. From 1909-15 the see was filled by Rt. Rev. João Evangelistão de Lima Vidal, but on 9 December, 1915, he was promoted to the titular see of Mytilène and made suffragan to the Patriarch of Lisbon, since which time the see has been vacant. In 1920 the total population of this diocese numbered 2,000,000, of whom 1,000,000 are Catholics; there are 82 parishes, 36 priests, 8 Missionary Fathers of the Holy Ghost, 8 churches and 10 chapels.

Angora, DIOCESE OF, of the Armenian Rite (cf. C. E., I-513a), in Asiatic Turkey, known to the Greeks and Romans as Ancyra. Rt. Rev. Clement Ghazarossian, appointed to this see 28 August, 1901, d. 21 November, 1910. He was succeeded by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Gregory Bahabanian, b. at Angora, 1866, appointed 27 August, 1911. During the World War Bishop Bahabanian was interned by the Turks (1915). By latest statistics there are 3000 Armenian Catholics in this diocese, 5 missionary priests, 1 parish, 1 church, 2 schools with 60 pupils, 1 orphanage and 4 government orphanages caring for 60 children. From 1907-21 thirty priests have died in this territory, some from natural causes and some by martyrdom during the World War, and by the same causes the diocese lost 2000 of its faithful. During the year 1915 the Turks deported or killed numbers of the Christians and set fire to the whole Catholic section of the city of Angora, destroying the bishop's house, four churches, the Sisters' monastery, the seminary, schools and shrines.

Angoulême, DIOCESE OF (ENGOLISMA; cf. C. E., I-513b), comprises the Department of Charente in France and is suffragan of Bordeaux. Since 1907 the see has been filled by Rt. Rev. Henri-Marie Arlet, b. at Martel in 1858, ordained 1881, appointed bishop 7 August, 1907. Under his direction an exhibition of the relics was held in the diocese in April, 1918. By 1920 statistics the population of the diocese, entirely Catholic, numbers 346,424 of whom 38,211 are in Angoulême; there are 30 first class parishes, 237 succursal parishes, and 42 vicariates, formerly under state subvention.

Angra, DIOCESE OF (ANGRENSIS; cf. C. E., I-513c), in the island of Terceira, Azores. On the death of Mgr. Joseph C. C. Monteiro, who had been bishop of the diocese for five years, he was succeeded by the present bishop, Emanuel Damascene da Costa, chancellor of Viseu, born 2 February, 1867; elected bishop of Angra 2 October, 1914. He took possession of the see 26 May, 1915, and died 27 January, 1920.

The Catholics of the diocese number 250,000 Portuguese. There are 173 parishes, and 185 churches with 313 secular priests; 1 seminary with 8 professors and 60 seminarians; 3 elementary schools with a total of 145 students; 5 homes, 8 asylums, 1 of which admits the ministry of priests; 4 societies or organizations for the clergy, and a great many for the laity. The Catholic publications consist of 6 weeklies and 1 monthly.

Anne de Beaupré, SAINTE (cf. C. E., I-539c).—This famous American shrine, near Quebec, Canada, was entirely destroyed by fire in March, 1922. The only one remaining of the group of buildings connected with the basilica is the Memorial Chapel, to which were transferred the relics and statue of St. Anne, saved from the flames. A temporary church will be erected to accommodate the pilgrimages for 1922, and a larger edifice along the general lines of the former basilica will eventually replace the destroyed structure.

Anne of St. Bartholomew, BLESSED (cf. C. E., VI-378d), was beatified on 6 May, 1917, by Pope Benedict XV.

Annecy, DIOCESE OF (ANNECIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-540b), in Haute-Savoie, France, suffragan of Chambéry. Rt. Rev. Pierre-Lucien Campistron, who was appointed bishop of this diocese 9 June, 1902, died 22 August, 1921, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Florent du Bois de La Villerabel, transferred to this see, 18 November, 1921. Bishop de La Villerabel an alumnus of the French Seminary at Rome, was born at St. Briec, 1877, served as a professor of philosophy and theology at the higher seminary at St. Briec, was mobilized and discharged in 1915, became vicar general of Amiens the same year, was appointed titular Bishop of Enos, 7 May, 1920, and made auxiliary with right of succession to the Archdiocese of Tours, which office he filled until his transfer to Annecy. In 1920 there were 257,606 Catholics in this diocese, 29 first class parishes, 270 succursal parishes and 169 vicariates with salaries formerly paid by the state.

Antigonish, DIOCESE OF (ANTIGONISHENSIS; cf. C. E., I-562d), in Canada, is a suffragan to the Archdiocese of Halifax. The present incumbent, Rt. Reverend James Morrison, was born at Saint-André, Prince Edward Island, 9 July, 1861, ordained 1 November, 1889, acted for a time as apostolic administrator of this diocese, was appointed bishop 25 May, 1912, and consecrated 4 September of the same year. He succeeded Rt. Rev. John Cameron, D. D., who filled the see from 1886 until his death, 6 April, 1910.

In 1919 the Trappist Monastery at Tracadie, N. S., one of the oldest institutions of the diocese, was closed and the 12 Fathers and brothers who were conducting the institution returned to France.

The Antigonish "Educational and Social Conference," organized in 1917, has had four annual meetings and is growing yearly in importance and influence. In 1920 the first retreat for lady teachers was held in the diocese at Mt. St. Bernard's College and plans have been made for similar retreats every two years.

The chief seat of learning of this diocese is St. Francis Xavier University at Antigonish with 19 professors and 196 students, 85 of whom are resident. Mt. St. Bernard's Ladies College, affiliated with the university, has 42 students doing university work and 87 doing high school work. During recent years the university has led in a great educational movement and many new buildings and useful equipment have been added through the generosity of friends of the institution. In 1920 extension teaching was undertaken and a "People's School," modeled after similar schools in Belgium and Holland, was established. In the same year a successful campaign for $500,000 was conducted and the Carnegie Corporation contributed $58,750 for a chair of French.

By present (1921) statistics the population of this diocese is 92,000, of whom 50,000 are Scotch, 24,000 French, 14,000 Irish. There are: 70 parishes, 45 missions, 115 churches, 109 secular priests, 18 convents of women, 296 sisters, 17 seminarians. A number of educational institutions are conducted by the various communities represented in the diocese; the Congregation of Notre Dame with 92 sisters and mother-house at Montreal have 9 convents; the Daughters of Jesus, with 24 sisters, have 2 schools; the Sisters of Charity with 92 sisters and mother-house at Halifax have 8 schools. There are in all 14 high schools with 24 teachers and an attendance of 657 boys and 770 girls, and 33 elementary schools with 133 teaching sisters and 77 lay teachers, and an attendance of 10,034. In this province Catholic schools recognized by local school boards are public schools and as such receive their share of provincial aid. As a result nearly all the towns have Catholic public schools, which conform in every detail to requirements of the public school law and are subject to official inspection; the property usually belongs to the parish and is rented to the public school board for school purposes.

A number of the charitable institutions are under the care of the Sisters of St. Martha, a diocesan community with 88 sisters and mother-house at Antigonish; they are in charge of the domestic work at St. Francis Xavier University and at St. Augustine's Seminary, Toronto, St. Martha's Hospital and House of Providence, St. Joseph's Hospital, St. Mary's Orphanage and Ross Memorial Hospital. The Daughters of Jesus conduct a home for the aged at Sydney and the Sisters of Charity have a hospital at North Sydney and a sanitorium at Lourdes. Several of these institutions receive grants from the municipal and provincial governments. Among the clergy St. Joseph's Society, the Priests' Eucharistic League and the Priests' Total Abstinence Union are established, and among the laity the usual parish societies and the Knights of Columbus, Catholic Women's League of Canada, League of the Cross Total Abstinence Society, Holy Name Society, Catholic Society of Canada, Ancient Order of Hibernians, and the Assumption Society. The diocese has one weekly periodical, "The Casket"; a monthly paper, "The Xaverian," issued by the students of the university, "The Memorare," a quarterly by the students of the Ladies' College, and two annual publications, "The Catholic Year Book of the Maritime Provinces" and "The Easter Lily."

During the World War the diocese of Antigonish responded with great patriotism and the most correct figures obtainable show 4,791 enlistments, 558 killed and 691 wounded. Five priests of the diocese served as chaplains at the front, and St. Francis Xavier University sent a hospital unit of eleven medical officers and twenty-seven nurses. One of these nurses was made matron-in-chief of all the Canadian nurses and served in that capacity during the whole war. Four priests and five brothers from the Trappist monastery returned to France and served in various capacities. In response to a letter from Bishop Morrison to the Knights of Columbus, 11 May, 1918, in which he suggested that they raise a fund for the Canadian soldiers overseas, a fund of $1,000,000 was raised throughout Canada before the end of October of that year, and of this sum $132,305.65 were raised in Nova Scotia alone. The following statistics published in December, 1915, show the various religions of 1,200 men recruited in Cape Breton County (a part of this diocese), by Captain Rev. E. Watring, a non-Catholic clergyman of Florence, C. B. Roman Catholic 47.9 per cent, Presbyterian, 27.5 per cent, Church of England, 14.4 per cent, Methodist 6.5 per cent. For further details see "Catholics of the Diocese of Antigonish, Nova Scotia, and the War" (St. Francis Xavier University Press).

Antioch, PATRIARCHATE OF (ANTIOQUIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-568c), comprises four rites united with Rome, the Greek-Melchite, Maronite, Syrian and Latin, with a patriarch for each. The official title of the Greek-Melchite patriarch is, "Patriarch of Antioch, Alexandria, Jerusalem and all the Orient," and he has his residence at Damascus. He has three patriarchal vicars, at Damascus, Alexandria and Jerusalem, and since 1859 has had jurisdiction over the Greek Catholics of the Patriarchate of Constantinople. The present patriarch, His Excellency Joseph Dimitri Cadi, b. at Damascus, 1861, ordained in Paris 1888, appointed bishop 1903, and consecrated at Alexandria, named vicar apostolic of the Melchites after the death of the Patriarch Geha, 1916, appointed patriarch 3 July, 1919. By 1920 statistics there are 10,835 members of this rite, 11 secular and 15 regular priests, 14 churches and 2 schools.

The residence of the Syrian Patriarch is at Mardin, the Catholic hierarchy of the Syrians having been re-established in 1783. The present patriarch, His Excellency Ignatius Denis Ephrem Rahmani, b. at Mossul, 1848, an alumnus of Propaganda College, was consecrated titular Archbishop of Edessa, 1887, transferred to Aleppo, 1894, and appointed patriarch 29 October, 1898, under the name of Ignatius Ephrem II. He was named a consultant of the Congregation for the Oriental Church 27 November, 1917. There are two patriarchal vicars for this rite, at Mardin and at Homs, and a procurator of the patriarch at Rome. In 1920 there were 4,200 Syrian Catholics, 14 secular and 13 regular priests and 8 churches or chapels.

The Maronite Rite has its residence at Békorki in Lebanon. The patriarch has jurisdiction over all Maronites scattered throughout the Orient, the Ottoman Empire, in Egypt and in Cyprus; the patriarchal diocese, or see of the patriarch is Gibail and Batrun. The present patriarch, His Excellency Elie Pierre Hoyek, b. in the diocese of Batrun 1842, ordained 1870, consecrated titular Archbishop of Arca 1889, and made patriarchal vicar, director of the Maronite College at Rome, 1897, was appointed patriarch 6 January, 1899. After a period of exile he returned to Békorki in October, 1917, and in 1919, accompanied by four archbishops, he went to Paris, to defend the interests of Lebanon at the Peace Conference. There are three patriarchal vicars in Lebanon and one in Egypt. In 1920 there were 85,000 Maronite Catholics in this district, 470 priests, 277 churches or chapels, 1 seminary, 12 monasteries of the Baladites with 177 monks, 2 monasteries of the Aleppines with 30 monks, the Antonians with 2 monasteries and 9 monks, the Baladite Sisters with 1 monastery and 18 religious and 2 convents of native sisters with 21 religious.

For the Latin Rite the see is merely titular, the patriarch residing in Rome or some place in the West. The present patriarch, His Excellency Ladislav Michal Zaleski, b. 1852, appointed titular archbishop of Thebes, 1892, was appointed patriarch 7 December, 1916.

Antioquia and Jerico, DIOCESE OF (ANTIOQUIENSIS ET JERICENSIS), in Colombia, South America, is suffragan of Medellin. The diocese of Jerico was founded 29 January, 1915, by a division of the Diocese of Antioquia, sixteen parishes from the southern part of that diocese constituting the new see. On 5 February, 1917, it was reunited with Antioquia, each diocese having equal rights, and at the same time a portion of the united dioceses was erected into the new Diocese of Santa Rosa de Osos. Rt. Rev. Emanuel Antonio de Mesa who filled this see from 1902 until his death in 1910, was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Maximilian Crespo, appointed 18 October, 1910. Upon the erection of the diocese of Santa Rosa de Osos, Bishop Crespo was transferred to that see, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Francis Christopher Toro was transferred to the united sees of Antioquia and Jerico, 8 February, 1917. Bishop Toro, b. at Antioquia 1869, ordained 1894, was appointed Bishop of Socorro 18 October, 1910, and transferred to Santa Marta 16 December, 1913. By 1920 statistics there are 211,315 Catholics in this diocese, 75 secular and regular clergy and 80 churches or chapels.

Antivari, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ANTIVARIUM; cf. C. E., I-582b), is the Catholic metropolitan see of Montenegro, and is directly subject to the Holy See. Monsignor Simon Millinovic, who came to this see in 1886, died 24 March, 1910, and was succeeded by the present incumbent Most Rev. Nicolas Dobrecic, b. at Antivari, 1872, appointed archbishop 16 January, 1912. In 1920 there were about 25,000 Catholics in this diocese, 14 parishes of which 10 are served by the Friars Minor, 27 churches or chapels, 12 secular priests and 12 Friars Minor.

Antofagasta, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (ANTOFOGASTENSIS; cf. C. E., I-583a), in Chili. By a decree of 22 November, 1918, the territory commonly known as the Department of Taltal was taken from the Diocese of Serena and united to the vicariate of Antofagasta, thus changing the boundaries of this vicariate. The present vicar apostolic, Don Luiz Silva-Lezaeta was appointed in 1907, and made titular Bishop of Olena, 5 January, 1912. By 1920 statistics the Catholic population of this territory numbers 200,000, of whom 35,000 are in the city of Antofagasta. At present (1921) there are 20 parishes, 22 secular and 6 regular clergy (Missionaries of the Heart of Mary), 3 congregations of Sisters with 27 members, 1 monastery for men, 1 convent for men, 3 secondary schools for boys with 6 teachers and 300 students, 1 professional school and 80 elementary schools. A lyceum for boys and one for girls, and the industrial school are supported by the government. Fifteen different societies are organized among the laity.

Antonians, CHALDEAN (cf. C. E., I-556a).—These religious of the Congregation of St. Hormisdas have three monasteries in Mesopotamia in the Chaldean Archdiocese of Mossul. The prior of the monastery of Notre Dame is Fr. Elia Hanna; prior of the monastery of St. Hormisdas, Fr. Stephan Eugen; and prior of the monastery of St. George, Fr. Berrianien Ounan. In 1917, at the death of Dom Samuel Giamil, general of the order since 1901, the Chaldean patriarch appointed Dom Mosé Gêramie vicar general. The congregation numbers 17 priests, 44 lay brothers, and 5 novices. The priests have missions in the towns and villages, where their ministry is requested by the patriarch or bishops.

Antsirabé, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XVI-68a), formerly the Vicariate Apostolic of Betafo, in Madagascar. This territory was erected into a prefecture Apostolic 15 May, 1913, by a division of the Vicariate Apostolic of Central Madagascar, and was raised to a vicariate 24 August, 1918, and entrusted to the Missionaries of La Salette. On 10 January, 1921, the name was changed to the Vicariate Apostolic of Antsirabé. Rev. Father François Pra, who was appointed superior of this mission 14 July, 1900, died at Antsirabé 17 February, 1918. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. François-Joseph Dantin, b. at Meyrieux-Trouet, 1870, appointed prefect apostolic of Betafo 24 June, 1913, and promoted to the titular see of Satala, and made the first Vicar Apostolic of Betafo, 10 September, 1918. During the World War five of the priests from this mission were mobilized and served in the field hospitals.

The Catholic population numbers about 56,000, almost all of the Hova race. At the present time (1922) the vicariate comprises 5 parishes, 5 churches, 5 missions, 246 mission stations, 4 convents of men and 3 of women, 17 missionary priests, 9 brothers, 22 sisters, 5 seminarians. The educational institutions include: 3 secondary schools with 5 teachers, 50 boys and 10 girls; 1 normal school with 2 teachers and 20 pupils; 20 elementary schools with 40 teachers and 2,160 pupils. Four of the public institutions permit the ministry of the priests and 5 societies are organized among the laity.

Aosta, DIOCESE OF (AUGUSTANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-591d), in Italy, suffragan of Turin. The diocese contains (1922) 87 parishes, 566 churches, chapels and oratories, 3 convents for men, 1 for women with 191 sisters, 170 secular priests, 25 regulars, 8 lay brothers, 2 seminaries and 26 seminarians. There are one college with 10 professors, and 174 students; 600 secondary schools, all of which are maintained by the government, and one mission school. The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 5 asylums, 1 hospital, 1 refuge, 2 day nurseries, 2 diocesan shelters. Among the clergy there exists one association and three among the laity.

During the World War numerous priests served their country as chaplains in the Italian army, five of them being killed. Two thousand soldiers belonging to the diocese gave up their lives for the cause. The seminary of St. Anselm was used as a hospital for wounded soldiers. Monuments were erected in many towns as memorials for those who had fallen in the war. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. William Calabrese, b. at Modane, 1867, ordained September, 1889, elected 7 May, 1920, consecrated at Susa, 1 July following. Since 1907 the church of St. Anselm has celebrated its centenary and a Marian Congress was held in the diocese.

Apologetics (cf. C. E., I-618b).—The history of apologetics in the last fifteen years is chiefly centered in the defense of traditional Catholic faith against the insidious dangers of Modernism. In addition to this the vindication of the Christian conception of God and the human soul has been prompted anew by the steadily growing anti-theistic rationalism in the learned world of to-day. Modernism is little more than the infiltration of Protestant liberal thought into the Catholic views of revelation, Holy Scripture, Christology, the Church and the sacraments. The philosophy underlying liberal Protestantism is closely related to the subjectivism of Kant, rejecting external proofs for the existence of God and stressing the consciousness we have of God working within us. Sharing the prejudice of the modern scientific world against Divine intervention in the realm of nature, it rejects all miracles and prophecies, even the historic reality of the Resurrection, and denies the Divinity of Jesus, to whom, indeed, it attributes surpassing goodness and ethical wisdom, but concedes only a knowledge subject to human limitations and not wholly free from error. In accordance with its destructive criticism of the Bible, it declares the Christ of the Gospels to be an idealization of the historic personage Jesus, the exact portraiture of whom is beyond recovery. Only a small kernel of His recorded sayings is accepted as genuine. On the basis of this rigorously sifted evidence, it is generally agreed that in His mature years Jesus went about preaching the kingdom of righteousness as foretold by the Prophets and making known that He was the Messiah; but that in preaching this Messiahship, He lived and died a Jew, faithful to the Law, conforming rigidly to its ritual. That He had in mind the radical innovations of Christianity, that He instituted a Church with a sacramental system hitherto unknown to Judaism is declared to be absolutely incompatible with His genuine sayings, especially with His insistence on the nearness of the great Judgment and of the end of the world.

Such in brief is the attitude of liberal Protestantism, common to many scholars calling themselves Christian in Germany, Holland, France and England. Unhappily, their views, so subversive of historic Christian faith, found favor with a number of Catholic scholars, some of them of no mean ability, who were strongly attracted by the brilliant studies of men like Harnack and Sabatier, and who flattered themselves that by interpreting Catholicism in the light of this phase of modern scholarship, they could make Catholic faith more widely respected and more readily acceptable to scholars of university training. For this reason they became known as Modernists. Prominent among these liberalizing Catholics were the Abbé Loisy in France, Father Tyrrell, S. J., in England, and in Italy Fogazzaro and Abbate Murri. Loisy's earlier writings had put him in the front rank of Catholic Scriptural scholars. His Modernist views, partly revealed in his work "l'Evangile et l'Eglise" (1902), found bolder expression in his "Autour d'un Petit Livre" (1903). Of equal influence, if not scholarship, was Father Tyrrell in English-speaking countries. In his works, "Lex Orandi" (1903), and "Lex Credendi" (1906), favorably mentioned in the article APOLOGETICS (C. E., I-623b), he had given expression to a few statements of Modernist significance, which were generally overlooked in his many excellent utterances of an edifying character, but a new light was thrown on his radical interpretation of Catholicism in his little treatise printed for private circulation, "A Confidential Letter to a Friend, Who Is a Professor of Anthropology" (1906). The storm of criticism provoked by this letter led soon after to the publication of his "Much Abused Letter" (1906), and "Through Scylla and Charybdis" (1907), in which, while seeking to justify his position as that of a true Catholic, he plainly revealed how inconsistent were his views with traditional Catholic belief. At the same time a similar trend of thought was finding expression in the published utterances of Abbate Murri, author of "Psicologia della religione" (1905), and "Democrazia e Cristianesimo" (1906), and of Fogazzaro, author of "Il Santo" (1905).

The assertions of all these writers and of their less prominent followers were, to a large degree, the reflex of modern liberal Protestant thought arrayed in the specious garb of Catholic terminology. Their teaching was, to use the happy saying of Father Donat, S. J., "Kant preaching in the robe of a Catholic theologian" (Freedom of Science, p. 167). Not all kept pace with the Abbé Loisy, who went so far as to hold views subversive of belief in the Divinity of Christ and in the Divine origin of the Church and of the sacraments. But common to most of them was the view that the Gospel portraiture of Christ is not wholly true to the original, that miracles, including the Resurrection, elude the human power of demonstration, that the old conception of faith resting on a positive Divine communication from without and having for its object a message from God definite in its contents and admitting no change, must give place to the new idea that faith is the conviction of man's responsibility to God, born of and fostered by the consciousness of the presence and working of God within us, and that revelation is naught else than the self-manifestation of the Divine in our inward life.

It would be outside the scope of this survey of the recent history of Apologetics to describe in detail the nature and fate of Modernism. That has already been well done in the able article MODERNISM, by Father Vermeersch, S. J. (C. E., X-415b). Suffice it to say that in July, 1907, the Decree "Lamentabili," of the Holy Office, branded as false and un-Catholic sixty-five theses expressing Modernist views on Scripture, revelation and faith, the Divinity of Christ, prophecies and miracles, especially that of the Resurrection, the Church and the sacraments. This Syllabus of errors was followed in September by the Encyclical, "Pascendi," of Pope Pius X, condemning Modernism as a synthesis of teachings destructive of Catholic faith. The excommunication of its chief exponents, Loisy, Tyrrell, Murri and Fogazzaro, followed soon after, in consequence of their unwillingness to submit, and their Modernist writings were put on the Index.

In refutation of Modernism a very large number of able treatises have been published, some of them as books and pamphlets, others in the form of articles for periodicals and dictionaries. While some of these have aimed to show the untenableness of the whole system from the Catholic standpoint, by far the larger number have been directed against particular features of the new heresy. Among those who have done notable service in this field of apologetics may be mentioned: Cardinal Mercier, "Le Modernisme, sa Position vis-à-vis de la science" (1908); A. Vermeersch, S. J., "De Modernismo Tractatus" (1910), also his article MODERNISM, in Volume X of this Encyclopedia; Msgr. Farges, article "Modernisme" in the recently issued part of the new "Dictionnaire apologetique de la foi catholique," a masterly treatise of about seventy-five thousand words; M. Lepin, S. S., "Les Théories de M. Loisy" (1908); "Christologie" (1908); "Jésus Messie" (4th ed., 1909); trans. "Christ and the Gospel" (1910); "Jésus Christ, sa vie et son œuvre"

(1912); J. Lebreton, "L'Encyclique et la théologie moderniste" (1908); MM. Bourchany, Périer et Tixeront, "Conférences apologetiques" (1910); MM. Jacquier et Bourchany, "Conférences apologetiques sur la Résurrection et les miracles évangéliques" (1911); E. Mangelot, "La Résurrection de Jésus" (1910); J. de Tonquédec, "La Notion de vérité dans la philosophie nouvelle" (1908); also "Introduction à l'étude du Merveilleux et du Miracle" (1916).

A prominent feature of the Catholic reaction against Modernism is the increased emphasis laid on Scriptural studies. The Biblical Commission, established in 1902 under Pope Leo XIII, received a new significance and importance after the publication of the Encyclical Pascendi. The authority of its decisions, questioned by some, was defined in the Motu Proprio of Pius X, November 18, 1907 (Præstantia Scripturæ Sacre), making them the guide-posts of Catholic teaching. Two years later, the Pontifical Biblical Institute was established in Rome and put in charge of Jesuit scholars. As the apostolic letter of authorization indicates, its purpose is to safeguard Catholic students of Scripture from the grave danger of having recourse to non-Catholic teachers and of being thereby imbued with Modernist errors. In the interests of the Institute, a new periodical, "Biblica," issued every three months, was presented to the world of scholars in 1920. It is edited by the professors of the Institute, the chief editor being the noted scholar, Dr. Fonck, S. J., and is destined to publish many articles of apologetic value.

The article on Apologetics in the first volume of this encyclopedia makes mention of the so-called "Immanence School," that was in vogue twenty years ago in France, and of the subjective Christian philosophy of apologists like Ollé-Laprune and Fonsegrive. The loyalty of these writers to Catholic faith was unquestioned, but after the condemnation of Modernism in 1907, their subjective philosophy fell into discredit, being so strongly suggestive of the philosophy of Kant as to be open to the suspicion of leading to Modernism.

The Modernism of liberal Protestantism does not mark the furthest outposts of rationalistic speculation. Beyond is the riot of ever-shifting theories on monistic evolution, on the physico-chemical explanation of the activities of living organisms from the microbe to man, on the relation of human knowledge to an objective world, on religious psychology. The numerous exponents of these theories, strong in criticizing the work of their predecessors and at the same time weak in setting up any enduring monument of their own, show an atheistic trend that bodes no good for Christian faith and gives rise to serious misgivings when one considers that many of these leaders of the blind are teachers of the Christian youth in the great universities of the land. To neutralize these teachings there is need of more works like those of Father E. Wassmann, S. J., "Modern Biology and the Theory of Evolution" (1910); "The Berlin Discussion of the Problem of Evolution" (1909); B. Windle, "What Is Life?" (1908); "Facts and Theories" (1912); J. Donat, S. J., "The Freedom of Science" (1914); Carrigou-Lagrange, "Dieu, son Existence et sa Nature."

Besides the works mentioned above, the following are of value for apologetic study:

OTTIGER, Theologia Fundamentalis (2 vols., 1918); ESSER-MAUBACH, Religion, Christentum, und Kirche (3 vols., 1913); D'ALEZ (ed.) Dictionnaire Apologetique de la Foi Catholique. (This monumental work, begun in 1911 and appearing in parts is about half complete); WALSH, Principles of Apologetics (1913); BATIFFOL, The Primitive Church and Catholicism (1911); IDEM, Orpheus et l'Evangile (1910); FINLAY, The Church of Christ (1915); BARNES, The Early Church in the Light of the Monuments (1913); RICKAST, Authority and Religious Belief (1916); CUTHBERT AND OTHERS, God and the Supernatural (1921); BAUDRILLART, The Catholic Church, Renaissance and Protestantism (1908); DE POULPQUET, Le miracle et ses suppléances (1913); JOYCE, The Question of Miracles (1914); DEYAS, The Key to the World's Progress (1918); JACQUIN, Etudes de critique et de philologie du Nouveau Testament (1920); ALLA, L'Evangile en face du syncrétisme païen (1910); LE ROY, La Religion des Primitifs (1909); BRICOUT, Où en est l'histoire des religions? (1911); HUBT, Christus, manuel d'histoire des religions (1913); MARTINDALE AND OTHERS, The History of Religions (5 vols., 1910-11); GUIBERT, Les Origines (6th ed., 1916); IDEM, Les Croyances Religieuses et La Science de la Nature (1908); EYMIEU, Le Naturalisme devant la Science (1921); WINDLE, The Church and Science (1917); HUGUENY, Critique et Catholique: I. Apologetique (4th ed., 1919); LANGAN, Apologetica (1921); BROSAN, Institutiones Theologiae Naturalis (1921).

CHARLES F. AIKEN.

Apostasy (cf. C. E., I-624c), is of three kinds: apostasy from the Christian Faith, apostasy from religious life, and apostasy from orders. All apostates from the Christian Faith incur excommunication reserved specially to the pope, by the very fact of their crime; unless they repent on being warned, they are to be deprived of all ecclesiastical benefices, dignities, pensions, offices, or posts, if they have any, to be declared infamous and if they are clerics, on being warned again, they are to be punished by canonical deposition. If an apostate affiliates formally with a non-Catholic sect or publicly adheres to it he incurs infamy ipso facto; if he is a cleric he loses ipso facto any office he holds, and after a fruitless warning he is to be degraded. Those who receive, favor or defend apostates, formerly incurred the same excommunication; this is no longer the case, though the censure is incurred by the publishers (not the printers, as heretofore) of works of apostates defending apostasy, heresy, or schism. Contrary to the former discipline, the Code enacts that infamy, one of the punishments mentioned above, does not affect those who are related by consanguinity or affinity to the party excommunicated; his children, however, would be prohibited from receiving orders as long as he remained unrepentant. Apostasy debars from ecclesiastical burial and from requiem or memorial Masses, but this is so only when notorious, and the party has died without giving signs of repentance. Catholics are most earnestly urged in the canons to avoid marriage with apostates; if they are deaf to this warning the parish priest must not assist at the marriage without the permission of the bishop. Any person who knowingly receives orders from an apostate prelate incurs a suspension a divinis reserved to the Holy See.

Absolution of apostates in the internal forum, or confession, is specially reserved to the Holy See; but if the crime of apostasy is brought to the external forum of the local ordinary in any way, the bishop, or vicar capitular, but not the vicar general without a special mandate, may by his ordinary power absolve the penitent in the external forum after obtaining from him a judicial abjuration (that is one made in the presence of the local ordinary or of his delegate and two witnesses), and observing the other legal requisites. Having been thus freed from the censure, the penitent may be absolved from his sin by any confessor. The bishop's power in this matter is ordinary and may, therefore, be delegated, such delegation to priests being the usual practice in the United States.

Apostates from religious life are those who being professed with simple or solemn perpetual vows leave their religious house illegitimately, with the intention of not returning, or who, having gone out with permission, do not return, in order to withdraw themselves from religious obedience. Such a person's evil intent is presumed by the law if within a month the religious does not return or at least inform the superior of his intention to return. Superiors are to seek out such apostates to induce them to return, and are to receive them if they return penitently. If the apostate is a sister or a nun, the local ordinary, and also the regular superior, if there is question of an exempt monastery, are to interest themselves prudently in securing her return. A religious, of course, who flees with a person of the other sex is ipso facto lawfully dismissed from the order. Apostates from religious life, by the very fact of their crime, incur excommunication reserved to their higher superior, or if the order is lay or nonexempt to the ordinary of the place in which the apostates sojourn; they are excluded from legitimate ecclesiastical acts, and lose all the privileges of their order; if they return to religion they are deprived perpetually of active and passive voice, and should be suitably punished by the superiors in accordance with the rules.

The fugitive or runaway religious is one who leaves his house without the superior's leave but with the intention of returning to the religious life. He is by the very fact of his crime deprived of his office, if he held any in his order, and, if he is ordained, he incurs suspension reserved to his own higher superior; when he returns he is to be punished according to the rule; if the rule has made no provision regarding the penalty, the superior should inflict suitable punishment. It may be noted that a nun with solemn vows who leaves her monastic enclosure, even for a short time, without a special indult of the Holy See, except in an urgent case of grave danger, incurs excommunication reserved simply to the pope.

A third kind of apostasy, though not classed as such in the Code is apostasy from orders, the abandonment of the clerical state and dress by clerics who have received major orders. To-day a cleric who abandons his clerical dress is to be seriously admonished by his ordinary to wear it again; if a month elapses without the warning being regarded, a minor cleric is ipso jure expelled from the ranks of the clergy; if the cleric is in major orders, any office he holds becomes vacant ipso facto, he is to be suspended from the orders he has received; if he openly adopts a profession or business foreign to the clerical state he is to be warned again, and, if three months elapse without this second warning being heeded, he is to be deposed.

Apostles (cf. C. E., 626d).—Though the history of the evangelical career of some of the Apostles is wrapped in obscurity or legend, the following are the places of which they are commonly credited as being in an especial way the Apostles: St. Peter, Antioch and Rome; St. Andrew, Achaia and Scythia; St. John, Ephesus; St. James the Greater, Spain; St. James the Less, Judea; St. Thomas, Mesopotamia and India; St. Jude, Persia; St. Simon, Egypt; St. Matthew, Persia and Macedonia; St. Bartholomew, Arabia, Mesopotamia, and Asia Minor; St. Philip, Phrygia. In addition we have St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles; St. Barnabas in Cyprus and Antioch; and St. Matthias in Asiatic Ethiopia. The following also are honored as the apostles who laid the foundations of the Faith in the regions or among the peoples mentioned, or who by their efforts there to revive or save it won the title of apostle: Abyssinia, St. Frumentius; The Alps, St. Bernard of Menthon; Armenia, St. Gregory the Illuminator; Artois, St. Vedas; Austria, St. Severinus; Auvergne, St. Austremonius; Bavaria, St. Severinus; Brabant, St. Willibrord; Brazil, Ven. José Anchieta; Brittany, St. Paul, de Léon; Burgundy, St. Benignus; Carinthia, St. Virgil; Corsica, Bl. Alexander Sauli; Crete, St. Titus; Denmark, St. Anshar; East Anglia, St. Felix; England, St. Augustine; Finland, St. Henry; Flanders, St. Livinus; France, St. Martin of Tours; Franconia, St. Killian; Friesland, St. Suitbert and St. Wulfran; Georgia, St. Nina; Germany, St. Boniface; Gothland, St. Sigfrid; Guelderland, St. Plechelm; Holland, St. Willibrord; the Indies, St. Francis Xavier; Ireland, St. Patrick; Livonia, Bishop Berthold; Mechlin, St. Rumold; the Mecklenberg Wends, Berno; Mercia, St. Ceadda; North Britain, St. Ninian; Norway, St. Olaf; Persia, St. Maruthas; the Picts, St. Colmcille; Pomerania, St. Otto; Portugal, St. Christian; Provence, St. Lazarus and St. Martha; Prussia, St. Adalbert and St. Bruno of Querfurt; Ruthenia, St. Bruno; Sardinia, St. Ephesus; Saxony, St. Willihad; Scotland, St. Palladius and St. Colmcille; the Slavs, Sts. Cyril and Methodius; Spain, St. James and St. Euphrasius; Sussex, St. Wilfrid; Sweden, St. Anshar; Switzerland, St. Gall and St. Andéol; Tournai, St. Piat and St. Eloi; Tyrol, St. Valentine; Valencia, St. Felix; the Wends, Boso; Wessex, St. Birinus; Westphalia, St. Ludger. The following titles also are commonly accepted: St. Vincent de Paul, Apostle of Charity; St. Peter Claver, Apostle of the Negro Slaves; Father Bartolomé de las Casas, Apostle of the Indians; Father Theobald Mathew, Apostle of Temperance; Ven. Camillo Pacetti, Apostle of Perugia; St. Francis de Sales, Apostle of Chablais; Bl. Peter Canisius, Apostle of Germany; St. Philip Neri, Apostle of Rome, and Bl. Sebastian Valfré, Apostle of Turin.

Apostolicas Sedis Moderationi (cf. C. E., I-645c), the Constitution in which Pius IX set forth the modern law of censures and reservations, is now only of historic interest, as all pontifical censures and penalties contained in papal documents were abolished in 1918, except those mentioned in the Code of Canon Law which came into effect that year.

Apparitors (cf. C. E., I-650a) may be described as sheriffs of the ecclesiastical tribunals; they may at the same time act also as cursors or heralds. They are usually laymen, and their nomination, suspension and recall are governed by the rules enacted concerning notaries.

Appeal as from an Abuse. See PRIVILEGES, ECCLESIASTICAL.

Appeals (cf. C. E., I-652b).—Any party to an ecclesiastical suit who believes himself wronged by the judgment of the court, and likewise the promotor of justice and the defender of the marriage bond, in cases in which they are interested, may appeal from the decision of the trial judge (judge appellee) to a higher or appellate judge. Indeed the defender of the bond must appeal against the decision of the court of first instance if it annuls a marriage. However, no appeal can be taken from a decision of the pope or of the Apostolic Signature; or from the decision of a judge who has been delegated by the Holy See to try a case, if the rescript appointing him contained the clause appellatione remota (without right of appeal) from a judgment that is still null and void; or when the matter in dispute has been once definitely settled by the court; or from a definitive judgment based on an oath decisive of the suit; or from a judicial decree or an interlocutory judgment not having definitive force, unless it is joined with an appeal from a definitive judgment; or from a judgment in a case which the canons require to be decided without any delay; or from a judgment against a contu-macious person who has not purged himself from his contumacy; or from a judgment against one who has expressly renounced in writing his right of appeal. If a judge decides he is relatively competent to hear a case there is no appeal allowed against such a decision; though if he declares himself incompetent either of the parties may appeal if he believes himself wronged by the decision.

Usually the judge of appeal or of second instance is the metropolitan or archbishop, yet if the latter has acted as trial judge, the judge of appeal will be any bishop whom he has selected once for all for that purpose, with the approval of the Holy See. If the archbishop has no suffragans or if the trial judge was a local ordinary immediately subject to the Holy See, the appeal is to be made to a neighboring metropolitan. In the case of exempt religious an appeal is made from a decision of the provincial to the general, or from the local abbot to the head of the monastic congregation. Appeals against episcopal decrees are to be taken to the various Roman Congregations, not to the Sacred Rota.

An appeal may be made verbally before the judge in court, if the decision is given there publicly, and in that case it must be immediately recorded by the notary. In any other case it has to be made in writing, except when the party cannot write. An appeal must be made before the judge appellee within ten days after notice of the publication of the decision, and must be brought before the judge of appeal or appellate judge within a month, unless the judge appellee has granted an extension. This is done by the appellant asking the appellate judge to amend the decision, at the same time presenting a copy of the judgment and of the notice of appeal, which he shall have previously shown to the judge appellee. If he cannot obtain a copy of the judgment, the time which is allowed within which to appeal ceases to run; the appellate judge is then to be notified, and he must compel the judge appellee to give the copy as soon as possible. If one of the litigants dies or changes his status or resigns from the office in virtue of which he was acting, within the time for appealing, but before the appeal has been interposed, those who are interested should be informed about the judgment, and the time for appeal begins to run from the day on which they are so notified; if the change happens after notice of appeal has been given, the parties interested are similarly to be informed, and from that moment the time for continuing the appeal begins to run.

An appeal made by the plaintiff may be utilized by the defendant and vice versa. If one of the litigants appeals against part of the judgment, his adversary may appeal against other parts of it, even though he had already lost his right to appeal by lapse of time; and he can do this also with an understanding that he is to withdraw his appeal if his opponent does likewise. If the appellant attacks only certain parts of the judgment, he is considered as having acquiesced in the remainder, but if he specifies no particular part, he is deemed to have appealed against the entire decision. If one of several plaintiffs or defendants appeals, all are considered to have appealed, if what is sought, or if the decision affects them jointly; but if the judge of appeals confirms the decision of the lower court, the actual appellant alone has to bear the costs of the appeal. There is never an appeal properly so-called allowed on the question of costs, but an aggrieved party may apply within ten days to the judge who gave them, and he may re-open the question. All appeals suspend judgments unless the law states otherwise; however, in a case of grave necessity a provisional execution may be allowed, if an adequate bond is lodged in court as security against loss in case the appeal is upheld. As soon as the appeal has been brought before the higher tribunal, the lower court must supply a certified copy or the original documents of the proceedings to the judge of appeal, who can deal only with the case exactly as it was presented to the lower court, though additional proofs of the questions involved may be introduced.

When a sentence rendered is null and void the remedy is not an appeal, but a complaint of nullity. The sentence is irretrievably null if it was given by an absolutely incompetent judge or by a tribunal of judges lacking the canonical number; or if one of the party was incompetent to litigate; or if the suit was conducted in the name of a party but without his leave. Under these circumstances the question of nullity may be raised as an exception (per modum exceptionis) at any time, or by lodging a complaint within thirty years with the judge who rendered the decision. On the other hand the defect in the sentence may be remediable; this happens when the citation was illegal, or when no reasons for the decision were given by the judge (excepting in decisions of the Apostolic Signature), or where the requisite signatures, dates, or name of place were omitted. In this case the complaint with an appeal may be made within ten years, or the complaint alone within three months from the time of publication of the judgment; the application is to be made to the judge who heard the case, but if the applicant mistrusts him he can demand to be heard by another judge of the same standing. If a definitive sentence does wrong to a third party, he may intervene before its execution by a proceeding known as oppositio tertii, in which he either petitions the adjudicating judge to revise his decision or appeals to a higher court.

If a question has become a res judicata, that is definitively closed or settled, for instance when the first decision has been upheld on appeal, or where no appeal is allowed by law, or when the appeal was not begun or prosecuted in time, an aggrieved party may have recourse to the extraordinary remedy known as restitutio in integrum (restoration of the party to his original condition), if the decision was manifestly unjust. A decision is not considered manifestly unjust, however, unless it is shown that it was based on false documents, or was obtained by the fraud of one of the parties, or that the provisions of the law were clearly disregarded, or that new documents have been discovered establishing facts that clearly necessitate a reversal of the sentence. The petition for a hearing is to be made to the adjudicating judge, unless it is based on a claim that the judge neglected the prescriptions of the law, in which case it is to be addressed to the court of appeal. A propos of res judicatae it must be noted that the question of a person's status, for instance where the validity of a marriage is involved, is never a res judicata, yet if a decision has been rendered and upheld on appeal no re-hearing is allowable, unless it is based on new and grave arguments or documents.

Approbation (cf. C. E., I-656d).—Under the Tridentine régime a minister of confession, besides sacerdotal orders, required jurisdiction and approbation. Approbation was defined as a juridical decision of a prelate that a priest was competent to hear confession. Without approbation, which could be granted only by a bishop or a person exercising episcopal jurisdiction, no one could hear the confessions of seculars, licitly or validly. The Code makes no mention of approbation in this technical sense as essential for absolution. While the canon 877 says that local ordinaries are not to grant jurisdiction and religious superiors are not to grant jurisdiction or permission to hear confessions except to those who have been proved by examination or who are known in some other way to be competent theologians, canon 872, speaking of the minister of Penance, says merely that "in addition to the power of orders the minister requires ordinary or delegated power of jurisdiction over the penitent in order to absolve him validly from sin." (See JURISDICTION.)

Aquila, ARCHDIOCESE OF (AQUILANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-681a), in the Abruzzi, Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. Most Rev. Pellegrino Francesco Stagni, appointed to this see 18 February, 1907, was transferred to the titular see of Ancyra, 1 January, 1916. He was succeeded by the present archbishop, Most Rev. Adolfo Turchi, b. at Balignano, 1863, made a domestic prelate, 1904, named secretary of the Sacred Congregation of Religious, 1914, and titular Bishop of Canope, promoted to the Archdiocese of Aquila 17 July, 1918. By 1920 statistics there are in this diocese 107,800 Catholics, 135 parishes, 200 secular and 29 regular clergy, 25 seminarians, 242 churches or chapels, 32 brothers, and 100 sisters.

Aquino, Sora and Pontecorvo, DIOCESE OF (AQUINATENSIS, SORANENSIS ET PONTIS CURVI; cf. C. E., I-662d), in the province of Caserta, Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Antonio Maria Janotta, b. 1847, was appointed to this see in 1900 and made an assistant at the pontifical throne 28 March, 1913. By 1920 statistics Aquino has a Catholic population of 52,150, 19 parishes, 64 secular and 8 regular clergy, 30 seminarians, 220 churches or chapels, 10 brothers, and 7 sisters. Sora has a population of 95,200, 45 parishes, 168 secular and 30 regular clergy, 35 seminarians, 220 churches or chapels, 19 brothers, and 59 sisters. The population of Pontecorvo numbers 12,050, and there are 8 parishes, 29 secular and 10 regular clergy, 25 churches or chapels, 27 brothers, and 24 sisters.

Arabia (cf. C. E., I-663a).—A territory in western Asia, containing the new Kingdom of Hejaz, the Emirates of Nejd and Hasa, Jebel Shammar, and Kerak, the principate of Asir, the Imamate of Yemen, the British Protectorate of Aden, and the Sultanates of Oman and Koweit. The total area is approximately 1,000,000 square miles with a population of between five and six millions.

At the outbreak of the European War, Turkey was in possession of the whole Red Sea littoral from Akaba to Mocha, with the single exception of Idrisi's territory, a stretch of about 100 miles from Shukeik to Wadi Ain. The Ottoman holding averaged inland about 150 miles, but its connection with the main body of the Empire was slender and precarious. The oases of Teima and Kheibar were held, not by the Turks, but by Ibn Rashid of Hail; Yemen in the north was free from the Turks, also, and the region east of Sana. When war broke out, Great Britain feared a holy war on the part of the Moslems, the possible loss of Aden, and the destruction of the British trunk route to the East. In search of a local ally to combat these dangers Great Britain naturally turned to the Grand Sherif Husein, who desired the independence of the Meccan Sherifate. He had been astute enough to undertake for Turkey, who had nominated him in 1908, military operations which equally served his purpose of weakening his rivals by encroaching on the domain of the Vali of Hejaz until by 1913, he was the most effective power in Mecca and Jidda. In the summer of 1915 he opened negotiations with Great Britain, who guaranteed the autonomy of Hejaz in the event of a successful revolt.

KINGDOM OF HEJAZ.—On 5 June, 1916, Husein Ibn Ali, proclaimed his independence, and in November, 1916, issued a proclamation assuming the title King of Hejaz. The Treaty of Peace with Turkey recognizes Hejaz as a free and independent state. By the end of 1917, when Husein had borne the title of "Malik" for more than a year, and successfully presided over two pilgrimages, Turkish authority had disappeared throughout northwestern Arabia from Kufuda to Akaba, except at Medina. In Mecca and southern Hijaz the king's rule rests on a traditional local loyalty and among other tribesmen there exists some vague sentiment of nationalism. The new kingdom has an area of about 100,000 square miles, and an estimated population of at least 750,000. Its capital is Mecca (80,000 inhabitants); the second largest city is Medina (40,000); the chief port is Jidda on the Red Sea, population 30,000.

THE EMIRATE OF NEJD AND HASA, the more powerful of the two Central Arabian principalities, has its capital at Riyadh, whence the Saud dynasty exercises jurisdiction over the neighboring groups of oases. The present Emir is Abd el-Aziz es-Saud, who expelled the Turks from Hasa in 1913 and has extended his influence to include Hofuf in the region of the Persian Gulf. Estimated population, 250,000 inhabitants. South Nejd has about 50,000 inhabitants, Central Nejd, about 100,000; Kasin, 50,000; Stasa, 50,000.

THE EMIRATE OF JEBEL SHAMMAR is ruled by Abdullah ibn Mitah, who succeeded on the assassination of his father, Ibn Rashid, in May, 1920. Its capital is at Hail and its population, including the Shammar, numbers 200,000 (estimated).

THE PRINCIPATE OF ASIR is ruled by Mohammed ibn Ali-el-Idrisi, a member of the Idrisi family. The estimated population is about 1,000,000; the capital, Sabiyah.

THE IMAMATE OF YEMEN, with its capital at Sana, is ruled by Yahya Mohammed Hamid ed-Din, and has an area of about 75,000 square miles and an estimated population of one million. The chief ports are Mocha and Hodeida, population 40,000.

THE SULTANATE OF KOWEIT, on the northwestern coast of the Persian Gulf, is ruled by Ahmed ibn Jobar, who succeeded his uncle in March, 1921. The Sultan is subsidized by the British government which maintains a political agent at his court. The estimated population is about 50,000.

THE EMIRATE OF KERAK is governed by Abdullah, son of King Husein. Kerak is Transjordanian.

THE PROTECTORATE OF ADEN.—By the Anglo-Turkish Convention of 1914 the boundary of Aden was prolonged through the desert to a point on the coast opposite Bahrain in the Persian Gulf. The settlement also includes the island of Perim at the entrance of the Red Sea, and is subject to the Bombay government. The government is administered by a political resident (who is also General Officer commanding the troops) with four assistants. The India office has hitherto exercised internal administrative control; the Foreign Office has been responsible for political questions, and the War Office for military questions. The area is about 75 square miles, but with the Protectorate included it is about 9000 square miles; the area of Perim is 5 square miles. A railway was begun in 1915 for military purposes, from Aden to Lahej, a distance of 30 miles.

VICARIATE APOSTOLIC (cf. C. E., I-674c).—The Vicariate Apostolic of Arabia includes the whole Arabic territory between 35° and 60° east longitude and 13° and 30° north latitude, the islands of Perin and Socotra, and British Somaliland. In 1901 Mgr. Jean Bigel was consecrated titular bishop of Eumenia and appointed to succeed Mgr. Lasserre, the first vicar apostolic, who resigned. Mgr. Bigel, who was elected against his will, never acted as vicar, and in 1902 Mgr. Thomas Clark was consecrated titular bishop of Tingis and vicar apostolic. Eight years later Bishop Clark was transferred to the diocese of Port Victoria, Seychelles Islands, and Mgr. Raffaele Presutti, consecrated titular bishop of Anchialos, replaced him in Arabia. He died 3 August, 1914, and the present incumbent, Mgr. Evangelista Vanni, titular bishop of Tenedos, became vicar in 1916. Born in the diocese of Pistoia, Italy, in 1878, he entered the Capuchin novitiate at Cortona, was ordained in 1901, and four years later went as a missionary to India. He was rector of the cathedral in Agra when appointed vicar apostolic of Arabia.

In 1912 the Somali chiefs, threatening an insurrection, forced the English authorities to close the missions in Somaliland founded by the French Capuchin Fathers, who were later given charge of the newly erected Prefecture Apostolic of Jibuti, formed from territory belonging to the Galla Mission. Efforts to evangelize the interior of Arabia are still unsuccessful. During the World War a military chaplain was stationed at Sheik Othman. Catholics in the vicariate made a special contribution to the War Memorial.

Statistics for 1921 were as follows: about 5,000,000 inhabitants, of whom about 1,000 were Catholics, 600 native and 400 European; 2 missions, 2 churches, 4 priests, 5 stations, 5 schools with 247 pupils and 12 teachers, 2 convents of Franciscan Sisters of Calais with 11 Sisters, 2 orphanages with 50 orphans, 4 pious associations; Tertiaries of St. Francis, League of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Societies of St. Francis Xavier and of the Holy Rosary; 1 co-operative society.

Aracaju, DIOCESE OF (ARACAJUNENSIS), in Brazil, was erected on 15 December, 1909, by the dismemberment of the Archdiocese of Bahia, of which it is a suffragan. It comprises the state of Sergipe, of which Aracaju is the capital, and is bounded on the north by the state of Alagoas, on the west and south by Bahia, and on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, thus covering an area of 86,993 sq. miles. The cathedral is dedicated to the Holy Saviour. The first and present bishop, Rt. Rev. Joseph Thomas Gomes da Silva, b. at Martins, 1873, was appointed to this see 12 May, 1911, and consecrated 19 November following. By 1920 statistics the diocese has a Catholic population of 550,000, divided into 28 parishes.

Arassuahy, DIOCESE OF (ARASSUAHIENSIS), in the State of Minas Geraes, Brazil, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Diamantina, out of a portion of which it was erected 25 August, 1913, having as its western limits the civil communes of Theopiloto and Minas Novas, which form a part of it. The original boundaries were changed 2 April, 1914, making the diocese somewhat larger than when it was first erected.

The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Séraphino Gomez-Jardim, is the first bishop of the diocese. Born at Olhos d'Agua 7 September, 1875, he made his studies at the seminary of Diamantina and was ordained a priest 1 June, 1901, became a professor in the seminary, was appointed papal chamberlain 7 December, 1907, secretary to the bishop 17 August, 1908, and editor of the Catholic journal, "A Estrella Polar." He was appointed Bishop of Arassuahy 12 March, 1914, consecrated 20 September, and installed 4 October of the same year.

The diocese now (1921) comprises: 24 parishes, 15 secular and 22 regular clergy, 2 convents for men, 3 lay brothers, 5 sisters, 1 seminary in course of construction, 1 college for men and 1 for women, 1 asylum, and 7 hospitals. Societies to the number of 10 are organized among the laity, and 2 Catholic periodicals are published.

Arauca, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (ARAUCENSIS), in Colombia, South America, was erected 26 May, 1915, by a division of the Vicariate Apostolic of Casanare, of which it took all the northern part situated to the left of the River Casanare. It is entrusted to the Lazarist Fathers and has 30,000 inhabitants, comprising whites and Indians, and 7 missionaries.

Araucania, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (ARAUCANIE); cf. C. E., I-679a, in Chili, South America, with residence at Valdivia. This mission comprises part of the provinces of Cantin, Valdivia and Leauquihue, and is bounded on the north by the River Imperial, on the east by the frontier of Argentina, on the west by the Pacific Ocean, and on the south by the River Maipue. It has 143,000 inhabitants, of whom 60,000 are Indians and a number of these are infidels. By 1920 statistics there are 20 parishes, 27 churches or chapels, 31 Capuchin Fathers and 21 brothers, 9 communities of religious of the Holy Cross of Menzigen (Swiss), 9 elementary schools with 519 pupils, and 9 secondary schools with 538 pupils.

Arbitration, CANONICAL (cf. C. E., I-682).—To avoid litigation the canons provide that the parties to a dispute may covenant to submit it to one or more arbitrators to decide the issue on the basis either of law or of equity. Persons who are excommunicated or infamous after a declaratory or condemnatory sentence cannot act validly as arbitrators; neither can laymen in ecclesiastical cases, while religious must not undertake to adjudicate without permission of their superiors. Arbitration is invalid in criminal cases or in contentious suits involving the validity of a marriage, or the title to a benefice (though in this case the lawful authorities may authorize arbitration), or spiritual matters mixed with temporal. If, however, the question concerns church temporal goods and things which, though connected with spiritual matters, can, nevertheless, be considered apart from them, arbitration is lawful; but in that case the regulations concerning the alienation of ecclesiastical property must be carefully observed.

Archbishop (cf. C. E., I-691).—The right of an archbishop to intervene in the dioceses of his suffragan is strictly limited by the Code as follows: He may grant institution to beneficiaries who have been presented by patrons, if the suffragan has neglected to do so within the statutory period. He can grant indulgences of 100 days to the suffragan's subjects. He may appoint a vicar capitular or oconomus if the cathedral chapter has neglected to elect one after the death of the bishop. He is to see that the faith is not endangered and that ecclesiastical discipline is strictly observed, and if there are any abuses, he is to notify the Holy See. If the suffragan has neglected the canonical visitation of his diocese, the archbishop may make it after obtaining permission from Rome; formerly the practice was for him to undertake it only after the matter had been discussed and approved at a provincial council; but at that time such councils were held every three years, while now they need be called every twenty years. When an archbishop is canonically visiting a suffragan's diocese he may preach, hear confessions and absolve even from sins reserved by the bishop; he may investigate the manner of life of the clergy, and denounce to their ordinaries those clerics who are tainted with infamy so that they may be punished; and may inflict equitable punishment, not excluding censures, for notorious crimes or for public notorious offenses committed against himself or his assistants. He may pontificate in any church, even if it is exempt, though he must notify the ordinary if he desires to do so in the cathedral; he may bless the faithful, and may have the cross carried before him when he enters the church. He must not, however, perform any other acts which imply jurisdiction. Of course he acts as first judge of appeal in cases originating in his suffragans' courts, but he may hear suits in first instance when they directly involve the rights or temporalities of the bishop or the diocesan mensa or curia. Formerly when an archbishop heard a suit in first instance, an appeal, if taken, had to be brought before the Holy See; now the appeal is taken before a bishop selected by the archbishop for that purpose once for all, with the approval of the Holy See.

Archconfraternity (cf. C. E., I-692).—The title archconfraternity can be conceded, even when it is merely honorary, to an association only by the Holy See, whose permission must be obtained also before the location of an archconfraternity can be changed. No association can be affiliated to an archconfraternity unless it has the same title and object, except by special permission of the pope. When an association has been affiliated all the indulgences, privileges and other communicable spiritual favors which have been granted by the Holy See to the aggregating association, directly and by name, and all that are granted thereafter are communicated to the affiliated association, unless the contrary is stated by the Holy See. This communication, however, gives the archconfraternity no rights whatsoever over the aggregated association.

The following conditions are expressly laid down for valid aggregation: the association must have been canonically erected and must not have been affiliated to any other archconfraternity or primary union; the aggregation must be perpetual, and must be executed in the manner prescribed in the statutes; the diploma of aggregation is to be sent gratis, voluntary payment for it being forbidden, except what is necessary to cover expenses, which shall not be more than thirty francs or six dollars; the indulgences, privileges, and other spiritual favors communicated by aggregation must be set forth in a schedule, authenticated by the ordinary of the place where the archconfraternity is established, and sent to the aggregated society; finally, the aggregation must be made with the written consent and testimonial letters of the local ordinary.

Archives, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., I-696).—Every diocese must have a special place, known as the archives, in which all writings and documents relating to the spiritual and temporal affairs of the diocese are to be kept carefully in order and indexed by the diocesan chancellor. The chancellor is always a notary and documents drawn up by him are held authentic. Sometimes he is given an assistant or vice-chancellor, and often he has the help of other notaries who may be laymen. The chancellor or the notaries may be suspended or removed by the bishop, but not by a vicar capitular unless the cathedral chapter consents. It is the duty of the chancellor to draw up an inventory or a catalogue of the contents of the archives with an abstract of each document. In the first half of each year he must add a précis of the documents of the preceding year and any others that have been overlooked. The archives are to be kept locked, and no one must have access to them without the leave of the bishop or of the vicar-general and the chancellor, the key being always entrusted to the latter. Documents must not be taken from the archives without leave of the bishop or vicar-general; if any are removed with permission they must be returned at the end of three days, unless the ordinary extends the time.

In the document room there must be a special compartment or irremovable safe in which all secret documents are preserved with the greatest care. This is to have two different locks, the key of one lock being retained by the bishop or Apostolic administrator, while the other is held by the vicar-general or, if there is no vicar-general, by the chancellor. No one except the bishop or the Apostolic administrator is allowed to open the archives or consult the secret documents, and special regulations have been laid down to prevent the bishop's key from coming into possession of the official holding the second key, in case of the bishop's death or disability. The illegal destruction, removal or substantial modifying of any document belonging to the episcopal archives is punished ipso facto by excommunication; however, the documents relating to criminal cases of morality must be burnt immediately after the death of a culprit or as soon as ten years have elapsed since the sentence of condemnation was pronounced, but a synopsis of all of these cases with the text of the final judgment is to be preserved. An inventory or catalogue of these secret archives must be kept as described above.

Vicars and prefects Apostolic shall have their archives, which are subject to the same regulations as diocesan archives, due allowance being made for differences of persons and places.

Duplicate inventories or catalogues of the archives of the cathedral and collegiate or parochial churches, and also of confraternities and holy places, are to be made; one copy is to be kept in its proper place, and the other deposited in the diocesan archives. At the end of each year parish priests must send the episcopal curia a certified copy of all their parochial books, except the census returns; and administrators of ecclesiastical goods are to forward likewise a descriptive inventory of the property entrusted to their care, noting the values and calling attention to any changes in the property; moreover, they must send the curia certified copies of the documents relating to the ownership of the property, if that can be done conveniently. Anyone who is interested in these documents may inspect those that are not secret, and may obtain a copy of them. Documents may also be borrowed, but only under the regulations governing the diocesan archives.

Ardagh, DIOCESE OF (ARDACHADENSIS; cf. C. E., I-699c), in Ireland, by the census of 1911 had a total population of 102,330, of whom 94,827 were Catholics. There are 41 parishes in the diocese, 96 secular and 4 regular clergy, 75 churches, 12 chapels, 1 seminary, 1 house of regulars, 12 convents, and 2 monasteries. The various institutions in the diocese include 6 workhouses; the College of St. Mel, which celebrated its golden jubilee in 1912; 3 intermediate schools; 3 industrial schools, and the Societies of St. Vincent de Paul. Rt. Rev. Joseph Hoare, D.D., consecrated 19 March, 1895, to succeed Most Rev. B. Woodlock, D.D., is now bishop of the diocese.

Since the Easter Rebellion in 1916 the diocese of Ardagh has suffered severe losses from the sacking of Granard, the fierce battles of Ballinalee, the destruction of St. Mel's Temperance Hall, one of the finest in Ireland, the burning of houses, blowing up of roads and bridges, and numerous other deeds of violence.

Arequipa (DE AREQUIPA; cf. C. E., I-701b), DIOCESE OF, in Peru, South America, is a suffragan of Lima. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Mariano Holguin, b. at Arequipa, 1860, entered the Order of Friars Minor 1881, was ordained 1886, appointed Bishop of Huaraz 2 July, 1904, and transferred to Arequipa 30 May, 1906; made an assistant at the pontifical throne 12 August, 1915. By 1920 statistics the Catholic population of this diocese numbers 290,000; there are 2 rectorates, 11 deaneries comprising 72 parishes, and 5 students from this diocese are at the seminary at Lima.

Arezzo, DIOCESE OF (ARRETINENSIS; cf. C. E., I-702b), in Tuscany, Italy, is directly dependent on the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Giovanni Volpi, who was appointed to this diocese in 1904, was transferred to the titular see of Antioch of Pisidia 3 July, 1919, and was succeeded by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Emanuele Mignone, b. at Cavatore, 1864, appointed Bishop of Volterra, 29 April, 1909, and transferred to Arezzo 18 December, 1919. The statistics for 1920 for this diocese give 250,300 Catholics, 330 parishes, 400 secular and 149 regular clergy, 135 seminarians, 436 churches or chapels, 44 brothers, and 147 sisters.

Argentine Republic (ARGENTINA; cf. C. E., I-702d).—The area of the Argentine Republic is 1,153,119 square miles. According to the last official census of 1 June, 1914, the total population was 7,885,237, distributed as follows: Argentines, 5,527,285; foreigners, 402,555. The male population was given as 4,227,023, the female population 3,568,214. Of the foreign population 929,863 were Italians, 829,701 Spaniards, 79,491 French, 126,201 Spanish-Americans (Bolivians, Chilians, Uruguayans, and Paraguayans), 36,442 Brazilians, 27,692 British, 26,995 Germans, 38,123 Austrians, and 3,449 citizens of the United States of America. It is estimated that the present population is 8,411,000.

The following table gives the figures for Argentine immigration and emigration since 1910:

Year	Immigrants	Year	Emigrants
1910.....	345,275	1910.....	136,405
1911.....	281,622	1911.....	172,041
1912.....	379,117	1912.....	172,996
1913.....	364,878	1913.....	219,529
1914.....	182,672	1914.....	243,701
1915.....	83,019	1915.....	148,425
1916.....	75,381	1916.....	122,328
1917.....	51,665	1917.....	83,996
1918.....	50,662	1918.....	59,908

As the number of emigrants has exceeded that of immigrants since 1914, plans are being made for the attraction of immigration to the country. In 1920 steps were taken by Austria to promote the emigration to Argentina of her working classes by means of opening credits for intending emigrants.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Of the 1,000,000 square miles of the republic, more than one-third is arable; 333,000 square miles can be utilized for cattle. In 1904 slightly over 26,000,000 acres were under cultivation, while in 1920 62,500,000 acres were reported under specified cultivation. It is evident, therefore, that only one-third of the land known to be arable is at present utilized. According to the latest statistics wheat was sown on 16,975,770 acres, corn on 8,715,217 acres, linseed on 3,521,670 acres, oats on 2,980,026 acres; alfalfa on 19,898,481 acres; flax on 3,083,619 acres. A campaign is being carried on for the further cultivation of cotton. The exportation of flour in 1919 represented a total of 130,806 tons, estimated at $9,161,000. Tucumán produces over three-fourths of the total cane grown in the country. In 1919 the estimated national production of sugar amounted to 260,000 metric tons.

FOREIGN TRADE.—The foreign trade of the Argentine Republic is mainly with the countries enumerated in the following table. The values of this trade are given in gold.

Countries	Imports from		Exports to
	1917	1918	1917	1918
Great Britain	$80,080,322	$124,960,102	$155,217,373	$296,628,000

The United States trade with Argentina for five years was as follows:

Year	Imports (to U.S.)	Exports (from U.S.)
1914.....	$49,468,512	$43,507,753
1915.....	93,706,075	75,589,985
1916.....	119,730,145	106,988,508
1917.....	161,270,764	138,084,920
1918.....	165,151,620	169,506,948

The total trade of the republic in 1919 was: import, $533,159,000; export, $867,823,000. In 1920 it was: import, $850,000,000; export, $1,000,000,000.

The chief import from Argentina into the United States in the year 1917 was wool, $100,533,658; the chief exports from the United States to Argentina were textile manufactures, $45,748,600; foodstuffs, $33,038,155; iron manufactures, $17,836,366.

SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION.—In 1917 the registered shipping consisted of 1,108 steamers of 2,966,518 tons, and 216 sailing vessels of 294,917 tons; total, 1,324 of 3,261,435 tons. In 1917 the number of ocean-going vessels which entered the port of Buenos Aires was 975, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,420,809 tons, as against 1,757 of 4,527,790 tons in 1915.

HIERARCHY.—The Argentine hierarchy consists of the Archbishop of Buenos Aires, and the Bishops of Córdoba, La Plata, Paraná, San Juan de Cuyo, Santa Fé, Salta, Tucumán, Santiago del Estero, Catamarca, Corrientes. There is a seminary in each diocese under the control of the bishop for the support of which an appropriation is made yearly. The Argentine nation has an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Rome. The Apostolic Internunciature to Argentina was raised to a Nunciature in July, 1916, when the republic celebrated the centenary of its independence. The new envoy, Mgr. Alberto Vassallo di Torre-grossa, titular archbishop of Emesa, arrived at Buenos Aires in June, 1916.

EDUCATION.—The system of education comprises the following divisions: primary, secondary, normal, special (including industrial, commercial, agricultural, artistic, and education of defectives), and higher education. Primary education is compulsory for all children from six to fourteen years old; it is supported by the national Government and the Governments of the different provinces and its general administration is in charge of the National Council of Education. In 1918 there were in the republic, including night schools and private institutions, 8,494 schools with 1,019,944 pupils and 31,872 teachers. Primary education covers a period of six years; secondary education is imparted by the "Colegios Nacionales" (National Secondary Schools), and in private schools under government supervision. There are 38 "Colegios Nacionales" under the supervision of the General Superintendent of Secondary, Normal, and Special Education, with an enrolment of 11,022 students; 39 private secondary schools with an enrolment of 3,288 students; moreover, each of the National Universities has a secondary school department. The secondary school course covers five years.

In 1918 there were 82 normal schools, besides the private normal schools. Industrial education is given in the so-called industrial schools, of which there are 24. There are 8 National Commerce Schools. The schools of agriculture, five in number, are of a regional character, each being connected with an agronomic station. Higher education is given in the three National Universities: Córdoba, the oldest, with five faculties; Buenos Aires, the largest, with six; and La Plata with five. There are also two provincial universities at Tucumán and Santa Fé. The government also maintains three military schools. Argentina devotes 12 per cent of its annual budget to education.

In 1920 it was planned to establish at Rosario the National University of the Littoral, with complete courses in technical instruction, to take place of the industrial school formerly in operation in Rosario. A popular university was in process of organization in 1920 with departments of law, art, etc.

RECENT HISTORY.—In 1911 diplomatic relations between Argentina and Bolivia, which had been interrupted on account of boundary disputes, were resumed. In 1915 the first actual treaty between Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, signed in Buenos Aires on 25 May, provided for a five years' peace among the three nations, during which time each was pledged not to make war on either one of the others until the cause of the conflict had been investigated and reported by an impartial commission. In 1917 trouble rose between the republic and Germany over the sinking of the Argentine ships by German submarines. It came to a climax when the correspondence of the German minister at Buenos Aires revealed a dispatch to his government, advising the sinking without warning of Argentine vessels. Thoroughly aroused the Argentines immediately broke off diplomatic relations with Germany, though they did not share in the active part taken by the United States in the European War. In 1919 the country joined the League of Nations. Among the recent legal enactments were a law, effective on 1 January, 1917, withdrawing from the stores permission to open on Sundays, and forbidding the sale of liquor from 12 p. m. on Saturdays to 12 p. m. on Sundays, and a decree in 1920 providing for the colonization of 30,000 square miles of state lands.

Argyll and the Isles, Diocese of (ERGADIENSIS ET INSULARUM; cf. C. E., I-706c), comprises the County of Argyll, the southern part of Inverness and the Islands of Bute and Arran and the Hebrides. It is a suffragan of the Archdiocese of St. Andrews and Edinburgh, and is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Donald Martin, the third bishop since the restoration of the diocese in 1878, and successor to Bishop Smith, who died 18 January, 1918. Bishop Martin was born in Ardnamurchan 6 October, 1873, appointed bishop 2 April, 1919, and consecrated at Oban 9 June of the same year.

During the World War, out of the very small number of clergy belonging to this diocese, three served as chaplains: Rev. John MacNeill, serving with the 9th Division (Highland), was mentioned in dispatches, was wounded twice, and won the military cross with a bar; Rt. Rev. Hugh Cameron, vicar general to the Lovat Scouts, served in Gallipoli, Egypt, Palestine, and was mentioned in dispatches; Rev. Duncan Campbell was attached to the 51st (Highland) Division. Although this diocese comprises a large territory, its Catholic population is comparatively small and there is little activity. The present (1921) statistics show: 24 missions, 45 churches and mission stations, 34 secular priests, 2 convents of sisters, and 38 elementary schools.

Ariano, Diocese of (ARIANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-710d), is a suffragan of Benevento in Southern Italy. During the war twenty priests served with the Italian army and the canon of the cathedral was chaplain in a military hospital. Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Lojacono, b. at Tropea, 11 November, 1862, elected bishop 4 November, 1918, was consecrated bishop of Ariano, 12 January, 1919. He succeeded Rt. Rev. Cosimo Agostino, who was born in Gerace, 16 April, 1860, elected to Lacedonia, 23 July, 1913, consecrated at Gerace, 23 September following, transferred 1 June, 1915, to Ariano, administrator Apostolic to Lacedonia, 22 September, 1915, to 22 March, 1916, died 30 March, 1918. His predecessor was Rt. Rev. Onorato Carcaterra, O. F. M., who was elected in 1913, and resigned and was transferred in 1915. Rt. Rev. Andrea Agostino preceded Bishop Carcaterra, b. 1838, elected 1 June, 1888, he died 14 February, 1913. In the diocese are 24 parishes, 91 churches, 3 abbey for men, 4 monasteries for women, 98 secular priests, 30 sisters, and 50,400 Catholics; 2 colleges for girls, 8 seminarians, 1 refuge, 1 asylum, 1 hospital, and one paper, the official organ of the bishop, is published.

Arizona (cf. C. E., I-719b).—Arizona is the newest state in the Union, having been admitted on 14 February, 1912.

RECENT HISTORY.—In 1906 joint statehood was proposed for Arizona and New Mexico and rejected, almost unanimously in Arizona. In 1910 an enabling act, passed by Congress, authorized Arizona to call a constitutional convention. The constitution, thus formulated, contained some salient features, among which were the following: an eight-hour day, the prohibition of the sale of liquor to Indians, the initiative and referendum, providing 10 per cent of the qualified electors petition for the former, and 5 per cent for the latter, and the recall of public officers upon petition of 25 per cent of the electors. The application of the recall to the judiciary caused the veto of the statehood bill by President Taft, despite the passage of the Act through the two houses of Congress. With the removal of the offending feature the bill was signed on 22 August, 1912, and became law. Following the admission to statehood thus attained by renunciation of the recall, the legislature and people had the power to re-incorporate the objectionable feature, which was adopted on 5 November, 1912, by the people, as an amendment to the state constitution. In the same year an inheritance tax law, an eight-hour law for women, and an alien land law were adopted. On 1 January, 1916, a state-wide prohibition bill went into effect as a result of a constitutional amendment adopted 3 November, 1914. The federal prohibition amendment was ratified 22 May, 1918, and the suffrage amendment 12 February, 1920.

During the World War Arizona contributed the largest percentage of soldiers and sailors to the war, per capita of male citizens, of any state in the Union. The first native Arizonian to give up his life for his country in France was Matthew Rivers, a Pima Indian, who had been educated in the Sherman Institute, California.

POPULATION, CLIMATE, RESOURCES.—The fourteenth United States census, besides 32,989 Indians, reports a population in 1920 of 334,162. There were 213,350 natives and 78,099 foreigners. Of negro descent there were only 8,005. Including in the list those who could only read with those who could neither read nor write, 14.5 per cent of the males of voting age were illiterate.

According to the report of the chief of the weather bureau, the highest temperature observed at any weather station in Arizona during the year 1917 was 124°, the lowest 18°. One station reports each of these extremes. The smallest rainfall reported for the same year from any station is 2.22 inches, the greatest 29.22 inches. In October and November, 1917, no trace of snow is reported at any station, and for the following six months to May, 1918, inclusive, the greatest fall reported is 177 inches, 13 stations reporting only a slight fall of snow.

Limited by supply of water for irrigation, the area of farming land is 9,975,000 acres out of 72,000,000. Of manufacturing establishments there were 480 in the year 1919, with a capital of $101,486,070. The value of products was $120,769,112. The value of the products of smelting and refining copper comprises 78.0 per cent of the total of all industries. There are 2,416 miles of railroad. The assessed valuation of taxable property for the year 1918 was $834,020,592.

STATE GOVERNMENT.—The state senate consists of nineteen members and the House of Representatives of thirty-five. An amendment voted to the state constitution gave the state the power to engage in industrial pursuits. In the laws which the first legislature of Arizona enacted, the affairs of the state government were placed under direct control of the people by means of the initiative, referendum and recall.

EDUCATION.—There are more than 77,000 children in the public schools. In 1919-20 the school expenditure was $6,339,211. State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: no tax shall be laid or appropriation of public money made in aid of any church or private or sectarian school (IX, 10); property of educational, charitable, and religious associations or institutions not used or held for profit may be exempted from taxation (IX, 2); private schools within the compulsory education law shall be taught for full time of public school session.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—See TUCSON, DIOCESE OF.

Arkansas (cf. C. E., I-724c).—CLIMATE.—The report of the chief of the Weather Bureau states the highest temperature observed at any weather station in Arkansas during the year 1917 to have been 106°, observed at two stations, the lowest, 21°, also observed at two stations. The smallest rainfall reported for the year is 19.80 inches, the greatest 70.88 inches. As early as October, 1917, there were snowfalls at all of the stations except 5; in February, 1918, at all except 47; no snow is reported at any station in March and April. The greatest fall of the season was 30.0 inches, the least 2.0 inches. The reports of temperature are from 58 stations, and of snowfall from 59 stations.

POPULATION.—According to the official census of 1920, the population of the state was 1,752,204. Only 13,975 were foreign born. Of negro descent there were 472,220. Little Rock, with a population of 65,142, and Fort Smith, with 28,870, were the only cities whose population exceeded 25,000. Six other cities, Helena, Hot Springs, Jonesboro, North Little Rock, Pine Bluff and Texarkana were the only cities which had a population exceeding 8,000.

WEALTH AND RESOURCES.—The total assessed valuation of property for 1919 was $553,485,082; the state indebtedness on June 30, 1919, $2,226,400. In 1919 the value of the cotton crop was $151,060,000 or 55.0 per cent of the value of all crops of the state. The value of the corn crop was $79,911,000. A production is reported of 3,321,000 bushels of potatoes and 456,000 pounds of tobacco. Of manufacturing establishments there were (1919) 3,123; the amount of capital employed was $138,818,000; the value of products, $200,313,000. The coal production for 1917 amounted to 1,913,000 short tons, one half of which is classed as semi-anthracite. The railroad mileage in 1919 was reported to have been 5,350 miles.

EDUCATION.—The federal census of 1920 reported a school attendance of 664,101, of whom 332,593 were females. Including in the list those who could only read with those who could neither read nor write, 11 per cent of the males of voting age were illiterate. Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded in the public schools. State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: The basic language of instruction in the common school branches, in all the schools of the state, public and private, shall be the English language only; no money or property belonging to the public school fund or to the State for the benefit of schools or universities, shall ever be used for any other than for the respective purposes to which it belongs (XIV. 2).

RECENT HISTORY.—During the World War, Arkansas contributed 61,027 soldiers, or 1.62 per cent of the total United States army. At the outbreak of the war (1917) the First Arkansas Infantry (15 organizations) was mustered into service, and later in August the Second and Third Arkansas Infantry, the Arkansas ammunition train, field hospital, and ambulance companies were mustered and mobilized at Fort Logan, and finally transferred to Camp Beauregard, Louisiana. In December, the Fourth Regiment and Engineers Battalion was raised. Camp Pike one of the army cantonments was established near Little Rock and Eberts Field (aviation) near Lonoke.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—For Catholic religious statistics see LITTLE ROCK, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT LEGISLATION.—In 1905 a drastic anti-trust law drove the insurance companies and other concerns out of the state, but it was later amended and the companies returned. In 1912 came Arkansas' first opportunity to exercise the initiative and referendum, provided for by an amendment to the constitution in 1910. Out of thirteen amendments, only one received the necessary majority.

Later the Supreme Court held that only three could be submitted at one time. Among the amendments which passed at a later time were a child labor law (1914) and a publicity act, subsidizing the press through public advertising. State-wide prohibition became effective in 1915, although a prohibition law initiated in 1912 had been rejected. In the same year a drastic inheritance law and a minimum wage law were passed. A primary election law was adopted in 1916, and also an amendment raising the limit of the school tax to 12 mills. The proposed new constitution formulated in the constitutional convention of 1918, failed to pass. The year 1919 was unique, for there were three sessions of the Legislature and the fourth was called before the year was out. The emergency highway legislation of the second session was invalidated by the Supreme Court on the ground that the provision requiring the publication of intention to apply for special acts had not been complied with. This deficiency was remedied by a third session. In 1919 the Arkansas Corporation Commission was created, with jurisdiction over public utilities. In the same year the State ratified the prohibition amendment (14 January) and the suffrage amendment (28 July).

Armagh, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ARMACANENSIS; cf. C. E., I-729d), is the primatial see of Ireland, its archbishop bearing the title "Lord Primate of all Ireland." The present incumbent, His Eminence Michael Cardinal Logue, who came to this see in 1887, is the first Primate of Armagh to become a member of the Sacred College. On 23 May, 1920, the beatification of Oliver Plunket, Primate of Armagh 1669-81, took place in Rome, and religious celebrations of the event were held throughout Ireland. On 6 October following the relics of the blessed martyr were translated from the sarcophagus in which they had reposed, to a beautiful shrine prepared for them in Downside Abbey. The following November Cardinal Logue received the Decree of the Sacred Congregation of Rites dated 30 June, 1920, authorizing the translation of the relic of the head of Blessed Oliver Plunket from the Dominican Convent to the Oliver Plunket Memorial Church, St. Peter's, Drogheda. On 3 October, 1920, the cardinal laid the corner-stone for the new church of the Immaculate Conception in Tullysaron, this diocese. By decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Consistory 14 January, 1922, Rt. Rev. Patrick O'Donnell, Bishop of Raphoe, was made titular Bishop of Attalia and coadjutor to Cardinal Logue, with right of succession.

By the 1911 census the total population of this diocese is 137,595 of whom 127,729 are Catholics. By 1921 statistics there are 66 parishes, 153 secular, and 21 regular clergy, 144 churches, 13 convents of nuns with 124 religious, 3 monastic houses with 17 religious. The religious orders of the diocese include: Male: Franciscans, Carmelites, Jesuits, Christian Brothers of Ireland and De La Salle Brothers. Female: Sisters of Loretto, of the Presentation, and Mercy. The charitable institutions and societies include an asylum for infirm priests, cripples' house, Total Abstinence Society, 4 Societies of St. Vincent de Paul, 4 confraternities of the Holy Family, 5 confraternities of the Holy Rosary and associations in honor of the Sacred Heart.

Armenia (cf. C. E., I-736a), a mountainous district of western Asia, at present divided between the Turks and Russians, excepting the Zanghezur district which has not been occupied. Before the European War the term Armenia was indeterminate, being sometimes applied to the territory in the Turkish Empire occupied by the Armenians, sometimes to the whole country in which the Armenians were the dominant race element, and which was partly in Russian territory. The territory as constituted by the Treaty of Sèvres and as delimited by ex-President Wilson of the United States, has an area of 80,000 square miles and contains the southeastern frontiers of the Transcaucasian division of the Russian Empire, besides the ethnically Armenian regions of the vilayets of Van, Erzerum, Bitlis, and Trebizond in Asiatic Turkey. The frontier thus defined begins at Treboli, 50 miles west of Trebizond on the Black Sea, crosses west of Erzinjan, and then curving eastwards, skirts the northern slopes of Armenian Taurus, south of Mush, Bitlis, and Lake Van, and ends on the Persian frontier. The statistics of the six Armenian provinces of Turkey compiled in 1912 by the Armenian Patriarchate of Constantinople are as follows:

	Population	Per cent
Turks	666,000	25.4
Kurds	424,000	16.3
Mussulman races	88,000	3.4
Armenians	1,018,000	38.9
Nestorians, etc.	123,000	4.8
Greeks, etc.	42,000	1.6
Kizibashis	140,000	5.3
Zazas, etc.	77,000	2.9
Yezidis	37,000	1.4
	2,615,000	100.0

It is estimated that the Armenians once numbered over twenty millions and the steady reduction of the population in modern times must be attributed almost entirely to the Turkish persecution in one form or another. During the war and as a result of the deportations and massacres of 1915, Lord Bryce estimated in 1916, that of a total of Armenian population in Turkey of about 1,800,000 before the war, 600,000 were massacred, 600,000 were deported, 300,000 remained in Armenia, and 300,000 survived in Constantinople, Smyrna, and other parts of Turkey or in adjoining territories as refugees. Of the 600,000 who were stated to have been deported to Mesopotamia in 1915, the latest estimate received from Aleppo (December, 1918), puts the number of survivors at only 90,000. The total population of United Armenia in its widest extent would be about 8,000,000. The chief towns of Russian Armenia are Erivan with about 90,000 inhabitants, Alexandropol, 50,000; Kars, 35,000. The Supreme Council at San Remo in April, 1920, decided to internationalize the port of Batum and make it a common outlet for Armenia, Azerbaijan, and Georgia.

EDUCATION.—Measures for nationalization were taken after the separation from Russia and Armenian became the official language of the schools. A system of compulsory education was established and the old church seminaries and technical schools continue their work.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The first railway dates from 1900, and in 1920 the mileage was 370 miles. The Turkish system of land tenure did not recognize the right of the Christian Church to hold land, and consequently the Armenian Church has often been dispossessed of its property, which in any case may be held by trustees. Turkish taxation falls much more heavily upon the Armenian than upon the Mohammedan population. Apart from racial troubles Armenia has suffered in common with all Turkish provinces from the stagnation produced by Turkish misrule. Schemes of development have not been wanting, but nearly all suffered shipwreck through lack of security, of communication, of capital, and of any adequate economic incentive. Commercially the Armenians were long hampered by the decree forbidding them to travel abroad, which was abrogated only in 1908. While this was in operation, the Armenians could not get into direct touch with foreign supplies, and were dependent on Constantinople and Aleppo agents, who granted them long credits.

HISTORY (1909-1921).—The rise of the Young Turk party, concentrated in the Committee of Union and Progress, with its assertion of liberty and toleration and the new constitution of 1908, aroused Armenian hopes. However, the deposition of Abdul Hamid in 1909 was followed by the massacre of Adana, for which a pretext was found in the pretensions to complete independence of a small section of Armenians. This massacre was part of the reactionary revolution projected by Abdul Hamid and resulting in his fall. But the extermination of the whole Armenian people was a later project, attributable to the government of the Young Turks. At the outbreak of the European War, the Armenians who had fought for the Turkish Government in the Balkan Wars were regarded with suspicion and were consequently disarmed. Then ensued, in 1915, massacres on a larger scale than ever, in which it is said that 1,000,000 Armenians perished.

On the eve of Turkey's entry into the war, the Young Turks employed every conceivable means, persuasion, cajolery, intimidation, and the promise of a large autonomous Armenia to induce the Armenian party leaders to prevail on the Russian Armenians to rally to the Turkish flag against Russia. The Armenians obeyed the Turkish orders for mobilization, but soon developed in large numbers. The massacres and deportations began soon after the collapse of the Turkish invasion of the Caucasus and North Persia, and when Turks determined to deport and to destroy all Armenians, the persecuted race took up arms in self-defense. In Shahin-Karahissar they held out for three months and were only reduced by artillery brought from Erzerum. In Van and Jebel-Mousa they defended themselves against heavy odds until relieved by the Russians and Armenian volunteers in the first case, and rescued by the French and British cruisers in the second. By this resistance they forced the Turks to detach large numbers of their troops and in some cases, artillery and machine guns to keep the Armenian rebels in check, thus hindering the full development of the Turkish military power during the war. They gave enthusiastic support to the Russian cause, they organized a volunteer force of Armenians which was blamed by the Turks for the disaster that befell them at Sarikamish, Azerbaijan, and Van; they contributed high officials to the Russian army, including several generals, and they suffered their land to become the battleground of Asia Minor. Archbishop Sempad, the Gregorian incumbent of Erzerum, was murdered by brigands in the service of the Union and Progress Company. The Gregorian Bishops of Trebizond, Cæsarea, Mush, Bitlis, and Erzindjan, and the Catholic Bishop of Seerth were also murdered by the order of the Young Turk government.

On 22 April the Diet of Transcaucasia declared its independence of Russia under the title of the Federal Republic of Transcaucasia, comprising Georgia, Armenia, and Azerbaijan (Tartar). It had from the first refused to recognize the Bolsheviks, and had formed a provisional government at Tiflis in February, 1918. Each party was to hold its own territory, but the republic lasted only five weeks, owing to the divergent political tendencies. On 26 May, 1918, the Transcaucasian Republic was dissolved and Georgia declared its independence, as did Armenia. Its de facto government was recognized by the allies in January, 1920; and the de jure recognition was embodied in the Treaty of Sèvres, signed in August, 1920, between the allied powers and Turkey, to which Armenia was a signatory.

In the new republic there was no president, the presidential functions being discharged partly by the chamber of deputies (80 members), and partly by the cabinet of ministers. The mandate of Armenia was offered to the League of Nations and refused on the ground that it was not the object of the League to take up mandates. It was offered to the United States and refused by the Senate, contrary to the wishes of President Wilson, who was asked to arbitrate the question of Armenian frontiers. In the meantime the Nationalists and the Bolsheviks made a concerted attack on Armenia. The Russian divisions commenced operations against Armenia in their base at Azerbaijan. The seriousness of the Polish situation caused the withdrawal of these troops and Armenia took advantage of the occasion by capturing the coal-fields of Olti. In August they advanced to Julfa on the Persian frontier and forced the Turks to retire to the Arax River. Ill-luck befell the Armenians afterwards and they lost Erivan, their capital, to the Turks. On 11 November, 1920, the Armenian ministry which had taken part in the treaty of Sèvres was replaced by an extremist government which had come to an understanding with the Soviet government, with a view to concluding a new armistice with the Turks. This took place, the terms proposed by the Turks being made with the view of keeping Armenia as a buffer state between Turkey and Russia. The Turks demanded that Armenia renounce the treaty of Sèvres and that the frontier between Armenia and Turkey should be fixed by the two peoples concerned. As yet the boundaries are indeterminate. First reports place them as running along the Black Sea at a point a little to the west of Tireboli through Militkan, west of Mush, south to Lake Van to the frontier of Azerbaijan. President Wilson's award did not include the vilayets of Daiarbekr, Sivas, Kharput, and Adana.

On October, 1921, a treaty was signed at Kars, Armenia, between the four Bolshevized republics, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, and Daghestan on one hand, and the Turkish Nationalist government on the other, giving the latter about one half of Caucasian Armenia, and creating a small autonomous state on Armenian territory under the protection of Azerbaijan, to be known as Nakitchewan. It now appears that the Turks are supporting the intentions of Russia to federalize all the so-called Caucasian republics in Russia into a Russian state, the political center being at Baku, and the economic center at Tiflis. The independence of these republics is a thing of the past.

Armidale, DIOCESE OF (ARMIDALENSIS; cf. C. E., I-740b), in New South Wales (Australia) is under the administration of its third bishop, Rt. Reverend Patrick Joseph O'Connor, D. D., who has filled the see since 1904. Dr. O'Connor came to this diocese in 1876 and in 1882 was appointed dean and vicar general of the diocese, which latter position he filled until his appointment as bishop. His long experience in the diocese particularly fitted him for his administration, and during his incumbency he has seen it grow from a mere wilderness to a flourishing diocese. Numerous schools, churches, and convents have been added to the diocese and a beautiful cathedral erected, costing £32,000, all of which was collected in three years through the efforts of the bishop. At the solemn opening of the new building he was able to announce that it was free of debt, and in 1919, on the occasion of the Golden Jubilee of the diocese the cathedral was consecrated by the papal delegate Most Rev. B. Cattaneo. Another celebration was the laying of the foundation stone of a diocesan orphanage, by the papal delegate and Archbishop Kelly of Sydney, and £10,500 were collected toward the erection of the institution, which was planned to cost £17,000. On 2 October, 1921, the institution with a remaining debt of only £4,000, was solemnly opened by the papal delegate, who returned to complete his work, and before the ceremonies were over this sum and £700 additional were collected by Bishop O'Connor. The various religious orders established in the diocese are: Brothers of the Christian Schools, Sisters of Mercy, Dominican Sisters and Ursuline Sisters. The present (1921) statistics show 19 parochial districts, 69 churches, 33 priests, 7 brothers, 210 nuns, 12 secular teachers, 5 boarding schools for girls and 1 for boys, 5 high schools with 471 children attending, 28 primary schools with 3,639 children attending, and 1 orphanage. The total number of children attending Catholic schools is 4,300 and the total Catholic population of the diocese, 33,000.

Arras, DIOCESE OF (ATREBATUM; cf. C. E., I-752d), comprises the Department of Pas-de-Calais in France and is suffragan of Cambrai. Rt. Rev. Alfred Williez, who was appointed to this see in 1892, d. 25 January, 1911, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Emile-Louis Lobbedey 5 May, 1911, d. 24 December, 1916. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Eugène-Louis Julien, born in the Diocese of Rouen 1856, ordained 1881, made prelate of the Holy See 1916, appointed bishop 22 May, 1917.

During the World War the region suffered cruelly and the cathedral, rebuilt 1775-1833, was completely destroyed by the German bombardment and fire and more than two hundred churches were totally ruined. In 1912 the cathedral chapter was granted the privilege of wearing red on the sleeves of the rochet. By latest statistics the Catholic population of this diocese numbers 1,068,155, there are 672 parishes and 53 vicariates, formerly with state subventions, 985 churches, 1073 priests, 1 upper seminary with about 100 students, 2 lower seminaries, 1 at Béthune, the other at Boulogne sur Mer, 9 secondary schools for boys with 103 professors and 1600 pupils, 10 boarding schools for girls with 93 teachers and 1400 pupils, 244 elementary schools with 774 teachers and 32,055 pupils, and 2 professional schools having about 100 students. Several periodicals are published; "La Croix d'Arras," at Arras, "La Croix du Pas de Calais," at Boulogne, and the "Courrier du Pas de Calais" at Arras. Within recent years the diocese has lost three prominent clergy, by the deaths of Rev. Canon Rambure, vicar general and a professor and pro-rector of the Catholic faculty of the University of Lille, and author of a number of books; Mgr. Hervin, protonotary apostolic and vicar general; and Rev. Canon Decrouille, author of many spiritual books.

Artvin, DIOCESE OF (ARTUMENSIS; cf. C. E., I-765), of the Greek Armenian Rite, comprises the trans-Caucasian provinces of Artvin and Kars. Since 1878 Russia has prevented the appointment of a bishop of Tiraspol, to which this territory was united by Russia in that year. By 1920 statistics there are 12,000 Armenian Catholics in the diocese, 25 missionary priests, 30 churches or chapels and 22 elementary schools with 900 children.

Ascoli-Piceno, DIOCESE OF (ASCULANENSIS PICENENSIS; cf. C. E., I-773d), in Italy, is under the immediate jurisdiction of the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Bartolommeo Ortolani, who came to this see in 1877, d. 7 May, 1910, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Apollonno Maggio, b. 1859, appointed titular Bishop of Lystra 31 January, 1910, and named administrator apostolic of Ascoli-Piceno 12 March, of the same year, transferred to this see 13 May following.

According to most recent statistics (1922) the population of this diocese numbers 230,000 and is divided into 166 parishes. There are 190 secular and 15 regular clergy, 9 convents of men for the Capuchins, Conventualists, and Minor Observants, 1 convent of men under papal cloister with 20 monks, and 2 Benedictine monasteries under episcopal cloister. Among the religious orders of women are: 21 Sisters of the Infant Jesus who conduct a convent for 30 children; 25 Sisters, Pious Workers of the Immaculate Conception, charged with 50 children; 14 Dominican Sisters; 13 Sisters of Maria Auxiliatrice in charge of 130 children, and a public dispensary; 5 Sisters of Charity who conduct an orphanage for girls, with 90 orphans; 6 Daughters of Charity in charge of a civil hospital; 7 of the same congregation in charge of a poorhouse, and 14 Sisters Felatrice of the Sacred Heart, in charge of an orphanage for girl war orphans, of whom there are 80 in the institution. An infant asylum is connected with it, and 2 other infant asylums, an orphanage and a community house, complete the list of charitable institutions in the diocese. Various societies of a religious or charitable character, numbering in all 120, are organized throughout the diocese.

Ascoli-Satriano and Cerignola, DIOCESE OF (ASCULANENSIS APULIE ET CERIGNOLENSIS; cf. C. E., I-774a), in the province of Foggia, Italy, is suffragan of Benevento. Rt. Rev. Angelo Struffolini, who came to this see 15 April, 1901, was transferred to the titular see of Philippi in July, 1914. His successor Rt. Rev. Giovanni Sodo, b. at Naples, 1862, was appointed 19 February, 1915. On 9 December, 1918, he was named administrator Apostolic of Troja. In 1920 there were 70,115 Catholics in this diocese, 12 parishes, 100 secular and 8 regular clergy, 30 seminarians, 100 churches or chapels, 4 brothers and 50 sisters.

Asia (cf. C. E., I-777b).—POPULATION.—The total population of Asia is about 800,000,000, divided according to latest available statistics as follows: Siberia, 10,377,900; Chinese Republic, 320,650,000; Korea, 17,284,207; Japan, 55,961,140; Indo-China, 16,990,229; Siam, 8,819,686; British India, 244,267,542; Afghanistan, 6,380,500; Persia, 9,500,000; Turkish Empire, 8,000,000; Arabia, 5,500,000. According to the Moslem World for 1914, there are 12,278,800 Mohammedans in Asiatic Turkey; 8,421,000 in China; 66,000,000 in India and Burma; 35,000,000 in the Malay Archipelago. The "Jewish Year Book" for 1921 gives the following number of Jews in various Asiatic countries: Aden, 3,747; Afghanistan and Turkestan, 18,316; Dutch East Indies, 10,842; Hong Kong and Straits Settlements, 366,145; India, 20,980; Palestine, 85,000; Persia, 40,000; Russia in Asia, 76,262; Turkey in Asia, 177,500. Previous years give 59,235 Jews in Mesopotamia, 77,458 in Asia Minor, 130,000 in Arabia, and 20,000 in Bokhara. The Chinese "Year Book" enumerates 600 Jews in China.

POLITICAL GEOGRAPHY AND RECENT HISTORY.—In the following paragraphs are briefly given noteworthy historical facts of recent years and the present status of each Asiatic country.

Siberia, formerly part of the Russian Empire, now under the Russian Bolsheviks, except Vladivostok, where Japanese troops remain in occupation. After the Russian revolutionary outbreak in 1917, various independent "governments" arose in Siberia, a constitutional government being finally established at Omsk in 1918, under the presidency of Admiral Polchak. This was recognized by the Allied and Associated Powers, but was attacked by Bolshevik forces in 1919, removed to Irkutsk, and was overthrown in 1920, Kolchak being executed.

China, formerly an empire, declared a republic in 1912 and distracted by civil war since 1917. She entered the war in 1917 on the side of the Entente, refused to sign the Treaty of Paris, which acceded Japanese rights in Shantung, and concluded a separate peace with Germany. In 1920 a severe drought caused the complete failure of the harvest in a large area, resulting in famine in the latter months of the year and in 1921. Hongkong belongs to Great Britain, Macao to Portugal, and Kwang Chau Wau to France.

Japan, an Empire, including Korea and Formosa, with mandatory over Shantung. This disputed territory was wrested by Japan from Germany in 1914, and according to a treaty with China in 1915 was to be restored to Chinese sovereignty. Failure to do this, and other alleged encroachments of China's rights, have aroused much bitter feeling in China towards Japan. The race question has been an issue between the United States and Japan. Universal suffrage in the Empire has been seriously debated, with no definite outcome as yet. The budget for 1921 included enormous sums for naval and military expenditure, this arousing much unfavorable comment from other powers. Japanese activities in the war were mostly local, including intervention in Siberia in 1918 and the seizure of Shantung in 1914.

Siam, an independent monarchy.

French Indo-China, a French dependency, comprising the colony of Cochin China, the protectorates of Annam, Cambodia, Tonking, and Laos, and the territory of Kwang Chau Wau, leased from China. She contributed money and supplies as well as troops to France during the war. Recent judicial and legislative reforms and educational progress are noteworthy.

Nepal, an independent kingdom in the Himalayas.

Bhutan, an independent state in the Himalayas.

India (Portuguese), the four provinces of Goa, Damao, Diu, and Timor.

India (French), the five provinces of Pondicherry, Karikal, Chandernagar, Mahé, and Yanam.

India (British), an empire of the British Crown, administered by a governor-general. The Government of India Act of 1919 granted the natives a greater representation in the government, and greater provincial autonomy was forced by the appointment of five new provincial governors to take office in December, 1920, and January, 1921. India sent troops to the European battlefronts and fought actively in the Turkish campaigns.

Baluchistan, a country comprising British and administered territory and the native states of Kalat and Las Bela.

Afghanistan, an hereditary monarchy with foreign policy under control of the British Government of India. Relations with India are strained, as a result of the war between the countries in 1919. Bolshevik influences are feared here as well as in Persia, India, and China, because of proximity to Russian Bolshevism.

Persia, a monarchy, whose unstable government made necessary the intervention of Great Britain and Russia, resulting in the Anglo-Russian treaty of 1907 according to which both powers agreed to respect the integrity and independence of Persia, while controlling her sources of revenue. During the war German influences fomented disorders in Persia, though she maintained neutrality throughout. British and Russian troops opposed the Turkish invasion of Persia in 1918. The dissolution of the Russian Empire aroused efforts in Persia towards genuine independence, and in 1918 she declared the Anglo-Russian treaty null and void. In 1919 by the Treaty of Teheran, Persia accepted British co-operation in the administration of her government, construction of her railways, revision of her tariff, and maintenance of order by a force of military police. In 1920 Bolshevik forces threatened the country.

Arabia, a peninsula in great part desert land occupied by Bedouin tribes, with oases and coastal districts populated by settled peoples, politically divided as follows: On the west coast, the kingdom of Hejaz (former Turkish principality, which attained its independence during the war [1916] and where are situated Mecca and Medina, the holy places of Islam), the principate of Asir and the imamate of Yemen; in the south, the British protectorate of Aden and the province of Hadramant, mostly desert waste; on the east coast, the sultanate of Oman, the maritime district of the emirate of Nejd and Hasa, and the sultanate of Koweit; in Central Arabia, the emirate of Nejd and Hasa and the emirate of Jebel Shammar; the emirate of Kerak is Transjordanian.

Mesopotamia, a state independent of Turkey since 1920, under mandate of Great Britain.

Palestine, a state independent of Turkey since 1920 under mandate of Great Britain, comprising the districts of Jerusalem, Jaffa, Gaza, Beersheba, Samaria, Phœnicia, and Galilee.

Syria, a state independent of Turkey since 1920, under mandate of France.

Armenia, independent state comprising the vilayets of Erzerum, Trebizond, Van and Bitlis, with boundaries to be determined by arbitration between the United States and Turkey. Armenian massacres were one of the horrors of the war.

Kurdistan, an autonomous state since 1920.

Smyrna, chief seaport of Asia Minor, with some hinterland, formerly Turkish, is under Greek mandate for five years, when the inhabitants will decide by plebiscite whether to be annexed to Greece or to remain under Turkish sovereignty.

Asia Minor or Anatolia, the extreme western peninsula of Asia, belonging to Turkey.

Straits Settlements, a colony of the British Crown, comprising Singapore, Penang, and Malacca.

Malay States comprise Johore, Kedah, Perlis, Kelantan, and Trengganu, and the Federated Malay States of Perak, Selangor, Negri Sembilan, and Pahang—all under British protection.

Islands.—Cyprus, Ceylon, Bahrein Islands, British North Borneo, Sarawak and Brunei in Borneo, Perim, Sokotra, Kuria Muria, Andaman, Nicobar, Laccadine, and Keeling Islands, belonging to Great Britain; Dutch East Indies, comprising Java and Madura, Suratra, Riau-Lingga Archipelago, Banca, Billiton, Borneo, Celebes, Molucca Islands, Timor Archipelago, Bali, and Lombok.

Turkey in Asia, before the war, comprised Asia Minor, Syria, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Kurdistan, Armenia, and part of Arabia. By the terms of the Treaty of Sèvres (10 August, 1920), she retains only part of Asia Minor, Smyrna having been granted to Greece. Certain concessions made to her by a revision of this treaty in 1921 are contested by Greece with open hostilities. The war resulted disastrously for Turkey, her power was greatly diminished, her territorial losses very great. Strong German influences within the Turkish Empire had led her to enter the war allied with Germany. She had but recently emerged from the Balkan Wars, defeated, when she was precipitated into the world conflict. Her geographical position prevented her from being of direct assistance to Germany in Europe, though she defended the Dardanelles and the Russian frontier. Asia was the scene of constant struggle, chiefly against British forces, drawn in large numbers from India. The seizure of Basra, the capture of Kut by General Townshend (September, 1915), its subsequent siege and surrender to Turkish forces (April, 1916), its recapture (February, 1917), and the occupation of Bagdad (March, 1917), by British troops under General Maude were important events in the Mesopotamian campaign. The surrender of Gaza, Joppa, and finally Jerusalem (December, 1917), were victories for British forces under General Allenby in Palestine. All these culminated in the great Allied offensive of the fall of 1918 when, simultaneously Allied troops pressed northward through Syria, capturing Haifa, Damascus, Tyre, Sidon, Beirut, and finally Aleppo (26 October) and through Mesopotamia, arriving victorious in Mosul (3 November). Turkey surrendered unconditionally to the Allies 30 October, 1918. In Arabia the Turks were opposed by the Arabs themselves who revolted against Turkish rule and with the aid of the British, notably Col. Thos. Lawrence, routed the Turkish forces after severe fighting and established the independent kingdom of Hejaz. Armenia, divided in its allegiance to Russian and Turkish sovereignty, was the scene of hideous massacre by the Turks, and thankless fighting in the cause of Russia. The new republic was born out of bloodshed and oppression.

Asia Minor, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (ASIE MINORIS), with residence at Smyrna, is entrusted to the Archbishop of Smyrna, who acts as administrator. For civil history see ANATOLIA.

Assam, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (ASSAMENSIS; cf. C. E., I-793d), in the ecclesiastical province of Calcutta, India, was served by the Society of the Divine Savior up to 9 July, 1915, when the German Fathers were repatriated. The Belgian Jesuits of Bengal took charge on 22 June, 1915, and served until the appointment of the Salscian Fathers in July, 1921. The Rev. L. Mathias is Superior Regular of the mission. By 1920 statistics the total population of this territory is 7,309,800, of whom 5,738 are Catholics and 800 catechumens. The remainder of the population is divided among seventeen different sects. There are 51 regular priests, 50 churches or chapels, 10 principal mission stations and 88 sub-stations and 2 orphanages. A press established at Shillong publishes textbooks and controversial pamphlets in the Khasi language.

Assessors (cf. C. E., I-799d), in ecclesiastical courts are clerics associated with judges in the trial of causes as advisers, but destitute of jurisdiction. Formerly a judge might select laymen for this post, but the Code now provides that they are to be chosen from among the synodal judges.

Assiout, mission in Egypt, is the seat of a Coptic bishop and is under the care of the Friars Minor. Rev. Vincenzo Fracisini of this order has been superior of the mission since its erection in 1907. The territory has a population of 15,000.

Assisi, DIOCESE OF (ASSISIENSIS; C. E., I-801b), in the province of Perugia, Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Ambrogio Luddi of the Dominican Order, b. at Raggioli, 1841, was appointed to this see 27 February, 1905. In 1921 there were 30,152 Catholics in the diocese, of whom 4,227 are in the city of Assisi. There are 35 parishes, 186 churches, 19 students in the diocesan seminary, and 72 at the pontifical seminary. Among the religious orders of men there are 58 priests and 36 lay brothers, besides 46 brothers in various congregations; 18 convents for men, and 17 monasteries for women with 236 nuns. The various institutions include 1 college with 215 students, an institute for the deaf and blind, 107 recreation centers and 27 Circles of St. Francis, for the young. A new laboratory and recreation center will be opened under the patronage of St. Francis in 1922.

Associations, PIOUS (cf. C. E., II-5).—Under the general title of associations of the faithful the Code treats of secular third orders, confraternities and pious unions. A secular third order is a body of lay persons (occasionally clerics are enrolled) who, aiming at Christian perfection, follow a rule inspired by the spirit of a religious order but suited to their conditions as laics, and approved for them by the Holy See. Pious unions are associations of the faithful erected to promote the practice of works of piety or charity; pious unions are called sodalities when they are organically constituted, that is when they are constitutionally required to have a president and a body of assistants and councilors; while a sodality erected to foster public worship is known as a confraternity. There are certain non-ecclesiastical though pious associations of Catholics, such as the Conferences of St. Vincent de Paul and various temperance organizations, which have been commended and enriched with favors by the pope; yet as they have been called into existence and are governed not by the Church but by the laity, they are not bound by the canon law governing associations. As societies they are, therefore, exempt from episcopal jurisdiction; however, they come under the vigilance of the bishop in so far as it is his duty to see if there is anything in his diocese that is a source of danger to the faith or morals of his subjects; this duty of vigilance entails the rights of visitation (cf. Acta Apost. Sedis, 1921, pp. 135-44).

The Church recognizes as ecclesiastical only such associations as have been erected or approved by lawful ecclesiastical authority; that is, by the pope or the local ordinary, except where by Apostolic privilege the right of institution is reserved to others. When such a privilege has been granted the erection of the association would, as a rule, be invalid without the written consent of the ordinary, for the consent of a vicar general or vicar capitular does not suffice. When an ordinary consents to the erection of a religious house, that permission suffices also for the erection in that house or in the church belonging to it of an association belonging to the religious order, but not organically constituted; such associations, for instance, as the Holy Name Society in Dominican churches, and the Bona Mors or the Blessed Virgin's Sodality in Jesuit churches.

Associations must adopt congruous titles, and must have their rules examined and approved by the Holy See or the local ordinary, the latter having power to supervise and modify statutes that have not hitherto received papal confirmation. All pious associations, even those erected by the Holy See, are ordinarily under the jurisdiction and supervision of the local ordinary; but in case of those erected in virtue of an Apostolic privilege by exempt religious in their churches, the ordinary must not interfere in matters of internal discipline or spiritual direction. As a rule the chaplain and moderator of an association are appointed by the local ordinary; but when associations have been erected by exempt religious in their own churches the local ordinary's consent is needed only if the superior wishes to appoint a secular priest as chaplain and moderator. During their term of office they may bless and impose the association's habit, insignia or scapulars. Not infrequently the moderator also acts as chaplain.

When various pious associations assemble officially with their crosses or banners and habits or insignia, the order of precedence is, as a general rule, third orders, archconfraternities, confraternities, primary pious unions, other pious unions; but in processions of the Blessed Sacrament the Confraternity of the Holy Eucharist precedes the archconfraternities.

As a rule any Catholic may validly join a pious association, and if he does he shares in its rights, privileges and spiritual favors until he is lawfully expelled. Non-Catholics and members of condemned societies or those under notorious censure and in general public sinners cannot be received validly as associates. A person may be enrolled in several associations, but not in two-third orders except in virtue of an Apostolic indult. Those who are absent may not be enrolled in organically constituted associations; those who are present can be enrolled only if they know and consent; by special permission of the Holy See, however, young children and even the dead may be enrolled in certain confraternities. A religious may join any pious association, unless his superior judges that its regulations do not harmonize with his religious rule and constitutions; but those who are bound by perpetual or temporary vows cannot become members of third orders, nor can they retain their membership after their profession, if they have previously been enrolled; however, if such persons return to the world lawfully, freed from their vows, their former membership revives.

If a person has been received into an association his name should be entered on the roll, and moreover, must be entered, under penalty of invalid membership, if the association has been erected as a moral person. No payment, direct or indirect, for reception must be exacted, except what the statutes authorize or is expressly allowed by the ordinary in favor of the association under special circumstances. No lawful member may be expelled unless for just cause and in accordance with the statutes. Those who have joined forbidden societies or who are under a notorious censure or who have become public sinners must be expelled, if they have failed to amend their ways after being duly warned; they have, however, a right to appeal to the ordinary against their expulsion. Local ordinaries and religious superiors have power to dismiss members from associations erected by religious in virtue of an Apostolic indult even when the statutes do not expressly recognize this power.

Associations legitimately erected being thereby ecclesiastical moral personalities, have the right to hold general meetings, pass rules, and elect officers and administrators of their property, in accordance with their statutes and canon law. Their general meetings should be presided over by the bishop or his delegate, who, though he has no power of voting, has to approve or reject the officers elected. The ordinary or his delegate should be notified in time about extraordinary general meetings, otherwise he may forbid them or annul their decrees. For grave reasons the ordinary may suppress any association, except those erected by the Holy See, but the members have always the right of appeal to Rome against his action. A legitimately erected association may, unless the contrary is expressly stated in the statutes or the decree of erection, hold and administer temporal property, subject to the authority of the ordinary. The parish priest in whose parish it is established has, however, no right to interfere in these matters, except with the bishop's authorization. The association must render each year an account of its administration to the ordinary. It may receive offerings and apply them to its pious purposes, but it must not solicit alms, unless its statutes so provide or necessity urges, and then only with the consent and according to the directions of the local ordinary. If it should be necessary to make collections outside of the diocese, the written consent both of the local ordinary and of the bishop of the other place are necessary.

VERMEERSCH-CREUSEN, Epitome juris canonici, 686-90.

Assumption, LITTLE SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., I-5d), founded in 1864 in Paris, France, by Rev. Etienne Pernet, one of the first members of the Congregation of the Augustinians of the Assumption. Born at Vellaxon (Haute Saône), 23 July, 1824, Fr. Pernet made his vows 25 December, 1850, and was ordained in 1858. The co-foundress was Antoinette Fage, who, as Mother Marie de Jésus in 1865, became the head of the little community established in a modest flat, rue St. Dominique. They removed, 7 April, 1870, to the Convent of Grenelle, which became and is now the mother-house of the congregation. In that year the community numbered 24 members. They followed the Rule of St. Augustine, and the founder gave them a constitution according to their work. His predominant idea was to give the Sisters an intense interior life to animate their activity—daily Little Office of the Blessed Virgin in choir, two half-hours meditation, two spiritual readings. In 1875, after examination of the constitution, Cardinal Guibert gave his approbation and encouragement to the work. The Little Sisters nurse the sick poor in their own homes, without regard to creed or nationality, accepting no remuneration of any kind. In addition to caring for the patient, they keep the house clean and in order, prepare the meals for the family, dress the children and send them to school. This work of charity gives them a great influence in the home, enables them to re-enforce the faith and religious knowledge of the family, to bring souls back to their religious duties, to prepare adults for baptism, abjuration, Confirmation, and First Communion; they also arrange for the legalization by the Church of marriages merely civil.

That the founder's ideal of "union through charity of the two classes of society" might be realized, the nuns are assisted in their work by Lady-Auxiliaries, called "Lady-Servants of the Poor," who take an active part in the labors among the poor. This branch of the work received the approbation of Pope Leo XIII, with special indulgences, in March, 1881. Two confraternities also help the Sisters. Once a month the Confraternity of Our Lady of the Assumption gathers together the fathers of families, a priest presides, and addresses are made by prominent laymen who co-operate in the work under the title of "Decurion." In January, 1921, Pope Benedict XV granted them special indulgences. The Confraternity of the Daughters of St. Monica gathers the mothers of families, under the guidance of a priest. Once a month an address is delivered by one of the "Lady-Servants."

A candidate for the religious order may make her first probation in her own country. Postulancy lasts from six to nine months, then follows a novitiate of two years, after which profession is made. Perpetual vows are taken eight years after the first profession. The congregation received the Apostolic Brief from Pope Leo XIII, 29 March, 1881, was granted the Decree of Praise in April, 1897, and final approbation in July, 1901. The process of the beatification of the co-foundress, Mother Marie de Jésus (Antoinette Fage), was begun in September, 1921, the postulators of the cause being Rev. Esteban, procurator general of the Hermits of St. Augustine, and Bishop Roland-Gosselin, Auxiliary Bishop of Paris, President of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal in Paris. Mother Marie de Jésus was born in Paris, 7 November, 1824, and made her perpetual vows in 1878, ruling the community until her death in 1883. She was succeeded as superior general by Mother Marie du St. Sacrament, who by special decree of the Sacred Congregation of Religious, 21 June, 1921, will remain at the head of the congregation until her death.

The congregation has spread throughout the world. In 1880 foundations were made in England; in 1891, in Ireland and New York; in 1900, in Belgium; in 1903, in Rome; and in 1909, in Buenos Aires. In 1922 the congregation numbers 1000 members with 32 houses in France, 3 in Italy (Rome, Turin, Milan), 3 in Ireland (Dublin, Cork, Kingstown), 5 in England (at Bow, Notting Hill, and Clapham in London, at Norwich, and at Chester), 4 in Belgium (Brussels, Antwerp, la Louvière, Marchienne-au-Pont), 1 in Argentina (Buenos Aires), and 2 in New York City, N. Y. On 11 April, 1891, Mother Marie du Christ, with five other Little Sisters of the Assumption, sailed from Havre for New York. They were welcomed by Archbishop Corrigan, who had visited the mother-house in 1891 to ask for a foundation in his diocese. They started their work in a small house on Second Avenue and removed in 1892 to a larger house on East Fifteenth Street, and again in 1919 to another house on the same street. A second branch in New York was established uptown at 130th Street in 1900, and transferred in 1917 to Convent Avenue and 144th Street. The assistance of the Lady-Auxiliaries is encouraging, and the work yearly receives new impetus. Cardinal Dougherty, Archbishop of Philadelphia, visited the mother-house in 1920, when returning from Rome, desiring to have a foundation made by the Sisters in his own city. This new branch will be established in September, 1922.

Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, SISTERS OF THE, a religious congregation of nuns with mother-house in Nicolet, P. Q., Canada, founded in St.-Grégoire of Nicolet, 8 September, 1853, by the parish priest, Fr. Jean Harper, and four young girls of his parish: Léocadie Bourgeois (Sœur de l'Assomption), Julie Héon (Sœur de Jésus), Mathilde Leduc (Sœur Sainte-Marie), and Hedwige Buisson (Sœur Saint-Joseph). The end of the congregation is the education of children. At present the Sisters have 66 houses, of which 13 are in the United States. These are at: Southbridge, Diocese of Springfield, Mass. (founded 1891), 15 Sisters, 705 pupils; Spencer, Diocese of Springfield, Mass. (1892), 11 Sisters, 401 pupils; Meriden, Diocese of Hartford, Conn. (1893), 8 Sisters, 282 pupils; Indian Orchard, Diocese of Springfield, Mass. (1895), 8 Sisters, 371 pupils; Brockton, Archdiocese of Boston, Mass. (1902), 10 Sisters, 384 pupils; Greenville, Diocese of Manchester, N. H. (1905), 7 Sisters, 250 pupils; Laconia, Diocese of Manchester, N. H. (1906), 19 Sisters, 686 pupils; Lowell, Archdiocese of Boston, Mass. (1907), 22 Sisters, 1105 pupils; Barton, Diocese of Burlington, Vt. (1907), 6 Sisters, 170 pupils; Glens Falls, Diocese of Albany, N. Y. (1908), 9 Sisters, 284 pupils; Southbridge, Diocese of Springfield, Mass. (1910), 11 Sisters, 508 pupils; Hudson Falls, Diocese of Albany, N. Y. (1916), 8 Sisters, 252 pupils; Bristol, Diocese of Hartford, Conn. (1918), 8 Sisters, 312 pupils; a total of 142 Sisters and 5710 pupils.

Asti, DIOCESE OF (ASTENSIS; cf. C. E., II-18b), one of the divisions of the province of Alessandria, Italy, is suffragan of Turin. Rt. Rev. Giacinto Arcangeli, who came to this see 1898, d. 6 February, 1908, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Luigi Spandre. Bishop Spandre, b. at Caselle-Torinese 1853, appointed titular Bishop of Tiberiade 3 September, 1899, and made auxiliary to the Archbishop of Turin, was transferred to Asti 12 June, 1909. In 1920 the Catholic population numbered 182,600; there are 180 parishes, 300 secular and 20 regular clergy, 85 seminarians, 525 churches or chapels, 5 brothers and 60 sisters.

Astorga, DIOCESE OF (ATURICENSIS; cf. C. E., II-18d), comprises parts of the provinces of Leon, Zamora and Orense in Spain and is suffragan of Valladolid. Rt. Rev. Julián de Diego y Alcolea, who came to this see in 1904, was transferred to Salamanca 18 July, 1913, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Antonio Senso Lazaro, born in this diocese 1863, appointed bishop 18 July, 1913. In 1920 there were 401,000 Catholics in the diocese, 890 parishes, 950 priests, 890 churches, 630 chapels, 18 convents with 90 religious and 350 sisters.

Aterrado, DIOCESE OF (ATERRADENSIS), in the State of Minas Geraes, Brazil, suffragan of Mariana. It was erected 8 July, 1918, by a separation of the Archdiocese of Mariana, the western portion being taken to form the new diocese. The eastern limits of the diocese of Aterrado coincide with the eastern boundary lines of the parishes of Formiga, Porto-Real, Dorcas de Judaya and Abaede, which now, with fourteen other parishes, are comprised in this diocese. The first and present bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. Emmanuel Nunes Coelho, b. in the diocese of Diamantina, was appointed 10 June, 1920. Up to the present time (1922) no statistics have been published.

Athabaska, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (ATHABASKENSIS; cf. C. E., II-33b), in Canada, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Edmonton. Since 1907 the vicariate has undergone considerable changes owing to the building of new railways which have opened up the country, which for the most part consists of vast prairies or farm land, the chief occupation of the people being cattle-raising or farming. The greater number of the people are Protestant or of no religion at all, but the number of Catholics is growing slowly and parishes are being formed. Most of the new inhabitants come from the United States and Europe, with some from Asia. The Indians who were the first inhabitants of this territory, have been entirely banished by the influx of white men, but the Canadian government has assigned them reservations; they are almost all Catholic and the civil authorities respect their faith, and Catholic boarding schools, aided by the government, have been established and have an attendance of 200 Indian children. The Vicariate is at present (1921) under the administration of the Rt. Rev. Emile Grouard, O.M.I., D.D., who was consecrated titular Bishop of Ibora 1 August, 1891.

During the World War five missionaries, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, responded to the call of the French Government, two of whom won the croix de guerre, and numbers of the men of this territory entered the service, many of them giving up their lives.

The Grey Nuns of Montreal have been established in this district for many years and have been followed by the Sisters of Providence who conduct 6 schools, and in 1920 by the Sisters of the Holy Cross, who have opened a school for the children of French Canadians. There are now 28 priests (Oblates of Mary Immaculate), 32 churches or chapels, 64 Canadian religious, 8 schools with 600 pupils, and a very modest hospital which, in spite of its size, has rendered very great service.

Athens, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ATHENARUM; cf. C. E., II-46c), in Greece, is under the immediate jurisdiction of the Holy See, Archbishop Delenda who came to this see in 1900, d. 10 September, 1911, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Louis Petit, Assumptionist. Archbishop Petit, b. in the diocese of Annecy 1868, entered the Order of the Assumptionists 1885, superior at Toulouse 1894-95 and at Kadi-Kcui, 1895; founder and editor of "Echos d'Orient" and co-publisher of the "Recueil des inscriptions chrétiennes du Mont-Athos," and the charts of the Greek monasteries. In 1902 he went to Rome and engaged in research work in the Propaganda and Vatican Archives, preparatory to the Council of Armenian Catholics held in 1911, the year in which he was made assistant general of his order; elected Archbishop 4 March, 1912, and named apostolic delegate to Greece. He was made a consultant of the Congregation of the Oriental Church 29 November, 1917. He contributed a number of articles to the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA. By 1920 statistics there are over 20,000 Catholics under the archbishop's jurisdiction, and of these 8,600 are in the diocese, properly speaking. There are 14 secular and 12 regular priests, 14 brothers, 53 religious, 16 churches or chapels, 1 seminary, 2 lycées under the care of religious, 4 boarding schools and a clinic directed by religious and 4 elementary schools.

Atonement, FRIARS OF THE, a branch of the Third Order Regular of St. Francis, which follows closely the Rule of the Friars Minor, and was founded in 1899 by the Rev. Paul James Francis, S. A., a clergyman of the Episcopal Church, who was even then endowed with a de fide grasp of Catholic truth and while clinging to the ecclesiastical organization in which he had been reared, bore fearless witness to the Apostolic See of Rome as the de jure divino center of Catholic unity and communion. The Church Unity Octave (q.v.), propagated by the Society, originated in 1908 and the following year won the approval and blessing of Pope Pius X. It has since been extended by a Papal Brief of Pope Benedict XV to the Universal Church. The first-fruits of this observance was the submission and corporate reception of the Society of the Atonement itself, 30 October, 1909. The institute was permitted to retain its name, its dominant characteristics and spirit, and to continue its organ, "The Lamp," as a Catholic publication. The Father Founder took a seven months' course of theology at St. Joseph's Seminary, Yonkers, New York, and was ordained priest 16 June, 1910. The Friars of the Atonement are the first congregation of what is known as the Society of the Atonement, the second congregation being the Sisters of the Atonement, who are, however, a separate organization, and the third congregation, or Tertiaries, being at the same time members of the Third Order of Saint Francis. These three form the institute known as the Society of the Atonement (Societas Adunationis) and so designated by the Holy Father. At the time of their reception into the Catholic Church, two professed friars, five professed sisters, and ten tertiaries, seventeen persons in all, were received in the convent chapel by the present Bishop of Ogdensburg, Monsignor Conroy, acting for His Eminence Cardinal Farley, just ten years after Father Paul came to Graymoor to make his foundation. Up to this time the growth of the Society had been extremely slow and hazardous, nothing but a powerful faith in a God-given mission sustaining it; but it now received new life and grew rapidly, and its activities along with it. The members of the Rosary League have grown from a handful to 100,000, and countless petitions are offered in the novenas to Our Lady of the Atonement which begin the first Saturday of each month. The Union-that-Nothing-be-Lost (q.v.), the instrument through which hundreds of thousands of dollars have been dispensed to missionaries and their work in all parts of the world, numbers 50,000 members. There are 1,500 Tertiaries of the Society. All through these years "The Lamp" has been the organ of the society, the work of both the Friars and the Sisters being extended and developed through its instrumentality. This publication reached a circulation of over 150,000 in 1921. It is devoted chiefly to the reunion of the "other sheep" with the Apostolic See, and to missionary work. The Friars of the Atonement now (1921) number 13 professed, 4 novices, and 10 postulants, with 36 aspirants studying for the priesthood in Saint John's Atonement College, Graymoor, N. Y. Three tertiary priests also share the community life of the Friars. The president of St. John's Atonement College is Very Rev. Paul James Francis, S. A., Father Minister, and Charles H. Schultz, T. S. A., is director of studies, there being a staff of 10 teachers, including 1 friar-priest and 2 tertiary priests. The college includes the scholasticate with 3 philosophers, the academic department with 21 students, and the preparatory department with 10 students. There are 3 tertiary priests and 6 tertiary brothers resident, engaged in teaching or in other departments of the Friars' activities. The Friars of the Atonement serve St. John the Baptist Church, Graymoor, ministering to the rural community. Besides the original foundation on the Mount of the Atonement, there is one other at Hereford, Texas, St. Anthony's Church, being served by Father Salvator, S. A.

Atonement, OUR LADY OF THE.—The first Church dedicated to the Blessed Virgin under this title is in Baguio, Province of Benguet, Philippine Islands, the Rev. José De Samber pastor. This church was thus dedicated in 1919, having been erected largely by missionary donations contributed through the Society of the Atonement. This also is the title under which the Mother of God is invoked by the numerous members of the Rosary League of Our Lady of the Atonement.

Auch (AUXITANA; cf. C. E., II-67d); ARCHDIOCESE or, in France, is under the administration of Most Rev. Jean François-Ernest Ricard. Born at Sauvensa, Diocese of Rodez, 27 February, 1852, he made his studies at Rome, became secretary to the bishop, and afterwards vicar general of the Diocese of Rodez, was appointed Bishop of Angoulême 18 April, 1901, consecrated 29 June, and promoted to the Archdiocese of Auch 15 April, 1907, succeeding Archbishop Enard, who died 13 March, 1907. Archbishop Enard had filled the see for only one year, having come to it in 1906 as successor to Archbishop Balaïn, who died 13 May, 1905.

Until 1789 the Archbishops of Auch bore the title of Primate of Novempopulanie and the two Navarres. The archdiocese was re-established in 1822 and includes the dioceses of Condom, Lectoure, and Lombez. The ancient Cathedral of Ste-Marie is famous for its fifteenth century windows and for its great choir with 113 stalls of beautifully carved wood, which is a true masterpiece of the Renaissance.

The carving was done under the direction of the cardinals of Clermont-Lodève and de Tournon (1515-1554). Since its establishment (879) this diocese has had 51 bishops and 62 archbishops, of whom 6 have been canonized and 12 have been cardinals.

Within recent years a new lower seminary has been erected in the diocese; a diocesan Synod was held in September, 1911, and in August and September of the same year a pilgrimage went from the diocese to the shrine of Our Lady of Lourdes.

By present (1921) statistics this diocese has 507 parishes, 15 chapels, 3 Carmelite monasteries for women, 1 convent for men and 25 for women, 540 secular and 5 regular clergy, 10 brothers, 250 sisters, 2 seminaries, 110 seminarians, 3 colleges for boys with 30 teachers and 300 pupils, 120 elementary schools with 250 teachers and 4,000 pupils. Charitable work is carried on by diocesan missionaries numbering 8; in addition to this there are 1 home for the aged, 2 orphanages, and 15 hospitals. There are three organizations established among the clergy, the Apostolic Union of Secular Priests, the Priests Adorers, and "Jésus Hostie," as also a committee for the defense of the priesthood; among the laity are the Society of Catholic Youth, Catholic Diocesan Union, Association of Christian Men, various confraternities and associations of Catholic works of Our Lady of Auch. Various periodicals are published: "Semaine Religieuse," "Croix du Gers," and "La Jeune Ganoque."

Auckland, Diocese of (AUCOPOLITANA; cf. C. E., II-68b), in New Zealand, is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Henry William Cleary, born at Glenranny, Wexford, this diocese, 15 January, 1859, appointed bishop 9 June, 1910, consecrated 21 August. He succeeded Rt. Rev. George Michael Lenihan, D.D., who had filled the see from 1896 until his death, 22 February, 1910.

The principal events in this diocese in recent years have been the opening of the enlarged and redecored Cathedral of St. Patrick in Auckland, the introduction of the Religious of the Sacred Heart of Jesus into the diocese, the appointment of a coadjutor bishop, Rt. Rev. James M. Liston, consecrated titular Bishop of Olympos, 12 December, 1920. During the World War the diocese sent five priests as chaplains and 4,200 men into the service.

By present (1921) statistics the total Catholic population of the diocese is approximately 46,500, of whom 37,000 are New Zealanders, 5,000 Irish, and 4,500 Maoris. There are 50 parishes, 22 missions, 97 churches, 92 mission stations, 16 convents for women, 51 secular and 22 regular priests, 296 sisters. Various educational institutions are conducted by the Little Brothers of Mary, Sisters of Mercy, Religious of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of Saint Joseph, and Sisters of the Missions; there are in all: 1 college for men with 12 teachers and attendance of 260, 13 high schools with attendance of 260 boys and 330 girls, and 36 elementary schools with 182 teachers and 4,100 pupils. The charitable institutions are: 1 home for the aged poor (under the Little Sisters of the Poor), 2 orphanages, and 1 hospital. Four of the public institutions permit the priests of the diocese to minister in them. The Hibernian Benefit Society, St. Vincent de Paul Society, and the Catholic Federation are established among the laity, and a Catholic periodical, "The Month," is published.

Auditors (cf. C. E., II-70) are officials frequently appointed by the bishop or religious superior to assist at diocesan and religious tribunals either permanently or for a particular case. If none has been named, a presiding judge may select one, who should be chosen if possible from among the synodal judges. It is the duty of an auditor to summon witnesses and to receive their testimony; he draws up the judicial record of the case, but does not render a definitive judgment. With the reorganization of the Roman Curia in 1908 the auditors of the Sacred Rota were called upon to take a much more prominent place in the ecclesiastical judicial system than they had done in recent times. If an auditor of the Rota is suspected of bias the aggrieved party may lodge an objection with the Apostolic Signature; but an objection to any other auditor is to be brought to the notice of the judge who is hearing the suit.

Augouard, PHILIPPE-PROSPER, Vicar Apostolic of Upper French Congo, b. 16 September, 1852, in Poitiers; d. 3 October, 1921, in Paris. He studied for the priesthood at the lower seminary at Sées under the direction of Mgr. de Ségur, and was about to finish his studies when the Franco-Prussian War broke out. He joined the Papal Zouaves, then reconstructed as an independent regiment under Colonel de Charette. The war over he entered the Congregation of the Holy Ghost, and in 1877 left for the missions on the east coast of Africa. In 1881 he opened the first mission station of St. Augustin, and two years later penetrated to Stanley Pool. The following year Jules Ferry, French Minister of Education, gave him a large grant for schools for the Upper Congo. Père Augouard assisted the French explorers by every means in his power, seconding their work by the creation of hospitals and schools, and winning their respect by his initiative and enterprising zeal.

Appointed titular Bishop of Sinis in 1890 he became vicar apostolic of Upper French Congo (Ubanghi), with his residence at Brazzaville and a wide field for his missionary zeal. In recognition of his services the French Government in 1896 made him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and in 1913 an officer, while Belgium bestowed upon him the Order of Leopold. On the twenty-fifth anniversary of his episcopate, 1915, the Holy Father appointed him titular Archbishop of Cassiope.

Mgr. Augouard's unflinching charity endeared him to the simple natives, for in spite of his many-sided activities as engineer, administrator, professor, physician, geographer, he was above all bishop and apostle.

Augsburg, DIOCESE OF (AUGUSTAN VINDELICORUM; cf. C. E., II-73b), in Bavaria, Germany, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Munich-Freising. The diocese is divided into 60 deaneries and has 871 parishes, 35 parochial curacies, 263 benefices, 235 chaplaincies, and 14 mission stations. There are about 1,300 churches, 21 monasteries, 1 archabbey and 2 abbeys for men, 364 lay brothers, 209 convents for women with 3,622 sisters. In 1921 the clergy of the diocese numbered 1,534; 1,353 seculars and 181 regulars. There is 1 diocesan seminary. The University (Hochschule) has a theological and a philosophical faculty with 19 professors and 178 students. There are also in the diocese 23 Höhere Schulen (9 and 6 years classical course), which are state and non-sectarian institutions, with 587 teachers and 5,860 students, 21 for girls, of which 1 is a government school, the others are conducted by Sisters and are denominational for resident students; 6 agricultural winter schools, 1 industrial continuation school. The elementary schools are state and denominational and number 900, with 2,500 teachers and about 95,000 students.

The following societies exist among the clergy: Association of Priests, 1,220 members; Marian Congregation of Priests, 500 members; Unio Apostolica, 180 members; association of lecturers or catechists, 30 members; association for the support of sick priests, 1,050; fire insurance association, about 200. Prominent among the numerous religious, political, and social organizations of the laity are: 107 Catholic workmen's associations (6,956 members); 36 Catholic workingwomen's associations (3,576 members); 5 Catholic merchants' associations (800 members); 61 young men's associations (800 members); 43 young women's associations (2,500 members); 66 journeymen's unions (4,000 members); 19 associations for women servants (1,200 members); 10 associations for men servants (2,180 members); 442 Catholic mothers' associations (28,000 members); 115 press associations (139 corporation members, 6,200 individual members); 1 academic association (105 members); 3 mission associations, 9 altar societies, 150 Marian congregations (5,000 members); 21 Casilian societies (600 members); 620 farmers' associations (17,000 members); Caritas Association (310 branches); People's League (248 branches, 15,320 members). Eight periodicals are published in the diocese.

The following important events have taken place in the diocese since 1907: Creation of an auxiliary bishop in 1907; an addition was built to the seminary in 1912, and a theological course of four years was introduced, 1912-1914; a home for poor priests was opened at Füssen; a diocesan synod was held in 1919 and Catholic Congresses (Katholikentage) were held in 1910 and 1921.

Throughout the war the clergy did all in their power to give spiritual aid and comfort to the soldiers and unselfishly gave their services in behalf of their country. Eight priests were wounded on the field of battle, 19 served as chaplains in field hospitals, and 39 as nurses. In 1918, 161 of the seminarians were in the army; of these 41 were killed, 3 were missing, and 4 were taken prisoners. One hundred and nine army hospitals and some maintained by private organizations were established in the diocese, which were regularly attended to by the clergy. The prisoners were cared for spiritually by the priests of the respective place and also by some of the priests who were prisoners. The troops as well as the prisoners and the wounded were provided with good literature. The collections for charities during the war amounted to 3,000,000 marks. The Catholic Press Association of Bavaria alone published, from 1915-1918, 24,272 books. The pastors of Augsburg weekly distributed 2,400 copies of the "Katholische Kirchenzeitung" of Augsburg, and the Aurische Presse at Donauwörth likewise distributed fortnightly 3,000 copies of its splendid periodical "Raphael."

The present bishop of Augsburg is the Rt. Rev. Maximilian de Lingg, b. at Nesselwang, 8 March, 1842, ordained 22 July, 1865, was professor of canon law and history at the seminary at Bamberg, elected bishop of Augsburg 18 March, 1902, consecrated 20 July following. He was made a prelate, assistant to the pontifical throne, 28 March, 1908.

Augustinians of the Assumption (cf. C. E., I-104a).—This congregation, founded in 1845, at the College of the Assumption at Nîmes, has increased its work during recent years in spite of the religious persecution rigorously pursued in France since 1900, and the general destruction accompanying the World War. In addition to the four apostolic schools, called alumnates, established in Belgium, one was founded in Holland during the war for the education of Dutch children, another in London for English subjects, and two in Chile. The war having facilitated the return of religious to France, the congregation has re-established itself there as far as possible, having three apostolic schools, welfare centers, and eight houses of residence. Since 1910 three foundations have been made in the Argentine, at Buenos Aires, where in addition to preaching, 15 religious have the care of welfare centers, an association for Catholic youth, an association of young girls called "Noëlites," and social fraternities, being aided in their work by the Little Sisters of the Assumption who have two houses there. In the Orient their work suffered much during the war. Expelled by the Turks, after some of their number had been imprisoned for two months, and re-entering France after a variegated journey across Russia, Sweden, and England, crossing the North Sea and the English Channel in spite of the danger of submarines, 150 religious returned to the Orient as soon as the war was over, to re-establish their works there and the houses more or less impaired by the war. Twenty houses, colleges, and schools have been reopened. The College of Philippopolis, in Bulgaria, in its new buildings in the center of the city, recognized and endowed by the French Government and patronized by the Bulgarian Government, is more prosperous than ever. The bachelor's degree conferred there is recognized by both the French and Bulgarian Governments, French and Bulgarian being the two official languages of the college. Bulgarian ministers and officers have graduated there. The schools at Varne and Adrianople have been erected into colleges since the war.

Fr. A. Vanhove, formerly superior of Notre Dame de France at Jerusalem, was named superior of the missions in the Orient in 1918, and died in January, 1919, a victim of the catastrophe of the "Chaouia," which foundered in the Strait of Messina on a floating mine. Fr. Michael d'Hondt and three Oblates of the Assumption died in the same disaster. Fr. Gervais Quenard succeeded Fr. Vanhove as provincial. At Kadikoi the school of higher Byzantine studies, the office of the review, "Echos d'Orient," has gained new vigor under the direction of Fr. S. Salaville, who succeeded Fr. L. Petit. Many of the editors of "Echos d'Orient" have acquired fame in the scientific world by their collaboration in different Oriental reviews and encyclopedias and by their works: Fr. J. Pargoire (d. 1907) wrote "L'Eglise byzantine de 527 à 847," "Recueil des inscriptions chrétiennes du Mont Athos," etc. Fr. J. Thibout, who had occasion to decipher valuable manuscripts in the Imperial Library of Petrograd, wrote "Monuments de la notation ekphonétique et neumatique de l'Eglise latine," "Monuments de la notation ekphonétique et hagiopolite de l'Eglise grecque," etc.; Fr. R. Louaru wrote "Memento de théologie morale à l'usage des missionnaires," etc.; Fr. Jugu wrote "Nestorius et la controverse nestorienne" (collection: "Bibliothèque de théologie historique"), "Histoire du canon de l'ancien Testament dans l'Eglise grecque et l'Eglise russe," "La Prière pour l'unité chrétienne," etc. The last two are, with Fr. S. Vailhé, professors at the Oriental Pontifical Institute, founded by Pope Benedict XV.

Another Assumptionist of note is Mgr. Petit, former superior of the school of higher studies at Kadikoi and former director of the "Echos d'Orient." He was named by Pius X in 1912 archbishop and delegate apostolic at Athens, being appointed there because of his perfect knowledge of the Greek language and of Oriental affairs. He published with Fr. Pargoire "Recueil des inscriptions chrétiennes du Mont Athos," and "Chartes de monastères grecs" (5 vols.). In 1908 he engaged in research work in the Propaganda archives, and was theologian and consultor of the Council of Armenian Catholics in 1911. His principal work is the continuation of the famous collection of the Councils by Mansi, in collaboration with Abbé Martin. More than twenty volumes have appeared, and supplements have been added to complete the first volumes of Mansi. The documents of the Council of the Vatican will comprise five volumes; two have appeared accompanied by notes and preceded by a masterly preface in Latin by Mgr. Petit, who has been able to consult the secret and reserved archives of the council with the kindly authorization of Pius X. This collection is one of the most important literary works of the twentieth century.

The splendid hostelry of Notre Dame de France at Jerusalem, from which the religious were expelled by the Turks during the war, was not injured during its military occupation first by the Turks and then by the English, owing to the presence of a religious who because of his German origin found favor with the military force. The first series of pilgrimages to the Holy Land were resumed after the war in 1922. On this occasion the professors of Notre Dame de France at Jerusalem re-edited and brought up to date "La Palestine," an historical guide, both devout and scientific, to the Holy Places. The church of Notre Dame de France, which was enriched by Pope Leo XIII with the indulgence of the Tomb of the Blessed Virgin, was made by Fr. V. do P. Bailly the center of the Society of the Crusaders of Purgatory.

Russia became a field of activity for the congregation several years before the war, due to the liberality and broadmindedness of the Russian minister, Stolypine. The religious established influential intellectual centers at Petrograd, Moscow, and Odessa, and founded a review in the Russian language to make Rome better known to the Slavs. The Russian revolution destroyed these works and expelled the religious, with the exception of one who was hunted and finally imprisoned by the Bolsheviks. The Fathers are preparing to re-enter Russia, hoping for greater religious liberty under the Bolsheviks than under the former Government.

In the United States the College of the Assumption founded at Worcester, Mass., in 1903, has developed rapidly. Teaching is bilingual. The program of studies includes an elective course in philosophy and such obligatory courses as are essential to the formation of a thorough and general knowledge. The college confers degrees upon those who successfully pass a final examination. There are accommodations for 250 boarders, and many priests, religious, doctors and lawyers are among the alumni. The Fathers have two parishes in New York, in one of which the provincial, Fr. T. Pesse, resides. In 1916 a foundation was made in Quebec, Canada, where the novitiate for the American province was erected the following year. The headquarters for Canada of the Archconfraternity of Prayer and Penance in honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus is at the convent of Jeanne d'Arc, Quebec, and for the United States at the Church of Our Lady of Hope, New York. This archconfraternity numbers more than 300,000 members, and was established in the United States by Fr. M. Clement Staub.

In France the numerous branches of work of the "Bonne Presse" are under the hidden but real influence of the religious. Several years before the war a third daily supplementary page on doctrinal subjects was added to the regular two-page journal, "La Croix"; there are treated questions concerning popular theology, apologetics, philosophy, social science, and spirituality. The number of interesting and instructive reviews on Rome, Jerusalem, Notre Dame, and the Eucharist was increased. The difficulties of the war made necessary the suppression of some of these reviews; those on Rome and the Eucharist have been revived. The review "Le Noël" continues to spread throughout all countries and from it have been founded three other reviews "La Maison," "L'Etoile Noëliste," and "L'echo du Noël." "Le Noël" has a special office in Buenos Aires, with a Spanish edition under the direction of a religious who also has under his care the young men and women of South America. The "Bonne Presse" also publishes the "Annuaire pontifical catholique," commenced by Mgr. Battandier, and continued by the Fathers of the Assumption. An index of the first twenty volumes (1898-1917) has just been published. Two important reviews of recent date are also published by the "Bonne Presse": the "Documentation catholique" and "Prêtre et Apôtre." The "Documentation catholique" is a weekly, founded in 1919 by the fusion of four documentary magazines which the war interrupted: "Questions actuelles," "La Chronique de la Presse," "La Revue d'organisation et de défense religieuse," and "L'Action catholique." It treats of religious, social, political, literary, historical, juridical, national, and international subjects, giving varied information derived from periodicals of all nations and every language. It constitutes a documentation of general opinion, valuable alike in fortifying the Catholic mind and developing the civic information of the élite in grouping in one magazine all the authentic texts of which the Catholic has need who desires to participate in the life of the Church and the State. The "Prêtre et Apôtre," founded during the war, was originally called "Le Prêtre aux armées." It was meant to sustain the religious spirit of priests and religious in the army. Since the end of the war it has become an eminently serious and doctrinal review for the clergy, a bulletin of the interior life and of the apostolate, giving subjects for meditation instruction, and spiritual direction, extracts of sermons, conferences, pastorals, and liturgy. With the war unfortunately disappeared the "Revue Augustinienne," a serious doctrinal review, founded in 1902, and edited by a group of professors eminent at the University of Louvain and universally esteemed. Outside of the general questions treated, it contributed largely to the revival of Thomistic philosophy.

The war gave an opportunity to the "Association of Our Lady of Salvation," founded in 1871 by Fr. Picard, second superior general, and continued by his successors, to show its fecundity. During the war it distributed 10,500 portable altars to the armies, brought aid to ravaged dioceses, celebrated innumerable Masses for dead soldiers, made numerous appeals for war orphans, continued the pilgrimages to Lourdes, especially that of 1916, when it conducted 1200 children to the grotto, delegates of more than 800,000 little ones who sent up a fervent petition to the Virgin of Massabielle for the victory of the Allies. A Brief of Pope Benedict XV in 1919, enriched the association with new indulgences.

During recent years the congregation has lost many of its eminent members. In 1912 Fr. V. de P. Bailly (q.v.), died at Paris at the age of eighty years. His brother, Fr. E. Bailly (q.v.) third superior general, died in 1917. Fr. Germer-Durant, a learned Orientalist and epigraphist, officially charged with excavations and scientific researches in Palestine, correspondent of the "Société des Antiquaires" of France, died in 1917. Since the death of Fr. Bailly (1917), the congregation has been governed by Fr. J. Maubon, vicar general, formerly superior of the mission of the Orient and Chile. A new superior general is to be named in 1922.

The general chapter of the Congregation held at Rome at the end of 1921 has reorganized the congregation in conformity with the new Code of Canon Law. The provinces constituted are: 3 in France, 1 in Belgium, 1 in the United States, 1 in Chile, each with its own novitiate and scholasticate of philosophy. The novitiate lasts one year, and the course of philosophy for the religious is three years. There are at present 700 religious and 90 houses. The congregation has under its direction, the Oblates of the Assumption, who have boarding schools in France, Belgium, the Orient, and England; the Little Sisters of the Assumption, who are established outside of France in different cities of Belgium, England, Italy, Chile, and the United States where they have foundations in New York and Philadelphia; the "Orantes," a community of contemplative religious, founded by Fr. Picard in 1900, with the assistance of the Comtesse d'Ursel, first superior general, who died at Paris in 1921; and the Sisters of St. Joan of Arc (q.v.).

Australia (cf. C. E., II-113d), COMMONWEALTH OF, is a self-governing federal state under the British Crown, comprising six states and two territories. These, with their population according to the 1911 census, are: New South Wales, 1,646,734; Victoria, 1,315,551; Queensland, 605,813; South Australia, 408,558; West Australia, 282,114; Tasmania (a separate island), 191,211; Northern Territory (transferred to the Commonwealth of South Australia 1 January, 1911), 3,310; Federal Territory (transferred on the same date by New South Wales), 1,714; total, 4,455,005. The estimated total population of the Commonwealth on 1 January, 1920, was 5,247,019. An area of 28 square miles at Jervis Bay was acquired for purposes of a naval college, and the right to construct a railway from the capital thereto. The total area is 2,974,581 square miles. Dependencies of Australia are Papua and Norfolk Island.

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS.—The ecclesiastical divisions of the Australian Commonwealth in 1920 were 6 archdioceses, 13 dioceses, 1 abbey nullius, 3 vicariates apostolic, and 1 prefecture apostolic. There is thus a total hierarchy of 26 prelates exercising episcopal jurisdiction, including 1 delegate apostolic and 1 coadjutor archbishop. The former Diocese of Port Victoria and Palmerston was established as the Prefecture Apostolic of the Northern Territory in 1906. The Diocese of Wagga Wagga was erected from part of the Diocese of Goulbourn in 1917.

The number of Catholics in the various provinces in 1911 was as follows: New South Wales, 402,313; Victoria, 278,465; Queensland, 141,161; South Australia, 53,467; West Australia, 58,449; Tasmania, 29,576; total, 963,431. The total number of Jews was 17,287. The numerical strength of the principal religious groups in the different states in 1911 is given in the table on the following page, compiled from the Australian Year Book for 1917.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The total foreign trade of Australia for the fiscal year 1919 amounted to $905,594,818; that with the United States to $166,215,240, of which $125,672,693 represent imports from the United States to Australia and $40,542,277 were exports from Australia to the United States. The countries contributing chiefly to Australia's imports are the United Kingdom and other British possessions, the United States, and Japan. The customs tariff Act of 1920 gives the preference to goods to and from the United Kingdom. During the war the wheat crop of Australia was controlled by Government pools in the different states, which guaranteed the farmer a price and made advances. For 1919-1920 the wheat yield was placed at 46,210,380 bushels. The development of barley culture of late years has been very large. The wool clip which passed through the hands of the Central Wool Committee amounted to 652,109,672 pounds, or 2,025,486 bales, valued at $204,518,430. All this wool went to the Imperial British Government at a flat rate of 15½ pence a pound. The imperial contract ended 30 June, 1920. The total number of sheep in the Australian Commonwealth in 1918 was 84,965,012. Plans are being made to foster the manufacture of woollen goods. Sydney is the chief shipping port of Australia, and in spite of war difficulties has a shipping trade, exceeded by only four ports in the United Kingdom, Liverpool, London, the Tyne, and Cardiff. The total area of the port consists of 14,284 acres, of which 3,000 acres have a depth of 35 to 160 feet. A Commonwealth Bureau of Commerce and Industry was established in 1919 to organize the country's resources and form a policy for the expansion of trade, improvement of methods and establishment of new industries.

The chief difficulty with the Australian railway system has been with the varying gauges of the states, each state having begun its own system and adopted its own gauge without considering the subsequent necessity of linking up with another line. It was decided in 1920 to have a standard gauge of four feet eight and a half inches. In 1912 the building of the trans-Australian railway from Port Augusta in South Australia to Kalbarrie in Western Australia was commenced and was opened in November, 1917, the length being 1,051 miles. A transcontinental railway from north to south, over 1,000 miles in length, is also under consideration. The mileage of the government railways is 22,647; of private railways open to general traffic, 1,125.

Up to 1918, 858,600,345 acres representing 45.10 per cent of the total area of the Australian Commonwealth were either unoccupied or occupied by the Crown, only 5.63 per cent had been actually alienated (107,093,317 acres), 2.92 per cent (55,672,578 acres) were in course of alienation, and 46.35 per cent (882,365,600 acres) were held under various forms of leases and licenses. The total area under crops was 13,332,393 acres and the total value of the crops was about $261,360,000. The total mineral production up to the end of 1918 was $4,309,527,181.

GOVERNMENT.—The seat of the government is provisionally at Melbourne, but eventually will be at Yass-Canberra, the site acquired from the State of New South Wales in 1910. Now that peace has been concluded, the Government is planning to go ahead with the establishment of a federal capital. The Legislative power is vested in a Federal Parliament, consisting of the King, represented by a governor-general, a Senate (six for each of the original six states, voting as one electorate), chosen for six years, and a House of Representatives consisting if possible of twice as many senators, the number chosen in the several states being in proportion to the respective number of their people as shown in the latest statistics of the Commonwealth, but not less than five for any original state. The Constitution provides for a Federal Judicature, for an inter-State Commission of Trade and Commerce, and for alteration of the Constitution. A high court of seven judges has been established with original as well as appellate jurisdiction. In 1920 Mrs. Cowan was the first woman elected to Parliament. The present governor-general is Henry William Baron Forster, succeeding Sir Ronald Craufurd Munro Ferguson in 1920.

PRESENT MILITARY SYSTEM.—In September, 1920, modifications in the defensive policy, respecting both the army and navy were announced in Parliament. The army is to be organized and trained on the divisional basis and will consist of two light-horse divisions, four infantry divisions, and three mixed brigades, with the necessary extra-divisional units. In time of peace the number of soldiers will be about 130,000. The restoration of the Council of Defense insures continuity of policy and the co-ordination of the requirements on sea, air, and land; control and administration to be exercised by the military and naval boards. By the reduction of the naval forces, many of the vessels of the Royal Australian Navy pass to the reserve.

EDUCATION.—Throughout the states primary education is compulsory and free, while there exists in most of the states a liberal provision of scholarships and bursaries to the higher state schools, secondary schools, and universities. Each state has its university; affiliated to those of New South Wales and Victoria are four colleges in connection with the Catholic, Anglican, Presbyterian, and Methodist churches respectively. At the census of 1911, according to the Australian Year Book for 1917, out of every 10,000 children between the ages of five and fifteen 8,907 could read and write. According to the same source 92.29 per cent of the children of school age (six to thirteen) in Victoria, could read and write; in Queensland, 92.51 per cent; in West Australia, 90.66 per cent; in South Australia, 88.66 per cent; in New South Wales, 89.59 per cent; in Tasmania, 89.59 per cent. The total number of schools in Australia is 8,992, with 24,177 teachers and 764,980 pupils. The education of children in the sparsely settled districts is a difficult problem, and attempts are being made to solve it by means of provisional schools, traveling schools, railway camp schools, etc.

In spite of the withdrawal of state aid from denominational schools in 1882, Catholic primary schools have grown. In 1881 there were in Victoria 180 primary schools attended by 20,337 children; in 1911 there were 874 primary schools and 95,595 children. In New South Wales in 1888 there were 247 schools, 916 teachers, 27,172 scholars on roll, and 21,809 scholars in average attendance; in 1911 there were 401 schools, 2,034 teachers, 46,097 scholars on roll, and 38,657 scholars in average attendance. According to official returns there were 54,124 children on the rolls of the Catholic schools in New South Wales in the December quarter, 1916, and 7,677 on the roll of the Catholic schools of West Australia in the last school week of 1911 (latest Government figures available). No official information appears in the census or reports of Tasmania, Queensland, or South Australia. The Australasian Catholic Directory for 1921 gives an apparently conservative estimate of 157,895 children attending Catholic schools throughout the Commonwealth.

AUSTRALIA IN THE EUROPEAN WAR (1914-1918).—On the 10th of August, four days after the declaration of war between England and Germany, all the Australian vessels and members of the Australian navy were transferred to the King's Naval Forces for the period of the war. The first convoy of 20,000 troops landed in Egypt in December for the defense of that country and to undergo war training in the vicinity of Cairo. In conjunction with the other allied troops they took part in the campaigns on the Gallipoli Peninsula, in Egypt, in France, and Belgium, holding many dangerous positions, notably in the battle of the Somme and winning, in 1918 at Amiens the title of "the saviours of Amiens." The cavalry organized as the "Anzac Mounted Division" formed the larger portion of the Desert Column, and were victorious in Syria and Arabia.

In various theaters of war Australian personnel was engaged on special duties, or on lines of communication. Medical and nursing work was accomplished in New Guinea, Mesopotamia, India, Vladivostok, and Salonika. The number of casualties in the war announced by the Defense Department was 232,324, of whom 43,475 died from wounds or disease, 116,594 were wounded or gassed, and 68,434 were on the sick list. Only 3,627 were missing or taken prisoners.

In 1914, upon suggestion of the Imperial Government, the Commonwealth also dispatched an expeditionary force against certain German possessions in the Pacific Ocean with the object of seizing German wireless stations, occupying German territory, and arranging for temporary administration. In two months the capture of the whole of the enemy's possessions was affected and the German Pacific wireless chain was broken. By the terms of the Peace Treaty, the former German islands south of the equator (except the Samoan group) are now occupied and administered by Australia under a mandate.

During 1915 the battle-cruiser Australia joined the Grand Fleet in the North Sea. The most thrilling naval exploit was the capture of the German cruiser Emden at Cocos Island. As the Emden had wrought havoc to the extent of 21 British merchantmen and two million and a half pounds, this was considered a signal victory.

At the outbreak of the war, the Federal War Precautions Act put powers in the hands of the Executive Government of the Commonwealth as great as have ever been possessed previously by British administrators in any British possession. It limited state authority, and enabled the Commonwealth to take any action necessary to the successful prosecution of the war, even to the extent of fixing prices, declaring moratoria, and establishing pools. This act was in effect for two years after the end of the war, and was even used by the Premier in ending a strike of marine engineers, and deporting Father Jerger, a priest of German parentage, who had been accused of expressing disloyal and anti-recruiting sentiments in his sermons. The agitation was partly sectarian and partly political, but it was felt that the use of executive power was entirely too arbitrary. In accordance with the War Gratuity Act (1920), a bonus payable as an overseas war service gratuity was authorized for soldiers and sailors who served in the Great War. In 1917 at the Premiers' Conference at Melbourne it was agreed that the states should undertake the work of settling on the land soldiers or sailors and war workers who had been abroad but that the Commonwealth should finance them for this purpose. Up to April, 1920, 15,509 soldiers had been settled. Among the questions that concern the status of Australia is the agitation for a "White Australia," with the purpose of shutting out the Japanese or others of the yellow race, and reserving Australia only for those of white blood.

Austria (cf. C. E., II-121a).—The new Republic of Austria, proclaimed 12 November, 1918, consists broadly of the former Austrian provinces of Upper Austria, Lower Austria, Salzburg, North Tyrol, Styria, Carinthia, and Vorarlberg, and German Western Hungary, and is bounded on the south by Switzerland, Italy, and Jugoslavia; on the east by Hungary and Czechoslovakia; and on the north by Czechoslovakia, Bavaria, and Wurtemberg; the western boundaries are unchanged. As a result of the dismemberment of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, the larger part of Austria's possessions became parts of the Yugoslav state, the Czechoslovak Republic, Poland, and Italy. With her only sea-coast taken away from her by the peace treaty (1919), she is now an inland state without maritime boundary. Vienna has been separated from Lower Austria and becomes a separate entity.

POPULATION.—The area and population (census taken on 31 January, 1920), of Austria are shown as follows:

Provinces	Area in Miles	Population	Percentage of Population	Density Per Square Mile
Vienna	107	1,841,326	29.99	17,209
Lower Austria.	7,449	1,458,269	23.75	196
Upper Austria.	4,621	858,795	13.90	186
Salzburg	2,759	214,200	3.49	78
Styria	6,317	957,509	15.60	152
Carinthia	3,678	369,401	6.02	100
Tyrol	4,782	306,485	4.99	64
Vorarlberg	1,003	133,212	2.17	133
Total	30,716	6,139,197	—	18,118

The area of Western Hungary, awarded to Austria in 1920, consists of 1,684 square miles and has an estimated population of 345,082. Compared with the corresponding figures for 1910, the census of 1920 shows a loss of 227,209, or 3.6 per cent. It has been estimated that the number of Austrians killed in battle was 180,000 to 180,000 and the total loss due directly or indirectly to the war, 184,461. A striking disproportion between the sexes is noted, the 1920 census revealing 1,089 women to every 1,000 men.

The principal towns are Vienna, with a population of 1,841,326; Graz, 157,032; Linz, 93,473; Innsbruck, 55,659; Salzburg, 36,450. In 1918 there were 87,594 births, 40,738 marriages, 166,378 deaths, 1,779 divorces.

RELIGION.—Religious liberty is one of the fundamental laws of the republic and the principle is embodied in the Treaty of St. Germain (article 63). In 1920 there were 5,979,667 Catholics (94.17), 165,007 Protestants (2.60), 189,758 Jews (2.99), and 19,021 others (0.30). Before the Great War there were 53 dioceses in Austria-Hungary; in the Republic at present there are six; the Archdiocese of Vienna, with the suffragan dioceses of St. Polten or St. Hippolitus, and Linz; the Archdiocese of Salzburg, with suffragan dioceses of Gurk, and Seckau or Graz (q. v.). The diocese of Brixen formerly a suffragan of Salzburg, has been made an exempt diocese, and retains its ecclesiastical limits notwithstanding the partition of its territory by the Treaty of St. Germain. Catholic organization has been strengthened and unified in its fight to uphold the indissolubility of marriage and to combat other morally pernicious legislation urged by the Socialist party, as well as in its opposition to the proselytism of Protestant sects who would take advantage of the material wants of the people to upset their spiritual allegiance. The Christian Socialist (Catholic) party won in the 1920 elections, and for the first time since 1871 Austria has a Catholic premier in the person of Doctor Mayr, Chancellor of the Confederation, and Minister of Foreign Affairs. The Chairman of the Christian Socialist party is Dr. Ignatz Seipel, a Catholic priest and a powerful personality in the politics of new Austria. Minister of Public Works under the Emperor Charles and a member of the Assembly since its establishment, he is the only member of the old monarchy to retain his influence.

The sufferings of religious and priests in Austria are intense; lack of sufficient and proper food, and of clothing, are serious hindrances to their work of Christian education and charity. The Catholic organizations of Austria, though they give heroic service, are unable to meet the immense demands, and it is largely owing to American Catholic generosity, expressed in the establishment of Catholic Relief for Austria and the Vienna Catholic Bureau, that this desolating need will be met.

GOVERNMENT.—According to the new constitution adopted in 1920, Austria is transformed into a confederation consisting of the following eight States (Länder): Lower Austria (subdivided into the province of the same name and Vienna), Upper Austria, Styria, Carinthia (reunited to the confederation by the result of the recent plebiscite), Salzburg, Tyrol, Vorarlberg, and Burgenland (this being the Austrian name of the Western Hungarian counties awarded to Austria by the peace treaties). Each state has its own legislature. The Federal Legislature consists of two chambers, the National Council, elected by direct proportional suffrage, and the Federal Council, elected by the Landtags of each State. The Federal Council has a limited veto power over measures enacted by the National Council. The two Chambers together form the Federal Assembly, which, however, meets only in two emergencies—to declare war and to elect the Federal President. The Federal Assembly met on 10 November, 1920, the session being preceded by high Mass for the first time since pre-war days. The national flag consists of three horizontal stripes, the top and bottom being red, and the center white. There are two principal political parties, Socialists (not Bolshevik) and Christian Socialist (Catholic).

EDUCATION.—There are two classes of elementary schools, the Volksschulen and Bürgerschulen, of which the former teach the first principles of religion, reading, writing, arithmetic, natural science, history, geography, and drawing, and the latter carry instruction in these subjects farther and add to them others such as book-keeping, geometry, and in certain cases, music and modern languages. Attendance is obligatory from the ages of six to fourteen, or in some provinces, from six to twelve. As regards religious teaching, which occupies the chief place in the curriculum, the ecclesiastical authorities of the various recognized denominations have access to the schools and the clergy are bound to give a certain modicum of religious instruction in the Volksschulen without payment; but if remuneration becomes due it is drawn from public funds. As regards the language question, the rule is that the provincial school council which is presided over by the governor of the province, and includes educational experts, clergy, and representatives of the local Diet, should determine what language or languages are to be taught in any school. An opportunity is always afforded to learn German.

The immediate educational authority is the district school council, representative of the rate payers and the parish. Between this and the provincial school council is another body, the county school council, which, besides determining questions respecting the building and staffing of schools, regulates the affairs of private elementary schools and kindergartens.

In 1918 there were 4,763 public and private elementary schools with 30,667 teachers and 914,258 pupils. Secondary education is carried on by gymnasias and realschulen, public or private; the former furnish a classical education; the latter a modern education. In 1917-18 there were 73 gymnasias with 20,955 pupils; and 38 realschulen with 14,632 pupils. There are also 4,000 technical institutes in which the knowledge of different trades and professions may be pursued, and technical high schools for instruction in agriculture, architecture, chemistry, and engineering. The political changes now taking place will undoubtedly be followed by far-reaching alterations in this school system. Socialism, which in the elections of 1919 conquered 48 per cent of the voters, sought to exploit its power in the domain of education. Although in the government of the State the Catholics then constituted the minority, their vigilance warded off the worst blows and every advance of the adversary met clever counter measures.

Conditions in the universities are very serious at present (1921). Many professorial chairs are vacant, their holders having abandoned them because they were unable to live on their salaries. Austrian professors and men of science are emigrating to Germany. Four universities are maintained by the State, those of Vienna with 310 teachers and 5,510 students, Graz, with 232 teachers and 1,142 students, Innsbruck, with 164 teachers and 982 students, and Salzburg. Besides there are 37 training colleges for teachers with 736 lecturers and 5,043 students.

ARMY.—After the break-up of the Austrian monarchy and during the subsequent confusion, the Austrian Government set up a defense force (Volkswehr), which in August, 1920, consisted of 34,000 men. By the terms of the Treaty of St. Germain universal compulsory training was abolished in Austria, and the total military force limited to 30,000 men, including officers and depot troops, to be organized either in divisions or in mixed brigades, at Austria's discretion. All officers must be regulars, and those serving now must serve to the age of forty. All measures of mobilization are forbidden. The number of gendarmes, customs officers, foresters, and members of the police force must not exceed the number employed in a similar capacity in 1913. Educational and sporting clubs are forbidden to occupy themselves with military matters. Within two months of the final ratification of the treaty the air force of Austria was to be demolished. With the abolition of Austria's seacoast, the Austrian navy ceased to exist; 3 battleships, 3 light cruisers, 9 destroyers, 12 torpedo boats, a mine-layer, and 6 Danube monitors were surrendered to the allies. Two battleships were brought by the Italians to Venice, while the ships at Cattaro were handed to France.

JUSTICE.—The Supreme Court of Justice and Court of Cassation (Oberste Gerichts und Kassationshof) in Vienna is the highest court in the land. Besides there are 3 higher provincial courts (Oberlandesgerichte), 17 provincial and district courts (Landes und Kreisgerichte), and in connection with these the jury courts (Geschworenengerichte). There are likewise 269 county courts (Bezirksgerichte) and 2 special courts for commercial affairs, 4 for industry, 1 constitutional court, 1 administrative court, and 1 electoral court.

The law for unemployment insurance bears date 24 March, 1920. Under the Act one-third of the cost of unemployment insurance is to be borne by the State, two-thirds by employers and workers. Benefits under the scheme are not to be granted for more than twelve weeks.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—According to the census returns of 31 January, 1921, Austria contains 3,084,602 workers, of whom 33.3 per cent are engaged in industries; 31.9 per cent in agriculture and forestry; 12.1 per cent in commerce and trade; 8.8 per cent in civil service, and 2.6 per cent in professions. In 1919 the total acreage sown amounted to 4,084,121 acres. Of the total in 1919, 2,126,175 were in Lower Austria and 929,988 acres in Upper Austria. The chief products were (1920) as follows: Wheat, 374,032 acres, yielding 149,515 metric tons; rye, 688,687 acres, yielding 251,410 tons; oats, 658,740 acres, 187,730 tons; potatoes (1918), 290,697 acres, 584,996 tons; turnips, 87,285 acres, 536,183 tons. The number of animals in 1918 were: 270,000 horses, 858,000 cows, 223,000 oxen, 53,000 bulls, 499,000 calves. The production of lignite in 1920 was 2,387,996 tons; of anthracite, 133,173 tons. There were 11 anthracite mines worked in 1920 and 61 lignite mines. The railway statistics of Austria in 1919 were as follows: State lines and private companies worked by the state, 2,659 miles; private lines worked by the owners, 1,222 miles; state lines worked by private companies, 1.3 miles, making a total of 3,882 miles.

The Austrian standard coin is the krona, coined in denominations of 100, 20, and 10, but the currency is for the most part paper, including even 20-heller pieces. The Republic's share of the old debt of Austria-Hungary is not yet definitely fixed. On 30 September, 1920, it was estimated at 44,958,000 kronen, with an annual interest of 1,554,000 kronen. The debt of the new republic on that date amounted to 14,904,000 kronen, with an annual charge of 731,000,000 kronen. This does not include foreign credits for foods, etc., which is estimated at 17,500,000 kronen. The desperate financial situation in Austria can be understood in the rate of exchange of the Austrian crown, which at the end of the year 1920 had sunk to over 2,000 to the pound sterling. The present value of the Krone is .04 of the American dollar.

Whether Austria as created by the Treaty of St. Germain is capable of existence as an independent state is yet to be proved. Her lack of means to supply her economic needs, especially coal, rests upon the antagonism existing between her and the new states which formerly made up the monarchy, and which takes concrete shape in the erection of high customs barriers. The majority of factories in the realm are idle because high customs prevent the arrival of raw material and because there is no coal. The real difficulty lies in the violent racial hatred between Czechs and Germans. Europe and America can do much for the rehabilitation of Austria, but outside of this, her future depends on one thing, whether the Succession States (the new States formed out of the old monarchy) can be induced to forego their hostility sufficiently to supply her with coal, foodstuffs and raw material.

When it is remembered that this small state, with an area of barely 30,000 square miles and about 6,000,000 inhabitants, has to pay its civil service 14,110,000 kronen half-yearly, that its expenditure in cheapening foodstuffs amounts to 10,400,000 kronen, and that the losses on the foreign exchange and interest payment of debt amount to 23,520,000 kronen, it can be understood why the finance commission entrusted with the economic restoration of Austria is justified in demanding, first and foremost, the reduction of the personnel of the civil service, the gradual abolition of food subsidies, and a more rational management of state-owned industrial concerns, before giving credit grants for consolidating the new Bank of Issue and stabilizing the currency. Great Britain, France, Rumania, and Serbia have accepted a delay of twenty years in pressing liens rising from the priority of payment of reparations and other credits.

HISTORY (1908-1920).—In 1908 Austria utilized an alleged Pan-Serb conspiracy as a pretext for annexing Bosnia and Herzegovina. The annexation roused the deepest indignation in Serbia, for the population in those two provinces was mostly Serbian. It drew upon Austria the hostility of Russia and Serbia, and gave impetus to the formation of a new and formidable power on her borders. An Austro-Turkish convention was later concluded (1909), in which Austria renounced the rights she had acquired in respect of the Sanjak of Novi Bazar through the Berlin treaty, guaranteed the free exercise of religion in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the payment of an indemnity as an equivalent for vakuf (Moslem religious property).

On 28 June, 1914, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, nephew of the aged Emperor-King Francis Joseph and heir to the Hapsburg crowns, was assassinated, together with his wife, in the streets of the Bosnian city of Serajevo by youthful Serb conspirators. The outrage caused an instantaneous outburst of indignation throughout Austria-Hungary, especially when the official Austrian investigation indicated that the plot was hatched with the connivance of at least two officials of Serbia. A week after the Serajevo assassination, a conference of German and Austrian dignitaries was held at Potsdam. Provided with secret assurances of Germany's unqualified support, Austria-Hungary presented to Serbia, on 23 July, 1914, an ultimatum, calling upon her to suppress anti-Austrian publications and societies, to discharge such government employees as the Austro-Hungarian Government would accuse of anti-Austrian propaganda, to exclude anti-Austrian teachers and text-books from the Serbian schools, and to accept the collaboration in Serbia of representatives of the Austro-Hungarian Government for the suppression of the subversive movement, and to signify unconditional acceptance of these and the other Austro-Hungarian demands within forty-eight hours.

Russia, France, and Great Britain endeavored to obtain from Austria an extension of the time limit of the ultimatum in order that the whole question might be submitted to general international co-operation, but Austria-Hungary was committed and sharply declined the request. On 25 July Serbia replied to the ultimatum, promising to comply with such demands as did not seem to impair her independence and sovereignty, and offering to refer all disputed points of The Hague tribunal or to a conference of the Great Powers. The Austrian Government pronounced the reply evasive and unsatisfactory, broke off all diplomatic relations with Serbia, and started the mobilization of her army. To the Russian view it was obvious that Austria-Hungary was planning to deprive Serbia of independence and to annihilate Russian influence in southeastern Europe. On the other hand the German Government insisted that the quarrel was one which concerned Austria-Hungary and Serbia alone and opposed the repeated efforts of Russian, British, French, and even Italian diplomats to refer the quarrel to an international Congress or Hague tribunal. Unequivocally Germany declared that if Russia should come to the assistance of Serbia, she would support Austria-Hungary with all the armed forces at her command. On 28 July, 1914, exactly a month after the archduke's assassination, Austria-Hungary formally declared war against Serbia.

Russia immediately began to mobilize her army and when she refused to comply with Germany's demand to demobilize, war was declared between the two countries. Germany then declared war on France, who was in sympathy with Russia. Thus within a week of the declaration of hostilities by Austria-Hungary against Serbia, four Great Powers were in a state of war—Germany and Austria-Hungary against Russia and France. Belgium was invaded, at which violation of neutrality Great Britain protested and was soon involved in the struggle. On 6 August Austria-Hungary declared war on Russia. On the following day Montenegro joined Serbia against Austria-Hungary. On 13 August a state of war existed between Austria-Hungary on one hand, and France and Great Britain on the other.

The Great War originated as a struggle on the part of Austria-Hungary and Germany against the "Slavic Peril," against the great Slav empire of Russia and the small Slav kingdoms of Serbia and Montenegro, but from the beginning of hostilities, Teutonic defense against Russia was of minor interest to Germany as compared with the attack on Belgium and France. Thus Austria-Hungary had to bear the brunt of the struggle with Russia. As a military power she was far less efficient than Germany. She was a hodge-podge of quarrelsome nationalities, and now she had to wage war on the Bosnian front against Serbia and Montenegro, to keep a reserve force at Trieste and in the Trentino against the possible intervention of Italy, as well as to defend Galicia. Russia was slow on the field, and Austria-Hungary decided that the best method of defending Galicia was an attack on Russian Poland before the Russians were fully mobilized.

Accordingly, two Austro-Hungarian armies, numbering 300,000 men each, were collected in Galicia early in August, 1914; and on 1-2 September the critical battle of Lemberg was fought. Owing to defective Austrian generalship the Russians entered the city in triumph, giving it the Slavic name of Lvov. A new army under the Archduke Joseph Ferdinand was then put in the field from the Vistula to Lubin. On 6-10 September the combined Austrian armies were completely routed. At this critical moment Field Marshal von Hindenburg was put in command of all the German and Austro-Hungarian forces in the East. His first offensive, however, failed, and the Austrian army was forced back to Cracow, 19 October. In January, 1915, an Austrian counter-offensive was launched, its failure culminating in the surrender of Premysl to the Russians, 22 March. The Serbian campaign was also unsuccessful. In May, Italy denounced her treaty of alliance (1882, 1912) with Austria, and the Italian offensive against Austria commenced. The Austro-German forces under Field Marshal von Mackensen recovered nearly all of Galicia 1915, successfully invaded Serbia, and set about the conquest of Montenegro and Albania. In 1916 the Austrian offensive against Italy was definitely checked. Owing to the pressure of the Allied blockade, the food situation became alarming and it was doubtful if the country, weakened by famine, would be able to withstand concerted pressure against its frontiers. On 27 August, 1916, Rumania declared war against Austria-Hungary, but in three months was completely subjugated by the Germans.

The Russian monarchy then collapsed (1917) and the Russian troops were completely routed, freeing the Austro-German troops for another Italian drive. After varying successes, on 24-25 October, 1918, Italian armies smote the Austrians in the Monte Grappa region; a British unit attacked along the lower Piave, and a French unit took Monte Seisamol. The Austrian army fled, and Austria-Hungary, made overtures for peace, offering unconditional surrender. The irretrievable disaster of the Austro-Hungarian armies led swiftly to the dissolution of the Dual Monarchy. The government at Vienna resigned and the empire fast disintegrated into independent states. Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia emerged at once. The German-Austrian Republic was proclaimed on 12 November, 1918. The treaty of peace between Austria and the allied and associated powers was signed at St. Germain-en-Laye on 10 September, 1919.

The dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian Empire left the small German nucleus around which that great congeries of states had been built up during many centuries in a pitiful condition. The breaking away of the Polish, Czechoslovak, Yugoslav, Hungarian, and other fragments of the Hungarian dominions, left only the core of Austria still attached to the imperial capital and that core was essentially German and was composed of the two historic provinces of Upper and Lower Austria. Over such a state the leading Social Democrats of Vienna established their authority with Dr. Karl Renner as provisional prime minister. By forbidding the union of Bohemia with the German Austrian republic, the allies forced that country to join the newly formed Czechoslovak state. The small German-speaking district of Hungary which had been given to Austria by the Peace Conference was established as a separate province. The province of Vorarlberg desired to be detached from Vienna, voted for union with Switzerland, but was overruled by the Supreme Council at Paris, which desired to preserve the integrity of Austria, as established by the treaty of St. Germain. To Poland was apportioned the Duchy of Teschen in Austrian Silesia, and part of Galicia, including Cracow and Lemberg; to Ukraine another part of Galicia; to Rumania, the extreme southeastern part of Austria (Bukowina), with Czernowitz, and Transylvania. Slavonia, Croatia, Dalmatia, Carniola, Bosnia, Herzegovina, parts of Hungary and of Dalmatia joined Serbia to form Yugoslavia. Trentino was ceded to Italy. By the treaty of Rapallo, signed on 12 November, 1920, Gorz, Gradiška, and Trieste, all of Istria, and a large part of Carniola passed to Italy. On 10 October, 1920, the plebiscite in Zone A, the Klagenfurt district of Carinthia resulted in an overwhelming majority in favor of Austria. According to the terms of the Treaty of St. Germain, if that zone went in favor of Austria, there would be no vote in Zone B, which would automatically revert to Austria. When the result of the plebiscite was known, the Yugoslav troops marched into the zone, but evacuated in a month by the orders of the Supreme Council. According to the treaty of peace between the allied and associated powers signed at Trianon, 4 June, 1920, Western Hungary goes to Austria, much to the opposition of the Hungarians. In May, 1921, Salzburg voted for union with Germany, but there is doubt as to its realization.

Autun, DIOCESE OF (AUGUSTODUNENSIS; cf. C. E., II-144a), comprises the entire Department of Saône-et-Loire in France, and is suffragan of Lyons. Rt. Rev. Henri-Raymond Villard was appointed to this see 13 July, 1906, and filled it until his death 8 December, 1914. Under his administration the thousandth anniversary of the Abbey of Cluny was celebrated 10-12 September, 1910, as well as the centenary of Louis Veuillot, at Montmartre, November, 1913. In 1914, on the feast of the Holy Rosary, Bishop Villard made a vow to have a Mass perpetually celebrated in the cathedral every day of the month of May, for the intention of France, and particularly for the soldiers killed during the war. Upon the death of Bishop Villard the Rt. Rev. Désiré-Hyacinthe Berthoin, b. at Chatte, 14 October, 1855, was appointed to succeed him, 1 June, 1915. Bishop Berthoin died 24 February, 1922, and the see is now vacant. By 1920 statistics there are 604,446 Catholics in this diocese, 813 priests, 65 first class parishes, 458 succursal parishes, and 68 vicariates with salaries formerly paid by the state.

Auxiliary Bishop (cf. C. E., II-145), one who is appointed as coadjutor to a residential bishop on account of age, ill-health, or the multiplicity of matters requiring episcopal attention, yet who does not enjoy the right of succession. (See COADJUTOR BISHOP.)

Avellino, DIOCESE OF (ABELINENSIS; cf. C. E., II-149d), in the province of Naples, Italy, is suffragan of Benevento. Bishop Angelini, who came to this see in 1896, d. 4 February, 1908, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Padula, b. 1847, appointed Bishop of Bovino 24 March, 1898, transferred to this diocese 2 August, 1908. In 1920 the diocese counted 107,598 Catholics, 34 parishes, 160 secular, and 21 regular clergy, 25 seminarians, 90 churches or chapels, 18 brothers, and 65 sisters.

Aversa, DIOCESE OF (AVERSANENSIS; cf. C. E., II-151d), in the province of Caserta, Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Settimio Caracciolo di Torchiarolo, b. at Naples, 1862, was appointed Bishop of Alife 24 March, 1898, and transferred to this see 10 April, 1911, to succeed Bishop Vento, d. 29 September, 1910. In 1920 there were 160,000 Catholics in this diocese, 55 parishes, 350 secular, and 300 regular priests, 100 seminarians, 377 churches or chapels, and 20 sisters.

Aviators.—By a decree of 24 March, 1920, Our Lady of Loretto was proclaimed patroness of aviators by the Holy See; at the same time the Congregation of Rites issued a special formula of blessing for flying machines, which has now been inserted in the Roman Ritual. The choice of Our Lady of Loretto as special protectress of aviators recalls the ancient tradition that her home at Nazareth, in which the Incarnation took place, was miraculously carried by angels through the air in safety to Loretto on the Italian shore of the Adriatic, where it is still held in veneration.

Acta Ap. Sedis (1920), 175.

Avignon, ARCHDIOCESE OF (AVENIONENSIS; cf. C. E., II-159c), comprises the Department of Vaucluse, France. Its present archbishop, Most Rev. Gaspar-Maire Latty, b. in Cagnes, 1844, was appointed Bishop of Châlons 21 May, 1894, and promoted to this see 15 October, 1907. By 1920 statistics the total Catholic population of the territory numbers 238,656, of whom 49,304 are in Avignon. There are 29 first class parishes, 144 succursal parishes, 69 vicariates, 315 secular priests, 1 higher seminary, and 1 ecclesiastical school.

Avila, DIOCESE OF (ABULENSIS; cf. C. E., II-160c), is suffragan of Valladolid, in Spain. Bishop Beltrán y Asensio, appointed to this see in 1898, d. 3 November, 1917, was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Enrique Pla y Deniel, b. at Barcelona, 1876, appointed bishop 4 December, 1918. The Catholic population of the diocese numbers 254,000 by 1920 statistics, and there are 393 parishes, 418 priests, 393 churches, and 245 chapels, 37 convents, 127 religious, and 425 sisters.

Ayacucho (or GUAMANGA), DIOCESE OF (AYACUQUENSIS DE HUAMANGA; cf. C. E., II-164a), in Peru, is suffragan of Lima. Rt. Rev. Fidelis Olivas Escudero, b. at Pomabamba, 1849, appointed bishop of this diocese 19 April, 1900, now fills the see. By 1920 statistics there are 254,000 Catholics in the diocese, 393 parishes, 418 priests, 393 churches, 245 chapels, 37 convents, 127 religious, and 425 sisters.

Azores (cf. C. E., II-168a).—The census of 1911 gives the population of the island as 243,376, a density of 264 per square mile. The estimates of the population of each island vary greatly, but the most trustworthy seem to be as follows:

Island	Area per sq. mile	Population	Density per sq. mile
Corvo	7	746	106
Flores	57	7,233	127
Fayal	64	20,461	319
Pico	175	21,966	125
São Jorge	40	14,309	357
Graciosa	17	7,747	455
São Miguel	297	116,619	392
Santa Maria	42	6,268	149
Terceira	239	48,029	215

There are only three towns with a population of more than 3,000; Ponta Delgada (São Miguel) about 17,000; Angra (Terceira) about 10,000; and Horta (Fayal) about 6,000.

PRESENT CONDITIONS.—The separation of Church and State effected by the Republican Government in Portugal applied also to the Azores, which are an integral part of the republic. For ecclesiastical details see ANGRA, DIOCESE OF; FUNCHAL, DIOCESE OF.

The chief export of the Azores is the pineapple, which forms a large part of the exports of São Miguel. Next in importance are sugar, tobacco, and beans, followed by maize and alcohol. There is but one line of steamers plying between Lisbon and the Azores with a fleet not exceeding three ships. While there are seven Portuguese banks with branches or agencies, there are no less than thirty American banking establishments, besides five English.

In recent years the Azores have come a great deal under American influence, not because they are on the natural highway from Europe to America, but because a great number of emigrants from the Azores to the United States return home in sympathy with American ideas. After Portugal came into the war as an ally of the Entente Powers, the Azores were very valuable as a supply depot and coaling station for the Allied fleets. The harbor of Ponta Delgada being the best in the Central Atlantic afforded a useful rendezvous; during the year 1917-18 the American armies made great use of it, and the aerodrome they established near Ponta Delgada was able to do good service in the protection of trade. During the war Ponta Delgada was once bombarded by a German submarine.

Baalbek, DIOCESE OF HELIOPOLITANA; cf. C. E., II-177a), in Syria, known to the Greek and Latin writers as Heliopolis. It is the see of a Maronite and a Melchite bishop, and for the Maronites is an archdiocese. There are at present (1922) 40,000 Catholics belonging to this Rite, 173 priests, and 112 churches or chapels, presided over by Most Rev. John Mourad, consecrated 12 June, 1892. He resides at Aramoun-de-Kesrouan, in Lebanon.

The diocese for the Greek-Melchite Rite is administered by Rt. Rev. Agapios Maalouf, b. at Zahle, 1846, appointed bishop 29 March, 1896. His residence is at Baalbek, to which he returned in 1918, after having been driven from his diocese by the Turks. There are 8,450 Catholics belonging to this Rite, 9 parishes, 4 secular priests and 10 regular clergy, 10 churches, and 3 schools. Heliopolis is a titular see for the Latin Rite.

Babylon, PATRIARCHATE OF (BABYLONENSIS; cf. C. E., II-179a), of the Chaldean Rite, has its seat at Mossul where the patriarch resides. The present patriarch, His Excellency Emmanuel Joseph Thomas, b. at Alkosh 1852, was appointed Bishop of Seert 4 September, 1890, and promoted to the Patriarchate of Babylon 8 July, 1900. In 1910 he was named administrator apostolic of Akra, and in 1920 he went to Paris to watch over the interests of his people at the Peace Conference. The patriarch has a patriarchal vicar at Mossul, one at Jerusalem, and one at Adana. By 1920 statistics there are 31,600 Chaldean Catholics in this patriarchate, 46 secular and 39 regular clergy, 27 churches or chapels, and 17 schools.

Badajoz, DIOCESE OF (PACENSIS; cf. C. E. II-193d), in that district of Spain called Civitas Pacensis, because it was once thought to be the Pax Julia or Pax Augusta of the Romans. Rt. Rev. Adolphe Perez y Munoz, appointed to this see 18 July, 1913, was transferred to Cordova 11 July, 1920, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Raymond Perez y Rodriguez, appointed 31 August of the same year. According to 1920 statistics this diocese comprises a Catholic population of 648,000, 154 parishes, 14 archpriests, 376 priests, 154 churches, 251 chapels, 56 convents with 153 religious, and 520 sisters.

Baden (cf. C. E., II-194b), Free State of, formerly a grand duchy, now a republic and a component state of Germany; bounded by Switzerland, Alsace, the Palatinate, Hesse, Bavaria, and Wurtemberg, covering an area of 5,819 sq. miles. According to the census of 1 December, 1910, the population numbered 2,142,833, including 1,271,015 Catholics, 821,236 Evangelicals, 7,821 Old Catholics, 2,154 Lutherans, 1,765 Reformed, 2,209 of various Evangelical beliefs, 25,896 Jews, 4,833 others of various religious persuasions.

In 1919 the population was 1,051,405 males and 1,157,098 females, the density being 379.5 per sq. mile. The principal cities are Mannheim, 229,576; Karlsruhe, 135,952; Freiburg, 87,946; Pforzheim, 73,839; Heidelberg, 60,831; Constance, 30,119.

On 22 November, 1918, the Grand Duke abdicated and the provisional government proclaimed Baden a republic. The new Constitution was determined by the National Assembly, which met on 15 January, 1919, and which was elected on the basis of equal, secret, direct, universal suffrage, with proportionate representation of all males and females. According to this Constitution of 21 March, 1919, the Free State of Baden is a Republic and a component part of Germany. There is no State church, but religion is taught in the schools. The initiative and referendum have been adopted. There is only one Chamber, elected for four years, which nominates the President of the Cabinet (State President). The Cabinet consists of 5 ministers and 4 state-councillors.

Baden has 2 universities (Heidelberg and Freiburg), 1 commercial high school (Mannheim), 1 technical high school, 12 high schools for girls, 12 normal schools, and several technical and special schools.

Bagamoyo, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (BAGAMOYENSIS; cf. C. E., II-202b), in East Africa. On 23 November, 1918, Bagamoyo, a former possession of the German Empire, surrendered and is now divided between the British and Belgians. Owing to the ravages of the war this once flourishing Vicariate Apostolic suffered untold losses and was threatened with ruin. Thirteen priests, 15 brothers, and 16 nuns were obliged to leave the mission. Some of them died; others, owing to their German nationality, were requested to leave the country; two missions were entirely laid waste, others were partly demolished, and 200 schools were partly destroyed. It was impossible to replace those who had been called away, and as the revenues decreased considerably it was difficult to continue the work. With much labor and expense the rubber industry had been established and was beginning to thrive, but this too was ruined by the war, and it will take years of labor to re-establish it.

The population now (1922) numbers 400,000 inhabitants, of whom 21,180 are Catholics. Prior to the war they numbered 26,000. There are 14 principal mission stations, 14 churches and chapels, 20 secondary mission stations, 21 priests of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost, 5 brothers, 16 sisters, who belong to the congregation of Daughters of Mary; 365 native catechists who instruct the adults and the children in the rural schools. In each mission there is a primary school, and in the outlying districts there are a number of rural schools situated at a walking distance of one or two days. The government does not support the schools nor does it care for the sick. The difficult work of clearing the land is being carried on. Islamism is spread throughout the country, especially along the coast. For many years the Church Mission Society has been active in the vicariate. The University Mission no longer has any missions, but conducts several rural schools. A small hospital has been opened at Bagamoyo and at each of the fourteen missions there is an orphanage and a clinic with medical service, and several workshops. Nearly all the brothers have left and the work has progressed slowly in consequence. The first vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Franz Xavier Vogt, of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost, is still administrator of the vicariate. He was born at Merlenheim, 3 December, 1870, elected 25 July, 1906, consecrated at Knechtseden and made vicar apostolic of Bagamoyo 6 December following.

Bagdad, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BABYLONENSIS-LATINORUM, BABYLONENSIS-SYRORUM; cf. C. E., II-202b), is a metropolitan see for both the Latin and the Syrian Rites. It is situated in Mesopotamia, Asiatic Turkey, and for the Latin Rite comprises the missions of Bagdad or Babylon, Mardin and Mossul. The Latin see is directly subject to the Holy See and has its episcopal residence at Mossul. Most Rev. Francis Berré, a Dominican, and superior of the mission at Mossul, was appointed Archbishop of this see 9 August, 1921. Archbishop Berré, who has been in the Orient for over thirty years, was taken prisoner by the Turks during the World War and saw the destruction of a great part of the work which he had accomplished. In 1919 he accompanied Cardinal Dubois on a trip through the Orient and rendered such great service by his knowledge of Oriental people and affairs that the French Government conferred upon him the Cross of the Legion of Honor. Upon his return to Mossul he began rebuilding the ruins left by the war, giving his attention particularly to the schools and Syro-Chaldean seminary, which had played such an important part in the religious progress of the territory, and he was occupied in this work when his appointment came. By 1922 statistics there are in all about 60,000 Catholics of different rites under the jurisdiction of this see.

For the Syrian Rite this archdiocese comprises Bagdad and Bassorah and (1920 statistics) has a population of 1,300 Syrian Catholics, besides 55,000 Jews, 2,000,000 Mussulmans, and 600 Christians. There are 5 priests, 2 churches, and a few Carmelite missionaries of the Latin Rite. The present incumbent is Most Rev. Athanasius George Dallal, b. in Lebanon, 1877, studied at the College of Propaganda in Rome, ordained 1900, and appointed Archbishop of Bagdad 14 September, 1912, succeeding Archbishop Noury, who had retired.

The present Visitor Apostolic and Regent of the Apostolic Delegation of Bagdad for Mesopotamia, Kurdistan, and Armenia Minor is Mgr. Adrian Smetz. The city of Bagdad, called at the time of its foundation Medinet-es-Selam, or City of Peace, is now the capital of the kingdom of Irak. The Christians number about 13,500, divided as follows: Chaldeans, 9,000; Armenians, 3,000, of whom about 1,200 are Catholics; Greeks, 100, of whom 40 are Catholics; Syrian Catholics, 600; Latin, 800.

The Armenian dioceses of the delegation were destroyed during the war, and it is not yet known how many of the faithful are left. All that remain of the Syrian diocese of Gezireh are four priests and a handful of Catholics. Of the nine Chaldean dioceses, Akra had ceased to exist before the war; Gezireh and Seez were destroyed during it, while Diarbekir and Mardin are reduced to their respective bishops, a few priests and several hundred Catholics.

The charitable works include 2 orphanages for boys, one founded and maintained by the pope in the house of the Delegation, with 50 inmates; the other in Amarah in charge of the Carmelite Fathers, with 35 inmates; 3 orphanages for girls, 1 in Bagdad under the Sisters of the Presentation, inmates 70; 1 in Basrah under the same sisters, inmates 25; 1 in Mossul in charge of the Dominican Fathers, inmates 30. There are 35 students in the seminary of the Chaldean Patriarchate. The approximate Catholic population of the Delegation is 55,000.

Bagnorea, DIOCESE OF (BALNEOREGIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-203b), in the province of Rome, Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. After the promotion of Bishop Rousset, who filled this see from 1906 until 14 September, 1909, the see was left vacant until the appointment of Rt. Rev. Emilio Poletti, 28 August, 1912. Bishop Poletti died 17 December, 1918, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Giovanni Battista-Lodovico Antomelli, O.F.M., b. in Mezzano, 1863, appointed titular Bishop of Leptis Magna 23 February, 1913, and vicar apostolic of Lybia, and transferred to this see 10 March, 1919.

During the World War the diocesan seminary was used as a shelter for refugees, and many priests of the diocese distinguished themselves at the front. The 1922 statistics give the population as 35,000, and credit the diocese with 28 parishes, 110 churches, 50 secular and 20 regular clergy, 3 monasteries for women, 3 convents for men and 6 for women, 16 brothers, 100 religious women, 1 seminary, and 20 seminarians. Among the institutions are 2 elementary schools with 8 teachers and 80 pupils, all other schools being dependent on the State; 3 homes, 3 asylums, and 2 hospitals. An important event in the recent progress of the diocese was the founding of an industrial school for dressmaking and tailoring by Rev. Don Enrico Bartoloni. One clerical and four lay societies are organized, and a Catholic periodical is published in the diocese.

Bahama Islands (cf. C. E., II-204b).—The following are the principal islands, their area and their population, according to the latest available census:

	Area sq. miles	Population
		Males	Females
Abaco and Cays.....	776	2,234	2,229
Acklins Island	120	725	1,008
Andros Island	1,600	3,875	3,670

San Salvador	160	2,090	2,982
Watlings Island	60	261	356
		24,213	35,126

Of these about 85% are colored. The estimated population on 1 January, 1921, was 56,385. In 1919 the birthrate was 34.4 and the deathrate 21.6.

ECONOMIC SITUATION.—In 1919 the total imports into the Bahamas were valued at $2,630,455, 81% of which came from the United States; the exports, valued at $1,864,096, went mostly to that country. In 1920 there were 255 grants of Crown land made during the year, the area being 1,327 acres. Approximately a total of 372,204 acres in the colony have been sold by the Crown to private persons, and 242,795,000 remain ungranted.

EDUCATION.—In 1919 the teaching staff employed by the Board of Education consisted of 50 principal teachers, 4 assistant teachers, 4 pupil teachers, 190 monitors, 8 sewing teachers, 4 students in training, and 30 employed in aided schools. The total numbers receiving primary education are given as follows for 1920: Board schools, 5,858; aided private schools, 875; Church of England, 1,031; Catholic, 461; Baptist, 86; private schools, 383; total, 8,694.

Primary education is compulsory between the ages of six and fourteen years, is provided by the Government, and is controlled by a Board of Education, consisting of twelve members appointed annually by the governor. The board receives an annual grant from the legislature of £6,000, out of which repairs are made and teachers' salaries are paid. The cost of education is enhanced by the breaking up of the population into many small settlements, long distances apart, on the various islands, themselves separated by many miles. There is still no state provision for secondary schools, but private organizations connected with religious bodies provide higher education, as follows: Queen's College and Preparatory School (Wesleyan), 132 pupils; Nassau Grammar School (Church of England), 18 pupils; St. Hilda's High School (Church of England), 54 pupils; St. Francis Xavier's Academy (Catholic), 50 pupils. There is also a night school with 22 pupils.

RELIGION.—The ecclesiastical returns in the Blue Book of the Bahamas give the number of churches and chapels as follows: Anglican, 88; Wesleyan, 38; Bahamas Baptist Union, 9; Native Baptist Union, 46; Baptist Mission, 12; Presbyterian, 1; Catholic, 3; African Methodist Episcopal Zion, 1. The Bahamas belong ecclesiastically to the Archdiocese of New York, and statistics have not varied in the last decade. There is only one Benedictine Father in the islands, besides the Vicar Forane (1921).

GOVERNMENT AND RECENT HISTORY.—The Governor and Commander-in-chief is assisted by an Executive Council of 9, and a representative assembly of 29 members, electors being required to have small property qualifications.

A contingent was raised in the Bahamas by voluntary enlistments for service at the European front in 1915, to be kept up at a strength of 200 men, funds for the purpose to be provided by voluntary subscription and legislative appropriations. The first draft of 30 men embarked on 9 September, 1915, for Jamaica, en route to England, followed subsequently in November of the same year and in May, 1916, by drafts of 105 and 65 respectively, making a total of 200 for the Bahamas unit of the British West Indies Regiment. Reinforcements to the extent of 100% per annum were guaranteed, the Government bearing the whole cost of transport, separation allowances, pensions, gratuities and disability allowances. The contingent was composed almost entirely of colored men. They served under Sir Edmund Allenby, commander-in-chief of the forces in Egypt, against the Turks, and also did some remarkable work in France, being employed in all the main operations that took place after their arrival, including the battles of Somme, Arras, Messines, and Ypres. The economic effect of the war on the colonies was shown in the increasing demand for sisal and sponge, the two principal commodities of the Bahamas, and the interruption of regular communication between the United States and the Bahamas.

Bahr-el-Gazal, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE BAHR-EL-GAZAL), in Sudanese Africa. The vast territory comprised under this name belonged to the Vicariate Apostolic of Sudan until 30 May, 1913, when it was divided into two parts, the first remaining a vicariate under the name of Khartum, while the other half was made a prefecture apostolic. On 13 June, 1917, this latter was made a vicariate, bounded on the north by 10° latitude, on the east by the Anglo-Ethiopian frontier, on the west by the Anglo-Belgian frontier, and on the south by the White Nile and Lake Albert. It is entrusted to the Sons of the Sacred Heart of Verona, the present and first vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Antonio Stoppani, titular Bishop of Stratonic. No statistics have as yet been issued.

Bailly, EMMANUEL, superior general of the Augustinians of the Assumption, b. in Paris, 4 August, 1842; d. there 23 November, 1917. He was the son of M. Bailly, founder of the Conferences of St. Vincent de Paul, and a participator in all the works of the Church in France that sprang up between 1820-40. Emmanuel entered the Society of the Augustinians of the Assumption at Nîmes in 1861, seven months after his brother Vincent de Paul (q.v.), was professed two years later, and in 1865 was ordained. He was successively superior of the College at Nîmes, master of novices, procurator general and vicar general, succeeding M. Picard as superior general in 1903. The following year Père Bailly was made a member of the permanent committee of international Eucharistic Congresses, and director general of the Association de Notre Dame de Salut, and of the National Pilgrimage to Lourdes. In 1915 he became consulor of the Sacred Congregation of Seminaries and Studies. Gifted with an enlightened mind, great eloquence and a very ardent spirit of faith, he spent himself unstintedly for the prosperity of his order, the good of the Church and the glory of his country. During his generalate he made several visits to missions of the Assumption in England, in North and South America, and in the Orient. The destruction of the latter and the mobilization of many of his religious during the World War was a cause of intense grief to his apostolic soul and did much to hasten his end. To sweetness of character he united solidity of principle, and at a particularly difficult time directed his congregation with wisdom and zeal.

Bailly, VINCENT DE PAUL, editor and publicist, b. at Berteaucourt-les-Thennes, Somme, 2 December, 1832; d. in Paris, 2 December, 1912. He was the son of Emmanuel-Joseph Bailly, founder and first president of the Conferences of St. Vincent de Paul, and was born into an atmosphere of love for souls and ardor for charitable works. Educated at first by private teachers under the enlightened direction of his father, he later attended the Lycée Louis le Grand, where in 1850 he received the degree of Bachelor of Science. In 1852 he entered the bureau of telegraphy in Paris, and was transferred to Nîmes, where he lived at the college of the Assumptionists and taught mathematics in his leisure hours. Père d'Alyon, founder of the Congregation of the Augustinians of the Assumption, was a close friend of his family. Returning to the central bureau three years later he became the private telegrapher of the Emperor Napoleon III, and was entrusted with many important missions, private and diplomatic. As an aid to his international correspondence he studied law, and a brilliant future in the ministry seemed to open up before him, but he had other ambitions. On 20 October, 1860, he entered the Congregation of the Assumption, and received the habit from Père d'Alyon. His brother Emmanuel (q.v.) followed him into the Congregation seven months later. After his ordination in 1863, he was made director of the College at Nîmes, a post he held until 1867, when he went to Rome as chaplain with the Volunteers from Nîmes who rallied to the defense of the Holy Father, and were formed into a company under Captain Wyart, later Dom Sebastian, Abbot General of the Reformed Cistercians. On his return in 1869, Père Bailly was attached to the Paris house of the Congregation, which later became the center of so many activities then in their infancy, and where he worked under Père Picard. In 1870 Père Bailly served as chaplain with the troops during the siege of Metz, and did untold good among the soldiers in the field and in the hospitals.

In the great work of Christian reconstruction undertaken with rare vision, by the Fathers of the Assumption in France, Père Bailly was one of the leading spirits. He became secretary general of the Union des associations ouvrières catholiques, a union resulting from l'Association de Notre Dame de Sault, founded by the Assumptionist Fathers; director of the national pilgrimages to the Holy Land begun in 1883 and ended for him in 1910; editor of "La Pèlerin, founder of "La Croix," and editor or collaborator in the multiple publications of the Maison de la Bonne Presse, nearly all due to his creative genius and devouring zeal in spreading the kingdom of Christ. His principal work, "La Croix," to which he contributed under the pseudonym "le Moine," became the most powerful organ of Catholic opinion in France. Original, alert, vigorous, purely Catholic and the organ of no political party, it made a bold and courageous fight against free Masonry and anti-clericalism, and the nefarious laws promulgated by a Government which was completely under their control. When, in 1900, by order of Leo XIII, the Congregation resigned the publication into secular hands, Père Bailly submitted unquestioningly to the sacrifice demanded of him in the cause of peace. The years of exile (1900-06), after the expulsion of the Congregation from France, were spent in Rome, in Belgium, in founding the English houses of the Congregation, in visiting the missions in the Orient and in giving retreats. On his return to Paris he lived in an apartment in the Rue Goethe, and devoted much of his time to his literary work. In 1912 in spite of severe illness, he attended the general chapter of the congregation in Luxemburg, dying a few months later in Paris. He received the last sacraments from his brother Père Emmanuel, his superior general. It is to Père Bailly's intense spiritual life that we have to look for the explanation of his prodigious achievements for the glory of God and the defence of the Faith. His spirit of faith truly moved mountains and his name, coupled with that of Louis Veuillot, sums up Catholic journalism in France in the nineteenth century.

Baker, ELIZABETH ANSTICE, convert and writer, b. in London, 1849; d. there 16 October, 1914. She was the fourth daughter of the Hon. John Baker, and sister of Sir Richard Baker, K. C. M. G., K. C. In her youth her family moved temporarily to one of England's distant colonies, where she doubtless imbibed the independence of thought and breadth of view that in all her intellectual wanderings saved her from mental servility to the many systems of philosophy and thought current at that time. She was received into the Church in Paris by Père Etienne, O. P. The story of her early life, her restless search for truth and her conversion are told in "A Modern Pilgrim's Progress," published in 1906, with introduction by Father Henry Sebastian Bowden (q.v.). It reveals considerable intellectual power, a clear forcible style, and at times great depths of feeling and has been a power for good. A later edition has a preface by Mgr. Benson (q.v.). Pope Leo XIII conferred on its author the cross Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice. Miss Baker was on the Committee of the Catholic Truth Society, the Catholic Women's League, Catholic Girls Protection and other societies, and her home in South Kensington was a center of constant occupations and interests for helping others.

Baker City, DIOCESE OF (BAKERIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-213d), in the State of Oregon, United States, comprises an area of 68,000 sq. miles. The first bishop, Rt. Rev. Charles J. O'Reilly, D. D., who came to the see in 1903, was transferred to Lincoln 20 March, 1918, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Joseph F. McGrath, D. D. Bishop McGrath was born at Aglish, diocese of Waterford, Ireland, 3 March, 1871, ordained a priest at Montreal, 21 December, 1895, made curate at St. Patrick's Church, Tacoma, 1907, and appointed bishop 21 December, 1918, consecrated 25 March of the following year. During the World War one priest of this diocese served as a chaplain and eleven of the men who entered the army gave up their lives.

By present (1921) statistics the total Catholic population of the diocese numbers 7,300, of whom 1,300 are English, 2,000 German, 1,700 Irish, 400 Portuguese, 500 Italians, 700 French, 250 Spanish, 150 Belgian, and 300 of other nationalities. There are 19 parishes, 39 missions, 53 churches, 17 secular and 10 regular clergy, 12 convents for women, 101 sisters, 3 seminarians, 7 academies, with 69 teachers and an attendance of 329 boys and 628 girls, and 1 normal school with 3 teachers and 20 pupils. The various religious orders established in the diocese are Capuchins, Franciscans, and Jesuits; Sisters of the Third Order of St. Dominic, Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary.

Balearic Islands (cf. C. E., II-221d).—On 1 January, 1920, the area of the Balearic Islands was 1,935 square miles, and the population 331,195 (171.1 per square mile). The islands form a separate military district of Spain and have a strong fortress at Mahon, also a new wireless station. For religious statistics see MAJORCA AND IVIZA, DIOCESE OF; MINORCA, DIOCESE OF.

Ballarat, DIOCESE OF (BALLARATENSIS; cf. C. E., II-223a), in Australia, suffragan of Melbourne. Rt. Rev. Joseph Higgins, translated to this see in 1905, died 16 September, 1915, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Daniel Foley, consecrated 24 August, 1916. According to the 1911 census this diocese comprises a Catholic population of 61,369. The religious orders established here at the present time (1922) are: men, Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer and the Christian Brothers; women, Sisters of the Blessed Virgin Mary, founded from Ireland, Sisters of Our Lady of Mercy, Brigidine Sisters, Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of the Good Samaritan, Sisters of the Presentation, and Sisters of St. John of God. The 1921 statistics credit this diocese with 166 churches, 64 secular and 7 regular clergy, 17 brothers, 221 nuns, 2 boarding schools for boys and 10 for girls, 12 secondary day schools, 59 primary schools, 1 home for the aged, 2 orphans' homes, and 5,211 children receiving Catholic education.

Baltimore, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BALTIMORENSIS; cf. C. E., II-228a), comprises 6,399 sq. miles of territory in Maryland and 64 sq. miles in the District of Columbia.

On 24 March, 1921, His Eminence James Cardinal

Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore from 1877, and the nation's most prominent churchman and citizen, died, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Michael J. Curley, former Bishop of St. Augustine, installed 30 November, 1921. In October, 1911, the diocese celebrated, with great pomp and ceremony, the golden jubilee of the cardinal's priesthood and the silver jubilee of his accession to the cardinalate, the celebration lasting one week. On 29 October, 1918, the golden jubilee of his elevation to the episcopate was celebrated quietly at St. Mary's Seminary, and on 20 February, 1919, a public celebration was held at the Franciscan Monastery, Brookland, Washington, D. C.

On 10 September, 1919, His Eminence Désiré Cardinal Mercier, Archbishop of Malines, Belgium, visited the Diocese of Baltimore and spent several days at the cardinal's residence.

On 23 September, 1920, the corner-stone of the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception chapel at the Catholic University was laid. The first yearly meeting of the Hierarchy of the United States, which has been inaugurated in recent years, was held in February, 1919.

Besides the cardinal many other prominent clergymen of the diocese of Baltimore have died within the last few years, among them Rev. Dr. Dennis J. Stafford (d. 30 January, 1908), pastor of St. Patrick's, Washington, and a noted Shakespearean student and lecturer; Rt. Rev. Charles Warren Currier, D. D. (d. 23 September, 1918), missionary bishop, lecturer and writer; Rt. Rev. Alfred A. Curtis, D. D. (d. 11 July, 1908), noted convert to the Church; Rt. Rev. Mgr. Dennis J. Flynn, D. D. (d. 7 July, 1911), president of Mt. St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Md.; Rev. Francis X. McKenna, S. S. (d. 22 May, 1917), president of St. Charles College, Catonsville, Md.; Mgr. W. H. Ketcham (d. 14 November, 1921), director Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions, Washington. Among the prominent laymen of the diocese deceased within recent years are: Mr. Edgar Gans (d. 20 September, 1914), prominent lawyer; Mr. Michael Jenkins (d. 7 September, 1915), trustee of Catholic University; Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte, (d. 28 June, 1921), former United States Attorney General, Secretary of the Navy, and trustee of the Catholic University; Hon. Edward Douglass White (d. 19 May, 1921), Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. During the World War twelve of the diocesan clergy served as chaplains, and 276 young men gave up their lives.

The total Catholic population of the diocese is 276,200 and includes the following races: negro (15,280), German (25,572), Italian (16,800), Lithuanian (8,000), Polish (19,679), Czechoslovak (7,000). Since 1907, 23 new parishes have been established and at the present time there are in all: parishes, 151; churches, 227; missions, 76; monasteries for men, 3; convents for women, 9, with total number of sisters 503; secular priests, 290; regular clergy, 325; lay brothers, 108; nuns and sisters, 1,512; seminaries, 17, with 940 seminarians; universities, 3, with 300 professors and a total attendance of 2,962; colleges for men, 9, with 155 teachers and an attendance of 2,033; colleges for women, 3, with 117 teachers and an attendance of 825; academies, 14, with 195 teachers and an attendance of: boys 579, girls 1,302; normal schools, 3, with 47 teachers and an attendance of 344; training schools, 2, with 19 teachers and an attendance of 84; elementary schools, 97, with 755 teachers and an attendance of 31,802; industrial schools, 4, with 59 teachers and an attendance of 1,151.

Missionary work is carried on by the Mission Helpers of the Sacred Heart, and among the institutions of the diocese are: 2 homes for aged poor, 2 for self-supporting girls, and 1 for boys; 12 infant and orphan asylums with 1,418 children; 8 hospitals for the sick, 1 for the insane; 3 Houses of the Good Shepherd; 2 settlement houses under the auspices of the National Catholic Welfare Council, and 4 day nurseries. The industrial schools, orphan asylums, hospitals and houses of the Good Shepherd receive aid from state and city for subjects officially committed. Such public institutions as the Walter Reed Government Hospital, Washington Asylum, Soldiers' Home, and St. Elizabeth's for the Insane, in Washington, Bay View Hospital in Baltimore, Maryland Sanatoria, and Eudowood and Sabillasville, Md., admit the ministry of priests of the diocese. The various organizations among the clergy are: the Clerical Benevolent Association and the Association of Prayers for Deceased Priests. Among the laity the usual religious fraternal and parish organizations and societies are conducted. The "Baltimore Review" is the diocesan official weekly.

Bamako, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE BAMAKO), in French Sudan, Northern Africa. By a Decree of 2 July 1921 the Vicariate Apostolic of the Sahara Desert was divided into two vicariates one of which is Bamako. It comprises the territory in the northern part of the old vicariate extending from the 5° West, to a lake south of the River Niger in the city of Timbuctoo, and from here, to the boundary line of the three civil departments of Bandiagara, Dedugu and Bobodiulasso. All territory west of this line is included in this vicariate, entrusted to the White Fathers. Rt. Rev. Emile Fernand Sauvant, appointed titular Bishop of Utica, 8 July, 1921, was appointed first vicar apostolic. Statistics have not yet been published for this vicariate, but in 1920 the old vicariate, of which this territory formed a part, had a total population of 4,000,000, of whom 1000 were European Catholics, 900 Catholic negroes and 4000 catechumens. The mission comprised 43 missionary priests, 72 catechists, 13 churches or chapels, 10 schools, 7 orphanages, 3 leper settlements, 2 hospitals, and 19 Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa.

Bamberg, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BAMBERGENSIS; cf. C. E., II-242d), in Bavaria. Of the many Catholic conventions successively held within the archdiocese since 1919 of special note is that of Nuremberg in 1921, attended by 45,000 faithful, and that of Bamberg in the same year, at which 25,000 were present. During the World War sixty-five priests cared for the soldiers at the front or in the hospitals, and the Catholic laity strove in every way to relieve the existing misery and suffering. Among the recently deceased clergy of note are: Rev. Francis Xavier Scheidler, dean of the metropolitan chapter, Prothonotary of the Roman Curia, died 1911; Franz von Keller, provost of the Chapter; Archbishop Friedrich Philipp von Abert (d. 25 May, 1912). The present incumbent is the Most Rev. Johannes Jacobus Hauck, b. at Miltenberg 22 December, 1861, ordained 3 August, 1884, appointed to the see of Bamberg 18 June, 1912, and consecrated 25 July following. He received the pallium 11 January, 1913. The auxiliary bishop is Rt. Rev. Adam Senger, titular bishop of Comana.

The archdiocese contains 465,000 Catholics. There are 225 parishes, 625 churches, 129 chaplaincies, 60 benefices, 57 curacies, 11 monasteries for men and 5 for women, 97 convents for women, 93 lay brothers, 478 secular clergy, 48 regular clergy, and 2 seminaries. There is a university with 12 professors (53 students), 1 hochschule for boys with 2 teachers (76 students), 27 höhere schulen (9 and 6 year classical and scientific curriculum) with 309 teachers (2,800 boy students, 1,200 girl students), 1,070 elementary schools with 2,008 teachers, 7 industrial schools with 78 teachers (680 students). All the schools are supported by the Government. The following charitable institutions exist in the archdiocese: 5 homes for journeymen and working girls, 2 asylums, 13 hospitals, 2 refugees, 65 day nurseries. The ministry of priests is permitted in all public institutions. The following associations have been formed by the clergy: Unio Apostolica, Fœdus Ottomanum (Ottoman League), Association for Priestly Perseverance. The associations among the laity are: Association of Workingmen and Mechanics, Association of Workingwomen, Young Men's Club, the Marian Congregation for young men and women. Two Catholic periodicals are published in the archdiocese.

Banguelo, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE BANGUELO; cf. C. E., XVI-79d), in Central Africa. This vicariate was erected 23 January, 1918, by a division of the Vicariate Apostolic of Nyassa, and is bounded by the boundary line of the waters between Lunangwa and Zambezi, and the 13° latitude. Its limits are the same as those of Nyssa. It is entrusted to the White Fathers, the present and first vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Mgr. Larue of this congregation, titular Bishop of Thuburbo. The remarkable progress of religion in this territory from the time of the erection of the vicariate is best shown by the following statistics published in 1917:

Neophytes	7,202	9,152	11,642	14,955
Catechumens	16,387	14,597	18,350	22,192
Baptisms	2,926	4,660	4,512	4,881
Confessions	60,434	76,758	100,334	108,099
Communions	83,853	128,685	182,926	204,286
Christian families..	1,215	1,808	2,076	3,291
Chapels	22	48	73	109

It is probable that the World War retarded in some measure the work of the missionaries, but the 1921 records show an encouraging increase in conversions, there being now 6,000 Catholics out of a total population of 600,000, 32,000 catechumens, 24 priests, 6 brothers, 7 White Sisters, and 214 catechists.

Banjaluca, DIOCESE OF (BANJALUCENSIS; cf. C. E., II-252b), in Bosnia. The predecessor of the present bishop, Joseph Garric, the first elected to the see, was Bishop Marianus Markovic, Apostolic Administrator. He died 20 June, 1912, after a life of eminent virtue. Both clergy and laity bore the hardships of the World War with great fortitude, and unselfishly attended the wants of the needy, the Trappists and Franciscans proving in this work especially deserving of praise.

The Catholics of the diocese number 102,000, of whom 90,000 are Croats and the balance Germans, Poles, Czechs, and a few Hungarians. There are 28 secular and 50 regular priests and 97 lay brothers, 45 parishes with 50 churches, 1 abbey for men with 2 affiliated houses, 3 convents for men and 5 for women, 1 seminary, 3 high schools, 12 normal schools with 36 teachers and a total of 1,895 students of both sexes, 2 orphan asylums, one for boys kept by the Trappists, and the other for girls in the care of the Sisters of the Precious Blood in Nazareth and supported by voluntary contributions. For the clergy there is a mutual benefit association of artificers and workmen. A periodical diocesan bulletin is issued, also a publication for Catholic youth interested in art. At one time a Catholic weekly was published for one year, but lack of financial support forced its abandonment.

Banns of Marriage (cf. C. E., II-256c).—Before a marriage takes place it must be announced, or in other words the banns must be published on three successive Sundays or other feasts of obligation during Mass or any other service at which there is a large attendance. The local ordinary is now authorized to substitute for this usual method of publication the affixing of the names of the parties on the doors of the parochial or other church for the space of eight days, which must include two days of precept. If either or both of the parties, after reaching the age of puberty (12 years for girls, and 14 years for boys), have resided for six months elsewhere than in the parish of the priest, who has the right of assisting at the marriage, the parish priest is to notify the ordinary, who may require the publication of the banns in that place or may prescribe other steps for ascertaining the status of the parties. Even when the period of residence was less than six months, if it is suspected that an impediment was contracted, the parish priest is to refer the matter to the ordinary, who must not allow the marriage till the suspicion is removed. If a Catholic is to be married to a non-Catholic the banns must not be published, however, the ordinary may allow it to be done if he deems it advisable, though in such a case the religion of a non-Catholic must not be mentioned. A local ordinary may dispense his own subjects from the publication of the banns for a legitimate cause, even when it would have to be made in another diocese. Where several ordinaries have jurisdiction, the dispensation is granted by the one in whose diocese the marriage is to take place; but either of them can grant it if the marriage is to be celebrated outside of their dioceses.

In case of doubt about the existence of any impediment, the parish priest should investigate the matter, examining under oath at least two trustworthy witnesses, and, if necessary, the parties themselves; he is to proceed with the publication, but if the doubt is not eventually dispelled he must not assist at the marriage without consulting the ordinary. Should an undoubted impediment be discovered, then if it is occult he must continue the publication and refer the case to the local ordinary or the sacred penitentiary without revealing the names of the parties; if the impediment is public and has been discovered before beginning the publication, the banns must not be proclaimed until the impediment has been removed, even if the pastor knows that a dispensation for the internal forum only has been granted; if the discovery was made after the first or the second proclamation the parish priest is to continue the publication, and refer the matter to the ordinary.

If the investigation of the parties' freedom to marry or the proclamation of the banns has been made by a priest other than the one who is to assist at the marriage, the latter should not officiate until the investigations have been completed and, as a rule, until three days have elapsed from the last publication of the banns; on the other hand, if the marriage does not take place within six months, the publication must ordinarily be repeated.

Banska-Bystrica (or NEUSOHL), DIOCESE OF (NEOSOLIENSIS; cf. C. E., X-774c), in Czechoslovakia, suffragan of Esztergom. The see is filled by Rt. Rev.

Marien Blaha, born in Hradok Loptorski, Slovakia, in 1869, served as director of the St. Adalbert Society, and a delegate from Czechoslovakia to the Peace Conference in 1919, named an honorary chamberlain the same year and appointed bishop 16 December, 1920, to succeed Rt. Rev. Wolfgang Radnai, appointed 11 July, 1914, retired and promoted to the titular see of Axum 16 December, 1920. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 223,779; 71,629 Lutherans, 193 Calvinists, 6500 Jews; the 1920 statistics credit it with 111 parishes, 43 second-class parishes and vicariates, and 171 secular priests.

Baptism (cf. C. E., II-269a).—Minister. A person must be baptized solemnly in his own parish and by his own parish priest or by another priest with his or the ordinary's permission, if this can be done easily and without delay; otherwise the baptism may be administered by any pastor in whose parish the person happens to be. Consequently a child whose parents belong to parish A should be baptized there, even if it were born and remained some time in parish B. Deacons are extraordinary ministers of solemn baptism; they may not exercise their power without leave of the local ordinary or the parish priest, which should be granted if there are good reasons, and this permission may be presumed in case of necessity. Parish priests are ordered to see that the faithful, especially midwives, physicians and surgeons, know how to baptize in case of necessity. When private baptism is conferred, there should be one or two witnesses if possible, so that the fact of baptism can be established if occasion for this should arise. An important change has been made by the Code which declare that the minister of baptism now contracts a spiritual relationship only with the person baptized; formerly he became related to the parents also. The question of baptizing adults, by which in speaking of baptism is meant those who have attained the use of reason, should be referred to the local ordinary, that if he so desires the sacrament may be administered by him or his delegate in a more solemn manner. It is recommended that priests who baptize adults and the adults themselves should, if they are enjoying good health, be fasting; moreover, the newly baptized adult is under an obligation to assist immediately after baptism at Mass and to receive Holy Communion, unless grave and urgent reasons prevent him.

Subject.—As a rule Catholics may baptize only infants, one of whose parents is a Catholic, unless in case of necessity. However, infants of infidels, and ordinarily those of two heretical or schismatical parents, or of two Catholic parents who have apostatized or fallen into heresy or schism, can be lawfully baptized if arrangements are made for their Catholic education, and if the parents or guardians, or at least one of them, consent, or if the child has no father, mother, grandparent or guardian living, or if these have lost their rights over him or are absolutely unable to exercise them. Adults are not to be baptized except with their knowledge and consent and after proper instruction; but if they are in danger of death and there is not time to instruct them in the principal mysteries, they may be baptized provided they give signs of assent and promise seriously to observe the commandments. If they are unable to request baptism, but either formerly or in their present condition probably manifested the intention of receiving it, they should be baptized conditionally; should they recover and a doubt concerning the validity of the baptism remain, conditional baptism is to be administered. An abortive fetus, no matter when born, is to be baptized absolutely if it is certainly alive, or conditionally if life is doubtful. A deformed fetus must always be baptized at least conditionally; if in doubt whether there is one human being or more, one is to be baptized absolutely, the others conditionally.

Ceremonies.—A different ceremony is used in baptizing according as the recipient is an infant or an adult; but the local ordinary may for a grave reason allow the ceremonies of infant baptism to be used in baptizing adults. A child is to be baptized according to its parents' Rite, but if the parents are of different Rites the ceremony must be according to the father's Rite, unless there is a special law in certain cases: American, Syrian, and Coptic. Uniats follow the general law; among Ruthenian Uniats, boys are baptized in the father's, girls in the mother's Rite, unless their father is a Ruthenian cleric; among Italo-Greeks living in the West if the father is Greek and the mother Latin, either Rite may be used. If only one of the parents is a Catholic, the ceremony should be according to his or her Rite. If this canon is violated, the person nevertheless belongs to the Rite in which he should have been baptized.

If a person is in danger of death he may receive private baptism. If this is administered by one who is neither a priest nor a deacon, he is to use only the rites which are required for the validity of the sacrament. On the other hand, if the minister is a priest or deacon and there is time, he must add the ceremonies which should follow the actual baptism. If the subject is not in danger of death, the ordinary cannot permit private baptism, except when an adult heretic is to be baptized conditionally; with this exception, too, all ceremonies that have been omitted for any reason in conferring baptism must be supplied in church as soon as possible. When baptism is repeated conditionally—excepting the case of an adult heretic, as mentioned above—ceremonies previously omitted must be supplied; but if they were not omitted in the first instance the minister is free to use or omit them in the conditional baptism. If the parents do not wish to give the child a really Christian name the priest must add a saint's name and record both in the baptismal register.

Sponsors.—There should always be a sponsor at private baptism if it can be easily arranged; if none was present then, there should be one later when the ceremonies are supplied. In the latter case the person acting as sponsor does not contract a spiritual relationship. In repeating baptism conditionally, the sponsor who acted at the first baptism, if possible, be employed again; this, it may be noted, is the only case in which a sponsor is needed at conditional baptism. When baptism is repeated conditionally, neither the sponsor who acted at the first baptism nor he who acts at the second contracts spiritual relationship, unless the same person was employed in both cases. The conditions requisite for acting validly or licitly as sponsor have been made stricter by the Code. For validity a sponsor: (a) must be baptized, have attained the use of reason, and intend to assume the obligation; (b) must not belong to any heretical or schismatical sect, nor be excommunicated by a condemnatory or declaratory sentence, nor be legally infamous or debarred from acts, nor be a deposed or degraded cleric; (c) must be neither the parent nor the spouse of the person to be baptized; (d) must be nominated to act by the person to be baptized or his parents or guardians, or, lacking these, by the minister; (e) must personally or by proxy hold or touch the subject physically at the moment of baptism or immediately take him from the sacred font or from the minister's hands.

To act licitly as sponsor, one: a() must have reached his fourteenth year, though for a just cause the minister may allow a younger person to stand; (b) must not be excommunicated nor be debarred from legal acts nor be legally infamous on account of a notorious offense, even if no judicial sentence has been pronounced, nor be interdicted or otherwise publicly known as a criminal, nor be infamous by act; (c) must know the rudiments of the Faith; (d) must not be a novice or a professed member of a religious institute in which the members make vows, perpetual or temporary, to be renewed after a fixed time, unless in case of necessity and with the express permission of at least the local superior; (e) finally must have the express permission of his ordinary, if he is a cleric in sacred orders. In case of doubt whether one can be admitted validly or licitly the parish priest must consult his ordinary if there is time. A sponsor contracts spiritual relationship with the person baptized, but not as formerly with the parents also.

Time and Place.—The faithful are under a grave obligation to have their infants baptized as soon as possible. In case of necessity, private baptism may be administered at any time and in any place. Solemn baptism also may be administered on any day, but it is recommended that, following the ancient custom of the Church, the baptism of adults, if it can be conveniently arranged, should take place on the vigil of Easter or Pentecost, especially in metropolitan and cathedral churches. The proper place for administering solemn baptism is in the baptistery of a church or public oratory; and every parish church must have its baptismal font, any statute, privilege, or custom to the contrary being now revoked and reprobated, though this has been decreed without prejudice to the vested rights of other churches. For the convenience of the faithful the local ordinary may allow or even order a baptismal font in any other church or public oratory within the parish limits. If the person to be baptized cannot, without grave inconvenience or danger, come to or be brought to the parish church or to another possessing a baptismal font, the parish priest ought to administer solemn baptism in the nearest church or public oratory within the parish limits, even if it has no baptismal font. Solemn baptism is not allowed in private houses except: (a) when the person to be baptized is the child or the grandchild of the supreme ruler of the people or of one who has the right of succession to the throne; in this case, however, the privilege is to be asked for on the occasion of each baptism; or (b) when the local ordinary believes that there is a just and reasonable cause for allowing it in an extraordinary case. In both of these instances the baptism is to be conferred in a domestic chapel or other becoming place.

Baptists (cf. C. E., II-278b).—A more vigorous effort to promote general Baptist interests, a desire for greater unity among themselves and with other denominations, and a tendency toward radicalism in the interpretation of the Bible and toward less exclusive religious practice have marked the history of the denomination since 1907.

HISTORY.—The creation in 1907 of the Northern Baptist Convention, corresponding in character to the older Southern Baptist Convention and British Baptist Union, gave the Northern Baptists a central body in charge of certain specific tasks. It chooses the boards and superintends the work of the various societies; it also controls the general funds for missionary enterprise. In 1911 it took over some of the activities of the Freewill Baptists, who in 1919 completed their union with the Northern Baptists and ceased to exist as a denomination.

The Baptists organized in 1905 the Baptist World Alliance, which by its quinquennial meetings promotes a spirit of fellowship and co-operation; in 1911 they joined the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and in 1920 sent delegates to the preliminary meeting of the World Conference on Faith and Order held at Geneva in Switzerland.

In their treatment of theological and Biblical questions, many Baptist scholars have in recent years departed from the traditional attitude of their Church and adopted advanced and radical opinions. Among the individual churches invitations to ministers of other denominations to occupy Baptist pulpits tend to become more frequent and the practice of admitting to the Eucharist the members of any Christian denomination (open communion) is also spreading in Great Britain and the United States.

STATISTICS.—According to the "American Baptist Year-Book" (1921), there were at the time of its publication 8,965,995 Baptists in the world, with 69,326 churches and 48,812 ministers. They were distributed as follows on the different continents: America, 8,020,715; Europe, 633,128; Asia, 252,892; Australasia, 30,888; Africa, 28,372. The great majority of the Baptists of the world is found in the United States, 7,804,449; Canada has 138,882; Central America, including the Canal Zone, 1,531; Mexico, 3,834; South America, 21,376; the West Indies, 50,643. The figures given for 1921 by Dr. H. K. Carroll in his annual table of religious denominations in the United States are below those published in the "American Baptist Year-Book." They are for the United States: Baptists (fifteen bodies), 7,207,578; churches, 58,933; ministers, 47,983.

Barbastro, DIOCESE OF (BARBASTRENSIS; cf. C. E., II-285d), in the province of Huesca, Spain, suffragan of Sargossa. Since 1895 this diocese has been governed by an apostolic administrator, who at present (1922) is Rt. Rev. Monsignor Jimenez y Perez, titular Bishop of Anthedon. The 1921 statistics give the Catholic population as 54,540 and credit the diocese with 199 parishes and 46 annexes, directed by 10 archpriests, 190 secular priests, 199 churches, 254 chapels, 3 convents of men with 80 religious, 8 convents of women with 96 Sisters, and 180 Catholic schools. An official diocesan bulletin is published.

Barcelona, DIOCESE OF (BARCINONENSIS; cf. C. E., II-288d), in Spain, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Tarragona. This see was filled by His Eminence Salvadore Cardinal Casanovas y Pages, transferred from the titular see of Cerama, 19 April, 1901, until his death 27 October, 1908. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Juan José Laguarda y Fenollera, promoted from the diocese of Jaen 29 April, 1919, died 3 December, 1913. His successor was appointed 28 May, 1914, in the person of Rt. Rev. Henri Reig y Casanova who filled the see until his promotion to Valencia, 22 April, 1920. The present incumbent Rt. Rev. Raimundo Guillaumet y Coma, b. at San Esteban de Olet, 23 March, 1856, ordained 21

December, 1878, elected Bishop of Leon, 29 April, 1909, consecrated at Olot, 10 October following, transferred to Cordova, 18 July, 1913, enthroned 29 November following, published 25 May, 1914, and transferred to Barcelona at the Consistory of 22 April, 1920. In 1907 a diocesan council of Catholic corporations and works was established, and on 20 January a monster mass-meeting took place in the Arena to protest against the Law of Associations. On 14 May, 1909, the diocesan pilgrimage to Rome was inaugurated. During the tragic week of the Revolution, 23-30 July, mobs took possession of the capital and the principal manufacturing centers of the Province, setting fire to 12 parish churches, 30 chapels and convents, educational and charitable institutions and other important diocesan establishments. In May, 1910, festivities were held to solemnize the canonization of St. José Criel of Barcelona. In 1911 a diocesan council was held, and during the following years Barcelona was the meeting place of the third national Congress of Sacred Music, 1912, Congress of Christian Art, 1913, Liturgical Congress at Montserrat, 1918, and Marian Congress, 1919. In 1918 the seventh century of the apparition of Our Lady of Mercy at Barcelona was celebrated. The following year a diocesan synod was convoked by the bishop, and in 1921 the bishop issued a pastoral letter prohibiting the Catholic associations from holding theatricals, cinematograph productions, balls or worldly assemblies of any kind for the purpose of raising funds: this letter merited the unanimous approbation of the Spanish press. Since 1907 the diocese has lost several prominent members by the deaths of Rev. Juan Gatell y Domenech, since 1882 pastor of the Church of St. Ann of Barcelona, Rev. Jaime Almera, dean of the Cathedral Basilica, Rev. Dr. Sarda y Salvany, native of Sabadell, professor of Latin and Humanities in the Seminary of Barcelona, and the Marquis of Pascual, eminent promoter, founder and first president of the Accion Catolica of the diocese. The diocese comprises 264 parishes, 291 churches, 522 chapels and shrines, 1 monastery for men (27 priests), 30 monasteries for women, 1 abbey for men (50 priests), 23 convents for men (1050 professed religious), and 265 convents for women (5079 Sisters).

Bari, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BARENsis; cf. C. E., II-295d), in the province of Puglie in Southern Italy. Rt. Rev. Giulio Vaccaro, b. in Naples, 1851, appointed Bishop of Trivento, 4 June, 1891, promoted to Ancyra and made coadjutor to the Archbishop of Trani, 30 November, 1896, was transferred to Bari, 24 March, 1898, and now (1922) fills the see. He was made an assistant at the pontifical throne 30 May, 1916, and from August, 1917, to March, 1918, acted as apostolic administrator of Conversano. This diocese comprises a Catholic population of 300,400, and by 1921 statistics counts 33 parishes, 260 secular and 30 regular clergy, 100 students in the upper and lower seminaries, 261 churches or chapels, 10 Brothers, and 200 Sisters.

Barquisimeto, DIOCESE OF. See CARABOBO.

Barra do Rio Grande, DIOCESE OF (BARRENSIS), in the State of Rio Grande, Brazil, suffragan of San Salvador de Bahia. This diocese was erected 20 October, 1913, by a division of the diocese of San Salvador de Bahia, taking nineteen parishes of that diocese. The episcopal residence is at Barra do Rio Grande, and the cathedral is dedicated to St. Francis. The first bishop appointed was Rt. Rev. Augusto Alvaro da Silva, who now (1922) fills the see; b. at Recife, diocese of Olinda, Portugal, 1876, ordained 1899, appointed first Bishop of Floresta 12 May, 1911, and transferred to Barra 25 June, 1915. No statistics are published for this diocese.

Basilians, RUTHENIAN (cf. C. E., II-323d).—On the eve of the World War the Basilians of the reform of Debromil numbered 234, of whom there were 88 hieromonachs in 16 large or small monasteries. Twenty-seven, one of whom was the metropolitan, Andrew Szeptyekyj, were carried into captivity in Russia. In 1918 the congregation suffered even more, owing to the violent conquest of Eastern Galicia by the Poles. Up to the moment of their retreat the Russians occupied the two monasteries of Myhajlivka and Ulaskivce. The Poles destroyed the library of the monastery of Krechiv and, so that it could not be afterwards restored, carried to Warsaw all the typographical material of the monastery of Zovkva, the literary activity of which was considerable. Nevertheless, their works have been reorganized, and in 1921 the congregation numbered 206 members, of whom 94 are hieromonachs. A new field has been opened for their activities since the Sacred Congregation of the Eastern Church confided to their care the reform of the Ruthenian monasteries of Ruthenia, south of the Carpathians, an autonomous province of Czechoslovakia. On 4 October, 1920, the protohegumenos, Platonides Peter Filas, was replaced by Anastasius Alexander Kalys. The Ruthenian Basilians to-day have the direction of the metropolitan seminary of Léopol and the Ruthenian college at Rome, three missions in Brazil (Prudentopolis, Itayopolis, and Curityba), three in Canada (Winnipeg in Manitoba, Edmonton and Mundare in Alberta). A novitiate is to be opened in Montreal.

The constitutions were definitely approved by decree of Propaganda, 27 July, 1909, and were not subject to any change due to the recent revision of the Code of Canon Law, the prescriptions of which do not concern the Eastern Church. The Order admits subjects of any rite, but all belong to the Byzantine-Slavonic Rite from the time of their profession. The lay brothers must have a knowledge of some manual art or be apt in the various duties necessary within the monasteries. The postulantship lasts six months and the novitiate one year and six weeks, after which simple vows are taken, lasting three years, and then solemn profession is made. In addition to the usual vows the members take two particular simple vows, one of fidelity to the Apostolic See at Rome and the other not to seek monastic or other dignities. As long as there is a sufficient number of monks in each monastery Divine Office is sung. The monastic habit consists of a closed tunic with woollen girdle and over this a habit of special form with monastic cloak or mandyas. The abstinences traditional among oriental monks have been mitigated according to the spirit of the Eastern Church. The cloister in regard to women is very strict. All must be occupied either in some function of the priestly ministry, aside from the usual parochial duties, or in some manual art.

The Order is governed by an archimandrite, elected for ten years and approved by the Holy See; he is assisted by three consultors. At the head of each province is a protohegumenos elected for five years by the archimandrite and his council. Until the Order numbers at least two provinces, the protohegumenos of the one province actually existing has all the authority of an archimandrite. The Constitutions provide for general, provincial, and simple claustral chapters. The local hegumenoi are nominated by the protohegumenos of each province assisted by his council. The studies particularly cared for are: Ukrainian, Slavonic, Greek, Latin, and a sufficient knowledge of German and Polish; two years of philosophy and four of theology. The instruction of youth is one of the principal works of the Order.

About 1895 the Basilians undertook the reform of the Basilian Sisters. These now number twelve houses, where they have established normal schools for teachers, colleges for young girls, boarding schools, or orphanages. One of their houses, comprising a novitiate, orphanage, and printing press, is in the United States at Philadelphia. In addition to the reform of the Basilian Sisters properly so called, the Basilians aided in the foundation of the Congregation of the Servants of the Blessed Virgin (Slujebnitsy Presviatyia Bogoroditsy), whose chief works are elementary schools and orphanages, and who have about eighty houses in Galicia and many in the new world. More recent than these are three other congregations: The Sisters of St. Joseph (Iosefity), Sisters of St. Josaphat (Iosafatky), and the Myrophores (Mironositsy).

In their way of life and the works to which they are devoted, the Basilians resemble more the clerks regular of the West than monks. To satisfy monastic aspirations of a more contemplative tendency, the metropolitan, Andrew Szeptycky, instituted earlier in the twentieth century the Order of Studites, the name of which indicates the tradition to which they are attached. The provisory constitutions were promulgated 28 October, 1905, approved by the bishop of the province of Halyc-Léopol, 30 December, 1906, and are now being examined by the Holy See. One monastery established first at Sknilov, near Léopol, was ruined by the war and has been temporarily transferred to Univ. The hegumenos is Clement Szeptycky, brother of the metropolitan, and he has under him forty religious.

Basle-Lugano, DIOCESE OF (BASILEENSIS ET LUGANENSIS; cf. C. E., II-338d), the largest diocese in Switzerland, is directly subject to the Holy See. These two dioceses are joined by an external union only, the Bishop of Basle having no spiritual jurisdiction over the diocese of Lugano, which is governed by an administrator Apostolic. This see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Johannes Stammeler, born in Bremgarten 1840, ordained 1863, made a papal chamberlain 1891, dean of the new deanery 1899, appointed 4 July, 1906, and made an assistant at the pontifical throne 14 July, 1913. In June, 1920, Bishop Stammeler celebrated his eightieth birthday and received the official felicitations of the president of the Swiss Confederation and the Federal Council, who praised the zeal and activity of his administration. However, he is not yet officially recognized by the Government of Berne, which for the last forty years has recognized instead the Schmismatic bishop, who has about 500 adherents. On 23 September, 1912, a motion was made in the Grand Council to obtain recognition, but it was rejected in May, 1913, and again, after another attempt, the following November, when an adverse decision was reached by a vote of 138 against 30. However, the increasingly friendly attitude of the Government gives hope of future recognition; in January, 1918, when the Diocesan Council decided to raise the salary of the bishop to 20,000 francs, the Executive Council of Berne promised to assist by the payment of 1865 francs, this decision being subject to ratification by the Grand Council.

The present diocese of Basle (excluding Lugano) embraces the cantons of Solothurn, Lucerne, Berne, Zug, Aargau, Thurgau, Basle-Land, Basle-Stadt, and Schaffhausen, and in 1920 contained 543,941 Catholics and 1,114,409 non-Catholics. The majority of the people speak German, although there is a large proportion of French-speaking people in the Canton of Berne. The diocese is divided into 29 deaneries, 29 rural chapters, 406 parishes, and 157 chaplaincies, and counts about 660 secular and 85 regular clergy. The religious orders established here include: Capuchins with 7 houses, 74 priests, 25 clerics and 27 lay brothers; the Hermit Brothers of Lutherne, who have become hospital nurses in the Sanitorium Franziskusheim; the Benedictines of Mariastein, who have only 5 priests, the rest having gone to Bregenz in Austria; Sisters of the Holy Cross of Menzengen, and Sisters of Baldegg, Cham and Ingenbohl (284), who conduct institutes for girls and a great number of elementary schools.

THE DIOCESE OF LUGANO.—This diocese is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Aurelio Bacciarini, born in the diocese 1873, ordained 1897, rector of the Lower Seminary of Pollegio 1903, entered the congregation of the Servites of Charity at Como in 1909, rector of the new parish of St. Joseph in Rome 1912, made superior general of his order in 1915, and appointed titular Bishop of Daulia and administrator Apostolic of Lugano 12 January, 1917. He is still superior general, and was named an assistant at the pontifical throne 26 August, 1921, and two days later celebrated the silver jubilee of his priesthood. On this occasion a public Mass was sung which was attended by the papal nuncio, Mgr. Maglione, many bishops and prelates, official representatives of the Government and 25,000 of the faithful. An address, signed by 100,000 of the people of Tessin, and a purse of 65,000 francs were presented to the bishop; the latter he devoted to the seminary and the invalid clergy. The diocese of Lugano comprises the canton of Tessin, an area of 1761 sq. miles, with a Catholic population of 160,000, who use Italian as the common language. By 1920 statistics there are 252 parishes, of which 54 are of the Ambrosian Rite; 4 collegiate churches with chapters, besides the Cathedral at Lugano, which also has a chapter; 1 upper seminary, 1 lower seminary of the Ambrosian Rite, at Pollegio, 150 seminarians; 796 churches or public chapels, 400 clergy, and numerous communities of religious. The episcopal residence is at Lugano and an episcopal château is also maintained at Balerna. Upon the death of the administrator the cathedral chapter elects a vicar capitular to administer the diocese until the appointment of a new administrator by the Holy See.

Basutoland, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (BASUTO-LAN-DENSIS; cf. C. E., II-346a), in South Africa. It is a British Protectorate and is administered by native chiefs under a British resident commissioner, officially appointed by the Crown, assisted by a regular parliament of chiefs and some other members, also appointed by the Crown. The National Assembly, or "Pisto," which formerly met once a year, is now only an extraordinary meeting convoked on special occasions, i. e., on a visit of the High Commissioner for South Africa. This territory, formerly a prefecture Apostolic, was raised to a vicariate 18 February, 1909, and the Rev. Father Cenez, then prefect apostolic, was appointed titular Bishop of Nicopolis and Vicar Apostolic of Basutoland, 25 January, 1909. In 1908 the Sisters of the Holy Cross of Menzengen, Switzerland, came to the country to assist the Sisters of the Holy Family, already established there. The work of conversion has been ably carried on by eighteen missionary priests, and although more workers are required and despite the difficulty of obtaining funds, the record of conversions is very encouraging. Particularly important was the conversion of Griffith, high chief of the Basutos, in 1912, and of three lesser chiefs—Soko (1916), Maama (1921), and Peete (1921). In 1910 one of the missionaries, Rev. Father Lebihan, discovered a beautiful waterfall which flows over a precipice 650 feet high, and which now bears his name. Father Lebihan died in 1916. Rev. J. J. Gerard, one of the founders of this mission, died here in 1914, and the natives have erected a monument to his memory, bearing the inscription "To the beloved missionary of the Basutos."

The entire population of this territory comprises 543,078 natives (Basutos), 1,241 colored people, and 1,603 whites; of these 31,698 are baptized and 11,229 catechumens. Only 5 whites, besides the missionaries and Sisters, are Catholic. According to 1922 statistics the mission has 30 churches, 15 missions and 42 mission stations, 2 convents of men, 18 missionary priests (Oblates of Mary Immaculate), 5 Brothers of the Oblates of Mary and 8 Marist Brothers, 54 white and 35 native Sisters, 2 training schools with 188 teachers and 6,716 pupils, 2 industrial schools with 7 teachers and attendance of 202. The priests are permitted to minister in the public hospital, leper settlement and jail, and all the schools are aided by government grants. The League of the Sacred Heart is organized among the laity.

Batavia, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (BATAVIA; cf. C. E., II-346c), comprises the Island of Java and the small islands of the Sunda group, a total of 87,222 sq. miles. The Island of Sumatra, formerly a part of this vicariate, was separated from it in June, 1910, and a decree of 19 November, 1919, took the Island of Celebes and raised it to a prefecture apostolic. The present vicar (1922) is Rt. Rev. Edmond Luyten, titular Bishop of Oropus, a member of the Jesuit Order, to whose care this territory is entrusted. Born in the diocese of Breda in 1855, he was ordained in 1879, and appointed bishop and vicar apostolic 21 May, 1898. The 1920 statistics credit this territory with 30,500 European, 13,650 native and 185 Oriental Catholics. The following statistics for the year 1921 show the recent progress of this mission: schools of mixed religions, 18, with 6000 Catholic pupils (3104 boys and 2896 girls); non-Catholic pupils, 3104 boys and 2296 girls; purely Catholic schools, 23, with 731 boys and 741 girls; total religious teachers 235, lay teachers 188; these schools are conducted by the Jesuit Fathers, Brothers of St. Aloysius of Gonzaga, Franciscan Sisters, Ursuline Sisters, St. Vincent de Paul Society, and the Sodality of St. Francis Xavier. The vicariate, comprising 34,075 Catholics, is served by 54 priests. During the year there were: baptisms of legitimate children 1492, illegitimate children 637, first communions 1479, confirmations 412, Catechumens 10,052, general communions 415,998, Easter communions 11,697, 122 conversions of heretics, 403 conversions of infidels, 226 marriages of Catholics, 157 mixed marriages, and 318 receiving the last sacraments. There are 35 public chapels and 19 chapels in religious houses, and a number of Catholic libraries, public lecture bureaux, musical societies, charitable works and periodicals are established.

Bathurst, DIOCESE OF (BATHURSTENSIS; cf. C. E., I-349b), in New South Wales, Australia, is suffragan of Sydney. Rt. Rev. John Dunn, who came to this see as its third bishop, 8 September, 1901, died 22 August, 1919, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Michael O'Farrell, consecrated 30 November, 1920. The religious orders who conduct the educational and charitable institutions of the diocese are: the Vincentian Fathers, Brothers of St. Patrick, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of St. Brigid, and Sisters of St. Joseph. St. Stanislaus College, one of the foremost institutions of learning in Australia, is under the direction of the Vincentian Fathers. The Sisters of Mercy conduct an orphanage at Bathurst with 65 orphans. The diocese now (1921) comprises 17 parochial districts, 93 churches, 29 secular and 7 regular clergy, 9 religious brothers, 231 nuns, 3 training colleges, 3 novitiates, 1 college, 9 boarding schools for girls, 13 secondary day schools, 35 primary schools, and 1 orphanage. The total number of children receiving Catholic education in these schools is 4,573, the total Catholic population about 26,000.

Battandier, ALBERT, priest and scholar, b at St. Félicien, Ardèche, 11 April, 1850; d. there 25 May, 1921. His father was notary and later mayor of the neighboring canton of Satellien, and sent his son to the Jesuit College of Mongré, near Lyons. After finishing his studies he entered the Jesuit novitiate, but owing to ill health was obliged to leave. In 1871 he entered the Seminary of Viviers, was ordained four years later, and continued his ecclesiastical studies at the French seminary in Rome, where he was a brilliant student and won his degree in theology and canon law (1879). At this time he attracted the attention of Cardinal Pitra, recently made suburbicarian bishop of Frascati, who appointed him his secretary and later his vicar general. He continued in the same position when, in 1884, the cardinal became Bishop of Porto and subdean of the Sacred College. In this formative stage of his career he was guided and taught by Cardinal Pitra, who gave with the affection of a father all the benefit of his ripe experience and scholarship. Père Battandier always found in him an example of highest virtue, and never wavered in his loyalty, even at the cost of his own advancement. He profited so well by his training that in 1881 he was made honorary chamberlain and consultor of the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars, being recognized as a specialist in the complex questions concerning the laws of religious communities. A real authority in Rome, he was consulted by many episcopal chancelleries in matters of church legislation, and his "Guide canonique pour les constitutions des sœurs à vœux simples" went through many editions. In 1882 he became a prothonotary Apostolic. When Cardinal Pitra died in 1889 he left his library and chapel to his vicar general.

In 1898 Mgr. Battandier was appointed a member of the special commission for the approbation of new institutes, established in 1890. The following year the publication "Analecta juris pontificii" was suspended after forty years by the liquidation of the Société générale de librairie catholique. Mgr. Battandier acquired it, published two volumes, and then resigned it to the Augustinians of the Assumption, with whom he was actively associated as a collaborator in their many literary works. He contributed to many literary and scientific reviews in Rome and was a resident member of the Società per gli Studi Biblici (1897).

It was at this time that he conceived, edited and published at the Maison de Bonne Presse, with the encouragement and co-operation of Père Vincent de Paul Bailly, the work that has made him famous, the "Annuaire pontifical Catholique," an invaluable work, compiled with precision, exactitude and probity, and requiring long and patient research. It is a veritable encyclopedia of Roman and ecclesiastical knowledge, a mine of instructive and practical information made possible by Mgr. Battandier's undisputed competence in ecclesiastical affairs, intellectual power and great capacity for work. With all the resources of Rome at his disposal he contributed to it original articles on little known points which contain information obtainable nowhere else. His aim in its foundation was to initiate the faithful into the life of the Church, to make it known in its entirety and its details, and to establish a bond between all Catholics and the Holy See. It is universally praised and was blessed by all the Sovereign Pontiffs every year from its first appearance in 1898 to the present issue.

In 1906 Mgr. Battandier was made consultor of the Congregation for Latin and Oriental Rites, and after the reform of the Roman Curia was consultor of the Congregation of Religious, which replaces that of Bishops and Regulars. After his mother's death, in 1907, he returned to France, where he built himself a home near his birthplace. The Bishop of Viviers made him canon of his cathedral, and he continued his many activities until his death, amongst them the revision of his "Guide canonique des instituts religieux" to accord with the new code of canon law.

Baunard, Louis Pierre André, ecclesiastical writer, b. in Bellegarde, Diocese of Orléans, France, 24 August, 1828; d. in Gruson 9 November, 1919. Of humble origin he was brought up in the fear and love of God, and in his poems has left many beautiful tributes to the moral worth and self-sacrifice of his parents. He was one of five children, was educated in Orléans, and ordained priest 5 June, 1852. He taught in the preparatory seminary and in the Christian Doctrine classes established by Mgr. Dupanloup throughout his diocese until 1860, when he studied for his doctorate in letters. The following year he won that in theology and was made vicar at the cathedral. Successively chaplain of the Ecole normale and professor in the Catholic University in Lille, he became superior of St. Joseph's College in 1881, returning to the university as rector seven years later. In 1908 he resigned and retired to his house at Gruson, where he spent the remainder of his long life in literary pursuits, and the society of his chosen friends, retaining his influence in the educational world until the end.

Mgr. Baunard was made a prelate of the Holy See in 1884 and prothonotary Apostolic in 1908. His writings, mirror of his supernatural outlook, clear principles and just and sympathetic appreciation of the spiritual and intellectual needs of his day are many, valuable, and varied, including "Vingt aimees de rectorat," "Un siècle de l'Eglise de France (1800-1900)," "Le Douce et ses victimes," "La Foi et ses victoires," "Le collège chrétien," "L'Evangile du pauvre," "Le Livre de la première Communion et de la persévérance," "Autour de l'histoire," "Reliques d'histoire," "Le Vieillard," "Saints et Saintes de Dieu," "L'Apôtre St. Jean," "St. Ambroise," "La Bce Madeleine-Sophie Barat," "La Ven. Louise de Marillac," "Ernest Lelievre et les fondations des Petites-Sœurs des Pauvres," "Le Cardinal Pie, évêque de Poitiers," "Mme. Duchesne," "Le général de Sonis," "Frédéric Ozanam," "Le Cardinal Lavergne," "Les deux Frères: Philibert Vrau et Camille Féron-Vrau," and a volume of poems, "Prêtre." He was an able leader in the combat against godless education and the separation of religion and learning.

Bavaria (cf. C. E., II-353c), formerly a kingdom, now a republican State under the new German government, has an area of 30,562 square miles and a population of 7,150,146 (1919). This includes the Bavarian Palatinate (2,372 sq. miles) with a population of 937,085; also the territory of the Free State of Coburg, which voted to unite with Bavaria on 30 November, 1919. On 11 March, 1920, the Bavarian Diet adopted the Bill for union by unanimous consent, thus adding to its area a total of 216 square miles and a population of about 75,000. The largest cities with their respective populations are: Munich, 630,724; Nuremberg, 352,679; Augsburg, 154,567; Würzburg, 86,581. The latest available statistics are those of 1 December, 1910, when there were in Bavaria 4,862,233 Catholics (76% of the population); 1,942,385 (21%) largely of the Lutheran and Calvinist confessions, and 55,065 Jews, living chiefly in Munich, Nuremberg, and Fürth. Besides the above there were included 5,816 Old Catholics, 3,017 Mennonites, 164 Anglicans, 1,611 Greek Catholics and Russian Orthodox, 1,139 Irvingites, 1,183 Methodists, 5,841 Free Christians, 1,649 other Christians. Bavaria maintains diplomatic relations with the Holy See, an apostolic nuncio being stationed at Munich and an envoy and minister plenipotentiary at Rome. For further Catholic statistics see MUNICH, ARCHDIOCESE OF; BAMBERG, ARCHDIOCESE OF.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Bavaria is essentially an agricultural State, and at least 3,000,000 of the inhabitants are engaged in agricultural pursuits. Catering to the tourist trade was the most important source of revenue to the people before the war, and the lack of tourists, together with the depression of the beer industry, has made the economic situation rather serious. Of the total land area in Bavaria nearly one-half is under cultivation, one-sixth under grass, and one-third under forests. In 1919 the state forests netted the government half a billion marks. The chief crops in 1919 were wheat, 659,982 acres, yield 266,822 metric tons; rye, 1,135,622 acres, 441,130 metric tons; oats, 1,076,082 acres, 581,142 tons; potatoes, 690,347 acres, 1,619,141 tons. The vines, covering an acreage of 43,782 acres in 1919, yielded 10,014,290 gallons of wine; 18,405 acres under hops yielded 450 metric tons. These figures are slightly below the 1913 figures, but there is an increase in production in recent years. In 1913 the output of coal was 1,895,715 tons; iron ore, 450,074 tons; pig iron, 195,606 tons; sulphuric acid, 163,343 tons; in 1918 the output of coal was 2,438,391 tons; iron ore, 436,961 tons; pig iron, 172,906 tons; sulphuric acid, 126,927 tons. The railway lines cover about 5,900 miles.

EDUCATION.—Education is compulsory between six and sixteen. The latest census gives 7,534 elementary schools (public and private) with 19,564 teachers, and 1,091,884 pupils. The year's expenditure on public schools was given as $3,167,653. The schools cost about $15,000,000.

GOVERNMENT AND RECENT HISTORY.—On 12 December, 1912, Luitpold, regent for the insane Otto, was succeeded by his son, Ludwig, who, yielding to popular demand, was proclaimed king as Ludwig III, on 5 November, 1913. In 1916, after forty years of confinement, the insane Otto died. The royal family of Bavaria took a prominent part in the Great World War. The Crown Prince Rupprecht was in full command of the German forces on the Somme; Prince Leopold participated in the Polish campaign, and was among the first to march into Warsaw; Prince Henry was killed on the western front in November, 1916; and Prince Ferdinand was decorated by Kaiser Wilhelm with the Red Cross Medal of the first class. The feeling among the masses of the people, however, was very strongly anti-war. According to the different press reports, repeated mutinies broke out in the Bavarian regiments, the Royal Guard even refusing obedience. The Bavarian press carried on a continual propaganda against the Kaiser in the last months of the struggle. The pro-war policy of the Socialist party forced the working people of Bavaria to resign in great numbers and to join the Independent Socialist party. As early as October, 1917, northern Bavaria, hitherto solid for the old party, went over to the Independents.

At the overthrow of the German imperial monarchy the Bavarian dynasty was deposed 22 November, 1918, and Bavaria was proclaimed a republic. It is truly very significant that the first dynasty to fall at the beginning of the revolution was that of Bavaria, the oldest dynasty in Europe. A cabinet under the leadership of Kurt Eisner, a Socialist, took control of the government. He was assassinated in February, 1918, and for a time there was a struggle between the more moderate groups and the extremists of the Left, who sympathized with the Bolsheviks. By May, 1919, the moderate party had returned to power. In 1920 there was a movement in Salzburg, Tyrol, and parts of Upper Austria, which had for its aim the establishment of a kingdom with Bavaria, under the Bavarian Prince Ruprecht.

LEGISLATION.—The Constitution of 14 August, 1919, establishes the Free State of Bavaria, and places the supreme power in the people. The Diet consists of one Chamber, elected for four years on the basis of one member for every 40,000 inhabitants; at present there are 183 members. The present Chamber continues until 30 June, 1922. The suffrage is universal, equal, direct, secret, and proportional. All citizens over twenty-three years of age have the vote. The supreme power is exercised by the Ministry as a whole, and all privileges of birth and caste are abolished. The Church is separate from the State, all religious associations having equal rights and equal freedom in their activities. The various parties in the Bavarian Constituent Assembly were Bavarian People's Party, the Majority Socialists, the German Democrats, the Peasants' Union, the National Liberals, the Independent Socialists, and members from Coburg (three). The debt on 1 January, 1919, was 2,559,687,077 marks, of which 1,951,425,700 marks were railway debt.

Bayard, PIERRE DU TERRAIL, CHEVALIER, an heroic French knight, called "le chevalier sans peur et sans reproche" (the knight without fear and without reproach); b. at Castle Bayard, near Grenoble, in 1475; d. 30 April, 1524. He was remarkable for his modesty, piety, magnanimity, and his various accomplishments. He served under Charles VIII in his expedition against Naples in 1494, and distinguished himself at the battle of Tornova. After the accession of Louis XII of France, Bayard performed several remarkable exploits in war against the Spaniards and English. In the service of Francis I he took Prosper Colonna prisoner, and gained a victory at Marignano in 1515. He defended Mézières with success against the invading army of Emperor Charles V (1522), and for this important service was saluted as the saviour of his country. He was killed in battle at the river Sesia, expiring as he kissed the cross on the hilt of his sword. He won the reputation of having been the model of nearly every virtue.

Bayeux, DIOCESE OF (BAIOCENSIS; cf. C. E., II-358b), in the department of Calvados, France, with the united title of Lisieux, suffragan of Rouen. This diocese is at present (1922) under the administration of Rt. Rev. Thomas-Paul-Henri Lemonnier, b. in Etretat, 1853, ordained 1877, appointed 13 July, 1906. On 9 August, 1919, Bishop Lemonnier was named commander of the Order of Leopold by the Belgian king. During the World War 260 priests and 75 seminarians of this diocese were mobilized, and of this number 17 priests and 16 seminarians died, 1 priest was decorated with the Legion of Honor, 1 priest and 1 seminarian with the médaille militaire, 32 priests and 9 seminarians with the croix de guerre. According to the latest statistics the population of this diocese numbers 396,300, divided among 38 deaneries and 716 parishes. The principal educational institutions include an upper and lower seminary and a college.

Bayonne, DIOCESE OF (BAIONENSIS; cf. C. E., II-360c), comprising the department of Basses-Pyrénées, France, suffragan of Auch. Since 22 June, 1909, this diocese has also borne the united titles of Lescar and Oloron. The see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Francois-Xavier-Marie Gieure, b. in Castels, 1851, ordained 1874, superior of the upper seminary of Aire, 1895, appointed bishop 21 February, 1906. During the World War 560 priests and seminarians were mobilized from this diocese and of these 50 gave up their lives, 6 were decorated with the Legion of Honor, 3 with the médaille militaire, and 75 with the croix de guerre.

From 20-22 September, 1921, a diocesan synod was held here in the synodal hall of the new theological seminary. The principal educational institutions of the diocese are: The upper seminary of Bayonne, the lower seminaries of Balloc and Nay, the colleges of St. Louis de Gonzague at Bayonne, of the Immaculate Conception at Pau, of Moncade at Orthez, and colleges of St. Francis at Mauleon, Hasparren, Pontacq and Oloron. In 1921 the population of this territory was counted at 433,320, divided among 40 deaneries and 507 parishes.

Bearne, DAVID, editor and author, b. at Castle Donington, England, 28 February, 1856; d. at Wimbledon College, 25 February, 1920. In 1877 he was received into the Church, and ten years later entered the Society of Jesus. After his ordination, 31 July, 1896, he served the Bournemouth mission for four years, then spent a year at Roehampton, whence he moved to Wimbledon. Appointed assistant to Father Gretton, editor of the "Sacred Heart Messenger," on the latter's retirement Father Bearne took sole charge of the magazine, retaining the editorship until his death. However, he is best known as a writer of fiction, his series of boys' stories being popular in his own country and in America. Despite a few peculiarities of style, they were received with almost universal praise by the critics. Among them are "Ridingdale Stories," "The Golden Stair," "Stories from the Bright Ages," "The Ridingdale Boys," "Paying the Price," "Lance and His Friends." He produced in all thirty volumes, as well as contributions to his magazine, and some occasional verse. The latter is inferior to his prose but he had a gift of melody peculiarly his own. He was also a valuable preacher and giver of retreats.

Beatification and Canonization (cf. C. E., II-367b).—Formerly it was permissible to call servants of God Venerable as soon as their processes of beatification were introduced before the Congregation of Rites, now the title is to be given only after the publication of the papal decree declaring that they have practiced virtue in a heroic degree or that the fact of their martyrdom has been established. It should be remembered that the title "Venerable" never authorizes public veneration. To establish reputation for sanctity, the fact of martyrdom, and the working of miracles through the intercession of the servant of God, at least eight witnesses are required. In ancient causes, in which there are now no eye-witnesses or persons who have heard the testimony of such witnesses, the practice of virtue and the fact of martyrdom can be established by hearsay evidence, public tradition and contemporary documents or monuments recognized as authentic; but the miracles must always be proved by eye-witnesses. In establishing the sanctity or martyrdom of a religious not more than one half of those whose testimony is accepted may be members of his order.

After a cause has been introduced and the remissorial letters (C. E., II-368, n. 10) received, the tribunal of investigation must begin its sessions within three months, and complete its work within two years from the date of reception of the letters; formerly only eighteen months were allowed. When the results of the inquiry have been sent to the Holy See a discussion concerning the validity of the information and the Apostolic processes takes place in the presence of the cardinal prefect and three other cardinals of the Congregation of Rites selected by the pope, and of the cardinal relator, the secretary, the prothonotary Apostolic, the general promoter of the Faith, and the subpromoter, and a decision is rendered by the cardinals just mentioned. In the third or general meeting, to discuss the degree of virtue practiced by a confessor or the fact and cause of his martyrdom (C. E., l. c., n. 16), the consultors, prelates, and cardinals have only a consultive vote, the decision being reserved to the Pope.

MIRACLES.—As in establishing the practice of virtue in an heroic degree three formal meetings for discussion are held, so there are the ante-preparatory, the preparatory, and the general meetings for the proof of miracles wrought through the intercession of the venerable.

In the ante-preparatory meeting two specialists, physicians or surgeons, who have been selected by the cardinal relator after consulting the general promoter of the Faith, report whether a cure has been wrought, and whether the fact can be explained by natural causes; the postulator of the cause, who formerly was allowed to name one of the experts, must not be informed now who the experts are, and ordinarily they should not be known as such to one another. If the two experts consulted in the ante-preparatory meeting have upheld the miracles, only one expert is called in the preparatory discussion; if, however, they did not agree, the opinion of two new experts must be obtained. The cardinals may, however, always increase the number of experts, and the advocate of the cause may call another in replying. As in deciding the fact of martyrdom and the heroic practice of virtue, so here the decision in the general meeting regarding the miracles rests with the Pope alone. When the decree approving of the miracles has been issued, a discussion as to whether or not it is safe to proceed with the beatification is held in presence of the Pope, who, after hearing the opinions of the consultors and cardinals, renders the decision.

CANONIZATION (cf. C. E., II-366b).—Though only two miracles wrought through the intercession of a blessed after formal beatification are required for canonization, three are necessary when the beatification has been merely equivalent or virtual, that is in cases where the Holy See has approved of the honor paid to holy servants of God since at least the year 1540 (C. E., l. c., n. 6). In conclusion, it should be noted that no writings relating to the causes of beatification or canonization of servants of God may be published without leave of the Sacred Congregation of Rites. Code, can. 1999-2141.

Beauvais, DIOCESE OF (BELLOVACUM; cf. C. E., II-377d), in the department of Oise, France, with the united titles of Noyon and Senlis, suffragan of Reims. Bishop Donais, appointed to this see 14 December, 1899, d. 28 February, 1915, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Eugène-Stanislas Le Senne, b. in St. Pierre, Quiberon, 1866, ordained 1890, appointed 1 June, 1915. During the World War 140 priests and seminarians were mobilized from this diocese, of whom 7 priests and 12 seminarians died, 3 were decorated with the Legion of Honor, and 10 with the croix de guerre. A portion of the diocese was occupied by the enemy and Roye was entirely destroyed.

The population of this diocese numbers 411,000, divided among 36 deaneries and 600 parishes, and the 1920 statistics credit it with 540 secular and 16 regular clergy. The educational institutions include the lower seminary at Beauvais, the secondary school of Our Lady at Pont-Sainte-Maxence, the College of St. Vincent at Senlis, the College of the Holy Ghost at Beauvais, and the international agricultural institution, also at Beauvais.

Beaven, THOMAS D. See SPRINGFIELD, DIOCESE OF.

Bedjan, PAUL. See MISSION, CONGREGATION OF THE.

Beirut, MARONITE ARCHDIOCESE OF (BRYTENSIS MARONITARUM; cf. C. E., II-392b), in Phœnicia. On 1 September, 1920, France proclaimed the region of Mount Lebanon a Christian State, independent of the rest of Syria, with the capital at Beirut. The proclamation was the result of the joint efforts in Paris of the patriarch and the present Archbishop Ignatius Mobarak of Beirut. A Maronite cleric assisted by prelates of other communities drafted the constitution.

There are five parishes within the city and 95 without, with a total of 110 churches and a ministry of 150 secular and 50 regular priests. There are 18 monasteries, 1 seminary with 25 seminarians, 1 college for men in Beirut with 20 teachers and 300 students, 60 elementary schools with 120 teachers and 2,000 pupils of both sexes. The Catholic institutions are supported by the government. Conferences for the clergy are held bi-monthly, and a monthly magazine is published for them. For the laity there is a Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary with a large membership of both sexes. There are many dailies and periodicals which have proved zealous defenders of the Faith. During the World War about a third of the Maronites died of a famine brought about by the Turks.

Archbishop Joseph Debs (1879-1907), was a man of great energy, his zeal being attested by many handsome churches within Beirut, among which is the present cathedral, a college for men, numerous pious works existing even to this day, together with a large number of liturgical and historical works. He was succeeded by Archbishop Peter Chelbi (1908-1917), a man of unusual talent and learning, who during the war died in exile.

Beja, DIOCESE OF (BIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-393d), in Portugal, suffragan of Evora. Beja is the site of the old Roman city, Pax Julia, and was a splendid diocese until the Moorish invasion, which extinguished Christianity there. The diocese was restored in 1770. Since that time there were many long vacancies of bishops, during which religious life was not fervent. There is no chapter at Beja.

Following the revolution of 1910 and the proclamation of a republic, the Bishop of Beja, Rt. Rev. Sebastião Leite de Vasconcellos, was obliged to leave the diocese, the seminary was closed, and all religious orders were expelled. Bishop Leite de Vasconcellos, born at Oporto, was ordained 15 November, 1874, appointed Bishop of Beja 19 December, 1907, but forced by decree of the republic, 18 April, 1911, to leave his diocese, he lived at Lourdes, and since November, 1912, in Rome, where he resides at the Latin-American College. On 15 December, 1919, he was promoted titular Archbishop of Damietta, assistant at papal throne, named a Knight of the Order of St. George 26 August, 1918.

Since the expulsion of the bishop the diocese has passed through a tempestuous and desperate period, being administered by the Archdiocese of Evora. On 16 December, 1920, Rt. Rev. José do Patrocínio Dias was elected bishop, consecrated in the cathedral at Guardia 3 June, 1921, and entered Beja November of the same year.

There are 116 parishes in the diocese with 72 secular priests and 10 seminarians, who go for their studies to the archdiocesan seminary at Evora. The lack of vocations, combined with other losses, have made the shortage of priests in the diocese serious. The hospitals, asylums, refuges, and schools are without any religious jurisdiction.

During the revolution many priests were put in prison, banished, and persecuted, while many emigrated, all of which caused in the diocese a most deplorable condition. There is a commission organized in the diocese to give religious instruction. The present bishop, Mgr. Dias, was in France from the time of the entrance of the Portuguese Expeditionary Forces until the end of the war, as chaplain of 15th Regiment of Infantry, and chief chaplain of the Corps, he was cited at various times in the army orders and decorated with a medal (medal comenda da ordem militar) for distinguished service in the field, crus de guerra (2d class), and also fourragère da Torre e Espada. Rev. Antonio dos Aujos, secretary to the bishop, was also chaplain with the Portuguese Expeditionary Corps in France, served in various advances, mentioned twice in army orders, decorated with crus de guerra (4th class), crus de Christi (with palm), and fourragère da Torre e Espada. No other priests of the diocese were absent during the war.

Belem do Para, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BELEMENSIS DO PARA; cf. C. E., II-394c), in the State of Para, Brazil, South America. This see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Santin-Maria da Silva Coutinho, b. in Areias, 1868, ordained 1891, appointed Bishop of St. Louis de Maranhão, 9 September, 1906, and promoted 6 December of the same year. By a decree of 29 October, 1920, a portion of the territory of the archdiocese was taken to be joined to the prelature nullius of Concepcion. By 1920 statistics this diocese comprises a Catholic population of 480,000, 2,000 Protestants, almost 100,000 uncivilized natives, 50 parishes, 10 filial churches, 62 secular and 25 regular clergy, 30 Brothers, and 2 colleges.

Belgian Bureau (with headquarters at 429-31 West 47th Street, New York), organized to foster the spiritual and temporal welfare of the Belgians in America, was founded in September, 1913, at the joint request of the Belgian Government and the bishops of Belgium with the hearty approval of His Eminence Cardinal Farley. The principal work of the new institution was to be the care and protection of the Immigrant. The Belgian Government had repeatedly been advised by Mr. Pierre Mali, the Belgian consul-general at New York, of the unhappy conditions among immigrants landing in the United States, and the Belgian bishops had often heard from bishops and priests in America of the same unfortunate situation. An existing society, the Belgian Benevolence Society of New York, had made several unavailing efforts to remedy the sad state of affairs, and the conclusion was reached that only a priest would be able to handle the proposition satisfactory. After several consultations between Mr. Mali, Bishop Gabriels, Father Notebaert of Rochester and others, at the suggestion of Monsignor De Becker, the Rector of the American College of Louvain who happened to be in New York, it was decided to ask Father Stillemans then pastor of the Sacred Heart Church of El Reno, Oklahoma, to take up the new work. With the consent of Bishop Meerschaert, Rev. J. F. Stillemans came to New York where he was heartily welcomed by Cardinal Farley, Monsignor Mooney, Monsignor Edwards, and other authorities of the archdiocese. The Belgian Bishops promise to supply whatever assistants might eventually be needed, and so in July, 1914, Rev. O. A. Nys came from Belgium, and in 1919 the Belgian bishops sent a second assistant in the person of Rev. C. C. Roosens.

In a general way the immigration work may be considered as threefold: assistance to the immigrants whilst passing through the immigration inspection; protection en route, especially for girls and children; and care as to proper location and assistance for those who arrive without definite destination. To accomplish this means work at the piers, the railroad stations and Ellis Island, besides the work at the office, and correspondence. The Belgian Bureau has also a few rooms where temporary shelter is given.

There is close communication between the immigration authorities and the bureau. Often the Government calls upon the Belgian Bureau for special cases, or brings people to it. On the other hand the Belgians in the United States most frequently advise the Bureau of the expected arrival of relatives and friends, while the directories and ords of the Belgian dioceses instruct the priests in Belgium to notify the Bureau of the departure of their parishioners. The steamship agents in Belgium also do this quite often. In not a few cases prospective immigrants or people who think of coming to these shores write to the Bureau for information of different kind.

Immigration from Belgium is not large as compared with that from several other countries, and owing to the war its numbers have varied considerably. If the Government could see its way to greater liberality in the rights granted immigration workers and if the Bureau's resources were more ample, it could undoubtedly reach every Belgian immigrant. As it is, it assists several thousands each year, and fortunately practically all those who encounter unusual difficulties or stand in need of special protection.

The follow-up work in New York itself is rendered very difficult by the vastness of the city and the consequent fact that it is so easy to lose track of people. Special care is devoted and very successfully to young girls by the Belgian Sisters of St. John Berchmans Convent. Outside of New York, the Bureau can do follow-up work only as far as it is able to enlist the co-operation of priests or laymen, for it lacks the necessary means to set up an adequate organization.

Besides the Immigration Department, the Belgian Bureau operates an Employment Bureau and an Information Office, the last named constituting a very important activity. Thousands of Belgians, in America as well as in Belgium, avail themselves of this means to obtain correct and safe information and guidance. The Charity Department of the Belgian Bureau relieves the sick and destitute and is made especially effective, thanks through the untiring zeal of the Belgian Sisters of St. John Berchmans Convent. The Belgian Bureau is furthermore a center of social work comprising conferences, lectures, social gatherings, classes and other means of education, Americanization and general welfare.

During the war the Belgian Bureau rendered great services as headquarters of the Belgian Relief Fund and numerous other committees, and also took care of the Belgian Refugees who came to America. The resources of the Belgian Bureau consist of the subsidy granted by the Belgian Government and the one allowed by the Belgian Bishops, besides donations by private persons or societies. No fees or compensations of any kind, not even for board or lodging, are accepted from the immigrants.

J. F. STILLEMANS.

Belgium (cf. C. E. II-395b).—The area of the kingdom is 11,373 square miles, excluding the districts of Eupen and Malmedy, which come under Belgian sovereignty as a result of the Treaty of Versailles (1919). The population, estimated on 31 December, 1919, was 7,577,027, or 652 persons to the square mile. The excess of females over males was 77,787. Of the population in 1910, 2,833,334 spoke French only, 3,220,662 Flemish only, 31,415 German only, and 52,457 spoke all three languages. In 1919 there were 57,758 emigrants and 50,043 immigrants. The largest cities, with the population in 1919, are: Brussels and suburbs, 658,268; Antwerp, 322,857; Liège, 166,697; Ghent, 165,655; Malines, 59,869; Bruges, 53,489; Ostend, 45,973; Verviers, 44,118; Louvain, 40,069.

RELIGION.—In 1921 Belgium raised its Ministry to the Holy See to the rank of embassy and appointed as ambassador one of its most distinguished diplomats, Baron Beyens, dean of the Belgian Diplomatic Corps. The retiring Minister, Comte D'Ursel, received the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Gregory the Great from Pope Benedict XV. Belgium has a Catholic premier (1921) in the person of Baron Carton de Wiart, the acknowledged leader of the Younger Right Catholic Democrats, former Minister of Justice, and for years a prominent figure in Catholic campaigns in Belgium. The language question, involving the predominance of the French or Flemish language has long been a disturbing element both from a religious and a political standpoint. A letter of Pope Benedict XV. (1921) warned the clergy of the possible loss of their priestly dignity and the fruit of their ministry, by indulging in acrimonious controversies, verbal or written, on the subject. Religious statistics reveal 21 Protestant pastors and 15 Jewish rabbis, or ministers. For Catholic statistics see MALINES, ARCHDIOCESE OF; BRUGES, DIOCESE OF; GHENT, DIOCESE OF; LIÈGE, DIOCESE OF; NAMUR, DIOCESE OF; TOURNAI, DIOCESE OF.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Of all the warring countries in Europe, none have returned to their pre-war activities in a measure comparable with Belgium. When the armistice was signed, the country found itself with one-third of its factories ruined; in transportation essentials, 1,250 miles of railroads, 1,800 bridges, and 400 miles of canals had been destroyed, 60,000 railroad cars and 2,500 locomotives taken by the Germans, and the telegraph and telephone systems ruined. Progress toward reconstruction has been phenomenal in the past two years, for all the pre-war industries, with the exception of the steel plants, have practically attained the production of former years. Practically all the trains in the country are now running on pre-war schedule and the bridges and roadbeds have been re-constructed. The total length of railways in 1919 was: State lines, 2,759 miles, private lines, 184 miles; light railways, 1,706 miles; total, 4,649 miles. It is now proposed to electrify the railway system of the country. The length of navigable waterways in 1919 was 1,231 miles; the length of the roads, state roads, 5,187 miles; provincial roads, 964 miles; concreted roads, 26 miles; total length, 6,177 miles.

Agricultural activity commenced immediately after the armistice was signed, with the result that crops produced in 1919 fully equalled those in 1913, the best sugar crop showing an excess of 4,000,000 pounds. As evidence of the intensity with which the Belgians applied themselves to work, it is interesting to note that on the termination of the war there were upward of 800,000 persons receiving chomage (unemployment wage) while at present, the number has been reduced to less than 200,000. Much of this remarkable progress is due to the activity of the Recuperation Committee, which has succeeded in recovering most of the machinery taken away by the Germans. In each province there is an official Agricultural Commission, delegates from which, together with specialists, form a supreme council of agriculture.

Of the total area in 1920, 2,945,104 hectares, 1,340,415 are under cultivation, 519,781 under forest, 107,977 fallow or uncultivated, the rest, roads, marshes, rivers. Figures for 1919 show 298,508 farms, of which approximately 28 per cent were cultivated by their owners. The devastated region, amounting to but 250,000 acres, lies mainly in west Flanders; and of this 25,000 acres were cultivated in 1920.

The chief crops for 1919 were wheat, oats, rye, potatoes, barley, beets, and tobacco. In 1919 there were 755 quarries, with 14,909 workmen, turning out products worth 58,504,450 francs; the number of coal mines in the same year was 121, number of workers, 139,674; the coal production in 1920 was 22,413,530 tons of coal, 2,922,000 tons of briquettes, 1,800,000 tons of coke. In 1919, 250,570 metric tons of pig iron were produced in 13 furnaces, as against 2,484,690 tons in 19 furnaces in 1913. An official investigation revealed that Belgian industry was then employing 76 per cent of its 1913 workers, labor in coal mining and transportation showing an excess. The principal foreign commerce of Belgium is with Argentina, Belgian Congo, France, Germany, Great Britain, Netherlands, and the United States. Imports from Great Britain in 1919 showed a value of $155,933,000; from the United States, $122,017,444; France, $103,207,222; Argentina, $23,319,333. Exports to Germany, customs union, $70,520,222; France, $62,018,778; Netherlands, $49,551,889. The public debt in 1914 amounted to 4,890,000,000 francs; in 1919 to 19,533,434,900 francs.

EDUCATION.—Many have been the dissensions in recent years regarding education in Belgium. In 1914 school education was made compulsory for all children under fourteen, and in 1919 the Belgian government enacted a law giving the same subsidies to private religious schools as to public schools, provided the former conformed with the minimum standards laid down by the state for the latter. In Belgium, primary schools, of which there must be one in every commune, are administered by the authorities of the commune, the central Government contributing to their support by subsidies and laying down certain requirements. Religious instruction, established by law of 1895, continues, and parents who do not wish their children to take the religious courses may have them exempted. Of the public schools there are (31 December, 1920), 23 royal atheneums and colleges with 1,364 pupils, 8 private colleges with 1,462 pupils, 97 middle class schools with 25 male pupils, and 48 with 13,638 female pupils. For elementary education there are 7,959 primary schools with 960,819 pupils, 3,366 infant schools with 205,418 pupils, and 4,193 adult schools with 174,044 pupils. Of normal schools there are 24 for training secondary teachers and 75 for training elementary teachers. Of the four universities, Ghent and Liège are State institutions, Brussels and Louvain free. In 1919-20 Brussels had 1,644 students; Ghent, 1,006; Liège, 2,656; and Louvain, 2,783. Attached to the universities are various special technical schools, with 3,034 students in 1919-20. There were also 6 commercial high schools; the Royal Academy of Fine Arts at Antwerp, a polytechnical school at Mons, an agricultural institute at Gembloux, and four royal conservatories at Brussels, Liège, Ghent, and Antwerp.

When the war broke out, a Bill had been introduced into the Chambers to change the State University of Ghent in the heart of Flanders, from a French to a Flemish school. The German invaders, regardless of the laws of the land, made the change without any more ado, and created a peculiarly awkward situation, for all those who taught and studied in the university are now looked upon as traitors. The agitation for the use of the Flemish tongue in the university continues to the extent that the Chambers are undecided whether to establish a Flemish university, or to convert the present University of Ghent into a Flemish institution, or merely to institute Flemish courses there.

The school question continues to play an important part in the religious and political life of the country, and Catholics are compelled to wage a continuous war for the freedom of their educational establishments, against Liberal and Socialist encroachments. Illegality in the system of the Minister of Instruction, M. Destree, Free Mason, recently resigned, is in some measure due to Catholic negligence in not giving religious instruction in schools where, by law, it is compulsory. M. Destree endeavored to supply in its stead, instruction in civic ethics, claiming this as an interpretation, not an abrogation, of the law. Since the armistice, however, many Socialists seem inclined to settle the school question in a fairer way, realizing the tenacity of Catholic Belgium in maintaining its rights, and their recognition, public opinion gives to the justice of its claims.

GOVERNMENT.—The changes in Belgium's constitution agitated for before the European war, are now materializing. In 1919 a drastic reform Bill was passed, giving one vote and one only to every Belgian over 21 years of age. In 1920 a Bill granting unrestricted suffrage to women was defeated, but later the Chamber voted to amend the Constitution so that any future Parliament by two-thirds majority could extend the suffrage without constitutional revision. On 8 February, an eight-hour day law was enacted, and in November a bonus was granted to every Belgian soldier regardless of rank. In the latest provincial election of senators, the returns were as follows: 336 Catholics, 132 Liberals, 206 Socialists, and seven others. The Catholics have an absolute majority in five provinces, and are strongest numerically in two others. The Socialists have an absolute majority in only 2 provinces. The newest Cabinet of Belgium is composed of 5 Catholics and 5 Liberals. The returns to the Chamber of Deputies in the latest election reveal the composition of the Chamber as 80 Catholics, 52 Socialists, 28 Liberals. In 1921 the first woman was elected to the Belgian Parliament.

HISTORY (1911-1921).—As early as 1911 Belgium had feared for her neutrality. Though this neutrality was guaranteed by the Great Powers under the Treaty of London, 19 April, 1829, the country felt that in view of the alarming Moroccan situation she could not afford to omit any precautions against its violation. Accordingly the defenses of Liège and Namur were strengthened, and guns were brought from Antwerp.

At the very first news of the ominous Austrian ultimatum to Serbia in July, 1914, she felt more keenly the danger to which she might be exposed. On 29 July, she placed her army "upon a strengthened war footing," but did not order complete mobilization until two days later, when war appeared inevitable. On 2 August, 1914, German troops occupied Luxemburg, and on the same day the German Government presented an ultimatum to Belgium, demanding within twelve hours the permission to move German troops across that country into France, promising, if permission were accorded, to guarantee Belgian independence and integrity and to pay an indemnity, and threatening that, if any resistance were encountered, Germany would treat Belgium as an enemy and that "the decision of arms" would determine the subsequent relations between the two powers.

The Belgian Government characterized the ultimatum as a gross violation of international law and refused the request. On 4 August, 1914, when the German troops had actually crossed the Belgian border, she appealed for the assistance of the Powers that had guaranteed her neutrality. Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign secretary, dispatched an ultimatum to Germany, requiring assurance by midnight that Germany would respect Belgian neutrality. Germany refused on the ground of "military necessity."

The resistance of the Belgians was a surprise to the German military authorities. From the German frontier, opposite Aix-la-Chapelle to the gap of the Oise on the Franco-Belgian frontier, it would have been but a six day march for an unresisted army. The outraged Belgians unanimously and heroically determined to resist. Liège happened to be in the path of the German soldiers, and against Liège a detachment was sent under General von Emmich, but so anxious were the Germans not to lose any time that von Emmich recklessly sacrificed his men in order to carry the city by assault. Assault failing, von Emmich brought up giant 42-centimeter howitzers which speedily demolished some forts encircling the city, and enabled the Germans to enter the town. Eight days later, all the forts were silenced.

After the fall of Liège, the German cavalry swept over the neighboring country and German armies penetrated Belgium. The Belgians fell back to Louvain and there on 19 August, made their last stand. Louvain was burned and its famous library reduced to ashes. Towards the northwest, in the direction of Antwerp and Malines, the valiant Belgian army retreated, pressed by a German force. General von Kluck entered Brussels on 20 August and then moved south towards Mons and Maubeuge. In the meantime the armies of General von Hausen and Duke Albert of Württemberg were moving westward through the hilly country of the Ardennes in southeastern Belgium. Between these forces, was a small detachment of Belgians, pursued up the Meuse to Namur by the troops of General von Bülow. On 22 August, Namur fell to the Germans. The Belgian resistance gave the French time to mobilize their forces behind the Franco-Belgian front.

By this time the Franco-British forces were on hand to render assistance, and on 21 August managed to take a defensive position north of Maubeuge on a line from Condé, in France, to Mons in Belgium. An offensive was attempted in southeastern Belgium but it broke down completely, and the French were soon in precipitate retreat. The British, too, were unable to withstand the German onslaughts and unwilling to be outflanked or overwhelmed, General French, the British commander, began his sensational retreat from Mons on 23 August. Most of Belgium was conquered and the road to France lay clear to the Germans. Only a tiny strip in the southwestern corner extending from Nieupoort to Ypres was in the possession of the Belgians. The Belgian government was exiled to Havre, in France, and the Belgian people were ruled by a German military governor at Brussels.

The violation of Belgian neutrality aroused the civilized world and brought Great Britain into the war. The dismantling of her great industries, the war levies demanded from them (3,000,000 francs from the town of Wavre alone), embittered the Belgians against the conquerors. The burning of Louvain, including the famous Catholic university and church of St. Peter, which was justified, as a revenge for a "concerted attack on the German troops," shocked the world by its vandalism. For the horrors of war, inflicted on countless women and children, the Germans offered the pleas of "military necessity" and "war is war." The Belgian found a courageous and able advocate in Cardinal Mercier, Archbishop of Malines and primate of the Catholic Church in Belgium, who protested the German conquest and appealed for aid to the Vatican and foreign Powers. Especially notable was the organization of relief under American auspices.

In 1916 the devastated country was subject to another calamity, namely the deportation of some hundred thousand Belgians to work in German factories and thus husband the supply of military power in Germany. The mineral wealth of Belgium had already been requisitioned and used in the production of munitions of war and its railways were working overtime in the transportation of troops from one frontier to another. The fortune of war now changed, and on 28 September, 1918, King Albert and his Belgians, aided by a French army under General Dégoutte and the British army of General Plumer, struck out between Dixmude and Ypres and while the Belgians got close to Roulers, the British recovered Passchendaele. In Flanders, 14 October, the group of Franco-Belgian-British armies renewed their attacks on a vast front from Dixmude to the Lys. Albert's army continued its victorious march; Ostend and Bruges were reentered, then Zeebrugge; the suburbs of Ghent and the Dutch frontier were reached; the Lys was crossed. On 21 October, the British assailed the Germans east of Denain and captured Valenciennes on 2 November, and Landrecies two days later. Maubeuge fell on 9 November, and on 11 November, the last days of fighting, the British gained Mons, the scene of their defeat and retreat in August, 1914.

The war was formally ended by the Treaty of Peace, signed at Versailles between Germany and the Allied Powers in 1919. This abrogated all former treaties between Belgium and the Allies, especially the famous Treaty of London, 15 November, 1831. By the Treaty of Versailles, Belgium acquired the Prussian districts of Malmédy (813 square kilometers) and Eupen (180 square kilometers). The terms of the treaty gave the inhabitants the right to express their wish to remain united with Germany, but only a small minority of the population expressed such a wish, and accordingly on 12 January, 1920, Belgian sovereignty was proclaimed over these regions. In March of the same year, Belgium and the Netherlands ratified the treaty for the settlement of the boundary and waterway questions, especially as regards the Scheldt. In May, 1921, the Treaty of Trianon signed by Belgium, put an end to the state of war existing between Hungary and Belgium. On 12 June, 1921, Belgium displaced Germany as protector of the Duchy of Luxembourg. All customs formalities between Belgium and the Duchy were abolished; all Luxembourg money was to be replaced by Belgian money, with the exception of bills less than 10 francs, to a total of 25,000,000 francs. The mandate for the north-western part of the ex-German colony of East Africa was given to Belgium. A report of the Hoover Relief Committee, formed to aid the inhabitants of the devastated regions showed that between September, 1914, and September, 1920, $1,300,000,000 has been expended for food and clothing; help had been given to 10,000,000 people; and the administrative cost was only .42 of 1 per cent of the funds handled.

Belgrade and Smederevo, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BELLO-GRADENSIS ET SEMENDRIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-407b), in Serbia, directly dependent on the Holy See. This see is sometimes listed as a titular, sometimes as a residential see, but the Curia always regards it as titular for the Greek Rite. At present (1922) Rt. Rev. Dominic Premus, auxiliary to the archbishop of Zagreb, bears the title. However, the Concordat with Servia of 24 June, 1914, erected the diocese into a residential metropolitan see, which as yet is not filled by any archbishop.

Prevented by the old Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, which held a protectorate over all the Catholics in Servia, Belgrade has never had a church for her Catholic population. However, an ever increasing body of Catholic Yugoslavs, is working to raise funds for the erection of a church here. The Holy Father has given his approval to the enterprise and it is significant that the Crown Prince Regent Alexander has replied to greetings sent by the Society, wishing them continued success.

Bellarmino, ROBERT, VENERABLE (cf. C. E., II-411c).—His cause was again introduced by a decree dated 22 December, 1920.

Belleville, DIOCESE OF (BELLEVILLENSIS; cf. C. E., II-414d), in southern Illinois, suffragan of Chicago. At the time of its erection, 1887, had a Catholic population of 50,000 and now (1921) numbers 72,000, divided as follows: Americans, 60,000; Italians, 5,000; Poles, 3,000; Lithuanians and Slovaks, 4,000. The diocese includes 135 parishes, 135 churches, 35 missions, 1 convent for men, 86 for women, 130 secular priests, 2 regular, 4 lay brothers, 459 nuns, 30 ecclesiastical students, 2 high schools with 4 teachers 1 for boys with attendance of 58, and 1 for girls with an attendance of 28, 2 academies for girls with 10 teachers and 105 students, 2 training schools with 4 teachers and 22 students, 74 elementary schools with 4,000 teachers and 10,650 students. Missionary work in the diocese is conducted by the Diocesan Mission Society and the Holy Childhood Association. There are 2 homes, 1 orphan asylum, 8 hospitals and a National Catholic Community House. The St. Clair County Jail, St. Clair County Farm, State Hospital at Anna, and Southern State Penitentiary admit the priests of the diocese to minister to them. The various organizations of the diocese are: the Priests' Purgatorial Society, Priests' Eucharistic League, Clergymen's Aid Society, St. Francis de Sales Educational Aid Society, the People's Eucharistic League, National Council of Catholic Men, Catholic Women's League, Catholic Junior League. The "Messenger" and the "Schoolmate" are published in the diocese. On 2 July, 1913, Bishop Janssen first bishop of the diocese died, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Henry Althoff, D. D., who was consecrated 24 February, 1914. Within recent years the diocese also lost its vicar general, Rev. H. J. Hagen, D. D.

On 4 January, 1912, the Cathedral of Belleville was destroyed by fire and in October, 1913, a new cathedral was completed. In 1919 the National Catholic Community House of East St. Louis was opened, and on 1 December, 1920, the fourth diocesan synod was held. During the World War the diocese sent three chaplains and an organized Diocesan War Council took an active part in all patriotic work.

Belley, DIOCESE OF (BELLICUM; cf. C. E., II-415c), coextensive with the civil department of Ain in France, and suffragan of Besançon. Rt. Rev. François-Auguste Labeuche, who came to this see 13 July, 1906, d. 18 March, 1910, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Adolphe Manier, b. at Foug, 1851, ordained 1875, appointed bishop 13 April, 1910, and consecrated at Autun, 11 June, following. During the World War 251 priests and 51 seminarians were mobilized from this diocese; of this number 14 priests and 20 seminarians were killed or wounded, 8 were decorated with the Légion d'honneur, 10 with Médaille Militaire, 3 with Médaille des épidémies, 4 received foreign decorations, and 165 received the Croix de Guerre or other citations. By latest statistics the Catholic population of the diocese numbers 342,482, and is divided into 442 parishes. The diocese comprises 442 churches, 1 Trappist abbey, 553 secular and 30 regular clergy, 8 convents of women, 1 seminary, 52 seminarians, 3 secondary schools for boys with 50 teachers and 300 students, 12 secondary schools for girls with 48 teachers and 400 students, and 15 elementary schools with 30 teachers and 500 pupils. Ten diocesan missionaries conduct charitable works and various institutions, including 25 hospitals, 2 lunatic asylums, and 10 centers for monthly retreats for the clergy are established. An association for deceased clergy, an association for the fathers of families, and the "Société d'émulation scientifique, littéraire, historique," are organized; the Journal de l'Ain, and "Croix de l'Ain" are published here.

Bells (cf. C. E., II-418d).—To summon the faithful to Mass and other services, every church should have a bell that has been consecrated or at least blessed. If the bell is the property of exempt religious it may be blessed by a higher superior; other bells may be blessed by local ordinaries; in either case the power to bless may be delegated to any priest. The consecration of a church bell is, however, reserved to the bishop. The bells are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical authorities. They should not be used for purely secular purposes except in case of necessity or by leave of the ordinary or in accordance with a lawful custom or with conditions laid down by the donors of the bells.

Belluno-Feltre, DIOCESE OF (BELLUNENSIS ET FELTRENIS; cf. C. E., II-424b), in Venetia, Italy, suffragan of Venice. Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Foschiani, who came to this see 3 July, 1910, d. 5 October, 1913, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giosuè Cattarossi, b. at Cornale, 1863, appointed Bishop of Albenga, 11 April, 1911, and transferred to this see 21 November, 1913. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 187,650; the 1922 statistics credit it with 95 parishes, 470 churches, 165 secular and 72 regular clergy, 3 convents of men and 20 of women, 142 sisters, 2 seminaries, 46 seminarians, 2 secondary schools for boys with 250 students, and 3 for girls with 400 students. All public schools, both elementary and secondary, are dependent upon the State, as well as all the charitable institutions. During the World War the clergy and laity of this diocese took an active part in all patriotic and charitable works. A mutual aid society is organized among the clergy, and Catholic organizations among the laity are formed; a Catholic periodical, "Amico del Popolo," is published here.

Belmont Abbey, a Benedictine foundation established at Belmont, near Hereford, England, in 1859, under the invocation of St. Michael, as a central novitiate house of studies for the English congregation. The priory church was the pro-cathedral of the Diocese of Newport, the bishop and canons of which were chosen from the English Benedictines. When, in 1916, that diocese became the Archdiocese of Cardiff, the church was raised to the rank of a cathedral. The archdiocese was to have two metropolitan chapters, a regular chapter at Belmont and a secular chapter at Cardiff, but on the petition of the Abbot President of the English Congregation, who intimated his willingness to relinquish the privilege of the cathedral and the cathedral chapter at Belmont, the Holy See announced that the Belmont chapter should be dissolved and the priory raised to the rank of an abbey. After the publication of the Apostolic Letter in 1920 effecting this, the Belmont community elected as first Abbot of Belmont Dom Aelred Kindersley, formerly prior. The election took place 30 June, and immediately afterwards the newly elected abbot was escorted to the abbey church, where he was enthroned by the Abbot President, Dom Cuthbert Butler, Abbot of Downside. On 15 July, 1920, the solemn blessing of the new abbot took place in Belmont Abbey Church, when Cardinal Bourne performed the ceremony, assisted by the abbots of the English congregation with a large attendance of bishops and prelates of the Benedictine Order. The Abbey has a community of 22 religious, of whom 12 are priests, 4 clerics, 5 novices, and 1 postulant.

Belmont Abbey College.—Belmont, North Carolina, formerly known as St. Mary's College, is one of the oldest Catholic institutions of higher learning in the Southern Atlantic States, and was founded by the Fathers of the Order of St. Benedict in 1878 and chartered with full collegiate powers on 1 April, 1896. The faculty numbering 14, is composed exclusively of members of the Order of St. Benedict. The college possesses a library of 7,000 volumes, a well equipped laboratory, and a gymnasium, erected in 1907.

Connected with the college is an academy which embraces the usual high school course and a commercial school. A seminary in which members of the Order of St. Benedict and students for the Vicariate of North Carolina receive their training, is also connected with the college and numbers twenty students.

In recent years ten scholarships have been founded in Belmont Abbey College, for the education of young men for the priesthood. The Rt. Rev. Leo Haid, O.S.B., D.D., is president of the college, where in 1920-21 100 students were registered. (For Abbey Nullius, see NORTH CAROLINA.)

Benadir, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., II-426c), comprises the territory of Italian Somaliland in East Africa, and is entrusted to the Dis-calcated Trinitarians. Rev. Guglielmo di San Felice, second prefect apostolic of this territory, named toward the end of 1906, was forced to retire the following year because of ill-health. His successor, the present prefect apostolic, Rev. Alessandro de Santi, went to his prefecture 12 February, 1908. In 1920 there were 6 regular clergy (Trinitarians), in this territory, 5 Brothers, 4 resident parishes, one of which was vacant, 1 hospital at Gelit and several others are about to be established.

Benedict XV (GIACOMO DELLA CHIESA), POPE, b. 21 November, 1854; d. 21 January, 1922. He was the second son of Giuseppe Marchese della Chiesa, of Genoese nobility, and Giovanna Migliorati of Venice. Belonging to his family on his mother's side was Innocent VII, Roman pontiff 1404-1406. After preparatory studies he entered the university in his native city, receiving there his doctorate in both civil and canon law in 1873. His father desired that he should become a lawyer, but Giacomo wished to dedicate himself to the priesthood. Accordingly he went to the Collegio Capranica in Rome for his ecclesiastical studies, and completed them at the Academy of Ecclesiastical Nobles. He was ordained priest 21 December, 1878. Appointed secretary to Mgr. Rampolla in the Sacred Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, he followed him to Madrid when Rampolla was apostolic nuncio there, and returned when his distinguished chief was made cardinal and Secretary of State by Leo XIII in 1887. He remained at that post after the death of Leo XIII, and for the first four years of the pontificate of Pius X. During that time he had advanced through successive grades until he reached that of Substitute. When Cardinal Swampa died, in 1907, Mgr. della Chiesa was chosen as his successor in the See of Bologna, and was consecrated by Pius X himself in the Sistine Chapel. On 25 May, 1914, he was made cardinal and on 3 September of that year was elected to succeed Pius X. He took the name of Benedict XV.

His pontificate lasted for seven years, four months, and nineteen days; all of them synchronous with the years of the most tragic crisis in the world's history, the World War. His first encyclical, "Ad Beatissimi Apostolorum Principis," was issued at the beginning of the titanic struggle; his second, "Pacem Dei Munus Pulcherrimum," coincided with the meeting of the plenipotentiaries in their endeavor to reconstruct the map of Europe and give peace to the world. Between these two major utterances of the pope, there are three others, those of 22 January, 1915, the great Appeal of 28 July of the same year, addressed to the belligerents and their leaders, and, on 1 August, 1917, the offer made by him to act as mediator for a general peace. In all of these documents, however, it must be noted he cited no one to his tribunal. To have done so would not only not have been conducive to peace, but would have aroused jealousy on all sides and would also have exposed the Church itself to the most serious perturbations. Nevertheless, he regarded himself as obligated to condemn all violations of international justice and morality, no matter by whom they were committed, meantime lavishing his bounties on all the victims of the war, by securing through diplomatic channels the exchange of wounded soldiers, the liberation of civilian prisoners, the hospitalization of the wounded, the repatriation of prisoners whose families needed their help, etc. His message of 1 August, 1917, was a plea for the application of Articles 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the Hague Conference of 1907, and sketched in large lines the organization established in 1919 and known as the League of Nations, such as, for instance, general and proportional disarmament, obligatory arbitration, freedom of the seas, reciprocal cancellation of the general indebtedness, total evacuation of Belgium and France, and other countries and colonies, finally the rectification of frontiers, in keeping with the just aspirations of the various peoples and the general good of human society. All this was done before it became evident that the victory was to be with the Allies, so that a proposition of such a kind and at such a moment should dispel forever the calumny that the document was inspired by Germany. Unfortunately, this appeal of the pope was not treated with even the common courtesy of an acknowledgment by the Entente, their purpose being to pointedly ignore him and to exclude all Sovereign Pontiffs from any share in European diplomacy. In his Encyclical of 1917, "Pacem," the pope almost replies to their silence and reminds the diplomats that in a league founded on the basis of Christianity there can be no better instrument employed than the Church, not only for the eternal interest of man, but for his material prosperity.

As a matter of fact, the pope is now the center of the diplomatic world, for whereas the nations had very few representatives accredited to the Holy See, prior to the war, now that it is over, almost all the nations of the world are represented there. Italy has welcomed in Monte Citorio the admission of a hundred Catholic legislators to check the danger of the rising tide of Socialism. The ceremonial code has been modified to facilitate the reception of European kings and princes at the Vatican. France, in particular, has been mollified by the canonization of Joan of Arc and Margaret Mary, and by the assurance as far as possible of the pope's interest in the Orient. Russia's crash possibly opens the way to a union of Eastern and Western Christianity, and perhaps the elevation of St. Ephrem, the Syrian, to the rank of Doctor of the Universal Church is a move in the same direction. Ireland has rejoiced in the canonization of Oliver Plunket, the Archbishop of Armagh, and his associate heroes.

During his pontificate the New Code of Canon Law was draughted. Modernism was again condemned and the new term of Integralism was forbidden, while on the other hand the traditional position against minimizing was maintained in Biblical controversies and in the teaching of the philosophy and theology of St. Thomas. Benedict XV in the few brief years of his pontificate established in out-of-the-way places in the world 9 prefectures apostolic, 28 vicariates apostolic, 25 new bishoprics, 8 archbishoprics, and 2 apostolic delegations. In charitable works, individual or associate, the spirit of his predecessors, Pius X and Leo XIII, was continually insisted upon, namely, the necessity of basing them on the supernatural, an element that is lacking in most of the humanitarian schemes of the day. His own charities were so lavish and so regardless of race, color, or creed, that a most marvelous recognition of it was publicly made in a quarter where it could never have been expected. In Constantinople, the heart of Mohammedanism, a magnificent bronze statue of the pope in full canonicals was erected even before his death, the expense of which was borne exclusively by Turks, schismatics, and Jews. When Benedict XV breathed his last, immediately from all quarters of the globe came diplomatic messages of condolence, not only the great nations of Europe, but Luxemburg, Bulgaria, Monaco, Finland, Denmark, Norway, Andorra, Japan, Nicaragua, Czechoslovakia, and others. Most affectionate of all was the one from Dail Eireann: "Kindly receive the expression of the profound grief of the Irish people on the death of the great Pontiff who has shown to us such devotion and paternal affection." The message from Egypt says: "In the name of the Mussulmans of Egypt the Committee at Paris presents to the whole of Christendom its sincerest condolence for the distressing loss of His Holiness Pope Benedict XV, who was the apostolic soul of the world's peace. His statue erected at Constantinople, the capital of Islam affords us the consolation of having always before our eyes his loving soul, the memory of his efforts for the peace of the world, his profound respect for justice and man's right to liberty." All of this will form an everlasting page in the history of the world.

Benedictine Order (cf. C. E., II-443a), an order which comprises fifteen congregations of monks living under the rule of St. Benedict, each with an abbot president and all under an abbot primate. The International Benedictine College of St. Anselm in Rome is immediately subject to the Holy See and is the residence of the abbot primate, who, however, during the World War (1915-19), retired to Einsiedeln, and St. Anselm became a military hospital under American auspices. The college was reopened in 1919 and is now crowded to capacity with 81 students, 24 professors, and 15 lay brothers.

The present abbot primate is Dom Fidelis de Stotzingen of the Beuronese Congregation, born 1871, ordained 1897, Abbot of Maria Laach in 1901, coadjutor in 1913 of Abbot Primate Hildebrand de Hemptinne, whom he succeeded at the latter's death in 1913. He is also procurator of the Greek Pontifical College of St. Athanasius. Pope Benedict XV was Protector of the whole Benedictine Order.

(1) The Cassinese Congregation, formerly that of St. Justina of Padua, erected by Gregory XII in 1408, consists of fourteen abbeys: Monte Cassino, St. Paul-without-the-Walls, Trinità di Cava, Modena, Florence, Perugia, Sienna, Assisi, Cesena, Catania, Palermo, Monreale, Farfa, and Pontida. The first three are abbeys nullius. The abbot president is Dom Gregory Diamare, elected in 1909, re-elected in 1915. New Constitutions for the congregation were approved in 1915. St. Justina of Padua, which was despoiled and its monks dispersed in 1787, was restored and erected into an abbey in 1919 under the Cassinese Congregation of Primitive Observance.

(2) The English Congregation, restored in 1607 after its suppression by Henry VIII, numbers five abbeys: Downside, Ampleforth, Woolhampton, Fort Augustus, and Belmont. In 1920 the first foundation of the English Congregation in America was made at Portsmouth, R. I., under Dom Leonard Sargent. The status of this foundation is still undefined. At Gorey (Ireland) is a school (Mt. St. Benedict's) established by Rev. Francis Sweetman, a monk of Downside. In 1916 the episcopal see of Newport, of which Belmont was the pro-cathedral, was translated to Cardiff, with a metropolitan cathedral chapter erected in 1920. Belmont, having renounced its privileges as cathedral priory, was erected into an abbey by papal decree of 1920. In recognition of this renunciation and past services of the order, the decree provides that so far as circumstances permit "there shall always be a Benedictine among the bishops of England." The Anglican Benedictines of Calvey came under Catholic obedience in 1913, but whereas they observe the Benedictine Rule they have not yet joined the Benedictine Congregation. The abbot president of the English Congregation is Dom Oswald Smith, Abbot of Ampleforth since 1900, appointed abbot president in April, 1921.

(3) The Hungarian Congregation, affiliated to the Cassinese, comprises the four abbeys of Bakonybél, Tihany, Dömök, and Zalavár, and the six residences of Komárom, Kőszeg, Győr, Pápa, Sopron, and Esztergom, which are dependent on the Archabbey Nullius of Monte Pannonia (Martinsberg). The abbot president and arch-abbot of Monte Pannonia is Dom Remigius Bárdos, appointed in 1920.

(4) The Swiss Congregation established in 1602, under the patronage of the Immaculate Conception, comprises five abbeys: Einsiedeln, Gries, Disentis, Engelberg, and Bregenz. The abbot president is Dom Thomas Bossart, Abbot of Einsiedeln since 1905.

(5) The Bavarian Congregation erected in 1684, under the patronage of the Holy Angels, numbers ten abbeys and two priories. The abbeys with date of abbatial title are: Metten (1840), Augsburg (1834), Ottobeuren (1834), Scheyern (1842), Weltenburg (1913), St. Boniface (1835) at Munich, Schäftlarn (1866), Ettal (1900), Plankstetten (1917), Niederalteich (1918). The priories are Andechs, dependent on the Abbey of Munich, and the Priory of Sts. Corbinian and Theodore at Munich, founded in 1903, canonically erected in 1904 and dependent on the Abbey of Scheyern. The Abbey of Niederalteich, founded in 731, ceased to exist in 1803, and was restored in 1918. The Abbey of Ottobeuren, formerly united to the Abbey of Augsburg, in 1918 was re-established as a monastery sui juris. The abbot president of the Bavarian Congregation is Dom Placid Glogger, Abbot of Augsburg since 1915.

(6) The Brazilian Congregation, founded in 1581, ceased to exist in 1889, and was restored by monks of the Beuronese Congregation in 1895. It consists of six abbeys and the Priory of Trinidad, founded 1912 and canonically erected in 1915. The abbeys, with date of restoration, are: Rio de Janeiro (1903), Bahia (1889), Olinda (1895), Parahyba (1903), São Paulo (1900), Quixadá (founded 1900). United to the Abbey Nullius of Our Lady of Montserrat at Rio de Janeiro is the territory of Rio Branco, annexed in 1909. The arch-abbot and president of the congregation is Joseph Faria, elected in 1920. The Abbey of Parahyba was united to the Abbey of Olinda in 1906.

(7) The Gallican Congregation, established in 1837, since the expulsion of its religious from France has houses in England, Spain, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Mexico, Argentina, and Canada. It numbers nine abbeys, the Conventual Priory of Our Lady of Victory at Paris, founded in 1893 and canonically erected in 1900, and five cells. The abbeys, with their present place of residence, are: Solesmes (Quarr Abbey, Isle of Wight, England), Ligugé (Cleveland, Belgium), Marseilles (Chiari, Italy), Silos, Fontanelle (Conques in Ardennes, Belgium), Farnborough, St. Maurice of Clairvaux in Luxemburg (erected in 1909, succeeding to the rights and privileges of the Abbey of St. Maurus at Glanefuil), Wisque (Oosterhout, Holland), Kergonan (Ciney-Linciaux, Belgium). The cells are: Cogullada in Saragossa, Spain, dependent on the Abbey of Ligugé; San Rafael in Mexico, Madrid, and Buenos Aires, dependent on the Abbey of Silos; and St. Benedict of the Lake in Sherbrooke, Canada, dependent on the Abbey of Fontanelle. In 1921 Dom Paul Delatte resigned as Abbot of Quarr Abbey and Superior General of the Gallican Congregation, and was succeeded by Dom Germain Gozien, hitherto prior of Quarr Abbey.

(8) The American-Cassinese Congregation, erected by Pius IX in 1855, under the title of the Holy Guardian Angels, comprises eleven abbeys: St. Vincent's (Beatty, Penn.), St. John (Collegeville, Minn.), St. Benedict's (Atchison, Kan.), St. Mary's (Newark, N. J.), Maryhelp (Belmont, N. C.), St. Bernard's (Cullman Co., Ala.), St. Procopius's (Lisle, Ill.), St. Leo's (Pasco Co., Fla.), St. Bede's (Peru, Ill.), St. Peter's (Muenster, Sask.), St. Martin's (Lacey, Wash.). St. Peter's was established under the name of Cluny in Illinois in 1892, and in 1903 was translated to Canada and erected into an abbey in 1911 and abbey nullius in 1921. Maryhelp is an abbey nullius erected in 1910. St. Bede's was erected into an abbey in 1910 and St. Martin's in 1914. The abbot president is Dom Ernest Helmstetter, Abbot of Newark since 1910. Abbot visitors are Dom Bernard Menges, Abbot of St. Bernard's, and Dom Vincent Huber, Abbot of St. Bede's.

(9) The Congregation of Beuron established by Pius IX in 1868, comprises seven abbeys and three priories. The abbeys are: Beuron, Prague, Seckau, Maria-Laach, Gerleve, Cucujães, and Neresheim. The priories are: Mount Sion, Jerusalem (founded 1906); Kempen (founded 1908), dependent on Beuron; and Gruessau, dependent on Prague. The Abbey of Sts. Ulrich and Afra at Neresheim was restored in 1920. At the death of Dom Maurus (1900), Dom Placid (d. 1908) succeeded him as Arch-abbot of Beuron. His successor, Dom Ildefonso Schober, resigned in 1918, and Dom Raphael Walzer was elected arch-abbot. The Holy See has delegated Dom Raphael Molitor, Abbot of Gerleve, to govern the Beuronese Congregation. In 1920 Maredsous and Louvain were separated from Beuron and with St. André formed into the Belgian congregation. In 1922 the community of Erdington Abbey (q. v.) was disbanded.

(10) The Swiss-American Congregation, founded in 1870, numbers six abbeys and the Priory of St. Michael at Cottonwood, Idaho (1908), dependent on Conception Abbey. The abbeys, with date of erection, are: St. Meinrad's, St. Meinrad, Ind. (1870), Conception Abbey, Conception, Mo. (1881), New Subiaco, Spielerville, Ark. (1891), St. Joseph's, Covington, La. (1903), St. Mary's, Richardton, N. D. (1903), St. Benedict's, Mount Angel, Ore. (1904). The abbot president, Dom Frowin Conrad, Abbot of Conception Abbey since 1881, has two assistants: Dom Athanasius Schmitt, Abbot of St. Meinrad, and Dom Ignatius Conrad, Abbot of New Subiaco.

(11) The Cassinese Congregation of Primitive Observance, founded in 1851 and erected in 1872, is made up of five provinces. The superior general is Dom Benedict Gariador, elected in 1920. He is assisted by Dom Claudius Barnabá (Italian and English provinces), Dom Vincent Coosemans (Belgian province), Dom Fulbert Gloriès (French province), Dom Isidore Fernández (Spanish province). The pro-procurator general is Dom Gerard Fornarole, who resides at St. Ambrose.

(a) The Italian province comprises the proto-cenoby of St. Scholastica and the hermitage of the Holy Grotto at Subiaco, which is an abbey nullius, the Abbeys of Genoa, Finalpia, Parma, Praglia, on which depend the house at Daila and the monastery at Venice, the Abbey Nullius of Monte Vergine, the monastery of St. Onofrio (Sicciola, Istria), the house of St. Ambrose at Rome, and the Abbey of St. Justina of Padua, restored in 1919 and administered by Praglia. The abbot visitor is Dom Isidore Sain, Abbot of Praglia.

(b) The English province comprises the Abbey of St. Augustine at Ramsgate, with Dom Thomas Bergh as abbot visitor.

(c) The Belgian province comprises the Abbeys of Affligem, Termonde, Steenbrugge, and Merkellebeek, the house of Siegburg dependent on Merkellebeek, Priory of Cornelemünster, and Prefecture Apostolic of Northern Transvaal. The Abbot General Dom Benedict Gariador is visitor of this province.

(d) The French province comprises the Abbeys of Pierre-qui-Vire, Buckfast, Oklahoma, with a dependent priory in California, Belloc with some of its community in Spain at Lazcano, Encalcat (Dourgne), and Kerbeneat, and the priories of Niño-Dios (Argentina), and Jerusalem. The abbot visitor is Dom Maurus Etcheverry.

(e) The Spanish province comprises the Abbeys of Montserrat, Vilvanera, and Samos, the Abbey Nullius of New Norcia, the Priories of Podio (Pueyo), St. Clodio, Manila (Philippines), De Miraculo (Solsona), the house of Los Cabos dependent on Samos, the monastery of Lorenzana, and the monastery of Puente-Alto (Chilo) founded from Samos in 1915 and dependent on it. The abbot visitor is Dom Joseph Alvarez, Abbot of Samos.

(12) The Austrian Congregation of the Immaculate Conception, erected in 1889, numbers ten abbeys: Kremsmünster, Brevnau-Braunau including the arch-cenoby of Brevnau and the monastery of Braunau, Saint Lambert in Styria, Göttweig, Admont, Melk, St. Paul in Carinthia, Seitenstetten, Altenburg, and Vienna. The abbot president is Dom Adalbert Dungal, Abbot of Göttweig, elected in 1889.

(13) The Austrian Congregation of St. Joseph, erected in 1889, comprises the Priory of Innsbruck and six abbeys: Salzburg, Michaelbeuern, Fiecht, Lambach, Rajhrad, and Marienberg. The abbot president is Dom Willibald Hauthaler, Abbot of Salzburg, elected in 1901. The abbot visitors are Dom Leo Treuinfels, Abbot of Marienberg, and Dom Celestin Baumgartner, Abbot of Lambach.

(14) The Congregation of St. Ottilien, established in 1904, has the special work of foreign missions. It comprises: the Arch-abbey of St. Ottilien (erected 1902; arch-abbey, 1914); the Abbeys of Schweiklberg (1914), Muensterschwarzach (1914), and Seoul (1913); the Priory of St. Ludwig at Wipfeld, Bavaria, dependent on Muensterschwarzach; the houses at Dillingen, Munich, and Passau; and the Vicariate Apostolic of Dar-es-Salaam; and the Prefecture Apostolic of Lindi. The superior general is Dom Norbert Weber, Arch-abbot of St. Ottilien, elected in 1902.

(15) The Belgian Congregation was erected by papal decree of 20 February, 1920, under the title of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin. It comprises the Abbeys of Maredsous and Louvain, separated from the Congregation of Beuron, the Abbey of St. Andrew near Bruges, separated from the Brazilian Congregation, and the Prefecture Apostolic of Katanga. The abbot president is Dom Robert de Kerchove, Abbot of Louvain. During the invasion of Belgium the monks of Maredsous under the present abbot, Dom Columbia Marmion, opened a house at Edermaire, Ireland, which was abandoned after the war.

PRESENT WORK OF THE ORDER.—The Benedictines continue to direct their activities to parochial, missionary, educational, and literary work. Recent important literary work is that of the Pontifical Commission for the revision and correction of the Vulgate, instituted by Pius X and reorganized in 1914 by Motu Proprio of Benedict XV. The headquarters of this Commission is at the palace of St. Callistus in Transtevere. The president is Dom Aidan Gasquet and the vice-president is Dom Ambrogio Amelli.

All of the Congregations have parochial or missionary duties, as may be judged by the following table, giving the diocesan, incorporated, and non-incorporated parishes, and the mission under the care of Benedictines, with the number of filial churches, public oratories, secular priests, extern clerics, and souls in each:

RECENT REGULATIONS.—The Benedictine Order is affected by the recent codification of Canon Law as follows (Canons 501, 574, and 964): According to Canon 501 superiors are strictly forbidden to interfere in matters pertaining to the Holy Office. An abbot primate and the superior of a monastic congregation do not enjoy all the powers and jurisdiction conferred by common law on higher superiors; their power and jurisdiction is as set forth in their own constitutions and in special decrees of the Holy See. [However, the moderator of a monastic congregation with his council or chapter of at least four religious is competent to dismiss professed religious. The supreme moderator of a monastic congregation is the judge of appeal from decisions rendered by local abbots.] Canon 574 provides that at the end of the novitiate there must be a profession with temporary vows for three years at least before perpetual profession. According to Canon 964, in the matter of the ordination of religious, a regular abbot de regimine, even if he has no territory, can confer first tonsure and minor orders, provided the candidate to be promoted is subject to him in virtue at least of simple profession, and provided the abbot himself is a priest and has legitimately received the abbatial blessing. Outside these limits, any ordination conferred by the abbot is null and void, any privilege to the contrary being revoked, unless the abbot ordinary has received episcopal consecration.

DISTINGUISHED BENEDICTINES.—Among Benedictines of note living at the present time are: Aidan Gasquet (b. 1846), former Abbot President of the English Congregation, created cardinal 1914. Raymond Netzhammer (b. 1862), monk of Einsiedeln of the Swiss Congregation. Archbishop of Bukarest 1905. Anselm Pecci (b. 1868), of the Cassinese Congregation, Bishop of Tricarico 1903, Archbishop of Acerenza and Matera, 1907. Beda Cardinale (b. 1869), of the Cassinese Congregation of Primitive Observance, Abbot of Praglia 1905, Bishop of Civitavecchia and Corneto 1907, titular Archbishop of Laodicea and delegate Apostolic of Perugia 1910. NUNS.—It is difficult to give complete statistics for the Benedictine nuns as most of them are under the jurisdiction of individual bishops, and, unlike the monks, are not formed into congregations. There are thirteen monasteries under the jurisdiction of Benedictine abbots. These, with the abbeys upon which they are dependent, are as follows: Amelia (St. Paul-without-the-Walls), Bertholdstein (Beuron), Casino (Monte Cassino), Eibingen (Beuron), Einsiedeln (Einsiedeln), Fahr (Einsiedeln), Fort Augustus (Fort Augustus), Habsthal (Muri-Gries), Maredret (under the Abbot Primate), Sarnen (Engelberg), Stanbrook (under the Abbot President of the English Congregation), São Paulo (São Paulo).

Certain monasteries may be grouped together according to their work or foundation. Those devoted to the perpetual adoration of the Blessed Sacrament are: Amandola, Catania, Milan, Ronco di Ghiffa, Sortino (Italy); Arechavaleta, Guernika, Ofate, Port-Bon (Spain); Atherstone, Colwich (England); Bayena, Cæn, Craon, Othmarsheim, Paris (two monasteries); Rosheim, Rouen (France); Clyde, Sturgis (United States); Dricbergen, Huistenbosch, Princenhage, Oldenzaal, Tegelen (Holland); Endenich, Hamikolt, Herstelle, Johannisberg, Kempen, Köln-Raderberg, Kreitz, Osnabrück, Trier, Varen-sell, Vinnenberg (Germany); Glattburg (Switzerland); Houperlingen, Moignelée, Oyghem les Des-selghem (Belgium); Peppingen (Luxemburg); Lemberg, Warsaw (Poland); St. Nicholas de Port (religious driven into exile). The Benedictine Nuns of Our Lady of Calvary, founded in 1618 by Mother Antonio of St. Scholastica, are under the immediate jurisdiction of the Holy See and have houses at Angers, Jerusalem, La Capelle Marival, Landernau, Machecoul, Orléans, Poitiers, and Vendôme (see CALVARY, CONGREGATION OF OUR LADY OF). The Benedictine Nuns of the Sacred Heart of Mary have five monasteries: Erbalunga, Jouarre, La Rochette, Pradines, and St. Jean d'Angély. The Sisters engaged in foreign missions are established at: Albay and Manila, in the Philippines; Dar-es-Salaam and Transvaal, in Africa; Olinda and Soro-

The Anglican Benedictine nuns of St. Bride, Milford-Haven, were received into the Catholic Church in 1913 and made their solemn profession in 1914. They removed to Talacre Abbey in 1920.

Benefice (cf. C. E., II-473c).—In the Code an ecclesiastical benefice is defined as a juridical entity erected or constituted in perpetuity by competent ecclesiastical authority and consisting of a sacred office and the right to receive the revenues arising from an endowment annexed to that office. This endowment consists of property belonging to the juridical entity itself, or of definite and obligatory payments to be made by a family or moral personality, or of definite and voluntary offerings of the faithful which accrue to the rector of the benefice, or of the so-called stole fees within the limits of diocesan taxation or lawful custom, or of choir distributions, excepting a third part of the same if the entire income of the benefice consists of choir distributions. Benefices are divided by the Code into: (a) consistorial, those usually conferred in the consistory, and non-consistorial; the canons in the Code apply only to the latter, except where the contrary is apparent; (b) secular or religious, according as they are bestowed exclusively on secular or religious clerics; (c) double (residential) or single (non-residential), according to the benefice entails the obligation of residence or not; (d) manual (temporary; removable) or perpetual (irremovable), according as they are conferred revocably or perpetually; (e) curata or non-curata, according as they entail the cure of souls or not. The law does not consider as benefices: (a) parish vicarships not erected permanently; (b) lay chaplaincies, that is those not erected by competent ecclesiastical authority; (c) coadjutorships with or without future succession; (d) personal pensions; (e) temporary commendata, that is the concession of the revenues from a church or monastery made to a person with the proviso that on his death the revenues are to revert to the church or monastery. Parishes are usually benefices and are always included under that term in the Code.

Benefices may be united or transferred, or divided, or dismembered, or converted, or suppressed. The union is (a) extinctive when a new or a single benefice is formed from two or more suppressed benefices, or if one or more are united to another in such a way that the former cease to be; (b) æque principalis, when the united benefices remain as they are, neither being subject to the other; (c) minus principalis, when both benefices continue but one is subject to the other. A benefice is (a) transferred when its seat is changed from one place to another; (b) divided, when two or more benefices are made out of one; (c) dismembered, when part of the territory or of the property of a benefice is taken away and assigned to another benefice or pious cause or ecclesiastical institute; (d) converted, when it is changed from one kind of benefice to another; (e) suppressed, when it is entirely extinguished. The extinctive union of benefices, their suppression, their dismemberment in which property belonging to the benefice is taken away without a new benefice being erected, the union of a religious with a secular benefice or of a secular with a religious benefice æque or minus principaliter, and the transferring, dividing, or dismembering of a religious benefice, the conversion of a benefice curatum into one without cure of souls, or of a religious into a secular benefice, or of a secular into a religious benefice, are reserved to the Holy See.

A local ordinary, but not a vicar capitular or vicar general, unless delegated, can unite æque or minus principaliter any parish church with another, or with a benefice not entailing the cure of souls, when the welfare of the Church demands it or would be greatly promoted by it. Such a union must, however, be perpetual. For the same reasons the bishop can transfer a secular parochial benefice from one place to another within the parish. Other benefices he may not transfer unless the church in which they were established has fallen into ruin and cannot be restored; in that case they are to be transferred with their privileges and their obligations to the mother church or to other churches in the same place or vicinity, and altars or chapels are to be erected there under the same titles if possible. Finally, ordinaries can divide up a parish even against the wish of its rector and without the consent of the faithful, and erect a perpetual vicariate or a new parish, or they may dismember a parish. This, however, can be done only when it is too difficult for the parishioners to go to the parish church or when the number of the parishioners is so great that their spiritual welfare cannot be properly provided for even by increasing the number of vicar co-operators. This new vicariate or parish must be financially provided for, if necessary, from the funds of the mother church, provided the funds are sufficient for that; in the latter case the filial church must pay honor or homage to the mother church in the manner prescribed by the ordinary, but it is entitled to its own baptismal font. Parties interested may always appeal to the Holy See against the ordinary's decree, but meanwhile the decree goes into effect. Ordinaries may not burden a benefice with a perpetual tax or pension or with one lasting during the lifetime of the pensioner, but for a just cause they can, when conferring the benefice, encumber it with a pension for the lifetime of the beneficiary, provided that the latter has still a suitable portion remaining. However, parochial benefices may not be encumbered unless in the interest of the rector or vicar of the same parish when he is leaving his post, and even then the possession must not exceed one-third of the revenues of the parish after deducting all expenses and all uncertain income.

Two benefices, both of which afford a decent living to an incumbent, or which together impose obligations that one beneficiary cannot carry out personally, are incompatible, and so may not be accepted and held simultaneously. If a cleric holding a benefice can show that he has held it in good faith peacefully for three years, he enjoys a prescriptive right to it, even if by chance his title was at first invalid, provided there was no simony in the case. If a beneficiary fails, without a valid excuse, to carry out his obligation of reciting the canonical hours, he is to lose a part of his revenue proportionate to the extent of his omission and must bestow it on the church fabric, or the diocesan seminary, or the poor. The law does not decide what a proportionate part for one day's omission would amount to, but Lehmkuhl considers that between 16% and 30% of the daily income would be a fair estimate. (See COLLATION.)

It covers 96,250 sq. miles and has a total population (1922) of 2,000,000, of whom 12,909 are Catholic and 3163 catechumens. It is entrusted to the African Missionaries of Lyons, the present vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Ferdinand Terrien, titular Bishop of Gordoe, appointed 1 March, 1912. There are now 30 missionary priests laboring in this territory, 27 European religious, and 31 native catechists; 111 churches or chapels have been established, 13 principal stations, 111 secondary stations, and 66 schools with 4756 pupils.

Benson, ROBERT HUGH, preacher and writer, b. 18 November, 1871, at Wellington College, England; d. 19 October, 1914, at Salford, England. He was the son of Edward Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Mary Sedgwick. After his private school days at Clevedon he went to Eton, and having failed in his examinations for the Indian Civil Service completed his classical course at Cambridge (1893). The following year he took orders in the Anglican Church, and after serving parishes in East London and Kensing joined the Anglican Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield.

In 1903, Roman claims becoming more and more insistent, he made his submission and was received into the Church by Father Reginald Buckler at the Dominican Priory at Woodchester, probably the first son of an Anglican archbishop to become a Catholic since Tobie Mathew, son of the Archbishop of York, did so in 1606. Shortly afterwards he went to live in Rome to study for the priesthood, and was ordained there in June, 1904, by Archbishop Seton, titular of Heliopolis.

Father Benson's distinguished origin was swiftly forgotten in his own originality and achievements. Stationed for several years after his ordination at Cambridge, where he became a power amongst the undergraduates, in 1908 he obtained permission from the archbishop to retire from pastoral work in order to devote his time to preaching and writing. From that time until his death six years later, his life was one of unceasing activity in which all his rare gifts of soul and mind were lavishly spent in the service of the Church. His success in the pulpits of Rome and the United States, as well as in those of his own country, was tremendous. His spiritual insight, his utter sincerity, his burning zeal and his fascinating eloquence drew crowds to his sermons and made many converts. He preached Lenten sermons in Rome in 1909, 1911, and 1913, and the alternate years in the United States.

He was not less successful with his writings, which he produced with amazing fecundity, and which include novels, historical and sentimental, devotional books, controversial works, poetry, and plays. They were all written with an avowed purpose, are marked by charm of style, subtle psychology, originality, and appealing mysticism, many of his novels being the history of a soul's complete surrender to God. Amongst them are the "Light Invisible" (1903), written while still an Anglican; "By What Authority" (1904), "Come Rack, Come Rope" (1912), "The King's Achievement," "Lord of the World," "The Sentimentalists," "The Conventionalists," "The Necromancers," "A Winnowing," "Non-Catholic Denominations," "The Dawn of All," "Christ in the Church," "The Coward," "The Confessions of a Convert" (1913), "An Average Man" (1913), "Paradoxes of Catholicism," "The Friendship of Christ," "Initiation" (1914), and the posthumous "Loneliness?"

Mgr. Benson was buried in the garden of his home, Hare Street House, Buntingford, which he bequeathed to the Archbishop of Westminster; it is used as a rest house for the clergy.

Bergamo, DIOCESE OF (BERGOMENSIS; cf. C. E., II-489c), in Lombardy, Northern Italy, suffragan of Milan. Bishop Radini-Tadeschi, appointed to this see 13 January, 1905, d. 22 August, 1914, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Luigi Marelli, b. in Milan, 1858, appointed Bishop of Bobbio, 16 December, 1907, and transferred 15 December, 1914. In 1920, 8-12 August, the sixth national eucharistic congress of Italy was held in this diocese, presided over by Bishop Bartolomasi of Trieste. Bergamo to-day (1922) is particularly noted for its Catholic social works; it comprises a Catholic population of 500,000, 371 parishes, 1,163 secular and 59 regular clergy, 400 seminarians, 478 religious, 84 Brothers, and 512 churches or chapels.

Berlin (cf. C. E., II-493b), capital of the German Republic and of the Free State of Prussia. It is situated in the heart of the Mark of Brandenburg, on both sides of the Sprce above its entrance into the Havel. The city covers an area of 24½ sq. miles and had (8 October, 1919) 1,902,500 inhabitants, not including the population of the suburbs, which numbered 1,901,500 inhabitants. Since 1 October, 1920, the city of Berlin and the suburbs form one city under the name of "Great Berlin," with 3,804,000 inhabitants. Of the inhabitants of Great Berlin 462,229 are Catholics, about 3,067,000 are Protestants, 224,200 Jews, and 50,000 belong to other creeds.

STATISTICS.—Ecclesiastically Berlin belongs to the Delegation of the Mark of Brandenburg, which is under a delegate of the Prince-Bishop of Breslau; the delegate is the Provost of St. Hedwig's in Berlin. The city of Great Berlin is divided for the cure of souls into 42 districts, composed of 32 parishes and 10 vicariates or curateships, of which 21 belong to the Archpresbyterate of Berlin (Middle Great Berlin), 12 to the Archpresbyterate of Charlottenburg (Great Berlin West), and 9 to the Archpresbyterate of Menkölln (Great Berlin East). Whilst in 1907 Berlin had only 30 Catholic churches and private chapels where public church services were held, the number of churches has now (1921) increased to 62 churches and 25 private chapels (mostly in religious houses).

To the principal churches the following have been added: Church of the Holy Rosary in Steglitz, a southwest suburb (1900); Corpus Christi Church (1904); St. Boniface (1907); St. Peter (1908); St. Joseph (1909). The parishes are for the most part large ones, with large numbers of parishioners, for example: St. Hedwig (28,000); Corpus Christi (13,000); Holy Family (10,000); Sacred Heart (20,500); St. Joseph (18,000); St. Matthew (22,000); St. Michel (22,000); St. Pius (20,000); St. Pius (24,000); St. Sebastian (18,000); Sacred Heart, Charlottenburg (31,000); Holy Rosary, Steglitz (13,000); St. Louis, Wilmersdorf (32,000); St. Clara, Menhölln (26,000); St. Mauritius, Lichtenberg (21,000), etc.

In 1921 the Catholic clergy consisted of 37 clergy of higher rank (the provost, 36 parish priests), 83 assistants, 25 priests in other positions, 30 living in communities, a total of 175 priests.

SCHOOLS.—There is no public Catholic higher school for boys in Berlin, but there is a private higher school for boys with about 130 pupils. There are 7 higher Catholic schools for girls, two of which train teachers. All these schools, with the exception of two, are conducted by nuns. There are about 40 Catholic schools for primary instruction (Gemeindeschulen).

ORDERS, CONGREGATIONS, AND CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.—The male orders in Berlin are: Dominicans (2 houses with 12 priests and 7 brothers); Jesuits (2 houses with 11 priests and 1 brother); Salvatorians (1 house with 5 priests); Franciscans (1 house with 2 priests); Poor Brothers of St. Francis (1 house with 16 brothers who conduct an orphan asylum for boys); Brothers of St. Alexis (1 house with 14 brothers who conduct a sanatorium for the mentally deranged).

There are in Great Berlin (1921) 15 female orders and congregations, viz.: the Sisters of St. Charles Borromeo, the Dominicans, the Franciscans, the Grey Sisters of St. Elizabeth, the Sisters of St. Joseph, the Carmelites of the Sacred Heart, the Sisters of St. Catherine, the Servants of Mary, the Sisters of the Divine Saviour, the Sisters of Our Lady, the Nuns of the Good Shepherd, the Sisters of St. Vincent, and the Ursulines, in all 63 houses, of whom the Sisters of St. Charles, the Grey Sisters of St. Elizabeth, the Sisters of St. Vincent, the Sisters of Mary, the Dominicans and Franciscans have charge of hospitals and institutions of visiting nurses for the poor and sick, kindergartens and day nurseries; the Nuns of the Good Shepherd, the Sisters of St. Joseph, and the Grey Sisters conduct rescues and asylums for girls, the Carmelites, orphanages and kindergartens, while the Franciscans, the Sisters of Our Lady, and the Ursulines are occupied in school work and conduct boarding houses and boarding schools where housekeeping is taught.

There are 8 large hospitals in Berlin in charge of Catholic sisters, 18 institutions for visiting the sick and poor; 6 boarding houses for old people conducted by nuns. In charge of nuns are 25 kindergartens for children under six years, and 20 for school children, 3 nurseries, 9 orphanages for children under 6 years, and 10 for school children, 14 houses for girls in employment, and out of employment; 2 houses of retreat.

ASSOCIATIONS.—There is much activity among the Catholic societies in Berlin. In 1921, there were 4 societies furthering the interests of the foreign missions; 40 societies of Christian Mothers, with about 17,000 members. About 70 Sodalities of Mary for men, women, young men, girls, and children; 32 associations for Catholic young men. Among the local charitable associations there are: the Catholic charity organization of Berlin and suburbs, and association of all the Catholic benevolent institutions, endowments and societies; Societies of St. Vincent de Paul, including 33 conferences for men, and 43 conferences for women; the St. Hedwig's women's association; the society for the protection of girls; 4 societies for the care of lying-in women; the Catholic burial association; the society for the care of the Catholic deaf and dumb of Berlin. The most important associations in connection with the various callings are: the Catholic Journeymen's Association, having a large building of its own; the Master Workmen's Union; 35 Catholic Workmen's Unions; 38 unions for Catholic working women, married and unmarried; 9 groups of the Catholic Business Men's Society; 3 associations of Catholic male and female teachers, 12 associations of Catholic students; 2 Philister societies. Among the political associations should be named: the People's Union (Katholische Volksverein); the Windthorst Union, and the Center party proper, with about 45 organized groups. Besides these there are singing and church choir societies; Catholic social societies, societies for collecting funds for church buildings (especially for the St. Boniface Association); Catholic societies for sport (Deutsche Jugendkraft).

The most important of the Catholic newspapers are: "The Germania" and the "Märkische Zeitung."

Since this article went into type word has been received of the erection of a see at Berlin and the appointment of a bishop in the person of the Rev. Dr. Kaas.

Bermuda Islands, a group of small islands in the West Atlantic, a colony of Great Britain, about 580 miles from Cape Hatteras, N. C., and 677 miles from New York, belonging to the West Indies, but detached from the other groups, situated between (about) latitude 32° 14' and 32° 25' North, and longitude 64° 38' and 64° 52' West. They lie Southwest and Northeast, based on the edge of a coral bank and occupy a space of only about 18 miles by 6, though said to be 300-360 in number. They are separated from one another by very narrow channels and are mostly rocky islets, only six being of any considerable size or importance. These are Bermuda, Somerset, Ireland, St. George, St. David, and Boaz. The total area is 19.3 square miles. They are difficult of access, surrounded on three sides by hidden coral reefs which extend about ten miles under water. The highest point is 260 feet. The climate is delightful, the highest temperature in August, 1919, was 90°, the lowest, 46° in February; the mean temperature was 70. There are no extremes of temperature, and malaria is unknown, which makes the islands a popular holiday resort for Americans. The civil population on 31 December, 1919, numbered 21,869, including 7,441 whites.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—Of the 12,360 acres, 4,000 are under cultivation. Food supplies are imported chiefly from Canada and the United States, and nearly all the export produce of Bermuda goes to the United States. The chief development in recent years has been in the potato crop, which has increased by nearly thirty per cent since 1915. The Bermuda onion is another important crop. The registered shipping in 1918 consisted of 7 steam vessels of 2,189 tons and 16 sailing vessels of 3,336 tons. In 1919 the total tonnage of vessels entered and cleared was 1,258,188 tons, of which 632,212 were British.

The principal exports are potatoes, onions, lily bulbs, and vegetables; in 1919 all the exports amounted to £208,708; the imports to £792,683. Bermuda is an important naval base for the English fleet, with a dockyard, coaling stations, etc., and during the great European War the American navy maintained a dépôt, largely used by submarine-chasers, mine-sweepers, and other craft on their trans-Atlantic journeys. A telegraph cable connects the islands with Nova Scotia, Halifax, also Turk's Island and Jamacia. The revenue for the year from all sources totalled £119,091 and the expenditure, £90,684. Customs duties provide the bulk of the revenue, there being no direct taxation for colonial revenue. A loan of £40,000, raised in 1893 for the improvement of the channels leading to Hamilton Harbor, falls due in 1924. The nominal value of the sinking fund on 31 December, 1919, was £39,674. There is no other public debt. Communications within the islands are maintained by boat and horse-drawn vehicles, the use of motor vehicles being prohibited by law.

GOVERNMENT.—The laws of the colony are enacted by a Legislature consisting of the Governor, the Legislative Council, and the House of Assembly. The Governor is assisted by an Executive Council of four official and three unofficial members. The Legislative Council consists of nine members, three of whom are official and six unofficial. The House of Assembly consists of thirty-six members, four of whom are elected by each of the nine parishes. There are about 1,413 electors, the electoral qualifications being the possession of freehold property of not less than £60 in value. A member of the Assembly must have freehold property rated at £240.

EDUCATION.—There are no government schools in Bermuda, but education is compulsory and Government assistance is given by the payment of grants and, where necessary, school fees. The aided schools must reach a certain standard of efficiency and submit to Government inspection. In 1919, 30 aided primary schools, with 2,576 pupils, received Government grants, £2,853 yearly. There are 3 garrison schools and 2 naval schools, about 17 other primary schools, and 4 secondary schools, having no Government grant. Cambridge local examinations are held in Bermuda. A Government scholarship is provided to enable youths educated in Bermuda to go abroad to prepare themselves for a Rhodes scholarship.

HISTORY.—According to the Spanish navigator and historian, Ferdinand d'Oviedo, who visited these islands in 1515, they were discovered at an earlier date by Juan de Bermudez, who was shipwrecked on a voyage from Spain to Cuba with a cargo of hogs. The exact date of the discovery is not known, but a map, contained in the first edition of the "Legatio Babylonica" of Peter Martyr, published in 1511, shows the Island "La Barmuda" in approximately correct position. No aborigines were found on the islands by the early voyagers, and the Spaniards took no steps to found a settlement. The islands were entirely uninhabited until 1609, when Admiral Sir George Sommers' ship, the "Sea Venture," while on a voyage with a fleet of eight other vessels conveying a party of colonists to the new plantations then being formed in Virginia, was wrecked on a coral reef. The beauty and fertility of the islands induced the Virginia Company to seek extension of their Charter, so as to include the islands within their dominion, and this extension was readily granted in 1612 by James I, but shortly afterward the Virginia Company sold the islands for £2,000 to a new body of adventurers called "The Governor and Company of the City of London for the Plantation of Somers' Islands."

After twenty-five years of prosperity the original shareholders died, or disposed of their holdings, the government was neglected, and the settlers became subject to many grievances and abuses. An appeal to the Crown for redress in 1679 resulted in the passing of the colony to the Crown in 1684. The colony passed through the same social, political, and ecclesiastical struggles which beset England in the seventeenth century. Its population included many elements and many faiths; and each sect and political faction had its dissensions and feuds. Catholics were excluded as early as 1615. Secessions from the Established Church took place early in the colony's history, and although freedom of worship was demanded, this did not prevent the Independents and others from persecuting their weaker brethren, particularly the Quakers, whose attempt to educate the slaves met with disapproval. In 1646 William Sayle of Bermuda founded a utopian plantation in which "every man might enjoy his own opinion or religion without control or question." In 1650 Parliament declared Bermuda to be in a state of rebellion. At this time persecutions took place for witchcraft. During the American Revolution the inhabitants of the island sympathized with the colonies, but were forbidden to trade with them. However, from Bermuda came to George Washington at the most critical period of the Revolution one hundred pounds of gunpowder. During the Civil War the islands were the headquarters of the blockade-runners and prosperity reigned. In 1901 Bermuda was one of the places chosen by England for the exiled Boers. In 1867 it was deemed just to exonerate from liability to assessment for the Church of England all persons who contributed toward the maintenance of other churches. Grants by the government to the Church of England have now ceased. During the Great World War, the Bermuda Volunteer Rifle Corps served in France with the Lincoln Regiment, and out of 125 in the original contingent, only 22 remained to return. Another proud record was made by the Royal Garrison Artillery (colored) who numbered 250. In all, between 560 and 600 Bermudians served overseas in the war; of these, 379 were with the Bermuda contingents. Pensions to disabled men and widows and dependents are paid by the Colony on the scale adopted in the United Kingdom.

Ecclesiastically Bermuda is under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Halifax, a priest from that diocese being stationed at Hamilton where the Sisters of Charity (mother-house, Halifax), conduct a school.

Berry, JOHN, founder of "Father Berry's Homes," d. September, 1921, at Measham, England. Educated at Ushaw, in 1884 he was ordained and appointed curate at St. Patrick's, Liverpool. He was afterwards rector of the Church of St. Philip Neri to which is attached the Liverpool Catholic Institute of which he became principal. Father Berry's great work was the establishing and organizing, in Liverpool, of the homes for orphaned and destitute boys, which bear his name. By the request of his bishop in 1892 he took over the work begun by the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, which under his care flourished until "Father Berry's Homes" became one of the foremost Catholic charities of the kind in England. They were under his personal direction for five years, during which time he cared for over three thousand boys, for whom he had raised the sum of nearly ten thousand pounds. Ill-health compelled his retirement, but he continued to find a vent for his activity in writing articles and reviews on social, religious, and other topics.

Bertinoro, DIOCESE OF (BRITINORIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-522d), in the province of Forlì, Northern Italy, suffragan of Ravenna, has the perpetual administration of the diocese of Polenta (Polentensis). It is at present under the administration of Rt. Rev. Frederico Polloni, b. in Riccio, 1841, appointed 28 November, 1898. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 32,300 Catholics, 63 parishes, 100 secular priests and 1 regular priest, 26 seminarians, 1 Brother, 65 Sisters, and 93 churches or chapels.

Besançon, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BISUNTINENSIS; cf. C. E., II-525b), coextensive with the departments of Doubs, Haute-Saône and the territory of Belfort, in France. Most Rev. François-Léon Gauthey, promoted to this see 20 January, 1910, filled it until his death, 25 July, 1918. Just one month before his death the Archbishop visited Haute Alsace, reconquered from the Germans, where he administered confirmation, this territory having been deprived of the sacrament since 1914. Archbishop Gauthey was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Louis Humbrecht, b. in Guebenschwir, 1853, ordained 1877, appointed Bishop of Poitiers, 1 September, 1911, promoted 14 September, 1918. On 9 August, 1919, Archbishop Humbrecht was made commander of the Order of the Crown by the King of the Belgians, in recognition of his kindness toward the Belgian refugees, particularly in the diocese of Poitiers.

During the World War 423 priests were mobilized from this diocese and 30 of this number as well as 40 seminarians gave up their lives, 12 were decorated with the Legion of Honor, 10 with the médaille militaire, 160 with the croix de guerre, and 250 received other citations. In thanksgiving for the victory of the Marne, which saved the central and Franche-Comté sections of France from invasions, Archbishop Gauthey made a vow to erect a basilica dedicated to the Sacred Heart, on a hill adjoining the city of Besançon. On 8 March, 1912, the church of Sts. Ferreol and Ferjeux was raised to the rank of a minor basilica, and 26 May following it was made a collegiate church ad hon.

In 1920 the population of Doubs numbered 299,935, of whom 57,978 were in Besançon; that of Haute-Saône 257,606; and that of the territory of Belfort, 88,047. The latest statistics collected in 1908, credit the diocese with 1,224 priests, 7 first class and 351 second class parishes, 816 succursal parishes, 80 deaneries, 51 professors, 105 dignitaries, chaplains and priests without special duties, 10 diocesan missionaries, 41 priests having degrees in theology and philosophy, 40 priests at the university, and 70 missionary priests, originally of this diocese. The principal educational institutions (1922) include a seminary, 9 schools of higher education for boys and 7 for girls.

Besse, JEAN-MARTIAL-LÉON, monastic historian, b. 31 October, 1861, at St. Angel, Corrèze, France, d. 26 July, 1920, at Chevetogne, Namur, Belgium. In 1881 he entered the Benedictine Order at Solesmes, in 1885 was sent to the Abbey of Ligugé, Vienna, and in the following year was ordained. From 1889 to 1894 he was master of novices and sub-prior at Ligugé, whence he went in the same capacity with the group of religious sent to restore the ancient Abbey of St. Wandrille de Fontenelle, in the diocese of Rouen. In 1895 he was appointed professor of history and director of an Apostolic school at the monastery in Silos, Spain. Two years later he returned to Ligugé and in 1899 was once more appointed master of novices. In 1902 he removed with his fellow-monks to the new Abbey of Ligugé, Chevetogne, in the diocese of Namur, Belgium, where he became librarian.

Dom Besse was the founder of the "Bulletin de Saint Martin" (1892), of the "Revue Mabillon" (1905), and of "La vie et les arts liturgiques" (1912). During the World War he took over the direction of the newspaper, "l'Univers," then published weekly. He was well known for his Royalist sympathies which were the inspiration of his book, "L'Eglise et la Monarchie," and for his social service activities. He was the valued friend of many of the striking personalities of his day, amongst them Joris Karl Huysmans.

The literary work of Dom Besse includes "Le moine bénédictin," "Les moines d'Orient," "Le monarchisme africain," "Les études ecclésiastiques d'après la méthode de Mabillon," "Le Cardinal Pie," "Saint Wandrille," under the pseudonym "Léon de Cheyssac," "Page d'histoire politique, le Ralliement," "Les moines de l'ancienne France," crowned by the French Academy; seven volumes of a re-edition of Beaunier's "Recueil des archévêchés, évêchés, abbayes et prieurés de l'ancienne France."

Best, KENELM DIGBY, author and poet, b. 1835, d. 14 September, 1914, in London, England. He was the son of John Richard Digby Best of Botleigh Grange, Hants, and the descendant of a distinguished literary family. In this versatile poet, priest and man of letters were united many of the qualities of the two brilliant kinsmen whose name he bore, Kenelm Digby, poet, novelist, philosopher and theologian, and Sir Kenelm Digby, hero of the naval battle of Scanderon, statesman, political philosopher, and man of fashion. His grandfather, Henry Digby Best, precursor of Newman and Faber, became a Catholic in 1789.

Father Best was educated by the Benedictines at Ampleforth, amongst his fellow students being the late Bishop Hedley. For some time afterwards he studied at St. Edmund's College, Ware, and entering the Oratorian novitiate as sub-deacon, was ordained in 1858. His long life was interwoven with the history of the London Oratory, which he joined during the period of its translation to the old Oratory at Brompton, when many of the illustrious men of its early days were still alive. Some of his notable contemporaries were Father Charles Bowen, Father Philip Morris, and Father Philpin. A preacher of much charm, he united virility of thought with the exuberant and tender imagination of the poet. His writings include, "A Priest's Poems," "The Victories of Rome," "A May Chaplet," "The Catholic Doctrine of Hell," "Rosa Mystica," translations of Carthusian works, many pamphlets, one of the most notable of which is on Socialism; and his final work "The Mystery of Faith," published only a week before his death.

Betrothal (cf. C. E., II-537c).—The conditions laid down in the decree "Ne Temere" for a valid betrothal (cf. C. E., V-542) are extended in the code to unilateral promises of marriage. However, a valid betrothal no longer gives rises to any matrimonial impediment, nor can it form the basis for an action to compel one to marry, though an action will lie for compensation for losses actually sustained.

Bexhill Library.—Realizing the great work done for the Faith by the distribution of the Catholic Truth Society pamphlets, an English Catholic layman organized at his own expense a free lending library of Catholic books in connection with St. Mary Magdalene's Church, Bexhill-on-Sea, Sussex, in 1912. Increased requests for books from readers residing elsewhere led to the development of a postal distributing scheme in 1916. Two years later a new library was erected, which in 1921 has over 20,000 volumes. The books, mostly by Catholic authors, are of every character, from fiction and science to Scripture and theology. About 30,000 works were sent out last year to borrowers in every part of the world. The books are loaned not merely to individuals, but also to reading circles, sodalities, and institutes. The unique feature about the library is that anyone may borrow the volumes without giving a reference; he pays nothing but the postage; he may retain the books as long as he needs them, and the matter of returning them is left entirely to his sense of honor and justice.

Bhutan, independent state, lying in the eastern Himalayas, between 26° 45' and 28° North latitude, and between 89° and 92° East longitude, bordered on the north and east by Tibet, on the west by the Tibetan district of Chumbi and Sikkim, and on the south by British India. The area is about 20,000 square miles, and its population, consisting of Buddhists and Hindus, has been estimated at 300,000. The country formerly belonged to a tribe called Tek-pa, but was wrested from them by some Thibetan soldiers about the middle of the seventeenth century. British relations with Bhutan commenced in 1772, when the Bhotias invaded the principality of Cooch Behar and British aid was invoked by that state. After a number of raids by the Bhutanese into Assam at different periods, an envoy was sent into Bhutan, who was grossly insulted and compelled to sign a treaty surrendering the duars (submontane tracts with passes leading to the hills) to Bhutan. On his return the treaty was disavowed and the duars annexed. This was followed by the treaty of 1865 by which the State's relations with the Government of India were satisfactorily regulated. The State formerly received an allowance of half a lakh a year from the British Government, in consideration of the cession in 1865 of some areas on its border. This allowance was doubled by a new treaty concluded in January, 1910, by which the Bhutanese Government agreed to be guided by the advice of the British Government in its external relations, while the British agreed not to interfere with the internal administration of the Bhutanese state.

At the head of the Government there are nominally two supreme authorities, the Dharma Raja, known as Shapting Renipoehe, the spiritual head, and the Deb or Depa Raja, the temporal ruler. The Dharma Raja is regarded as a very high incarnation of Buddha, far higher than the ordinary incarnations in Tibet, of which there are several hundreds. On the death of a Dharma a year or two is allowed to elapse and his reincarnation then takes place, always in the Choje, or royal family of Bhutan. In 1907 the Deb Rájá resigned his position and the Tongsa Penlop, Sir Ugyen Wangchuk, was elected as the first hereditary Maharaja of Bhutan.

The chief fortresses or castles are: Punakhá, the winter capital, a place of great natural strength; Tásichozong, the summer capital, Páro, Angduphorang, Tongsa, Taka, Biagha. Though the people are nominally Buddhists, their religious exercises consist chiefly in the propitiation of evil spirits and the recitation of sentences from the Tibetan scriptures. Tásichozong, the chief monastery in Bhután, contains 300 priests. The military force consists of local levies under the control of the different chiefs. They are of little military value. The chief productions are rice, Indian corn, millet, lac, wax, different kinds of cloth, ponies, chowries, and silk. Muzzle-loading guns and swords of high tempered steel are manufactured.

Bible Societies (cf. C. E., II-544b).—In its annual statement for the year 1921 the British and Foreign Bible Society reports 5128 auxiliaries, branches and associations in England and Wales, with 4750 auxiliaries and branches outside of the British Isles, mainly in the British dominions and colonies, making a total of 9878. It has made 538 translations of the Scriptures, 160 of these being the work of twentieth-century scholars. In the year covered by the last report 8,655,781 books were issued, bringing the total number since the organization of the Society up to 319,470,000 volumes. The expenditures for the year were £18,919,374 ($91,759,000).

The National Bible Society of Scotland extends its operations far beyond the confines of that country. In 1920 it was working also in Belgium, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Jugoslavia, Portugal, Africa, China, India, Japan, Korea, and the British Dominions. The funds expended by this organization in 1920 amounted to £32,380 ($157,000).

The American Bible Society has changed its program largely in relation to its work in this country, and it now carries on its distribution in the United States through nine home agencies covering every part of the United States, and 150 auxiliary societies. It has twelve foreign agencies, six covering Latin-America with headquarters at Porto Rico, Mexico City, Cristobal, for the Caribbean and Upper Andes agencies, Rio de Janeiro, and Buenos Aires, two in the Near East with headquarters at Constantinople and Cairo, and four in the Far East with headquarters at Manila, Bangkok, Shanghai, and Tokio.

The Society has no established agency in Europe, but maintains correspondents in every European country into which the modern map of Europe is divided. In these countries it either co-operates with the National Bible Societies or lends assistance to local churches in their inner mission and other activities. All told, the copies of the Bible, or parts of the Bible, distributed by the American Bible Society for the year ending 31 December, 1920, as given in the report for 1921, were 3,825,401, and during the 105 years of its work, it has distributed 141,729,340 volumes.

During the war the Society circulated Scriptures among all the belligerent forces in the cantonments, in prison camps, in hospitals, in the trenches—wherever there was a soldier or a worker that was in need. Its distribution to American soldiers going over to Europe and to those of other nationalities in Europe reached a total of 6,818,301 volumes. Of these, 1,887,758 volumes were distributed in Europe to the belligerent forces of other countries. It may be recorded here that the war distribution of the British and Foreign Bible Society and of other European Bible Societies, and the American Bible Society, and including the Scriptures prepared by Catholic and Jewish sources, reached an astonishing total of 20,000,000 on all the battlefields of Europe.

Bida (BIDA COLONIA), a city and colony of Caesarea Mauritaniae, mentioned by Ptolemy. It was the seat of a bishopric and is now a Latin titular see, the title held by Rt. Rev. Francis Rudolph Bornewasser, auxiliary to the Archbishop of Cologne.

Biella, DIOCESE OF (BUGELLENSIS; cf. C. E., II-559d), in the province of Novara, Italy, suffragan of Vercelli. Bishop Serafino, appointed to this see 2 December, 1912, was transferred 22 March, 1917, and succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giovanni Garigliano, b. in Porino, 1872, appointed titular Bishop of Eucarpia, 9 September, 1911, and transferred 22 March, 1917. Upon his transfer from this see, Bishop Serafind left 10,000 lire to be used for a new church at Oropa. A decree of 12 June, 1918, accorded to the cathedral chanery of Oropa, the privilege of joining to the cathedral title, that of Our Lady of Oropa, a celebrated sanctuary of the Blessed Virgin. The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 156,000 Catholics, 114 parishes, 265 secular and 29 regular clergy, 40 seminarians, and 270 churches or chapels.

Bigamy (cf. C. E., II-563c).—Bigamists, in the original sense of the term, namely, individuals who have contracted two or more valid marriages successively, are in canon law irregular ex defectu, which means that they may not receive or exercise any ecclesiastical orders or dignities. The irregularity is incurred even if the marriage has only been ratified. Interpretative bigamy, which was a legal fiction, has now disappeared from canon law. Persons who, while they are bound by the bonds of matrimony, attempt to marry again or even to contract a so-called civil marriage become ipso facto, infamous on account of crime; if they continue their illicit union despite the warning of the ordinary, they are to be excommunicated or placed under personal interdict, according to the gravity of their offense. It should be noted that the crime which is here in question is an attempted second marriage, not concubinage or adulterous relations.

Bination (cf. C. E., II-568c).—Three Masses may be said by all priests on Christmas Day and on the feast of All Souls. On other days a priest may celebrate only once, except by Apostolic indult or by leave of the local ordinary, when, owing to a lack of priests, a notable number of the faithful could not otherwise hear Mass on a day of obligation; the ordinary cannot, however, allow any priest to celebrate more than two Masses on the same day.

In certain missionary countries the Holy See has authorized ordinaries to permit their priests for a just cause to accept a stipend for a second Mass when they binate. Ordinarily, however, when a Mass has been said to fulfil an obligation in justice e. g. in return for a stipend, or when the Mass was offered for the parishioners, a priest is forbidden to receive a stipend for a second Mass, though he may be paid something for a reason not intrinsically connected with the celebration of the Mass, for instance, to recompense him for his traveling expenses. Code, 806: Irish Eccl. Rec. (1920), XVI, 58.

Birmingham, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BIRMINGHAMIA, BIRMINGHAMIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-578c).—By the Apostolic Letter of 28 October, 1911, reconstituting the hierarchy of England and Wales, Birmingham was raised to archiepiscopal rank, with the suffragan sees of Clifton, Newport, Plymouth, Shrewbury, and Menevia in Wales. The dioceses of Newport and Menevia have since been constituted a separate province. In 1921 Archbishop Hsley, who had succeeded Bishop Ullathorne, retired, and was succeeded by his auxiliary, Archbishop McIntyre.

The general population of the diocese (census of 1911) was 3,114,470, the estimated Catholic population, 115,000. There are 166 public churches, 43 private and convent chapels, 67 convents. The secular clergy number 199, regulars 223. There are 119 public elementary schools, 4 secondary schools, 26 convent schools, with an attendance in the public elementary schools of 27,128, in the other schools of 11,460. Among the societies organized among the laity of the diocese are the Catholic Cripples' Union, the Union of Catholic Mothers, the Catholic Young Men's Society, and the Catholic Women's League.

St. Mary's College, Oscott, the diocesan seminary, held the fifty-seventh annual meeting of the Oscottian Society on 13 July, 1920. On 12 March of this year the New Franciscan House of Studies known as Grosseteste House was opened at Oxford, the Salesian Fathers having taken over the house at Cowley.

In recent years the diocese of Birmingham has lost through death many of its prominent churchmen, among them: the Rev. Henry Ignatius Ryder (d. 1907), and his brother, Rev. Charles Edward Ryder (d. 1912), pastor of Smethwick and founder of its church; Rev. John J. Hopwood (1913), for eighteen years professor at Oscott; Rt. Rev. Mgr. Victor J. Schobel, D. D. (d. 1915), professor of philosophy at Oulton (1873-86), lecturer on philosophy and moral philosophy at Oscott (1886-96) and later chaplain at Oulton Abbey; Very Rev. John Canon Caswell (d. 1917), professor at Oscott (1879-83), vice president of St. Wilfrid's College (1883-85), vice president of Oscott (1885-89), appointed canon of Birmingham (1906) and editor the diocesan "Ordo"; James B. Canon Keating (d. 1920), ordained in 1877 and transferred to the staff of St. Wilfrid's College in 1884, later appointed pastor of St. Patrick's, Walsall, and Sacred Heart Church, Hanley, appointed rector of St. Austin's, Stafford, in 1889, and nominated Canon of the Birmingham Chapter in 1911. Served on Stafford School Board and Board of Guardians.

Birt, HENRY NORBERT, ecclesiastical historian, b. 1861 at Valparaiso, d. at London, 21 August, 1919. He was a fourth son of Hugh Birt, M. D., and on the maternal side was the great-grandson of John Keogh of Mount Jerome, County Dublin, the leader of the Catholic Constitutional party working for emancipation. Educated first at St. Augustine's, Ramsgate, and later at University College School, in 1880 he entered the Benedictine Order at Downside Abbey. In 1889 he was ordained and for some years taught the school and did parochial work in the parish of St. Ogsberg, Coventry. Later he acted as socius and secretary to the then Abbot Gasquet. During the South African War he was acting chaplain to the forces, and during the World War performed the same service for the forces in England, chiefly at the hospital at Netley. He was demobilized only a few weeks before his death.

Dom Birt's best known literary work is his "Elizabethan Religious Settlement"; others of value are "History of Downside School," "Lingard's History Abridged," "Benedictine Pioneers in Australia," the "Obit Book of the English Benedictines," and many reviews and articles in leading periodicals. A member of the Committee of the Catholic Truth Society, he took a prominent part in its work, not only by his controversial and historical pamphlets, but by his personal attendance at meetings where his sound advice was greatly valued. He was also a member of the Council of the Catholic Record Society.

Bishop (cf. C. E., II-581b).—Before a person can be made bishop now he must have been in priestly orders at least five years, whereas under the Tridentine régime it was sufficient for him to have been six months in Holy Orders. The examination of persons called to the episcopate is now conducted by the Consistorial Congregation. A bishop elect must receive canonical institution from the Holy See, but before being instituted he must make a profession of faith and swear fidelity to the pope in presence of the Holy Father or of his delegate; under the Tridentine legislation he had to make the profession of faith in the first provincial synod held after his election. On being promoted to the episcopacy, a priest even if he is a cardinal, must receive consecration within three months after receiving the Apostolic letters, unless he is legitimately prevented, and he must go to his diocese within four months.

A bishop now takes canonical possession of his see by showing his Apostolic letters to the cathedral chapter in presence of the capitular secretary or of the diocesan chancellor. In virtue of the law of residence a bishop must not be absent from his diocese for more than three months, not necessarily continuous, the time spent on his canonical visits to Rome is not to be counted in this, though it must not come immediately after his vacation period (see VISIT AD LIMINA). He must be in the cathedral during Advent and Lent and on Christmas Day, Pentecost, Corpus Christi, and Easter Sunday, unless he is excused for a grave and urgent reason. If he is unlawfully absent from the diocese for more than six months the Holy See must be notified by his metropolitan.

Among the privileges granted to bishops, whether residential or titular, are the right of saying Mass at sea; of allowing others to say Mass in their presence on a portable altar; of enjoying daily a personally privileged altar; of following their own calendar in all churches and oratories; of visiting their domestic chapels, when a visit to a public church is prescribed for gaining an indulgence; of giving the episcopal blessing everywhere; however, in Rome it may be imparted only in churches, pious places, or at assemblies of the faithful; of selecting for themselves and their household a confessor, who, if he lacks it, is granted jurisdiction by the law and who can absolve them from all sins and censures, except censures reserved very specially to the Holy See or those imposed for violating the secrecy of the Holy Office; of preaching everywhere, with at least the presumed leave of the local ordinary; of celebrating Mass on Holy Thursday or three Masses on Christmas Night or of allowing another to do so in their presence, provided they are not obliged to celebrate in the cathedral; of blessing rosaries, crucifixes, medals, statues, approved scapulars and of clothing with the scapulars without the necessity of enrolment, and of granting the usual indulgences; of erecting Stations of the Cross in churches and all oratories as well as pious places, with the usual indulgences, and of annexing the Way of the Cross indulgences to crucifixes for those who are legitimately prevented from visiting the Stations.

Many faculties which were enjoyed formerly by bishops only in virtue of special indults are now granted to them by law. Thus they can appoint examiners and parish priests consultors with the consent of the cathedral chapter when a vacancy occurs in the interval between synods; they can give the papal blessing with a plenary indulgence twice a year and also in articulo mortis; they may within limits authorize the alienation of ecclesiastical property; they may allow a priest to binate or to say Mass outside of a church; they may confer major orders for a serious reason on any Sunday or holiday of obligation. As the ordinary power of bishops has thus been greatly extended (see (DISPENSATION) Pope Benedict XV, in order to introduce greater uniformity throughout the Church, withdrew the faculties commonly granted to bishops for a period of three, five, ten, or twenty-five years, for the external forum, except in regions subject to the Congregation of Propaganda, where they are to continue in force for the present.

Religious who become bishops are subject to the pope alone, and not to the superiors of their order; if they have been solemnly professed, they can nevertheless use and administer temporal goods and acquire property for their territories; they may reside in any house of their order, but have neither active nor passive voice in the affairs of the order.

COADJUTOR BISHOPS.—A coadjutor is usually granted to a bishop personally with the right of succession (without this right he is termed an auxiliary bishop), but sometimes he is granted to a see. If the bishop is entirely incapacitated the coadjutor has all his rights and duties, unless limited by the letters of appointment; otherwise he has only what the bishop allows him. The bishop should not habitually delegate to another what the coadjutor can and is willing to do, and the latter must, if requested by the bishop, carry out the episcopal duties, unless justly prevented from doing so. A coadjutor granted to a see may exercise all exclusively episcopal powers within his territory, except the conferring of sacred ordination; in other matters he may act only as far as the Holy See or the bishop authorizes him. Coadjutors enter into their office canonically by showing their Apostolic letters to the bishop; if they have the right of succession or have been granted to a see they must exhibit the letters to the chapter also; if the bishop should be incapable of eliciting a human act the letters need be shown only to the chapter. No coadjutor should absent himself from the diocese, except during his vacation, for more than a short time without the bishop's leave. On the bishop's death, the coadjutor with right of succession immediately becomes the diocesan ordinary provided he has taken canonical possession; a coadjutor granted to a see retains his office during a vacancy, but an auxiliary's office would terminate on the bishop's death, unless his letters provide otherwise.

SELECTION OF BISHOPS.—By a decree dated 25 July, 1916, the Holy See inaugurated a new method of selecting bishops for the United States, as the previous system often resulted in a long delay in filling vacancies and did not secure the secrecy that was desired (cf. C. E., II-584; Eccl. Rev., LXI, 225-34). The following is an outline of the new procedure. About the beginning of Lent every second year starting from 1917 each bishop is to send to his archbishop the names of one or two persons whom he believes from long-continued personal intercourse to be suitable for the episcopal office. He may name persons who do not belong to his diocese or even province. To aid the bishops and the archbishops on their selection they are first to ask their diocesan consultors and permanent rectors individually and under the strictest obligation of secrecy to suggest a worthy candidate to them. When the archbishop has received the names he adds his own choice and then having compiled an alphabetical list of the candidates proposed he sends it to each of his suffragans, so that they can discreetly inquire about the nominees. No bishop may allow any one except the archbishop to know what persons are on his list. After Easter the bishops of the province meet privately and discuss the merits of the priests who have been listed, paying particular attention to their age, administrative ability, learning, virtue, and loyalty to the Holy See. When having eliminated those who are opposed unanimously, they vote on the remaining candidates in alphabetical order. Each bishop has three ballots, different in color, white being favorable, black unfavorable, and another color indicating that the bishop does not vote. There are two ballot boxes, one for the ballots indicating the vote cast, the other for the two remaining ballots. The archbishop votes first and secrecy is observed by all. The archbishop and a bishop acting as secretary then count the ballots in presence of the others and the result is noted in writing. The bishop should, if possible indicate for what kind of a diocese, e. g., large or small, organized or new, the candidate would be best fitted. A record of the proceedings including the balloting must be drawn up by the secretary and after being read aloud by the archbishop must be signed by all. A copy similarly signed is sent to the Consistorial Congregation, through the Apostolic delegate, while the original is kept in the archiepiscopal archives for a year, after which it must be destroyed. The decree invited the bishops to communicate with the Holy See between these biennial meetings if they think it advisable to give any further information about candidates. Needless to say all this procedure is merely to assist the Holy See, which remains free to select any person to fill a vacancy, even one whose name was not on the list.

The new system proved successful and has since been introduced with minor variations into other countries. It was established for Canada and Newfoundland in 1919, the voting taking place every second year from 1920. The bishops there need not consult anyone about suitable candidates; in their choice they must mention the age, birthplace, residence, and office of the candidates. The bishops of the provinces of Kingston and Toronto vote together, under the direction of the senior archbishop, so, too do, those of the provinces of Saint Boniface, Regina, and Winnipeg, under the presidency of the archbishop of Winnipeg; and finally the bishops of the provinces of Edmonton and Vancouver, under the senior archbishop. The records are forwarded to the Consistorial Congregation by the Apostolic delegate.

In Scotland, all the bishops meet every third year beginning with 1921, after consulting their canons individually and forwarding their list of names to the Archbishop of Edinburgh, or if that see is vacant, to the Archbishop of Glasgow, the presiding officer forwarding the record to the Holy See. In Poland, too, the meeting is triennial and national, not provincial, and is presided over by the senior metropolitan; while in Mexico and Brazil it is provincial and is held every three to five years beginning with 1922, but these last three countries the bishops need not seek advice from their clergy.

DRESS.—In answer to certain queries regarding episcopal dress the Congregation of Rites replied on 26 November, 1919, that bishops may not have a red tuft on their birettas; that they must not wear silken capes or cassocks unless they are members of the pontifical household, that in Rome their soutanes mantellets, mozzetas, and birettas must be purple, elsewhere in penitential seasons or at funerals these may be black, except the biretta and skull-cap; that they may never use the stole, mitre, and pastoral staff together with their prelatical habit, as had been customary in some places at confirmations or in processions, that they may not wear mitres of silver cloth, which are papal, nor damask mitres with red flaps, which are used by cardinals or prothonotaries Apostolic ad instar.

Bishop, EDMUND, liturgiologist, b. at Totnes 17 May, 1846; d. at Barnstaple 19 February, 1917. His early schooling was received at Ashburton and Exeter, and he was afterwards sent to a Catholic school in Belgium. While still very young he began his career as secretary to Thomas Carlyle. In 1864 he entered the Education Department of the Privy Council Office and was employed there for twenty years. In 1867 he was received into the Church. While in the department the easy office hours gave him leisure for study; he read assiduously, copied documents at the British Museum, and, being gifted with a phenomenal memory and an extraordinary power of acquisition, laid the foundations of his wide and varied learning. At this time he transcribed, analyzed, and annotated the great Collecta Britannica, with copies of three hundred papal letters dating from the fifth to the eleventh century. Failing the means of publishing the collection in England, he presented it to the Monumenta Germaniae.

In 1885 Mr. Bishop resigned his position and the following year entered the Benedictine Order at Downside. He remained there as a postulant for three years, but his fragile physique prevented him from taking the monastic habit. From 1892 to 1901 he lived and worked with his friend Dom, now Cardinal, Gasquet, with whom he was joint author of "Edward VI and the Book of Common Prayer (1890)." Gasquet's "Henry III and the Church" was dedicated to Bishop in words that testify to his worth and the quality of his friendship. In 1902 he retired to Barnstaple, where he lived until his death; by his own wish he was buried at Downside in the monks' cemetery.

In proportion to his knowledge, Mr. Bishop produced very little under his own name. Much of his work lies hidden in that of others, for with self-effacement he gave unstintingly of his learning to all who appealed for inspiration and guidance. "The Genius of the Roman Rite" (1899) showed his unrivaled powers as historian and liturgiologist, while probably no individual book published by an English scholar has made so valuable a contribution to the science of liturgiology as the "Liturgica Historica," Bishop's collected essays on western historical and liturgical subjects, in preparation before his death and published in 1918. He contributed numerous papers to the "Journal of Theological Studies" and other periodicals.

Bismarck, DIOCESE OF (BISMARCKIENSIS; cf., C. E., XVI-10d).—The Diocese of Bismarck comprises the following counties: Adams, Billings, Bowman, Burke, Burleigh, Divide, Dunn, Emmons, Golden Valley, Grant, Hettinger, McKenzie, McLean, Mercer, Morton, Mountrail, Oliver, Renville, Sioux, Slope, Stark, Ward, and Williams in the State of North Dakota. This list is slightly different from that published in 1914, owing to the fact that some counties have been divided. The area of the diocese is 35,998 square miles. In 1920 Bismarck had 6,797 inhabitants. By count of 31 December, 1920, the Catholic population of the diocese was 37,343. The diocese contains about 25,000 German-speaking people, mostly from Russia and Hungary; 1,900 Bohemians, coming mostly from Russia; 180 French Canadians; 330 Poles; at least 1,800 Indians; and about 1,300 Ruthenians of the Oriental Rite, not included in the Catholic population. These Ruthenians are centered chiefly in the missions of Wilton and Ukraina-Gorham. By a decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Eastern Church (30 May, 1921), Rev. Father Theodore Roessler, and another priest of the diocese, were authorized to follow the Ruthenian Rite whenever expedient, being exacted to first obtain jurisdiction over these faithful, from the Ruthenian Administrator for the United States. By the same decree, the Ruthenians scattered among the Catholics of the Latin Rite are permitted to attach themselves to this rite, and have its priests assist at their marriages and exercise among them all parochial functions. Catholics born in America of Ruthenian parents, who do not know the Ruthenian Rite or Ruthenian language, but who speak English and are considered American citizens, may receive their definite transfer to the Latin Rite; however, every individual case shall be referred by the bishop to the Sacred Congregation, and shall have attached to the request for the transfer the consent of the Ruthenian Ordinary of the United States.

There are 29 canonically erected parishes, 28 missions with resident priests among whites; among Indians, 2; mission churches without resident priests among whites, 85; among Indians, 8. St. Mary's Benedictine Abbey at Richardton has in addition to its abbot, 31 priests, 16 professed clerics, 14 lay-brothers. Some of its priests are working in other dioceses. In connection with the Abbey, is St. Mary's College with 70 students. Other orders of men in the diocese are the Canons of the Holy Cross, and the Fathers of the Precious Blood; total number of regulars, 36; seculars, 43. There are two convents of women with novitiates, that of the Ursulines at Kenmare, and that of the Benedictines at Garrison; total number of religious women, 211.

There are 13 elementary parochial schools, and 1 industrial school for Indians, while the Government industrial school is partly in care of the Sisters; the school attendance, including Indians, 3,167. There are four hospitals. Besides the above mentioned Government Industrial School, the State Prison, the State Reform School and the Government Indian School at Bismarck all admit the ministry of priests.

The Knights of Columbus and the Catholic Foresters are organized in the diocese, as also some local societies among German and Bohemian speaking people. The Priests' Eucharistic League is the only society organized among priests.

In the territory which constitutes the present diocese of Bismarck there were in 1893 two resident priests among the whites and two among the Indians, some missions being attended by priests residing in what is now the Diocese of Fargo. The first German-speaking immigrants reached the region in 1889, the largest immigration taking place between 1896 and 1910. It ceased at the outbreak of the World War, but is once more on the increase. The diocese is still under the administration of Rt. Rev. Vincent Wehrle, O.S.B., the first bishop.

Blessed Sacrament, FATHERS OF THE (cf. C. E., XIV-111a).—The following houses of the congregation have recent been opened, Brno, Czechoslovakia (1912); Quebec, Canada (1915); Chicago, Ill., U. S. (1918); Duren, near Cologne, Germany (1920); Todi, Italy (1920). The novitiate in North America is at Quebec, Canada. The present superior is Very Rev. Eugene Couet, who succeeded Very Rev. Louis Estevenon in 1912. Recently deceased is Rev. Arthur Letellier, one of the pioneer priests of the congregation, who died in Montreal in 1921. The congregation at present (1921) numbers about 500 priests, scholastics, and lay brothers.

Blessed Sacrament, SERVANTS OF THE MOST (cf. C. E., XIII-731d).—The congregation has its mother-house at Angers, France, a house in Paris, and one in Binche, Belgium. In Canada there are two houses: at Chicoutimi, established 1903, with a community (1921) of 8 professed Sisters and 16 novices; and Quebec, opened December, 1920, with a community of 12 professed Sisters. Two houses have been opened in South America: at Rio Janeiro in 1912, and São Paulo in 1920.

Blessed Sacrament, SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., II-599b).—The congregation received the final approbation of the Holy See in May, 1913. The present superior general is Mother Katherine Drexel, foundress of the congregation. Since 1907 the following new foundations have been made: Philadelphia, Pa.; St. Mark's, New York; St. Anne's, Cincinnati, Ohio; St. Cyprian's, Columbus, Ohio; St. Monica's, Chicago, Ill.; St. Augustine's, Winnebago, Neb.; Our Lady of Lourdes, Atlanta, Ga.; St. Joseph's, Boston, Mass. (settlement and social work); St. Elizabeth's, St. Louis, Mo.; St. Francis Xavier's, New Orleans, La. (high school and normal school for colored youth); St. Peter Claver's, Macon, Ga.; St. Catherine's, Philadelphia, Pa.; Our Mother of Sorrows, Biloxi, Miss.; the Blessed Sacrament, Beaumont, Texas; St. John the Baptist's, Montgomery, Ala.; Corpus Christi School, New Orleans, La.; St. Edward's, New Iberia; Tekawitha House, Washington, D.C. The sisters number 253, and have under their care about 5,000 children of the colored and Indian races. They conduct 2 boarding schools for colored children, 3 boarding schools for Indians, and 19 parochial schools for colored children, having in all 23 foundations.

Blessing (cf. C. E., II-599d).—All cardinals from the time of their promotion to the consistory and all bishops from the time they receive official notice of their canonical provision have power to bless everywhere, with the mere sign of the Cross, crucifixes, medals, rosaries, statues, scapulars approved by the Holy See, thereby granting all the usual

Apostolic indulgences. They may also with a single blessing erect stations of the Cross with the usual indulgences in all churches, oratories, even private, and other pious places, and may annex the Way of the Cross privilege to crucifixes with the usual indulgences in favor of those who by reason of health or other just cause are unable to visit the Stations. According to a reply of the Sacred Penitentiary to Archbishop Hanna of San Francisco, 18 July, 1919, bishops may not habitually delegate this power of blessing and indulgencing rosaries, etc., to their priests. On 15 May, 1914, the Holy Office declared all priests who had faculties from the Holy See to bless and indulgence different religious articles with the sign of the Cross, could impart all these blessings and annex all the indulgences by one sign of the Cross, except in the case of the scapular medal, which required five separate blessings corresponding to the five scapulars it represents.

A reserved blessing, if given by a priest without due permission, is illicit but valid, unless the Holy See in reserving it decreed otherwise (can. 1147). Though blessings are intended primarily for Catholics, they may be given to catechumens, and, unless the Church forbids it, to non-Catholics also, in order that they may obtain the grace of faith or of faith and bodily health. On 8 March, 1919, the Congregation of Rites declared that catechumens may receive also the public sacramentals such as the imposition of ashes and the presentation of candles and palms.

Where vestments and other things to be used in divine worship require a blessing before use it can be given by: (a) cardinals and bishops; (b) local ordinaries, who are not bishops, and parish priests for churches and oratories in their territories; (c) rectors, for their churches; (d) religious superiors and priests of their order delegated by them, for their churches and oratories and for the churches of nuns with solemn vows subject to them. Local ordinaries can delegate their power to any priest.

APOSTOLIC BLESSING (cf. C. E., II-602).—The papal blessing with a plenary indulgence annexed can be given according to the prescribed formula by any bishop in his own diocese twice in the year, namely on Easter Sunday and on any other solemn feast chosen by him, even if he himself only assists at the solemn Mass. Abbots or prelates nullius, vicars Apostolic, and prefects Apostolic, even when not bishops, can give it in their territories on only one of the more solemn feasts each year. Regulars who are privileged to bestow the blessing must use the prescribed formula; they may not exercise the privilege except in their own churches or in those of nuns or tertiaries lawfully aggregated to their order; they are not allowed, however, to impart it on the same day and in the same place as the bishop. Now all priests who are assisting the sick not only may, but must grant them the Apostolic blessing with a plenary indulgence for the moment of death according to the formula. This indulgenced blessing could be given formerly only by priests who were specially authorized.

Blois, DIOCESE OF (BLESSENSIS; cf. C. E., II-602b), coextensive with the civil department of Loire-et-Cher, and a suffragan of Paris, Rt. Rev. Alfred-Jules Melisson, b. in Parigné-l'Évêque, 1842, has filled this see since 10 October, 1907. During the World War 140 priests and 30 seminarians were mobilized from this diocese, and of this number 12 priests and 8 seminarians died, 35 received the croix de guerre, 1 the médaille militaire, and a number were given the médaille des épidémies and other decorations. By a decree of 10 April, 1913, the dignity of a dean was added to the cathedral chapter. By a Brief of 30 July, 1921, an association for spreading the devotion of the "Three Hail Marys" was formed at Blois, in connection with the chapel of Our Lady of the Three Hail Marys. The society has the right to form branch associations in other places, and special privileges are accorded to associated priests, especially to those who form confraternities in their own parishes. The official organ of the society is the "Propagateur des Trois Ave Maria."

The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 271,231 Catholics, 27 first class parishes, 294 succursal parishes, and 37 vicariates, formerly supported by the state.

Bluefields, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (BLUEFIELDSIS), in Nicaragua, dependent on Managua. This vicariate was erected 2 December, 1913, by a division of the ancient diocese of Nicaragua, and comprises the provinces of Bluefields, Cabo Gracias a Dios, Prinzapolka Siguia, Rio Grande, and the islands in the Atlantic Ocean belonging to Nicaragua. So far (1922), no statistics have been published. The present, and first vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Augustin Joseph Bernaus y Serra, titular Bishop of Milopotamos, appointed 28 May, 1914.

Blue Laws.—Connecticut is the State which gave rise to the term Blue Laws. The phrase represents a collection of severe laws regulating personal conduct and the observance of the Sabbath, which are supposed to have been in force among the early colonists of New Haven and Connecticut. By extension the words are used to characterize any strict or rigid regulations, especially in regard to Sunday.

The notoriety of the Blue Laws of New Haven was first occasioned by the work of Rev. Samuel Peters, an Episcopal clergyman and a zealous Tory, who lived in Hebron, Conn., before the beginning of the Revolutionary War, which work was published in England in 1781 as, "A General History of Connecticut." While it pretended to be a history it was really a bitter satire, and of no authority whatever. It was evidently written to gratify the spite or revenge of the author against the Colony of Connecticut, the religion and politics of which he hated. Peters had made himself so obnoxious to his neighbors and the Sons of Liberty, an organization of young men in Connecticut opposed to the Stamp Act, by his offensive antagonism to the patriotic efforts of the Colonists, that he was treated by them in a very rough manner and obliged to flee from the country. His animosity was particularly directed against New Haven, probably because at that time Benedict Arnold resided there, and was either at the head or was one of the chief leaders of the Sons of Liberty. "The laws made by this independent Dominion," he says, "and dominated Blue Laws by the neighboring colonies, were never suffered to be printed." This statement is not true. The laws of New Haven were printed as soon as possible, but before being printed they were duly published. Peters cites as samples forty-five laws, as representing a small part of the Blue Laws. Some of these are practically true and others partly true, but stated in such a manner as to make them appear odious. "No man shall keep Christmas, or make mince pies," is ridiculously false. "No woman shall kiss her child on the Sabbath or fasting day," is untrue. But there was a law in the New Haven Colony which was equally foolish, it providing that no husband should kiss his wife, and no wife should kiss her husband on Sunday, "the party at fault being punished at the discretion of the magistrates."

The laws against persons differing in religion from the colonists were fully as severe as Peters represents. Both in New Haven and Hartford the Massachusetts laws were adopted, and these were very strict. "No priest shall abide in the Dominion, he shall be banished and suffer death on his return. Priests may be seized by anyone without a warrant." This, while not stated in the exact terms of the statute, was true of Connecticut and Massachusetts as well as New Haven, but it was also true of England and Ireland at the time. What is really untrue in his statement that the penal laws of the New Haven Colony "consist of a vast multitude, and were properly denominated Blue Laws, i. e., bloody laws; for they were all sanctified with excommunication, confiscation, whipping, cutting off ears, burning the tongues, and death." Indeed, the laws in both the New Haven and Connecticut colonies were much more humane than the laws of England at the time. The number of crimes punishable by death amounted to more than one hundred in England, while in the New Haven and Connecticut colonies they never exceeded fifteen. Theft was never a capital offense in any part of Connecticut, while in England a theft of property of the value of twelve pence was punishable by death from the time of Henry I.; and as late as 1819 there were 176 offences punishable by death, which gave rise to the common saying, "One might as well be hanged for a sheep as for a lamb."

While Peters gave notoriety to the name Blue Laws, he did not invent it; neither was the name given to them because they were "bloody laws," but most probably because they were printed with covers of blue paper. The Session laws of Connecticut have always been in pamphlets with blue covers, so when first applied the name did not have its present evil significance.

The New Haven code of laws, printed in 1655, are copied almost entirely from the codes of Massachusetts and Connecticut but each offence was fortified with marginal references to Scripture passages. The description of blasphemy and the crimes against chastity is minute to a painful degree, as if it was designed that no one could positively mistake the gravity of the offenses. The crime of assault is thus described and punished: "If any shall in distempered passion, or otherwise, sinfully hurt, wound or maim another, such person shall be punished by fine, with some valuable recompense to the party; and shall pay for the cure, with loss of time, etc., and where the case requires it the court of magistrates are to duly consider the mind of God as it is revealed. Exod. 21:18 to the 28, Lev. 24:19, 20." This is really better and more humane than the present statute of Connecticut, which provides only for the punishment of the accused, leaving the civil remedy of the injured person to a separate and expensive suit.

The use of the lash was at that time a familiar form of punishment in all the colonies. New Haven was no worse, if as bad as the other countries; but the Scriptural references made it peculiar. The Statute reads as follows: "Stripes or whipping is a correction fit and proper in some cases, where the offense is accompanied with childish or brutal folly, with rude filthiness, or with stubborn insolency, with beastly cruelty or with idle vagrancy, or for faults of like nature. But when stripes are due, it is ordered that not above forty stripes shall be inflicted at one time. Deut. 25:34." A fine of six pence was laid on anyone "taking tobacco in an uncovered place or on training days." The law against taking tobacco was in force in Connecticut after the union of the three colonies; and strict provision was made against games of chance and all sports or games requiring skill or luck. In 1650 "the game of shuffle board" was especially prohibited, and any unlawful game was forbidden. Of course such indefinite descriptions of offences made it possible at times for the court to do great injustice. In 1656 "games altogether unlawful" were defined as "cards, dice, tables, and any other game wherein that great and solemn ordinance of a lot is expressly and directly abused and profaned." The early settlers considered that the casting of lots could be employed only for divine purposes, and that to use it for frivolous amusement or purpose of gain was forbidden by the word of God. Sometimes, however, the General Court itself provided for lotteries. This was usually where the lottery was held "for the encouragement of religion or learning." In 1750 the prohibition of games was made to include billiards, quoits, kayle, loggats, "or any other unlawful games or sport." Of course neither baseball nor lawn tennis was then invented or known and so escaped reproof.

But the people finally began to see the folly of such legislation. "Common sense eventually asserted its supremacy in such matters," says Judge Hammersly in the case of State vs. Miller, 68 Conn. 376, "and legislation has ceased to stigmatize innocent amusements as criminal, and legislative discretion is no longer invoked to define those pious uses that may be potent to extract its inherent vice from gambling."

The chief fault that has been found with the Blue Laws is the severity of Sunday regulations, a fault has not yet been wholly remedied, but the laws of Connecticut, although giving the title of Blue Laws to such acts, were no more severe than those of other New England States. Even to the early part of the nineteenth century the laws in force on this subject were as strict as they were in the Puritanic times. Every one was required to attend public worship on Sunday, unless prevented by a very grave cause, and was not only forbidden to transact upon that day any manner of secular business on land or water, but was also denied all recreation, all traveling, except from necessity or charity; and even the privilege of leaving his house, "Unless to attend upon the public worship of God, or some work of necessity or mercy." These provisions were sternly enforced in the earlier days, and many attempts were made to avoid their manifest inconvenience. A story is told of three men who had a pressing occasion to drive from Saybrook to Hartford on a Sunday. Constables were always on the watch for travelers, and these men knew they could not make the journey in the usual way without being arrested; so whenever they approached a village one of the men lay down in the carriage, covered by a blanket, as if very sick, and another went forward making anxious inquiries where he could dispose of a man suffering from an attack of small-pox, pointing at the same time to his companions in the carriage. The inhabitants, fearing that their town would be burdened by the care of a case of small-pox, drove the three travelers to the next town. There the same ruse was enacted, and in this way the men arrived in Hartford without being taken for violation of the Sunday law. This story may not be historically true, but it illustrates how the inhabitants sometimes broke their own rigid law with impunity.

By these early statutes work and pleasure and business were forbidden only between the hours of sunrise and sunset. It was not until 1882 that traveling on Sunday was allowed; but for many years before, that portion of the statute was not observed. In 1883 the owners of vehicles were permitted to use them on Sunday. Still any contract made on Sunday was void, and if anybody paid money on account of such contract, he could not recover it in case of breach. This last injustice was cured by an act passed in 1889 providing that "no person who receives a valuable consideration for a contract, express or implied, made on Sunday, shall defend any action upon such contract, on the ground that it was so made, until he restores such consideration."

Like the laws against innocent games of chance, the laws against Sunday amusements have been so changed in recent years as to give little cause for criticism. They are not yet as liberal as they should be, and as they are in some jurisdictions; but common sense has begun to assert itself in regard to the Sunday in Connecticut; although when, in 1889, an effort was made to ameliorate the statute, the hours of Sunday were lengthened and the fine for violation increased. Previous to that time no business could be legally done between sunrise and sunset, under a fine of four dollars. In 1889 Sunday was made to extend from 12 o'clock Saturday night to 12 o'clock Sunday night, and the penalty for violating the law was raised to fifty dollars.

The practice known as putting to the torture, an old and frequent custom in European countries, was mistakenly included among the Blue Laws of Connecticut, for the custom, while common in New York, was never adopted in any part of Connecticut. Burglary was punished by branding, a rule copied from Massachusetts. In New Haven the letter B was burned on the hand, in Hartford, on the forehead.

The sale of intoxicating liquors was regulated by law, but the laws on this subject were not rigid. A reasonable license fee was provided for; but no man was allowed to sell strong drink to an Indian under severe penalties. In New Haven any man might sell "beer or ale at a penny a quart or cheaper," without a license. Persons were forbidden the privilege of convening at the tavern on the evening next before and next after the Lord's day or any public fasting day. Taverners were forbidden to allow persons to sit drinking or tipping for the space of more than half an hour at a time; and it was made the duty of the constable to enter the tavern, by force if necessary, and see that the laws were not violated.

The adoption of the 18th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States furnishes a ground for the making and enforcing of laws which may well be set in this class. The Volstead Act, fixing the content of one half of one per cent of alcohol in any liquid to characterize it as an intoxicating beverage, makes the law a very rigorous one. While the ratio was proper for purposes of excise, for which it was intended in the first place, it seems unreasonable for the purpose of characterizing a liquid as intoxicating. Indeed there is nothing in the ancient codes of New England so severe or more in the nature of a Blue Law. And the punishments provided are much greater than in the case of crimes which are evil in themselves. A fine of not more than $200.00, or imprisonment of not more than thirty days or both, is imposed for the first offense of selling, keeping, or offering liquor for sale, or manufacturing with intent to sell; for the second offense the fine may be $1,000, or imprisonment for six months or both; and for the third offense, a $2,000 fine, or imprisonment of two years, or both such fine and imprisonment may be imposed. These penalties are much greater than those provided for many crimes and misdemeanors which are mala in se. (See Connecticut Statute of 1921.)

The laws of the Commonwealth of England, under the Presbyterians and Independents, were of the same character as those of New England, but generally more rigorous and severe. Hume describes them in his "History of England," as follows: "The gloomy enthusiasm which prevailed among the Parliamentary party is surely the most curious spectacle presented in any history; and the most instructive as well as entertaining to a philosophical mind. All recreations were in a manner suspended by the rigid severity of the Presbyterians and Independents. Horse races and cock matches were prohibited as the greatest enormities. Even bear-baiting was esteemed heathenish and unchristian; the sport of it, not the inhumanity, gave offense. Though the English nation be naturally candid and sincere, hypocrisy prevailed among them beyond any example in ancient or modern times." It is possible, and indeed probable, that there was much hypocrisy among the Puritans of New England; but a law in the Connecticut code prepared by Roger Ludlow, and adopted in 1646, seems to show a high sense of humanity. It was this: "It is ordered by this Court and authority thereof that no man shall exercise any tyranny or cruelty towards any brute creatures which are usually kept for the use of man."

The settlers of New England, being nearly all Presbyterians and Independents, which latter are called Congregationalists in America, were of course given to the same fanatical religious views and governed themselves by a rigor similar to that found among their co-religionists in England. The persecution of the Quakers, and other sects differing from themselves was common to all the New England Colonies; and their hatred of the Catholic Religion was nothing less than a mania. But if we consider the persecution of James Naylor, the mad Quaker of Bristol, the cruelty of the English seems much greater than that of the Colonists; and if the phrase Blue Laws means, as Peters says, "bloody laws," then it is more applicable to Old England than to New, and although the use of the term is chiefly confined to Connecticut, a fair investigation of the facts of history shows that it is less applicable there than to other parts of New England.

As to religious persecutions, there was no place in North America except the Catholic Colony of Maryland, where they were not at least as rigorous as in Connecticut. Indeed they were a feature of the Protestantism of the time. Phillimore, in his "Reign of George III," cited by Mr. Trumbull in his work on the Blue Laws, says: "To exercise the right of private judgment, so far as to quit the Church of Rome, which had governed Christendom for centuries, was the duty of every Christian; but to exercise it so far as to differ with the Articles, put out one hundred years before by a church that did not pretend to be infallible and teachers that laid no claim to inspiration, was a crime to be punished, in some instances by the stake, in all others by confiscations, by the lash and scars of the hangman, and by the pestilential dungeon, within the walls of which was death."

Bobbio, ABBEY AND DIOCESE OF (BOBIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-605b), in the province of Pavia, in Northern Italy, suffragan of Genoa. Rt. Rev. Luigi Marelli, appointed to this see 16 December, 1907, was transferred, 15 December, 1914, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Pietro Calchi-Novati, was appointed to succeed him 21 December of the same year. According to 1921 statistics this diocese comprises a Catholic population of 30,100, and has 55 parishes, 80 secular priests, 16 sisters, 25 seminarians, and 105 churches or chapels.

Bogotá, SANTA FÉ DE, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BOGOTENSIS; cf. C. E., II-612c), in Colombia, South America. This archdiocese is the primatial see of Colombia and is at present (1922) under the administration of Most Rev. Bernard Herrera-Restrepo, b. in the city of Bogotá, 11 September, 1844, appointed Bishop of Medellín 27 March, 1885, and promoted 4 June, 1891. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Leonidas Medina, titular Bishop of Camachus. In 1914 a national Eucharistic Congress was held here (8-14 September) and met with great success. By the 1921 statistics the diocese comprises 600,000 Catholics, besides 20,000 Indian infidels, 120 secular and 70 regular clergy, and 210 churches or chapels.

Bohemia (cf. C. E., II-612d), formerly a crownland and titular kingdom of Austria, but after the downfall of the dual monarchy a member of the new Czechoslovakia (q.v.), bounded on the north by Saxony and Silesia, on the east by Moravia, and Lower and Upper Austria. The area is 20,057 sq. miles and the population, according to the latest census, that of 1910, 6,769,548 (337 to the sq. mile). In 1913 it was estimated at 6,860,029. The 1910 census gives for Bohemia about 4,242,000 Czechs to 2,468,000 Germans, or 63 per cent Czechs to 37 per cent Germans.

RELIGION.—According to the census of 1910 there were 6,475,935 Catholics, 117,832 Evangelists, 85,826 Jews, and 30,005 of other faiths.

For further religious statistics see CZECHOSLOVAKIA; PRAQUE, ARCHDIOCESE OF; LITOMERICE, DIOCESE OF; BUDJOVICE, DIOCESE OF; HRADEC KRÁLOVÉ, DIOCESE OF.

EDUCATION.—The language question has always been involved in the establishment and maintenance of schools. The German Schulverein was the first in the field and had the wealth of the Germans behind it. In 1880 the Czechs founded the Matice Skolská (Mother of Schools), which provided schools as soon as there were enough Czech children to need them, and forced the Government to take over its schools when the number of children entitled them to state support. In the German area of north Bohemia there are, according to the latest statistics, 108 schools educating 10,000 Czech children. The Matice is said to have founded 56 primary schools in Bohemia and 14 in Moravia, in addition to 61 crèches. In the Czech quarter of Vienna an educational society, the "Union Komen-sky," made great efforts to maintain Czech classes and private schools, as all the public schools were German, even in places of large Czech majorities. In 1914 there were 3,359 Czech elementary schools in Bohemia as against 2,334 German schools. The Czech national movement devoted particular attention to educational problems, and long before the war, Bohemia possessed a complete network of schools and colleges, leading up to the famous Caroline University in Prague, and the percentage of illiteracy was as low among the Czechs as among their German neighbors. The latest statistics (1920) give 194 middle schools of Bohemia, of which 72 are retained by the Germans; also 22 industrial schools, 9 of which are German.

RECENT HISTORY (1909-1920).—The year 1909 was marked by an acute racial struggle, accentuated by heavy deficits in the Bohemian budgets and unemployment. Measures for the free use of Czech and for the division of the country into 20 administrative and judicial districts, of which 10 were to be Czech, 6 German, and 4 mixed, were submitted to the Diet, but no settlement was made. In January, 1911, Count Francis Thun took office as governor at the emperor's request, but all compromise failed, and as a result the governor appointed, on 26 July, 1913, an Imperial Administrative Commission and dissolved the Diet. With the outbreak of the Great War Bohemia found itself subjected to a political reign of terror, which was supported by military and police espionage and censorship. To the last man, the Czechs were keenly opposed to war with their Slavonic kinsmen on the Eastern and Southern fronts, and with the Western democracies, which represented their political ideal. On the Russian front Czech regiments, like the Yugoslav regiments on the Balkan front, again and again surrendered, either en masse or in part, without firing a shot, to an "enemy" whom they regarded as a deliverer. They even formed whole regiments and then brigades to fight on the Entente side.

For the Czech expedition to Siberia see CZECHOSLOVAKIA.

The Paris Peace Conference in 1919 decided to give Czechoslovakia a strategic frontier on the northwest, instead of an ethnographic frontier. The line of the Giant Mountains is the natural geographic border between Saxony and Czechoslovakia, and it has the advantage from the Bohemian point of view of being a defensible border; the disadvantage is that a solid mass of Germans live on the south side of the mountains in the territory that has come to be known as "German Bohemia."

Bohemian Brethren (MORAVIAN BRETHREN, or UNITAS FRATRUM; cf. C. E., II-616a).—In addition to the general body in the United States, which owed its organization to the first immigration of Schwenkfelders in 1734, there are two other separate organizations. The first is known as the Evangelical Union of Bohemian and Moravian Brethren in North America. Their origin is traced to the immigration of some members of the European Union to the United States after the revolutionary disorders of 1848. The members from eastern Moravia settled in Texas. In 1864 the first congregation was formed, others were formed later, and in 1903 the first assembly of delegates from all the congregations met. In 1904 a constitution was adopted and a state charter obtained. In 1921 this organization reported 23 churches, all in Texas, 44 ministers, and 1,714 members.

The second body is listed in the United States reports as the "Independent Bohemian and Moravian Brethren Churches." This is a loose union of three congregations in Iowa which, while claiming the same origin as the two other bodies of Moravian Brethren, are not ecclesiastically connected with either. In educational and missionary work they are affiliated with the Central West (Bohemian) Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. In 1916 they reported 320 members and 14 officers and teachers.

The Moravian church is a member of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. It is also taking part in the preparations for the World Conference on Faith and Order.

In Latin America, West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America the American Moravians had, in 1920, 16,070 communicants and 11,812 enrolled in schools. The general missionary work of the Moravians is carried on jointly in 18 fields by the American and European branches, and it is reported that the proportion of missionaries to members is about 1 to 60, the usual Protestant proportion being 1 to about 5,000.

In 1920 the Moravians reported in the United States 136 churches, 183 ministers, and 28,000 members, and in 1922 31,767 members. In 1917 the enrolment in the 14 missionary provinces of the church was 109,000, and its grand total in all countries was 156,000, besides 70,000 members of the state churches of Europe.

Boiano, DIOCESE OF (BOIANENSIS; cf. C. E., II-622d), in the province of Campobasso, Southern Italy, suffragan of Benevento. Rt. Rev. Felice Gianfelice, appointed to this see 1897, died 9 June, 1916, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Alberto Romita, b. in Cegli del Campo 1880, appointed 22 March, 1917. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 90,300, and by the 1921 statistics is credited with 40 parishes, 175 secular and 19 regular clergy, 30 seminarians, 20 Brothers, 10 Sisters, and 134 churches or chapels.

Boise, DIOCESE OF (XYLOPOLITANA; cf. C. E., II-623d), comprises the State of Idaho, U. S. A. The first bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. Joseph Glorieux, appointed upon the erection of the see in 1893, died 25 August, 1917. During his administration, and that of his successor, the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Daniel M. Gorman (consecrated 1 May, 1918), the progress of this diocese has been very rapid. Many new churches and chapels have been erected and schools and institutions opened; St. John's Cathedral at Boise was completed and dedicated 30 May, 1921; hospitals have been opened at Nampa, Pocatello; high schools at Moscow and Pocatello; new parishes at Twin Falls, Buhl, Caldwell, Hailey, Kellogg, Mullan, Thornecreek and Pocatello, as well as many new missions and grade schools.

The diocese now comprises 43 parishes, 91 churches (as against 54 in 1907), 48 missions, 115 mission stations, 41 secular and 21 regular clergy (as against 34 priests in 1907), 1 monastery for men with 7 religious, 213 religious women, 7 lay brothers, and 25 seminarians. A few years ago there were no high schools, while now there are 6, with 20 teachers and an attendance of 23 boys and 197 girls, and 5 academies with 60 teachers and 427 girl students. Among the charitable institutions are 4 Indian missions, 2 homes, 6 hospitals, and 1 settlement house. There are 3 organizations formed among the clergy, 3 among lay men, and 6 among lay women. A Catholic monthly is circulated in about 12 of the parishes.

During the World War Idaho sent a quota of 1,000 Catholic men, and one of the most prominent of these, Lt. John M. Regan, was killed at Fismes in the Argonne. One of the nurses from this diocese held an important position among the nurses of the American Expeditionary Forces. The total Catholic population of this territory, which numbers about 19,000, is composed of Americans, Belgians, Dutch, Basques, Mexicans, Swiss, Irish, Germans, Poles, Croatians and Bohemians.

Bois-le-Duc, DIOCESE OF (BUSCODUCENSIS; cf. C. E., II-625b), in Holland, also known as s'Herto-genbosch, suffragan of Utrecht. Rt. Rev. William Van de Ven, appointed to this see 1892, died 24 December, 1919, and was succeeded by his coadjutor, Rt. Rev. Arnold Francis Diepen, born in the city of Bois-le-Duc, 1860, ordained 1884, appointed titular Bishop of Danaba, 11 February, 1915. Out of a total population (1921) of 478,960 this diocese has 403,400 Catholics, and counts 600 secular and 387 regular clergy, 255 parishes, 18 deaneries, 465 churches or chapels, 28 religious orders of men and 28 of women.

Boissarie, GUSTAVE, physician, president of the Bureau des Constatations at Lourdes, b. at Sarlat, France, 1 August, 1836; d. there 28 June, 1917. He was the son of Dr. Lucien Boissarie and attained distinction in his preparatory studies in Paris, his professors, men like Jobert de Lamballe and Velpau, predicting for him a brilliant career. His success as corresponding member of several medical societies, notably the Society of Surgery, confirmed this prognostication, but in spite of their efforts to retain him in Paris, he returned to his own neighborhood, where he took over his father's practice, married and had five sons, all of whom became men of distinction in their various careers.

In the late eighties he became interested in the work of the Bureau des Constatations in Lourdes, and visited the town frequently to take part in its investigations. On the death of the first president of the bureau in 1891, Doctor Boissarie was appointed to succeed him, and held the post for the remainder of his life. He developed the work considerably, attracting to the investigations medical experts from all countries, not a few of whom had to acknowledge the failure of any natural explanation for the cures they had witnessed. A man of firm faith, he was equally firm in his conviction that true miracles should be able to stand the most rigorous application of scientific tests, and he was often the last in a reunion of physicians to recognize the evidence of certain extraordinary cures. Doctor Boissarie proved the bad faith of Zola, who in his book "Lourdes" altered facts so as to make the cures appear temporary and unreal. Two years later he brought to Paris three of those thus misdescribed, and at a public meeting at the Luxembourg gave ocular demonstration of Zola's fabrication. It is estimated that 7,778 medical men took part in the investigation during the twenty-three years of Doctor Boissarie's term of office.

In 1881 he was made a Knight of St. Gregory, and in 1890 a Commander of the same order. In 1910 Pius X accorded him an audience during which he said, "I appreciate, my son, all the good you have done at Lourdes; I thank you and bless you." In 1907 Doctor Boissarie published his "Histoire Médicale de Lourdes," a work of great value and scrupulous impartiality.

Bolivia (cf. C. E., II-627b).—The present limits of Bolivia run from north to south between 10° 20' N. and 22° 50' S., and from east to west between 57° 47' 40" to about 72°. However, according to the Bolivian claims, asserted in 1916, the limits should be stated as follows: Longitude, 57° 29' 40" west and 69° 33' 35" west; on east side, latitude 90° 34' 54" S. to 25° 13' S.; and on west side, latitude 10° 58' 40" S. to 25° 00' 5" S. The republic covers an area of 514,155 sq. miles (1,233,972 kilometers), and ranks as fifth in size among the South American countries. In 1915 the estimated population was 2,889,970, or a little more than six to the sq. mile. Of this 486 were reported as Mestizos and 920,864 as Indians. Besides these there were 3,945 negroes. The largest cities with their estimated populations (1918) are as follows: La Paz (the actual seat of the government), 107,252; Cochabamba, 31,104; Potosí, 29,785; Sucre (the capital), 29,686; Tarija, 11,644; Oruro, 31,360; Santa Cruz, 25,807; Trinidad, 6,096.

RELIGION.—By Article 2 of the Constitution of Bolivia, the Roman Catholic is the recognized religion of Bolivia. The public practice of other religions, which was formerly forbidden, is now permitted. For the support of the Church the State pays 121,108 bolivianos ($48,500), 23,820 bolivianos ($9,500) being devoted to the propagation of the Faith among the Indians. The legal status of marriage, as summed up in Article 99 of the Civil Code of Bolivia, was changed by the law of March, 1912, which states that all marriages in the republic must be celebrated by the civil authorities. Bolivia has an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary accredited to the Holy See, while a papal internuncio resides at Sucre.

ECONOMIC CONDITION.—Bolivia produces one-quarter of the total tin output of the world, ranking next to the Malay peninsula in the production of this metal. The present demand and high prices have caused a favorable expansion in tin exploitation. Next in importance is rubber, the annual export value being $5,000,000. Petroleum is now being exploited. The foreign trade in 1918 was: imports, $13,601,092; exports, $71,219,012; to the United States went exports worth $29,636,799; to Great Britain, $35,500,841, exports to Chile and France ranking next. The imports come chiefly from the United States ($4,111,372) and Chile ($3,151,465). It is estimated that 4,940,000 acres are under cultivation, but agriculture is in a backward condition. The public lands have an area of 245,000 square miles, of which 104,000 square miles are reserved for special colonization. The monetary unit is the boliviano, of a par value in American currency of $3.003. The revenue of Bolivia is derived mainly from customs duties, spirit duties, tin, silver, gold, wolfram, antimony, rubber export, patents and stamps. From 1 January, 1912, onwards, a tax of 3 per cent has been imposed on the liquidated profits of all mineral enterprises, the gross value of whose production and exportation exceeds $40,000 yearly. The public debt on 30 June, 1919, amounted to 68,869,161 bolivianos, of which 38,933,525 were external debt. The law of 15 December, 1915, provides for a permanent armed force of 3,577 men.

COMMUNICATIONS.—In 1918 the total length of railway lines was 1,354 miles, including the new line opened in July, 1917, from Oruro to Cochabamba. There are 354 miles under construction. Under the Bolivian-Chilian treaty of 24 October, 1904, the Arica-La Paz line, 271 miles in length, of which 143 miles are in Bolivia, was built from La Paz via Lluta to Corocoro. The Bolivian section was handed to the government of Bolivia on 3 May, 1913. On 12 May, 1920, the Bolivian Congress granted to an Argentine firm a contract for the construction of the railway from La Quiaca in Argentina to Turpiza in Bolivia, which makes possible easier communication between Buenos Aires and La Paz, and will greatly strengthen commercial relations between the two countries.

GOVERNMENT.—The republic is divided into eight departments, La Paz, Cochabamba, Potosí, Santa Cruz, Chuquisaca, Tarija, Oruro, El Beni, and three national territories, Noroeste, Gran Chaco, and Oriente, 72 provinces and 681 cantons. The president has a cabinet consisting of six ministers; the Chamber of Deputies consists of 70 deputies. The three territories are governed by three officials called delegados nacionales.

EDUCATION.—Primary education, which is free and compulsory, is under the care of municipalities and the state. In 1918 there were 450 elementary schools with 3,960 teachers and 58,400 pupils. For secondary education there were 21 colleges, 5 clerical institutions, 5 private lyceums with 180 teachers and 2,598 pupils; for higher education there were 19 institutions and 2 universities (at Sucre and La Paz), also a National Conservatory at La Paz with a war college for officers, founded in 1917. In 1918 the State spent 3,020,672 bolivianos for educational purposes. The National School of Commerce at La Paz, founded in 1910, is a step toward the commercial training of girls as well as of boys.

RECENT HISTORY.—The boundary disputes of Bolivia with Brazil and Chile were settled by treaties in November, 1913, and October, 1914. The dispute about the Arica territory remains to be settled. The controversy is actually between Chile and Peru, but Bolivia claimed possession of a port in this province, a claim which Peru protested, the trouble culminating in 1919 in the attack by a mob on the Peruvian legation. The United States intervened as peacemaker and the Brazilian Government offered to arbitrate. During the European War Bolivia joined the allies by severing all relations with Germany and was one of the signatories to the Treaty of Versailles.

During July, 1920, there was a revolution in Bolivia. By a coup d'état the President, Señor G. Guerra, leader of the Liberal party, was driven from power with his government, and several Republican leaders, with Señor Saavedra at their head, seized control of the capital and of the country. Señor Saavedra became Provisional President and declared that he was in favor of obtaining a Pacific port for Bolivia, but only through an amicable agreement with both Chile and Peru. He was finally elected President for the term 1921–1925.

Bologna, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BONONIENSIS; cf. C. E., II–639c), in the province of the same name, in Italy. This see was filled by the late Pope Benedict XV, from 16 December, 1907, until his election to the papacy. He was succeeded by His Eminence Giorgio Cardinal Gusmini, b. at Gazzaniga, 1855, ordained 1878, appointed Bishop of Foligno, 15 April, 1910, promoted to Bologna, 8 September, 1914, died 24 August, 1921. The Pope appointed his successor upon the feast of the patron of the archdiocese, St. Petronius, 4 October, 1921, in the person of Mgr. Nasalli Rocca, his private chaplain. Born in Piacenza in 1872, Archbishop Rocca spent the early years of his ministry in Rome at the Accademia dei Nobili Ecclesiastici and as canon of the Patriarchal Basilica of St. Maria Maggiore and on 25 January, 1907, he was appointed Bishop of Gubbio, where he served until he was called to the pontifical court. By a decree of the Consistory, 3 January, 1917, the limits of the diocese were somewhat changed, and on 15 February of the same year, important indulgences were granted to the church of St. Benedict. By 1921 statistics the diocese counts 185,400 Catholics and comprises 392 parishes, 640 secular and 65 regular clergy, 640 seminarians, 24 brothers, 287 Sisters, 1,175 churches or chapels.

Bolshevism.—The term derived from the Russian word Bolshinstvo, meaning majority; it is used to describe the extreme Left Communist movement, which was originated in 1903 as a result of a split which occurred in the Russian Social Democratic party at the convention of its delegates held at London. At that time the dissension between the two opposing factions was mainly confined to questions of tactics and organization, the outvoted group of delegates having assumed the name of Mensheviks, meaning those adhering to the minority. Both factions, however, even in those days, proclaimed social revolution as their fundamental aim. Because of Russia's backward economic condition, the leaders of Bolshevism realized that an immediate attempt to put the Communist program into effect would inevitably result in a failure (see Lenin's "Two Tactics," 1905). Therefore, the Bolsheviks, in full agreement with the other Socialist groups, strove to achieve what was termed "the complete liberation of the working classes" through a political revolution; i. e., the overthrow of the imperial regime in Russia.

In 1905 the first practical endeavor was made to apply Communist tactics to the revolutionary movement which broke out in Russia partly because of the unfortunate developments of the Russo-Japanese War. In the fall of 1905 the revolutionary elements in Petrograd and Moscow, guided by Trotsky (Bronstein), Parvus (Helfandt), and a number of other aliens and professional revolutionists, set up the first Soviet (q.v.) in Petrograd, challenging the imperial Government and attempting its overthrow. Since then Bolshevism has become the living expression of "class war," in accord with the principles outlined by the stepfather of Communism, Karl Marx, in his "Communist Manifesto" (1847). Thus, despite the fact that the leaders of Bolshevism were cognizant of the impossibility of achieving an immediate radical change in the social structure of Russia, the practical workings of Bolshevism were mainly directed toward the abolition of private property, with the ultimate aim of establishing the so-called "dictatorship of the proletariat." The defeat of the first revolutionary outbreak in Russia drove Bolshevism underground, its activities having been limited primarily to revolutionary propaganda among the working class in Western Europe. In this connection the extreme factions of German Social Democracy and French Revolutionary Syndicalism, led by Georges Sorel and Lagardelle, came to the assistance of Bolshevism, paving the way for a revolutionary Internationale, which later became known as the "Third Internationale," the inhibition of which dates back to the time of the convocation of the Zimmerwald Conference in 1916. The leading spirits of this Conference, summoned in the midst of the World War, were Lenin (Oulianov), Radek (Sobelsohn), Rakovsky, Ganetzky (Furstenberg) and Martov (Zederbaum). It was there that the first plan was formulated to convert the World War into a world revolution.

Although in the final draft on the Manifesto, addressed to the laboring classes, the Zimmerwald Conference omitted the appeal for "direct action" and mutiny; nevertheless, one of its theses urged the proletariat to devote its entire energy to "the sacred aims of Socialism, for the liberation of oppressed peoples and enslaved classes by means of an uncompromising proletarian class war." This practically meant a victory for the left wing elements at the Conference, whose motto was thus formulated by Radek: "The struggle for peace simultaneously must assume the shape of a revolutionary struggle against capitalism." This program of world revolution was further elucidated by the International Socialist Commission at Berne. The Bolshevik proclamation of 1 May, 1916, contained a direct appeal to "the conquest of political power and abolition of private property by the working class" as the only guaranty for "immediate peace without annexation." The economic disturbances caused by the World War and the general discontent resulting therefrom largely contributed to the impetus of Bolshevik propaganda both in Western Europe and Russia.

The Central Powers, threatened with the growing military preparedness of Russia, decided to use Bolshevism as a weapon for the destruction of the Russian military apparatus. On the other hand, international German-Jewish finance, which for decades in the past proved hostile to imperial Russia, threw its influence onto the scale of the Central Powers, contributing its financial support to the organization plans of the German military staff for spreading revolutionary propaganda in the rear of the Russian army. The task of the Bolsheviks was greatly facilitated by the outbreak in Russia of the March Revolution of 1917. With the formation of the so-called Provisional Government, headed by weak and incompetent politicians (Kerensky, Miliukov, and Prince Lvoff), a revolutionary apparatus was set up by the extreme revolutionary factions, namely, Bolsheviks, Mensheviks, and Social Revolutionists. It became known as the Petrograd Soviet of Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies. While the Provisional Government was engaged in the ruin of Russia's political structure, the Petrograd Soviet, and later the Soviets in other Russian cities, undertook the violent destruction of social and economic foundations of the Russian State. Although in the beginning the Bolsheviks were in a minority in Soviet organizations, yet because their program was the most radical their influence grew stronger with each succeeding blunder made by the Provisional Government. Appeals for "bread and peace," launched by Bolshevik and Socialist agitators, met with considerable success among the masses of the Russian people who were tired of the war and believed that with peace economic conditions would improve over night.

The dissolution of the Russian front proceeded with ever increasing velocity, and by the fall of 1917 the resistance of the Russian army had practically ceased. Tens of thousands of deserting Russian soldiers moving eastward abandoned their trenches, seizing the lands of the nobility and of the wealthier peasants. With the complete inability of the Provisional Government to cope with the grave situation, Bolshevik tactics grew daily more arrogant. While the first July uprising of the Communists, staged by Lenin and Trotsky, was quelled by Cossack troops brought from the front, still Bolshevism continued to be an impending danger. The military authorities, having arrested the Bolshevik leaders, including those above mentioned, were thereupon, by the personal interference of Kerensky, compelled to release them. For a few months Bolshevik headquarters were removed to Finland, whence destructive propaganda was directed. In the meantime economic disintegration continued unhampered, food conditions in the large cities becoming more acute. On 28 October, 1917, Kerensky's government was overthrown and a Soviet dictatorship was established. Soon afterwards similar revolutions occurred in Moscow and in other Russian cities. Almost simultaneously the Soviet Government began to put into effect its program of "nationalization" of industries, banks, and private property in general. Red terror against the wealth-owning classes and land-owning peasants came as a natural result of the principle of class war, which was proclaimed as the basic credo of triumphant Communism. Wholesale executions, drastic persecution of the Christian Church in all its denominations, forced labor imposed upon the so-called bourgeoisie, were the accompanying features of Bolshevik rule. At the same time the motto of Karl Marx, "Expropriate the expropriators," was applied to the industrial life of Russia. The industrial management of olden times was forcibly replaced by the so-called local "Workers' Councils," which took charge of the factories, mills, and mines. The consequences of this measure were alarming. In the course of six months production had almost ceased. In some branches of industry the decrease reached a level of 90%. Because of the complete stoppage of coal digging railways were left without fuel and the whole transportation system became hopelessly wrecked.

The effects of civil war contributed to the general economic and social disaster. Organized and elemental revolts against Soviet rule threw Russia into a continuous civil strife, which has not ceased up to the present time. Vast territories, formerly belonging to the Russian Empire, were broken up and independent states formed with the specific object of evading Bolshevik rule. Aside from that the Brest-Litovsk treaty, concluded between the Bolsheviks and the Central Powers, was a deliberate scheme for the further dismemberment of the Russian Empire. The result of these combined factors was famine, degradation, and an appalling spread of virulent epidemics. As far back as in 1918 Trotsky and other Bolshevik leaders were forced to admit that gradual starvation was the fate of millions of Russian citizens, doomed to misery and destitution. It also became apparent that the workers' management of industries could not succeed and that production would cease entirely. Lenin soon publicly announced that the Bolsheviks would have to "take a step backward" because of the impossibility of keeping up the processes of production without the active assistance of experts and skilled labor. The year 1919 was the period of hunting for experts to whom industry could be entrusted. These endeavors, however, completely failed for Red terror and starvation had demoralized the nation's brains. In addition, the continuous struggle against the White armies and the rebellious peasants opposing Soviet rule made it impossible to effect the least improvement in industrial and economic conditions. The burden of Red militarism and the building up of a huge Red army consumed all the energy of the Soviet leaders. Instead of the promised peace, uninterrupted warfare was inflicted upon Russia. Military operations against Poland terminated in 1920 in a humiliating peace concluded at Riga. Vast territories were ceded to Poland, the boundaries of Russia having been restricted to those of the seventeenth century.

The growing dissatisfaction with the Soviet regime was taken as an excuse for increasing the authority of the so-called "Extraordinary Commission for Combating Counter-Revolution, Speculation, and Sabotage," familiarly known as the Cheka. This Russian Extraordinary Commission, with its local ramifications (Goubcheka), became a notorious machine of oppression and its actual power is greater than the power of the Council of the People's Commissars, combined with the Central Executive Soviet at Moscow. The Cheka is a kind of revolutionary tribunal which carries on its main activities through an elaborate system of secret agents and spies. Under the rule of this peculiar institution nobody feels safe in Russia and the slightest protest against the Soviet regime results in appearing before the tribunal of the Cheka and thereafter disappearing from the stage of life. By the year 1922 the Russian famine had assumed such proportions that the attention of the entire civilized world was attracted to this disaster. The United States, through the American Relief Administration, the International Red Cross, and the League of Nations have taken active part in endeavoring to arrest the spread of the famine area. By January, 1922, according to Soviet statements, not less than twenty million Russians were classed as in "a starving condition."

With regard to Soviet foreign policy, its fundamental aim is the promotion of revolutionary propaganda, both in the West and East. In this task the Soviet Government is assisted by the organization known as the "Third Internationale," the official birth of which was in December, 1918, when the first International Communist Congress was summoned in Petrograd, under the presidency of Zinoviev (Apfelbaum). This Congress was attended by representatives of Communist organizations in the United States, England, China, Austria, Holland, Germany, Servia, Bulgaria, Finland, Turkestan, Persia, India, Corea, and France. In all of these countries the activities of the Bolsheviks are carried on under the jurisdiction of the Executive Committee of the Third Internationale. Every Bolshevik or Communist organization desiring to join the Third Internationale must obey the "twenty-one terms of admittance" laid down by Lenin. Iron discipline is imposed upon the adherents to this international revolutionary organization. Much attention is devoted by the Third Internationale to the formation of the Red units within the ranks of the respective armies and navies, as well as to the systematic Communist propaganda among the laboring classes. The chief feature, however, of Soviet foreign policy is the so-called scheme of the "Red East," which is practically an attempt to combine the different rebellious currents in Asia into one gigantic stream which is designed to flood Europe with its "capitalistic" structure. The success of Red propaganda has proved a real menace to Western civilization, and its danger should not be underestimated and cannot be exaggerated. While in 1921 and 1922 the Bolsheviks, in the face of the disastrous economic conditions within Russia proper, were compelled to grant minor concessions to the Russian people in the way of partially restoring the freedom of petty trade, which hitherto was considered as a crime against the Communist State (speculation), nevertheless conditions in Russia by the early part of 1922 had become worse than ever. At the same time ostensible changes in Soviet policies and the avowed desire of the Bolsheviks to take part in international conferences are in no way indicative of a sincere intention to abandon their program of world revolution. In January, 1922, the Third Internationale issued a manifesto to the workers of the world in which it is frankly declared that the peaceful overtures of the Soviets to the Western World are but a tactical necessity caused by the intolerable internal situation in Russia. The new tactics are described as "a truce" with the capitalist world: "A truce," thus runs the document, "is a long way off from peace. Peace with capitalists is impossible for the workers. Peace will only be possible when the heavy means at the disposal of the proletariat shall drag down the idol of gold of the middle class, when the modern Baal shall be destroyed and the rotten social system of modern times shall be buried in the ruins."

BORIS BRASOL.

Bom Jesus do Gurgueia, PRELATURE NULLIUS OF. See BOM JESUS DO PIAUHY.

Bom Jesus do Piahy, PRELATURE NULLIUS OF (DE BONO JESU), in the Diocese of Piahy in Brazil. In 1892 Leo XIII conceded all the rights to erect new dioceses in Brazil. On 8 June, 1920, Pope Benedict XV exercised these rights for the good of the faithful and separated the provinces of San Raymundo, Monneto, Bom Jesus do Gurgueia, Paranaqua, Corrente, and St. Filomena, from the Diocese of Piahy, and erected the prelatore of Bom Jesus do Piahy, which will later be erected into a diocese. It is dependent on the Archdiocese of Belem do Para. The seat of this prelatore will be at Bom Jesus do Gurgueia and the head prelate will be vested with episcopal jurisdiction; at present it only comprises five parishes, but it promises to grow rapidly, as the territory of Brazil offers material for some of the largest dioceses of the Church.

Bombay, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BOMBAYENSIS; cf. C. E., II-644b), comprises the Island of Bombay, India, with several outlying churches in the Island of Salsette, a large portion of the Bombay Presidency, including the districts of Kathiawar, Cutch, Sind, and British Beluchistan.

In 1720, on political grounds, the Portuguese clergy were expelled by the Government and the Vicar of the Great Mogul was invited to take charge of the Catholics. In 1786 endeavors were made to restore the jurisdiction of Goa and after some conflict the churches were divided, in 1794, between the Archbishop of Goa (Padroado) and the vicar apostolic (Propaganda), thus introducing two jurisdictions. With the First Provincial Council in 1898, the Island of Salsette and the coast country as far as the Nerbudda were placed under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Damaun (Padroado), who also received personal jurisdiction in Bombay Island over all subjects of Padroado of Goan or Portuguese origin.

At the beginning of the World War the Archdiocese of Bombay and the suffragan Diocese of Poona were depleted by over seventy men and is at present working with about fifty where before there were 120, and many of these are men lent by other mission countries, and will eventually have to be returned. During the War Rev. Alban Goodier, S.J., was sent from England to save the colleges in case the German Fathers should be expelled, and later, upon the death of Archbishop Jurgens in 1916, he was appointed Archbishop of Bombay, and consecrated on 22 December, 1919.

At the present time (1921) the Catholic population under the archbishop is about 24,000, of which about 9,000 are in Bombay Island; 3,000 in Salsette; 2,000 in Gujerat, Kathiawar, and Cutch; and 4,500 in Sind. The Archdiocese is served by 139 Fathers, 12 scholastics, and 81 lay brothers of the Society of Jesus, and 33 secular priests attending 24 churches and 25 chapels, besides sisters of the Orders of Jesus and Mary, and the Daughters of the Cross, engaged in educational and charitable work.

Among the institutions of the diocese are the University College in Bombay Island, which has had a rapid growth and now has 1,177 students, and St. Xavier's High School, with 1,033 students. There is no diocesan seminary, the secular clergy being trained at the Papal Seminary at Kandy in Ceylon and at Mangalore. With the building of St. Ignatius Church in Bombay one more fine building was added to the many beautiful structures of the archdiocese.

The Examiner Press, which is the property of the archbishop, now publishes "The Examiner," the "Messenger of the Sacred Heart for India," the "Messenger of the Sacred Heart" in Konkani, and a number of books in the vernacular according to need.

Bonaparte, CHARLES JOSÉPH, lawyer and statesman, b. in Baltimore 9 June, 1851, d. in Bella Vista, Maryland, 28 June, 1921. He was the son of Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte and Susan May Williams and grandson of Jerome Bonaparte, brother of the Emperor Napoleon I. Educated at Harvard he was graduated from the law school in 1874 and devoted the early years of his career to the practice of his profession. In 1904 he became a legal adviser of the Board of Indian Commissioners and trustee of the Catholic University. Always a staunch republican, in 1905 President Roosevelt appointed him Secretary of the Navy and later (1906) attorney general, a post he held until 1909, when he returned to his law practice.

Mr. Bonaparte was an indefatigable writer and speaker, and was active and prominent in the Civil Service Reform League and allied organizations. His real work was a fearless, uncompromising and untiring battle for higher standards of public life. His own spotless life and character, his disinterestedness and skillful logic made him unsurpassed in his ability to bring home to men the price they were paying in moral degradation for what they were getting out of corrupt politics.

Bonn, UNIVERSITY OF (cf. C. E., II-673d).—In 1848 an agricultural academy was founded at Pappelsdorf and was leased by the university with all its appurtenances. It is under the direct control of the Minister of Agriculture, and like the university has the right of autonomy; since 1920 it is called the College of Agriculture (Hochschule), and is administered by a rector, who is elected annually. It is connected with the university inasmuch as the students are matriculated in the faculty of philosophy and thereby become full members of the university. The college has its own right of promotion. It is divided into three departments, each one of which has its dean, e.g., Political Economy, Surveying, and Agricultural Sciences, Pure and Applied Sciences. The faculty consists of professors in ordinary, honorary docents and private docents (privat dozenten). During the summer term of 1921 the entire student body numbered 963, of whom 20 were women. The Catholic theological faculty during the winter term 1921-22 numbered 12 professors in ordinary (dogma, apologetics, moral theology exegesis (New and Old Testament), Church history, canon law, pastoral theology, Christian art, and Christian social science). There are two professors emeritus, 1 honorary professor, and 4 privat dozenten with the title of extraordinary. The heads of the chief faculties are also directors of the chief theological seminaries, having a combined budget and in part a special budget. The professors of this faculty are nominated and appointed in the same manner as the professors of the other faculties, but before the final confirmation of such appointments the Archbishop of Cologne must be consulted and has the right to veto such appointments because of serious objections to the orthodoxy, or the past conduct of the nominee. Before beginning his activities the newly named candidate solemnly takes the oath "Praferio fidei catholicæ" in the university chapel, and notification of this is sent to the archbishop as well as to the Government. Before going to press the semi-annual register is sent to the archbishop for his approval, and the faculty is bound to accept any changes which he suggests regarding purely theological matters, and if possible to act upon them. The majority of the theological students live in boarding houses, to meet which need two diocesan hospices have been established at Bonn (Albertinum and Leoninum), but these students do not receive Holy Orders here. The entire theological course covers 11-12 semesters; of these 9 are spent at the University of Bonn, the remainder at the diocesan seminary at Bonn, where the candidates receive minor orders. The first four semesters are taken up with the study of philosophy, for the most part under the direction of Catholic professors of the philosophical faculty; a few are granted permission to spend several semesters at other universities, e.g., Münster, Innsbruck, Rome, and Freiburg. During the summer term of 1921 the Catholic theological students numbered 5060, of whom 129 were foreigners and 510 were women. The university has its own library, which is also the library of the province. At the present time (1921) it contains about 500,000 bound volumes. A change in the constitution of the university is in progress.

Book of Common Prayer (cf. C. E., II-678d). After years of agitation a joint commission of the two Houses of Convocation, in 1915, recommended a revision of the Prayer Book, the changes to consist in a rearrangement of the Psalms and permission to omit the "maledictory" verses; in a revision of the calendar; and alterations in the Ornaments rubric, the daily office and the litany. The question of revising the Athanasian Creed, or of changing the directions as to its use, is also being agitated. In 1916 the lower House of Convocation postponed further action and nothing definite has as yet (1922) been done. The entire question of revision is in reality due to the struggle between the Ritualists and their opponents. The former desire revision along "Catholic" lines, while the latter desire changes, especially in the Ornaments rubric, that will make impossible the practices and tendencies of the Ritualists.

GERALD SHAUGHNESSY.

Bordeaux, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BURDIGALENSIS; cf. C. E., II-682b), in the department of Gironde, France. It has as suffragans the dioceses of Agen, Angoulême, La Rochelle, Luçon, Périgueux and Poitiers. His Eminence Cardinal Lecot, who was appointed to this see in 1890, died 19 December, 1908, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, His Eminence Cardinal Andrieu, appointed this see 2 January, 1909. Born at Seysses, 1849, ordained 1874, he was appointed Bishop of Marseilles, 18 April, 1901, which see he filled until his promotion, being created cardinal 16 December, 1907. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Jean-Martin Adam, titular Bishop of Thmuis. In 1918 the third centenary of the Ursulines was solemnly celebrated at Bordeaux, and on 5 February of the same year Benedict XV granted a special plenary indulgence to all churches and chapels of the order. According to 1921 statistics this diocese counts 823,925 Catholics, of whom 261,678 are in the city of Bordeaux, where there are 23 parishes. It comprises in all 79 parishes, 431 succursal parishes, 153 vicarages, and 938 priests.

Borgo San Donnino, DIOCESE OF (BURGI SANCTI DOMNINI; cf. C. E., II-686a), in the province of Parma, Central Italy, directly dependent on the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Leonida Mapelli, appointed to this see 4 October, 1907, d. 23 February, 1915, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. John Fabbrucci, b. in Cancelli, 1861, ordained 1885, appointed to this see, 6 August, 1915. The 1921 statistics credit the diocese with 58,000 Catholics, 54 parishes, 100 secular and 10 regular priests, 64 seminarians, 14 Brothers, 50 Sisters, and 78 churches or chapels.

Borgo San Sepolcro, DIOCESE OF (BURGI SANCTI SEPULCHRI, or BITURGENSIS; cf. C. E., II-686b), in the province of Arezzo, Central Italy, suffragan of Florence. Rt. Rev. Raffaele Sandrelli, appointed to this see 11 June, 1892, was retired and succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Pompeo Ghezzi, b. at Gorgonzola, 1870, appointed 27 November, 1911. By 1921 statistics this diocese has a Catholic population of 60,500, and comprises 135 parishes, 190 secular and 20 regular priests, 30 seminarians, 11 Brothers, 70 Sisters, and 280 churches or chapels.

Borneo, BRITISH OR NORTHERN, and LABUAN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (BORNACI ANGLICI; cf. C. E., II-687a), is entrusted to the Foreign Missions of Mill Hill. The present prefect (1922) is Rev. Edmund Dunn of this order. Out of a total population of 700,000 there are in this territory 3,000 Catholics and 500 catechumens. The work of the mission is carried on by 22 priests, 2 Brothers, 7 catchists, and 20 Franciscan tertiaries; it now counts 22 churches or chapels, 10 stations, 16 schools, caring for 800 children and 2 orphanages with 120 children.

Borneo, DUTCH OR SOUTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC (BORNACI HOLLANDICI; cf. C. E., II-687a), comprises all the Dutch province of Borneo. It was erected into a vicariate from the prefecture apostolic of the same name, 13 March, 1912, remaining under the care of the Dutch Capuchins, to whom it was entrusted upon its foundation, 1905. Rt. Rev. John Bos, who was appointed first prefect apostolic of this territory was promoted to vicar apostolic, 14 March, 1918, and appointed titular Bishop of Capitolias, four days later.

A comparison of the 1906 statistics of this territory, with those published in 1922 shows the rapid progress which has been made here. There are now 3,084 Catholics as against 396 in 1906; 21 priests and 18 brothers where there were only 8 priests and 4 brothers; 24 churches and 18 stations where formerly there were 3 chapels and 2 stations. The Franciscan Sisters of Veghel are established in the vicariate with 15 sisters; 6 schools, which receive a subsidy from the state, are conducted, caring for the education of 429 children; 3 homes and 5 orphanages are also established. Since the foundation of the mission (1905) it has lost only one of its priests, Rev. Honoratus J. van der Voort, d. 1918, while caring for the sick at Dajak, during an epidemic.

Bornholm, a mission in Denmark, entrusted by Propaganda, to the Dutch Dominicans in 1915, presided over by Rev. John Melen, superior. This mission comprises the Danish island of Bornholm in the Baltic Sea near the southern coast of Sweden, and forms a small part of the Vicariate Apostolic of Denmark and the Island, subject to the jurisdiction of Rt. Rev. Johannes von Ruch, residing at Copenhagen. With the exception of some immigrants and converts the population of Bornholm (44,000) is entirely Protestant. They belong mostly to the National Danish Church, but there are more than sixteen other sects scattered throughout the island. Before the establishment of this mission in 1915 the Catholics had to be satisfied with what spiritual aid could be given them by the priests of Copenhagen, who made occasional visits to the island. Upon its establishment as a separate mission the Dominicans of the Dutch Province established two stations, one at Rønne, the capital of the island, and the other at Aakirkeby, a small city in the center of the island. The former is used as the mission center for the Danes, the latter for the Poles.

Each year about 250 Poles are found in this territory from the beginning of spring until the end of the harvest, where they earn their living working the farms, their assistance being greatly appreciated by the Danes, who suffer from a scarcity of labor. The station at Aakirkeby is presided over by a Dutch Dominican, who speaks both Polish and Danish, and he has numerous opportunities for giving instruction to Protestants as well as Catholics. The station at Rønne is in charge of another Dominican whose whole work is the conversion of Protestants, and who is assisted by Missionary Sisters of the Precious Blood of the German Congregation, whose mother-house and novitiate are in Holland. There are ten of these Sisters who give their lives to the care of the sick and the teaching of young Danish girls. Among the fifty pupils who attend their elementary schools there is not one Catholic.

Borsi, GROSUE, soldier, poet and journalist, b. in Leghorn, Italy, 10 June, 1888, d. 10 November, 1915; son of Averado Borsi and Verdiano Fabbri. From his earliest years Borsi manifested literary ability. A poem written to his mother at the age of thirteen has been termed a classic. At fifteen and seventeen he published volumes of poetry, while at twenty he was recognized as a foremost commentator on Dante. At twenty-two he succeeded his father as editor of "Il Nuova Giornale" of Florence.

Borsi had been raised in an irreligious atmosphere, as his father was the owner of a chain of anticlerical newspapers, but he had been baptized and received his first Communion at the age of fourteen in deference to his mother's wishes. He studied at the University of Leghorn, where he received his degree in law, for which he had no particular interest, so he left the university to become a journalist. Three deaths in his family, that of father, sister, and a brother, blasted his hopes of earthly happiness, and in visiting the cemetery where they were buried he became acquainted with the local Franciscans, at whose suggestion he commenced to study religious works. In the interest of his newspaper he became acquainted with Rev. Guido Alfani, P. M., director of the Florentine Observatory, who satisfied his religious difficulties and received him back into the Church.

On 18 July, 1914, Borsi received Holy Communion for the second time, and on 29 April, 1915, was confirmed by Cardinal Maffi, Archbishop of Pisa, and on 4 May following he began writing his "Spiritual Soliloquies," which are regarded by some critics as a twentieth-century version of the "Confessions" of St. Augustine, and in the opinion of Cardinal Maffi will stand with them as amongst the greatest ascetical literature produced by the Church.

Enlisting at once when Italy entered the war, in October, 1915, Borsi was sent to the Isonzo front, where he fell, mortally wounded, 10 November, while leading his platoon to attack. After his death his Colloquies, which are fifty-four in number, the last eighteen having been written at the front, were published, and translated by Rev. Pasquale Maltese under the title of "Soldier's Confidences with God." A series of letters to his fiancée, entitled "Confessions to Julia," are in course of publication. The influence of the spiritual writings of this young Italian, turned from a dissipated darling of the salons of Florence and Rome into an apostle of Catholicism, is a palpable force among the young men in Italy to-day, whose fruits cannot yet be reckoned.

Bosa, DIOCESE OF (BOSANENSIS; cf. C. E., II-689b), in the province of Cagliari, Sardinia, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Sassari. Rt. Rev. John Baptist Vinati, appointed to this see 19 January, 1906, was promoted to the titular see of Mocessos, 1916, and his successor, Rt. Rev. Angelico Zanetti, O. F. M., now (1922) fills this see, having been appointed 16 December, 1915. In 1921 this diocese had a Catholic population of 30,200 and comprised 20 parishes, 55 secular priests, 7 seminarians, and 104 churches or chapels. The church of our Lady of the Snows at Cuglieri, constructed at the beginning of the fourteenth century, was erected into a minor basilica, 9 September, 1919.

Bosnia and Herzegovina (cf. C. E., II-694a), formerly provinces in the Austro-Hungarian Empire, now included in Yugoslavia. The census of 1910 gave the area and population as follows:

District	Area	Population	Population Per Square Mile
Serajevo	3,245	288,061	88
Tuzla	3,443	425,496	123
Banjaluka	3,481	403,817	116
Bihac	2,163	229,071	106
Travnik	3,905	284,561	72
Mostar	3,531	267,038	75
Total	19,768	1,898,044

The population of the principal towns was as follows: Serajevo, 51,919; Tuzla, 11,333; Banjaluka, 14,800; Bihac, 6,201; Travnik, 6,647; Mostar, 16,392. The census of 1910 showed an increase of 232,425 in the population of Bosnia since 1895; of 47,527 in the population of Herzegovina. The estimated population in 1920 was 1,931,802, and the area, 20,709 square miles. There are about 35,000 Albanians in the southeast, and 10,000 German and Tyrolese colonists; the rest of the population belongs to the South Slavonic peoples.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The land question in Bosnia and Herzegovina is a very complicated one. Of mulk or freehold proper, there is very little in Bosnia. The greater part of the cultivated land is mirie, which is a leasehold tenure, paying tithe to the State as reserved rent. Mulk can be disposed of freely, mirie only with the consent of the State. The remaining categories include vakuf or Mahomedan religious foundations, mevat, or waste and forest lands, and matruke (roads, etc.), the last two being state property. The result of the Turkish conquest has been the creation of an exclusive Mohammedan landlord class, the conquerors cultivating very little themselves, the bulk of the land being worked by the original Christian owners (kmets). The peasant always enjoyed the right of pre-emption should the landlord be willing to sell, but until recently the terms on which he was obliged to raise the purchase money were so onerous that he was usually ruined in the process of acquiring property. In 1911, a law came into force to enable him to borrow from the State the whole sum required, but since this law contained no provisions for compulsory sale, the process of redemption was slow. However, between 1879 and 1900 about 26,000 kmets became freeholders, the largest number of purchasers in one year being 1,539 in 1909, at which date some 80,000 kmets still remained. Between December, 1911, and the end of July, 1912, 4,248 redemption loans amounting in the aggregate to £333,000 had been sanctioned, the money being derived from a preliminary advance of £416,000 provided by two financial groups represented by the Landesbank and the Agrarbank.

In 1910, the agricultural population of Bosnia-Herzegovina was 1,668,887, or about 88 per cent of the whole. There were 31,416 free peasants who were also kmets, 151,598 landlords (agas, begs) and free peasants, 79,677 cultivators of land not their own (kmets).

EDUCATION.—According to a Yugoslav authority there were in 1916, 458 elementary schools, giving a proportion of one school to 4,000 inhabitants. Education in the state schools is free. Secondary education is mainly dependent on 2 gymnasia at Serajevo and Mostar, and upon a realschule in Banjaluka. There are also a technical intermediate school, an institute for training teachers and a military academy. It is one of the grievances of the Yugoslav party that owing to practical exigencies, a knowledge of German is compulsory in secondary education.

GOVERNMENT.—Two years after the annexation of Bosnia-Herzegovina to Austria, a constitution was granted to the provinces by imperial decree. The elective machinery was good, as was shown by the orderly conduct at elections, but the legislative power conferred was too limited to give any real satisfaction and consequently became the subject of immediate protest and agitation. All the Bills carried in the local legislature required confirmation in the Parliaments of Austria and Hungary and approval by the Austro-Hungarian Common Ministry before they came up for royal assent. After the inclusion of the provinces in Yugoslavia, the provincial governments continued with the existing laws. According to the new constitution of Yugoslavia, Bosnia and Herzegovina form an autonomous province with a Diet of its own. It is to be divided into departments within its present limits and until this is enacted by law, the circuits of Bosnia and Herzegovina constitute departments. The union of these departments is to be carried out by the decision of the Departmental Skupstinas (Legislature) of the departments concerned by a majority of two-thirds of the votes cast. Single communes or districts can be separated from one department and annexed to another department within the limit of the present boundaries of Bosnia and Herzegovina, if their autonomous representatives consent to this by a decision of three-fifths of the votes and the consent of the National Legislature is given.

RELIGION.—The census of 1910 gives the following figures: Orthodox, 825,418 (43.49%); Moslems, 612,137 (32.25%); Roman Catholics, 434,061 (22.87%); Uniats, 8,136 (.43%); Jews, 11,868 (.52%); Evangelicals, 6,342 (.33%). The Christians in Bosnia are largely Orthodox, in Herzegovina, Catholic and Orthodox mixed. The Mohammedans form the majority in Serajevo and Tuzla. The Catholics of the Latin Rite exceed the other two denominations in Mostar and Travnik. At the time of the annexation to Austria in 1908, the Sultan's spiritual sovereignty was recognized by permission to continue the mention of his name in public prayer. For Catholic statistics, see SERAJEVO, ARCHDIOCESE OF; BANJALUKA, DIOCESE OF; MOSTAR AND MARKANA-TREBINJE, DIOCESE OF.

HISTORY 1908-1920.—At the Congress of Berlin, the Great Powers had acquiesced in the occupation of these provinces by Austria, as a necessary police measure, but Austria saw in their possession security against the development of Serbia into a powerful state, and on 7 October, 1908, Baron Aehrenthal, without any previous authority from the signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, announced the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina to the Austro-Hungarian Empire. The annexation was not unconnected with the Turkish revolution of 24 July, 1908, which promised to introduce constitutional government among various nationalities under Turkish rule, and roused in Austria the fear that the return of these provinces might be demanded of her. On 20 February, 1910, a constitution was given to the annexed provinces. At the outbreak of the Great European War, Austria took repressive measures against the inhabitants of Bosnia and Herzegovina, even to the extent of wholesale massacres of the Servian population. About 8,000 are stated to have died at Doboj in Bosnia, where a camp had been formed in December, 1915. Desertions to the enemy from Bosnian regiments were frequent and were often due to concerted action. The first Bosnian regiment twice passed en bloc to the enemy, and was twice reconstituted. Finally it went over to the Russians at Jassy, with its Mohammedan Ser colonel. Between November, 1915, and July, 1917, volunteers were enrolled to the number of 46,581 of whom the largest proportion was furnished by Bosnia-Herzegovina. The corps saw much service and suffered heavily in proportion to its numbers.

The movement for the union of Bosnia and Herzegovina with the other Slavic countries took definite form at a general convention called by the National Yugoslav Council on 16 August, 1918, at Laibach in the province of Kraina, in which Bosnia and Herzegovina took part. It was furthered by the action of the National Council of Agram (Zagreb), which voted the union of all the Slav states with Serbia, and on November, 1918, Bosnia and Herzegovina became incorporated with the Kingdom of Greater Serbia.

Boston, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BOSTONIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-703b), celebrated its centennial in October, 1908, and in 1911 its archbishop, Most Rev. William Henry O'Connell, was created a cardinal. The Catholic Missionary Congress met in Boston in 1913; and in April, 1919, the sixth Diocesan Synod was held here. The division of the New York-

Maryland Province of the Society of Jesus was definitely begun on 8 December, 1921, with the formal opening of a new Jesuit scholasticate at Weston, near Boston, to be called Weston College. During the World War thirty priests of the diocese served as army chaplains. Rt. Rev. John Brady, D.D., Auxiliary Bishop of Boston, died 7 January, 1910. The present auxiliary is Rt. Rev. Joseph G. Anderson, consecrated titular Bishop of Myrina, 25 July, 1909.

At the present time the Diocese of Boston comprises 2465 square miles, has 259 parishes, 37 missions, 296 churches, 1 monastery for men and 2 for women, 14 convents for men and 100 for women, 657 secular priests and 157 regular, 139 lay brothers, 1,732 nuns, 3 seminarians with 184 seminarians, 1 college for men with 35 teachers and an attendance of 755, 1 college for women with 7 teachers and an attendance of 72, 37 high schools with 276 teachers and attendance of 3,452 (boys, 233; girls, 1,155), 3 normal schools with 42 teachers and an attendance of 113, 4 training schools with 74 teachers and an attendance of 236, 129 elementary schools with 1,664 teachers and attendance of 70,842, 5 industrial schools with 84 teachers and attendance of 545. Missionary work is carried on through the Society for the Propagation of the Faith and the Holy Childhood.

The various institutions established in the diocese are: 9 homes with 826 inmates, 10 asylums with 818 inmates, 6 hospitals caring for 5,317 patients in the year and 22,724 out-patients, 4 diocesan and 25 parochial settlement houses and 5 day nurseries caring for 1,550 children a year. All the public institutions permit the priests of the diocese to minister in them and the Boston School for the Deaf in Randolph is aided by the State. Among the clergy the societies established are: Clergy Fund Society and the Eucharistic League; among the laity: Holy Name Society, League of Catholic Women, Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association, Catholic Daughters of America, Knights of Columbus, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters, St. Jean Baptiste d'Amerique; Catholic Fraternal League, Guilds of St. Luke, St. Apollonia, Infant Saviour, St. Vincent de Paul Society, Cecelian Guild, Daughters of Isabella, Catholic Total Abstinence Union. "The Pilot" is the diocesan publication. During 1920, 1,196 converts were made throughout the diocese.

Bostra (or BOUSRA) AND HAURAN, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BOSTRENSIS ET AURANENSIS; cf. C. E., II-707d), of the Greek Melchite Rite in Syria. This see was vacant for almost thirty years until the appointment of the present metropolitan, Most Rev. Nicholas Cadi, 10 February, 1889. The diocese is under the Patriarchate of Antioch, the archbishop residing at Damascus; he returned to his see in 1918 after having been banished by the Turks. By 1921 statistics there are 9,990 Catholics of the Greek Melchite Rite in this territory, 1,500 Schismatic Greeks, 17 secular priests and 1 regular, 9 churches, and 13 schools for boys and girls. The see is titular for the Latin Rite. There are no Catholics of this Rite in Hauran, but about 1,000 reside in Ageloun and Salte, cities which, although in the territory of Hauran, are dependent on the Patriarchate of Jerusalem.

Botucatu, DIOCESE OF (BOTUCATUENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI-34c), in the State of São Paulo, Brazil, was erected on 7 June, 1908, through a division of the Archdiocese of São Paulo. It includes a portion of the Atlantic coast called Ponta de Guarani, extending from the rivers Una do Prolado and Riberião do Piruipe, as far as the point where the rivers Itahim Guassu and Fieté unite; these boundaries were already established for the Archdiocese of Sao Paulo. From here the boundaries of the new diocese follow the line passing the river Fieté to the mouth of the Paraná and from this point to the limits of the States of Matto Grasso and Paraná as far as the promontory of Guarahni. Included also in the diocese are the Islands of Bom Ambrigo, Comprida, Cardazo, Cananéa, Moleques, and Castilho. On 17 October, 1908, Rt. Rev. Lucius Autunes de Sousa was elected first bishop of the diocese.

At the present time (1921) the diocese includes: 60 parishes, 80 churches, 40 missions, 2 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 1 convent for men and 3 for women, 80 secular priests and 40 regulars, 20 lay brothers, 50 nuns, 1 upper and 1 lower seminary with 40 seminarians, 1 college for men with 8 professors and 100 students, 4 colleges for women with 50 professors and 350 students, 1 elementary school with 10 teachers and 150 students.

Bourges, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BITURICENSIS; cf. C. E., II-720b), coextensive with the departments of Cher and Indre, France. This see was filled by the present Cardinal Dubois, from 30 November, 1909, until his transfer to Rouen, 13 March, 1916. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Martin-Jérôme Izart, b. at Estagel, 1851, appointed Bishop of Pamiers, 31 May, 1907, promoted 9 May, 1916. During the World War, 274 priests of this diocese, and 39 seminarians were mobilized, and of this number 17 priests and 8 seminarians died, 6 were decorated with the Legion of Honor, 3 won the military medal, 56 the croix de guerre, 7 the médaille des epidémies, and 5 received foreign decorations.

In 1919, from 5-8 September, the fifth centenary of the crowning of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart at Issoudun was celebrated. The ceremonies were attended by eight archbishops and bishops and 25,000 pilgrims and important indulgences were granted by the Pope.

By the latest statistics (1921) the population of the diocese numbers 337,810 for the department of Cher, and 287,873 for Indre; there are 65 first class parishes, 435 succursal parishes, 3 vicariate chapels, and 26 vicariates, formerly supported by the State.

Bova, DIOCESE OF (BOVINENSIS; cf. C. E., II-724b), situated in the civil province of Reggio, in Calabria, Italy, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Reggio Calabria. Bishop Pugliatti, appointed to this see, 19 April, 1900, d. 18 November, 1914, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Paolo Albera, appointed 27 May, 1915. Born in Godiasco, 1871, he was made a secretary of the Apostolic Camera in 1910, rector of the theological seminary of Reggio-Calabria, January, 1915, and appointed administrator Apostolic of Mileto, 14 February, 1919. The 1921 statistics count the Catholic population of the diocese at 24,000, and credit it with 14 parishes, 3 vicariates, 23 secular and 6 regular clergy, 30 seminarians, and 34 churches or chapels.

Bovino, DIOCESE OF (BOVINENSIS; cf. C. E., II-724c), in the civil province of Foggia, Southern Italy, suffragan of Benevento. Bishop Padula, appointed to this see, 24 March, 1898, was transferred to Avellino, 2 August, 1908. He was succeeded by the present incumbent Rt. Rev. Uberto Maria Fiodo, b. in Naples, 1861, made an honorary chamberlain, 1895, prelate of the Holy See, 1904, appointed 9 December, 1910, consecrated, 22 January, 1911. The 1921 statistics credit this diocese with 30,000 Catholics, 10 parishes, 60 secular priests, 68 churches or chapels, 17 Sisters, and 10 seminarians.

Bowden, HENRY SEBASTIAN, oratorian and writer, b. in London, England, 16 February, 1836; d. in London, 26 September, 1920. He was the son of Captain Henry Bowden of the Scots Guards, a convert and the founder of St. Mary's Church, Chislehurst. In 1848 he entered Eton, but on account of his father's conversion he was not allowed to finish his studies there. Shortly afterwards, in 1852, he himself entered the Church, and was one of the first students at the Catholic University of Dublin, founded by the then Doctor Newman. Later he entered the army, securing a commission in the Scots Fusiliers Guards. He served with his regiment from 1855-1867 when he resigned as captain and joined the Fathers of the Oratory in London. After his ordination in 1870, he became Prefect of the Brothers of the Little Oratory, the famous confraternity established by St. Philip Neri in Rome in the sixteenth century. In 1880 he was appointed parish priest of the large parish served by the Brompton Oratory, and was three times superior of the Oratorians, acting also for several years as censor for the Diocese of Westminster. His work in connection with the Oratory Middle School for boys was one of his greatest successes, as were his conferences for ladies held in St. Wilfrid's Hall. His guidance was much sought by those seeking admission into the Church and the number of his converts was very great.

Father Bowden's literary work includes "The Religion of Shakespeare," "The Witness of the Saints," "Guide to the London Oratory," "Dante," prefaces to Hettinger's "Natural Religion," and "Revealed Religion," the translations of which he edited, "Miniature Lives of the Saints," a household word for over forty years amongst English speaking Catholics, "Mementoes of the English Martyrs and Confessors," and a new edition of Blessed Thomas More's "Crumbs of Comfort."

Father Bowden's preaching was characterized by a certain tenderness joined to downrightness of fact and great earnestness of manner. A book embodying his spiritual teaching, edited by the Fathers of the London Oratory, has been recently published (1921) and gives evidence of his deep piety and spiritual shrewdness.

Braga, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BRACARA AUGUSTA, CIVITAS BRACARENENSIS), in Portugal. Rt. Rev. Manoel Bautista da Cunha, who came to this see 22 June, 1899, died in exile 13 May, 1913. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Manoel Vieira de Mattos, b. at Peso de Regoa 1861, appointed titular Archbishop of Mitylene 22 June, 1899, and auxiliary to the Patriarch of Lisbon, promoted 1 October, 1914. The census of 1881 showed 719,286 Catholics in this territory, divided among 689 parishes.

Bragança, DIOCESE OF (BRIGATIENSIS), in the civil province of Tras-os-Montes, Portugal. Rt. Rev. Joseph Alves-de Mariz appointed to this see, 21 July, 1885, d. 26 August, 1912, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Joseph Lopes Leide de Faria, b. at Tagilde, 1876, appointed 5 October, 1915. The latest statistics (1900) credit this diocese with 158,125 Catholics, divided among 334 first class parishes and 230 succursal parishes; it counts 583 churches, 581 public and 115 private chapels.

Brandenburg (cf. C. E., II-738d).—Ecclesiastically the former Mark of Brandenburg, with the city of Berlin and the greater part of the province of Pomerania, forms the "Apostolic Delegation for the Mark Brandenburg and Pomerania" which is administered by the Prince-Bishop of Breslau as Apostolic Delegate, indirectly through the Dean of St. Hedwig's in Berlin, as delegate of the prince-bishop.

According to the census of 1920 the number of Catholics was 538,927. The delegature is divided into 7 archipresbyterates with 74 parishes, 41 curacies, 182 churches and chapels. In addition to the delegate and the secretary of the delegation there are 272 priests of whom 74 are pastors, 143 curates and assistants, while 55 live in communities and have other appointments. The following religious orders have foundations: Dominicans 2, with 11 priests and 7 lay brothers; Society of the Divine Saviour 1, with 6 priests; Franciscans 1, with 2 priests; Jesuits 2, with 12 priests and 1 lay brother; Alexians 1, with 20 brothers; Poor Brothers of St. Francis 1, with 15 Brothers.

With few exceptions the religious orders of women devote themselves to the education of the young and to the care of the sick and poor. They have 95 foundations, representing the following orders: Sisters of St. Charles Borromeo (7 houses); Dominicans of St. Catherine of Siena (15 houses); Franciscans (6 houses); Grey Nuns of St. Elizabeth (24 houses); Sisters of St. Hedwig (1 house); Sisters of St. Joseph (2 houses); Carmelites of the Sacred Heart (6 houses); Sisters of St. Catherine (3 houses); Servants of the Immaculate Conception (3 houses); Sisters of Mary (16 houses); Religious of the Society of the Sacred Heart (2 houses); Sisters of Our Lady (2 houses); Sisters of the Divine Saviour (2 houses); Sisters of the Good Shepherd (2 houses); Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul (2 houses); Ursulines (2 houses).

The following Catholic schools exist in the delegature: 2 private high schools for boys, 6 for girls, 4 of which are conducted by nuns, 36 primary schools in Berlin, 52 outside of Berlin. In non-Catholic schools catechism is taught to the children by priests and secular teachers; classes in religious instruction are also held in churches, chapels and private houses. Religious orders of women conduct 32 infant asylums, and 11 schools for domestic economy and manual training.

Almost all of the charitable institutions are in charge of religious communities of women. There are 16 hospitals and sanatoria, 10 homes for convalescents, 1 insane asylum, 1 maternity home, 42 nurses' homes, 10 homes for invalids, 32 juvenile homes, 14 crèches, 4 homes for men, 4 refuges and boarding houses for women, 28 orphan asylums, 6 homes for wayward girls, 14 homes for girls seeking employment, several institutions for the instruction of first communicants. In many cases several of these institutions form one establishment and are under the same management.

The Catholics are well organized in the delegature, prominent among the 300 associations being the following: Association of the Holy Family (30); Associations of St. Charles Borromeo (50); St. Aloysius' Sodality and Young Men's Association (35); Sodalities of the Blessed Virgin (25). The following charitable political and social organizations exist in the delegature: Caritas Verband (Charitable Association) for Berlin, Spandau and other centers; Society of St. Vincent de Paul, with 90 conferences; about 70 Catholic labor unions; 10 journeymen's unions (Gezellenvereine); 8 Masters' Unions; 5 Associations of teachers; 12 Students' Associations; 2 National Bureaus (Volksbureaus); the National Union for Catholic Germany; the Windthorst League, Civic Associations and Choral Unions.

BRANN, HENRY A., priest and scholar, was b. 15 August, 1837, in Parkstown, County West Meath, Ireland; d. in New York, 28 December, 1921. He came to America in 1849, and received his elementary education in St. Mary's College, Wilmington, Delaware, and in St. Francis Xavier's College, New York City. His theological studies were followed at the Seminary of St. Sulpice, in Paris, whence he went to Rome, where he was ordained on the Feast of the Most Holy Trinity, 14 June, 1862, his being the first ordination at the American College. He returned to the United States in August of the same year, and was appointed vice-president and professor of dogmatic theology at Seton Hall College, which offices he continued to hold for two years. In 1864, Dr. Brann was appointed assistant priest at St. Mary's, and in 1865 he became assistant to Rev. John Kelly, in St. Peter's Church, Jersey City. He was appointed pastor at Fort Lee, N. J., in May, 1866. In that same year he built the Church of St. Cecelia in Englewood, and also started the building of the Church of the Holy Trinity in Hackensack. In 1867, Dr. Brann joined the Paulist Fathers, where he taught philosophy and theology. At the urgent request of Bishop Whelan, Dr. Brann was loaned to him by Cardinal McCloskey, to act as director of the seminary at Wheeling, West Virginia, during the bishop's absence at the Vatican Council. When Dr. Brann returned to New York in 1870, he was appointed pastor at Fort Washington where he built St. Elizabeth's Church. For nineteen years he devoted his priestly labors to the people of St. Elizabeth's, and during that time he found ample opportunity for study, and he acquired fame as a lecturer, preacher and writer. Numerous articles appeared from his pen during those years in various reviews and magazines. He published many books and small pamphlets, among them two metaphysical works: "Curious Questions" and "Truth and Error." "The Age of Unreason" was a reply to Col. Robert Ingersoll in 1880. "An Essay on the Popes," "The Immortality of the Soul," "Purgatory," "Martin Luther," "The Life of Archbishop Hughes," "Waifs and Strays," "The History of the American College in Rome," and a pamphlet on "Christian Education" are among the best known of his works.

In January, 1890, Dr. Brann was appointed pastor of St. Agnes Church, New York City. For thirty-two years, until the day of his death he spent his best efforts, with distinction and success, for the spiritual and temporal interests of his people, and for the welfare of the Catholic Church. In January, 1910, on the Feast of St. Agnes, he was created domestic prelate by His Holiness Pope Pius X, and in June, 1912, Monsignor Brann celebrated the Golden Jubilee of his ordination to the priesthood. Monsignor Brann was gifted with extraordinary talents; and with undaunted courage he made use of these talents, as a preacher, professor, writer, controversialist, in the defense of truth and the doctrines of the Catholic Church.

Brazil, UNITED STATES OF (cf. C. E., II-745d).—The area of the Republic of Brazil is 3,275,510 square miles. According to the census of 1920 the population was 30,645,296 (9.3 per square mile). The largest city is Rio de Janeiro with a population of 1,157,873 in 1920; São Paulo, 504,300; Bahia, 348,130; Pernambuco, 216,484; Belem, 275,167.

The number of immigrants between 1820 and 1919 was 3,576,275. Between 1908 and 1919, there were 1,015,873 immigrants, of whom 386,696 were Portuguese, 212,732 Spaniards, 145,709 Italians, 36,246 Germans, 10,498 French. In 1919 there were 5,701 immigrants. In the southern states of Brazil there are prosperous German, Russian, and Italian colonies. The colonies maintained by Brazil are nineteen; on 31 December, 1918, they had a population of 37,535 including 372 Germans, 12,209 Brazilians, and 22,154 of other nationalities. In 1920 Brazil was much concerned over the question of immigration and as the settlement of the country was not proceeding rapidly enough, measures were taken for facilitating the entry of Jews from Ukraine in November and settling them on public lands.

RELIGION.—The latest religious statistics (1917), give 24,373,579 Catholics and 70,268 Protestants. There are about 8,280 churches and 4,005 clergy. The entire republic is divided into twelve Metropolitan sees; São Salvador do Bahia (diocese 1552, archdiocese 1676); suffragans, Barra do Rio Grande (1913), Caetite (1913), Ilheos (1913); Belem do Pará (diocese 1719, archdiocese 1906), suffragans, São Louis do Maranhão, 1676, Amazonas or Manaus, Piauhy (1902); Cuyaba (diocese 1826, archdiocese 1910), suffragans, São Luis de Cáceres (1910), Corumbá (1910); Diamantina (diocese 1854, archdiocese 1917), suffragans, Arassuahy (1913), Montesclaros (1910); Fortaleza or Ceará (diocese 1854, archdiocese 1915), suffragans, Crato (1914), Sorbal (1915); Marianna (diocese 1745, archdiocese 1906), suffragans, Aterrado (1918), Goyaz (1826), Porto Nacional (1915), Pouso Alegre (1900), Uberaba (1907); Maceio (erected 1900 as diocese of Alagoas, name changed 1917, archdiocese 1920), suffragans, Aracaju (1909), Penedo (1916); Olinda and Recife (diocese 1676, archdiocese 1910), suffragans, Garanhuns (1918), Nazareth (1918), Pesqueira (erected 1910 as diocese of Floresta, name changed 1918); Parahyba (diocese 1892, archdiocese 1914), suffragans, Cajazeiras (1914), Natal (1909); Porto Alegre (Diocese of São Pedro do Rio Grande do Sul 1848, archdiocese under present name 1910), suffragans, Santa Catharina or Florianópolis (1918), Pelotas (1910), Santa Maria (1910), Uruguayana (1910); São Sebastião do Rio de Janeiro (diocese 1676, archdiocese 1892), suffragans, Espírito Santo (1895), Niteroy or Petropolis (1893); São Paulo (diocese 1745, archdiocese 1908), suffragans, Botucatu (1908), Campinas (1908), Curitiba do Paraná (1892), São Carlos do Pinhal (1908), Ribeirão Preto (1908), Taubaté (1908); three prefectures apostolic: Rio Negro (1910), Solimões. Superiore (1910), Teffé (1910); five prelatures nullius: Acre and Purus (1919), Bom Jesus de Piauhy (1920), Conceição or Santa Conceição do Araguaia (1911), Registro do Araguaia (1914), Santarem (1903). The Brazilian legation to the Holy See was elevated to the rank of an embassy in 1919. Brazil is an apostolic nunciature of the second class, the nuncio residing at Rio de Janeiro. For Catholic statistics see articles on subjects listed above.

EDUCATION.—Education is free, but not compulsory except in several municipalities in São Paulo, which insist on compulsory education (e. g. Ribeirão Preto). It is under the supervision of the Government, primary education being controlled by the States and municipalities. In order to make industrial education more general, the Federal Government under some circumstances, aids a state, municipal or private school which meets requirements, and also aids schools in agricultural colonies, 148 such schools being assisted in the State of Santa Catharina and 96 in the State of Paraná. The Federal government maintains a secondary school, the Collegio Pedro II, in Rio de Janeiro, which is the standard for state and private secondary institutions desiring government recognition. Higher education is given mainly in separate professional schools rather than in universities, but on 7 September, 1920, the Federal Government consolidated into a university the faculties of medicine and law and the polytechnic school hitherto maintained as separate institutions in Rio de Janeiro.

There are faculties of law at Recife, São Paulo, Ceará, Goyaz, Para, Bahia, Bello Horizonte, and Porto Alegre; faculties of medicine at Rio de Janeiro, São Paulo, Curitiba, Bahia, and Porto Alegre; colleges of pharmacy at Ouro Preto, Belem, Juiz de Fora, Porto Alegre, and São Paulo; schools of odontology at Bello Horizonte, Porto Alegre, and also attached to the colleges of medicine and pharmacy; engineering colleges at Ouro Preto, Bahia, Recife, Porto Alegre, and São Paulo, and since 1916, a school of Economics and Politics in Rio de Janeiro. According to the latest available statistics, there are in the various states 12,744 primary schools with 700,120 pupils and 20,590 teachers. Of the total number 85 were federal, 6,985 were state government schools, and 2,647 municipal schools. There were 327 secondary schools with 30,258 pupils and 151 professional schools with 19,294 pupils. The National Library in Rio contains more than 400,000 books and manuscripts.

ECONOMICS.—For 1920-21 the estimated coffee crop was 7,143,000 bags. About half of the world's supply of India rubber comes from Brazil, the principal rubber growing districts being Ceará, Manaus, and Pará. In 1917, the rubber crop was 41,500 tons, the cotton crop, 75,000 tons (119,500 tons in 1919). The yield of cocoa in 1918 was 60,000 tons; the average annual tobacco crop is 50,000,000 kilos; the yield of sugar, 300,000 tons (399,600 in 1919-20). Up to 1916 rice was largely imported but now is so extensively grown, that there were nearly 30,000 tons exported during 1919. There were in 1918, 202 cotton factories with 1,500,722 spindles and 73,186 workmen; and in 1919, 36 woolen factories and 1,400 looms. Altogether there are (1920) 11,335 factories in Brazil, with a capital of 665,676,000 milreis and 151,841 employees.

The forest area of Brazil has been estimated at 1,500,000 sq. miles, and in 1919 woods to the value of $3,500,000 were exported. Expressed in terms of United States currency, adopting the rate of $1.00 to 3,816 milreis, the trade of Brazil for two years was

	Imports	Exports	Total
1918	$247,351,151	$284,275,068	$531,626,219
1919	346,907,226	566,467,038	913,374,264

Statistics show that 41.39 per cent of the exports went to the United States; 21.28 per cent to France; 7.24 per cent to the United Kingdom. The import trade by percentages was: 48 per cent from the United States; 16.15 per cent from the United Kingdom; 3.97 per cent from Portugal.

The recurring famines of northeastern Brazil have called the attention of the government to the necessity of conserving and utilizing the water supply of the country by means of great dams and reservoirs in order to reclaim by irrigation the arid lands in that section of the country. Brazil possessed on 31 March, 1919, railways open for traffic of a total length of 18,708 miles; of these 9,445 miles were the property of the Union.

The consolidated foreign debt of Brazil on 31 December, 1919, amounted to £116,281,960 and 322,249,500 francs; and the total currency was 1,749,974,000 milreis. In July, 1912, a Bill was introduced into the Senate, making it necessary for the States to obtain Federal authorization before contracting any loans.

GOVERNMENT.—Brazil is a federal republic of 20 states, 1 federal district, and a national territory. The site for the Federal capital has been selected in the State of Goyaz, on a table-land between Pyrenopolis, Santa Luzia, and Formosa. In 1912 there were in Brazil 1,233 municipalities, 705 townships, 528 villages, and 3,629 districts.

A new Civil Code came into force on 1 January, 1917. Among the most important subjects covered by the code are those referring to legal capacity; the registration of births and marriages, and deaths; juristic persons and organizations; domicile; real and personal property; homestead (a new institution in Brazilian law); legal acts; domestic relations; copyright; mortgages, contracts, wills and the administration of estates. The decree of banishment against the ex-imperial family was repealed on 6 August, 1920.

The last five presidents of Brazil include Affonso Penna, elected in 1906; Hermes da Wonesca, 1910; Wenceslão Braz, 1914; Rodrigues Alves, 1918; Epitacio Sessoa, 1919.

RECENT HISTORY.—Brazil's foreign policy in recent years has been marked by a tendency towards free relations with her neighbors. A protocol signed with Peru arranged for the organization of a commission to survey the frontier, in accordance with the treaty of demarcation of 8 September, 1909. On 7 May, 1913, a convention between Brazil and Uruguay on the river San Miguel was signed between the two republics. Uruguay recognized the Brazilian navigation rights on the river, which had heretofore been exclusively Uruguayan. On 25 May, 1915, the A. B. C. treaty of peace between the three strongest powers of South America, Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, was signed in Buenos Aires. This provided for five years of peace among the three nations, during which time each was pledged not to make war against either of the others until the causes of conflict had been investigated and reported upon by an important commission. In 1917 during the World War the Brazilian government warned Germany that it would hold her responsible for any damage to Brazilian ships. In April the Paraná was sunk by a German submarine without warning or any subsequent assistance to the crew. In May the Brazilian vessel Tijuca was sunk off the coast of Brittany, and immediately the neutrality proclamation was revoked. The German vessels in Brazilian ports were seized. The Treaty of Peace between Germany and Brazil was ratified by the President of Brazil on 11 November, 1919, Congress having approved of the same.

Brébeuf, JEAN DE (cf. C. E., II-751b).—The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome, 9 August, 1916.

Breda, DIOCESE OF (BREDANA; cf. C. E., II-752b), suffragan of Utrecht, Holland. Rt. Rev. Petrus Hopmans was elected bishop of the see in 1914, upon the death of the former bishop Petrus Leitjen, d. 17 May, 1914. The diocese includes: 107 parishes, 113 churches, 7 monasteries for men and 7 for women, 7 abbeys for men and 7 for women, 26 convents for men and 87 for women, 270 secular priests and 180 regulars, 550 lay brothers, 2 seminaries with 210 students, 9 normal schools, 100 elementary schools, 7 secondary schools, 22 missionary organizations of various kinds, 28 asylums and orphanages. The schools are supported by the Government, and there are several Catholic periodicals published in the diocese.

Bremen (cf. C. E., II-756c), formerly a republic, composed of the state and free city of Bremen, now a free state of Germany, with a constitution adopted on 15 May, 1920. The area is 99 square miles; the population, according to the census of 1919 was 311,266. The largest cities are Bremen, 264,170 and Bremerhaven, 22,159. The census of 1910 gave 257,930 Protestants, 21,074 Catholics, 1,217 other Christians, 1,251 Jews, and 14,243 others. The highest power of the state is exercised by the House of Burgesses consisting of 120 members, elected on a democratic basis by all citizens of the state. The Burgerschaft elects the Senate of fourteen members as the executive body. Two Burgermeister chosen from the members of the Senate preside over the deliberations of that body. Bremen contains two Amtgerichte and a Landgericht, whence appeals lie to the Hanseatische Oberlandesgericht at Hamburg.

Brentwood, DIOCESE OF (BRENTWOODENSIS), in the province of Westminster, England, was erected 22 March, 1917, by a division of the Archdiocese of Westminster, and comprises the county of Essex. The first bishop appointed to this see was Rt. Rev. Bernard Nicholas Ward (q.v.), consecrated titular Bishop of Lydda and made administrator apostolic of the new diocese 10 April, 1917, being translated to this diocese 20 July following. Bishop Ward died 21 January, 1920, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Authur Doubleday, was appointed to succeed him, and consecrated 23 June, 1920. The Church of the Sacred Heart and St. Helen, erected 1836-61 and consecrated 15 June, 1869, was made the cathedral church of the diocese.

The following religious orders are established in the diocese; Men: Cistercians and Franciscans (Friars Minor); Women: Canonesses of the Holy Sepulchre, Carmelites of the Sacred Heart, Dames Bernardines, Dominicans, Franciscans, Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, Immaculate Conception Sisters, Poor Clares, Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ, Poor Sisters of Nazareth, Sainte-Union, Sisters of Charity, Irish Sisters of Charity, Sisters of Mercy, of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, and Ursuline Sisters. By the 1921 census the total population of the diocese is 1,468,341, and of these about 41,616 are Catholics. By 1921 statistics there are 69 secular and 28 regular priests, 3 convents of men and 32 of women, 41 churches, 40 parishes, 10 stations, 25 public elementary schools receiving Government grants and 2 without grants, 3 secondary schools for boys and 14 for girls. There are in all 6,428 children in elementary schools and 407 in other schools. There are 14 charitable institutions, consisting of hospitals, residential institutions for poor children, orphanages, homes, refugees and poor law, industrial and reformatory schools; 1,028 children are cared for in these institutions. A diocesan periodical, "The Warrior," is published as well as several parish magazines. During the World War 7 priests of the diocese served as chaplains, one of whom died in the service.

Brescia, DIOCESE OF (BRIXIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-760a), in Lombardy, Northern Italy, suffragan of Milan. Rt. Rev. Bishop Corna Pellegrini, who came to this see, 1 December, 1883, d. 21 May, 1913, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giacinto Gaggia, b. in this diocese, 1847, made prelate of the holy see 1907, appointed titular Bishop of Hadrumetum, 29 April, 1909, and auxiliary to the Bishop of Brescia, succeeding 28 October, 1913. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Bishop Bongiorno, titular of Sasima. According to the 1922 statistics the diocese comprises: 388 parishes, 900 churches, 22 monasteries for men, 181 monasteries for women, 897 secular priests, 195 regulars, and 2,153 Sisters. Among the educational institutions are a philosophical and a theological seminary, which together have 380 students, the college of Cesare Arici for boys, conducted by the Jesuit Fathers, several secondary schools for girls, a boarding house for boys and four for girls, who attend the public schools, the first conducted by priests, the latter by the Sisters. Besides these the various religious conduct schools for day pupils which are well attended. A mutual aid society, St. Carlo society, and a co-operative association are established among the clergy, and various circles of good works are formed among the men and women of almost every parish. Hospitals, homes, and orphanages, although under municipal administration, are conducted by the Sisters. A number of weekly, fortnightly, and monthly periodicals, are published in the diocese.

Breslau, PRINCE-BISHOPRIC OF (VRATISLAVIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-761a), is dependent directly on the Holy See. This immense diocese is divided into three parts each with distinct administration: (1) the province of Prussian Silesia (part of district of Oppeln has been ceded to Poland), with the exception of a few districts attached to dioceses of Prague and Olmutz in Czechoslovakia, counting (1918) over 2,566,000 Catholics; (2) the Principality of Teschen and the part of the Principality of Neisse, which was formerly Austrian Silesia. The district of Neisse lying in Austria was included in Czechoslovakia and Teschen was divided by Treaty of Versailles between Czechoslovakia and Poland. The Catholics number 362,000 (1918); (3) city of Berlin and the two provinces of Brandenburg and Pomerania, excepting two districts which are attached to the diocese of Posen (Poland), and contain 443,000 Catholics. This territory is administered by a delegate who is always the provost of St. Hedwig's in Berlin.

The seat of the diocese is the city of Breslau, on the River Oder in the Prussian Province of Silesia. The present bishop is Adolph Cardinal Bertram, b. at Hildesheim 14 March, 1859, student at Hildesheim, Würzburg, Innsbruck, and Rome, ordained at Hildesheim 31 July, 1881, elected Bishop of Hildesheim 26 April, 1906, transferred to Breslau 27 May, 1914, succeeding Cardinal Kopp deceased, named member of Prussian House of Lords in January, 1916, created cardinal in petto 4 December, 1916, and received the hat with title to St. Agnes-Outside-the-Walls, of which he took possession 21 December following. His predecessor, George Cardinal Kopp, Prince-Bishop of Breslau, who had struggled long to safeguard and preserve peace between Church and State, died 4 March, 1914. Mgr. Valentine Wolciuh, chancellor of Breslau, was elected titular Bishop of Danaba and auxiliary of the diocese 8 March, 1920.

Among the clergy recently deceased are the following of note: Auxiliary Bishop Charles Augustin, b. in Diocese of Breslau 1 November, 1847, elected titular Bishop of Diocesaræa and auxiliary of the diocese 10 March, 1910, and d. 26 September, 1916; Prelate Adolph Franz, eminent in letters and prominent in administration of the diocese; Prelate Hugo Laemmer, professor at the University of Breslau and author of many books; two laymen, Councillors Dittrich of Breslau and Horn of Neisse, who assisted most commendably in the temporal affairs of the diocese, died recently.

During the World War many of the clergy were in the army administering to the spiritual needs of the soldiers, while those left at home sent comforts and necessities to the fighting men and attended to the welfare of their families and the wounded in the hospitals. The laity gave themselves and their fortunes to the cause espoused. On 21 October, 1921, that part of Upper Silesia assigned to the Republic of Poland was placed under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Breslau.

Including the district governed by delegation, the diocese contains over 3,700,000 Catholics, mostly of German descent, with a small minority of Poles. There are actually employed in the diocese 1660 secular and 170 regular priests, assisted by a total of 339 lay brothers. There are 11 monasteries for men and 8 for women, 1 abbey for men, 20 convents for men and 687 for women, 3 universities, 6 colleges for men and 10 for women, and 19 normal schools. The prince-bishopric is divided into commissariates and archipresbyterates, in which there are 1052 cures of various kinds (parishes, curacies, and stations). Besides the theological faculty of the University of Breslau, the diocese possesses as episcopal institutions for the training of the clergy 5 preparatory seminaries for boys, 1 home (recently much enlarged), for theological students attending the University of Breslau, and 2 seminaries with 50 seminarians.

The statistics of the houses of religious orders in the diocese are: Benedictines, 2 houses; Dominicans, 1; Franciscans, 10; Jesuits, 4; Piarists, 1; Brothers of Mercy, 10; Order of St. Camillus of Lellis, 2; Redemptorists, 3; Society of the Divine Word, 2; Alexian Brothers, 1; Poor Brothers of St. Francis, 2; Sisters of St. Elizabeth, 6; Magdalen Sisters, 1; Ursulines, 7; Sisters of the Good Shepherd, 5; Sisters of St. Charles Borromeo, from the mother-house at Trebnitz, 226, from the mother-house at Trier, 5; Servants of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, 3; Sisters of the Poor Handmaids of Christ, 3; Sister Servants of Mary, 85; German Dominican Sisters of St. Catherine of Sienna, 16; Grey Sisters of St. Elizabeth, 223; Sisters of St. Hedwig, 25; Sisters of Mary, 69; Poor School Sisters of Notre Dame, 23; Vincentian Sisters, 7; Sisters of the Holy Cross, 1; Sisters of St. Joseph, 2. In the above mentioned monastic houses for men there are 509 religious, in those for women 7547 religious. The government partly supports the Catholic schools. There are 2 associations for the clergy and a great many for the laity. Among the periodicals published are 4 Catholic weeklies of note. Since this article went into type word has been received of the erection of a see at Berlin and the appointment of a bishop in the person of Rev. Dr. Kaas.

Bressanone (or Brixen), DIOCESE OF (BRIXINENSIS; cf. C. E., II-793d), formerly a Prince-Bishopric of Austria, embracing the greater part of Northern Tyrol and Vorarlberg, suffragan of Salzburg but now the diocese is directly dependent on the Holy See. Part of the diocese, including the episcopal see, was ceded by Austria to Italy as a result of the treaty of St.-Germain. By a decree of 27 April, 1915, the parochial church of Montichiari was erected into an abbatial church, with a mitred abbot as pastor. Rt. Rev. Francis Egger, appointed to this see 6 November, 1912, filled it until his death, 17 May, 1918. After a vacancy of three years he was succeeded by Rt. Rev. John Raffl b. at Roppen, Austria, 1858, ordained 1883, made an honorary chamberlain 6 April, 1910, appointed 28 April, 1921, consecrated 19 June following. He is assisted by an auxiliary at present (1922), Rt. Rev. Sigismund Waitz, titular Bishop of Cibra and administrator of Vorarlberg. The population of this diocese is almost entirely Catholic, the 1920 statistics counting only 150 Protestants against 470,876 Catholics. These latter are divided among 28 deaneries, 398 parishes, 72 filial parishes, 287 vicariates, and 71 secondary parishes, cared for by 926 secular and 657 regular clergy.

Bridgetinnes (cf. C. E., II-785d).—This order, founded by St. Bridget of Sweden at Vadstena in 1346, spread to Denmark, Norway, Finland, Russia, Poland, North and South Germany, the Netherlands, England, France, and Italy. France had five foundations: Lille, Douai, Arras, Valenciennes, and Armentières. In Italy the first house, Porta Paradisi or Gate of Paradise, dates from 1394; the second at Genoa from 1426; on the death of the donor, in 1428, the house in which St. Bridget lived in Rome passed to the order and became its hospice. In Bavaria the foundation at Altomünster still remains; this monastery was plundered and partially destroyed twice during the Thirty Years War (1632 and 1646), its members fled before foreign troops in 1703, and when suppressed in 1803, no purchaser being found for their cloister, the nuns were permitted to remain but not to profess new subjects; after many years the few survivors had the satisfaction of seeing the restitution of their house, when on 8 October, 1844, the order was reinstated. The monastery of Reval in Russia was burnt by schismatics in 1575. Vadstena, as a fabric, notwithstanding the covetousness of Gustavus Vasa, remained untouched for seventy years. The nuns after suffering much persecution were favored and sustained by his Catholic son, John XIII (1568-92), but his younger son coming to the throne as Charles IX, a determined Protestant, the nuns were expelled. The last abbess and her eleven daughters, in December, 1595, landed at Danzig, and found an asylum in Poland.

In Poland most of the double monasteries survived until the middle of the nineteenth century, when with other religious houses they were suppressed by the Russian Government. The last of the Polish nuns died in her monastery at Grodno in 1908. In England the celebrated Bridgettine monastery of Syon Abbey (q.v.) is the only pre-Reformation house to come down to the present day in unbroken continuity. Venerable Marina de Escobar, foundress of the Bridgettines of the Recollection at Valladolid, had applied for admission to the Carmelite Order, but St. Teresa told her that she knew by revelation that her place was not there, that God would use her to bring the Bridgettine Order into Spain. There are twelve Bridgettine monasteries now in existence: Syon Abbey at Chudleigh in Devonshire, Altomünster in Bavaria, Uden and Weert in Holland, the Monastero S. Birgitta, founded at Rome in 1911, five Spanish houses of the Bridgettines of the Recollection (Valladolid, Vittoria, Lasarte, Parades de Nava, and Ascoytia) and two in Mexico.

Brindisi, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BRUDUSINENSIS; cf. C. E., II-787d), in the province of Lecce, Italy, with the perpetual administration of the diocese of Ostuni. Archbishop Morando, appointed to this see 5 January, 1906, died 20 August, 1909, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Tommaso Valeri, O. F. M., b. at Santa Fiora, 1865, appointed 22 April, 1910, consecrated 5 June following. In July, 1919, Archbishop Valeri was made a grand officer of the Order of Saints Maurice and Lazarus in recognition of his patriotic work during the World War. By the 1920 statistics this territory counts 110,907 Catholics, 19 parishes, 170 secular and 15 regular clergy, 25 seminarians, 22 Brothers, 81 Sisters, and 89 churches or chapels.

Brisbane, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BRISBANENSIS; cf. C. E., II-789b), comprises about 200,000 sq. miles in the Colony of Queensland, Australia. The second bishop, and first archbishop of this see, Most Rev. Robert Dunne, who was appointed to the diocese in 1882, died 13 January, 1917. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. James Duhig, consecrated Bishop of Rockhampton 10 December, 1905, appointed titular Archbishop of Annida and coadjutor to the Archbishop of Brisbane 26 February, 1912, succeeded to the see of Brisbane 13 January, 1917.

The religious orders engaged in educational and charitable work in this diocese are: Jesuit Fathers, Redemptorist Fathers, Christian Brothers, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of Perpetual Adoration, Good Samaritan Sisters, Sisters of St. Joseph, Religious of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, Ursuline Sisters, Sisters of Charity, and Sisters of Nazareth. Primary and secondary schools conducted by the Sisters are inspected annually by officers of the state education department. St. Vincent's Orphanage, conducted by the Sisters of Mercy, receives ten pence a day from the government for the support of each child sent to the institution.

The total population of this territory is approximately 300,000 (1922), and of these 70,000 are Catholics. The diocese comprises 52 parochial districts, 140 churches, 81 secular and 6 regular clergy, 46 religious brothers, 510 nuns, 7 male and 95 female lay teachers employed in Catholic schools, 3 boarding schools for boys and 20 for girls, 15 high schools, 52 primary schools, 14,031 children attending Catholic schools, 1 technical school, 1 orphanage, 1 asylum, 1 hostel for girls, and 2 hospitals.

British Columbia (cf. C. E., II-791b).—The area of the province is 355,855 sq. miles, of which 353,416 are land and 2,439 water. The population in 1911 was 392,480; an estimate in 1920 gives it as 650,000. The largest cities with their respective populations are: Victoria, 38,775; N. Vancouver, 10,584; S. Vancouver Municipality, 32,182; Nanaimo, 7,800; New Westminster, 14,400; Vancouver City, 116,700; Point Grey Municipality, 13,654; Comox-Atlin, 7,100. The figures for the total population of the province include 25,694 Indians. In 1911 there were 19,568 Chinese.

EDUCATION.—Education in British Columbia is in charge of a Minister of Education, Deputy Minister, Superintendent and a Council of Public Instruction composed of the Minister and the other members of the Executive Council. All education is free and compulsory for six months in the year between the ages of seven and fourteen. There is no religious instruction, though the highest morality is inculcated. For educational purposes the province is divided into municipal and rural school districts, and the schools are of three classes, viz., municipality schools, rural schools, and assisted schools. For secondary education there are the superior schools and high schools. Higher education is obtained in the University of British Columbia, opened in 1915 at Vancouver with an endowment of two million acres of Crownlands. In 1920 the provincial legislature authorized the establishment of colleges in affiliation with the university. At present there are 1,530 students and 64 members of the faculty. In 1919 there were 65,928 children enrolled in the elementary grades, 5,806 in the secondary grades, 2,332 teachers in the publicly controlled schools, of whom 197 taught in the 45 high schools. In the same year the expenditure was as follows: provincial government, $1,791,154; cities, municipalities, rural and assisted schools, $2,437,566; total, $4,228,720. In 1919 the Children's Protection Act freed the children in an institution from obligation to attend a religious service of different faith.

RELIGION.—The growth of the Church in British Columbia while slow has been continuous. Recently, however, hostile influences threatened to impede its progress. The provincial law exempts from general taxation "every building set apart and in actual use for the service of God," but in 1911 the province adopted the single tax law on land alone. The town authorities decided that the sites of churches were no more exempt than other sites. Subsequently several Catholic churches in Victoria were sold for non-payment of taxes. The combined pressure of all the religious bodies of British Columbia, with the exception of the Baptists, was not sufficient to make the Government take action. In 1919 the sale of the cathedral of Victoria was threatened, and the bishop obtained a court injunction restraining the city of Victoria from further action. The latter won the case in the lower court but lost it in the higher court. An appeal to the Supreme Tribunal of Land resulted in a decision of the Privy Council sustaining that of the higher court.

For Catholic statistics see VANCOUVER, ARCHDIOCESE OF; VICTORIA, DIOCESE OF; YUKON, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—The total value of the mineral production of the province in 1920 was $38,044,915. In 1919 gold brought $3,457,406; copper, $7,915,324; lead, $1,526,855; silver, $4,126,556.

In 1919 the province produced lumber worth $70,285,094; fish to the value of $15,216,397; agricultural produce valued at $65,384,556. The area of timberland is over 100,000,000 acres, containing, roughly speaking, 400,000 million feet of merchantable timber. The coal supply is estimated at 75 billion tons, of which 23,000 millions are in the seams known and measured. In 1919 Vancouver Island and parts of the mainland yielded coal to the value of $11,337,705. The statistics for 1918 give 1786 industrial establishments, capital, $244,697,000; employees, 48,779; wages and salaries, $51,051,000; value of products, $207,678,000. The trade of the Province in 1919 showed imports valued at $63,694,697, and exports at $77,247,666. The railway mileage of the province in 1917 was 3,885. Steps are being taken to establish direct shipping communications with the Canadian Atlantic ports, via the Panama Canal. The balance sheets of the province showed that on 31 March, 1919, the liabilities totaled $52,288,067, assets $59,642,124.

GOVERNMENT.—The provincial government is administered by a Lieutenant Governor, appointed and paid ($9,000 per annum) by Ottawa, and a Legislative Assembly of forty-seven members, on the system of executive administration known as "responsible government." The Assembly is elected for four years, every adult, male or female, having resided six months in the province, duly registered, being entitled to vote. In 1918 the vote was granted to women. In 1920 it was decided that the consent of the court must be obtained to the adoption of an unmarried minor. On 20 October, 1920, a temperance plebiscite gave the voters the choice of prohibition or of government control of liquor traffic; the latter won.

Brixen, DIOCESE OF. See BRESSANONE.

Brno (German, BRUNN), DIOCESE OF (BRUNSI; cf. C. E., III-11d), suffragan of Olmutz, in Moravia, which was formerly in Austria, but is now part of Czechoslovakia. This see was filled by Rt. Rev. Paul de Huyn from 14 May, 1904, until his promotion to the Archdiocese of Prague, 4 October, 1916. He was succeeded by the present (1922) incumbent, Rt. Rev. Norbert John Nepomucene Klein, b. in Moravia 1866, appointed 7 December, 1916, consecrated 28 January following. In 1919 the population of this diocese comprised 1,086,025 Catholics, 31,007 Protestants, 21,410 Jews, and 511 of other denominations. The diocese counted 40 deaneries, 441 parishes, 809 secular, and 141 regular clergy, and 502 religious.

Brooklyn, DIOCESE OF (BROOKLYNIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-798b).—Bishop McDonnell celebrated the silver jubilee of his appointment to the see in April, 1917, when the accomplishments of his administration were visible in every section of the diocese. More than a hundred new churches and chapels had been added to the list, with 61 new parish schools. Brooklyn College was opened by the Jesuit Fathers, 15 September, 1908; St. Joseph's College for Women by the Sisters of St. Joseph, 2 October, 1916; and the Cathedral College, for the preparatory seminary in the fall of 1914. The permanent building was erected in the following year mainly through a munificent gift from Mr. George Duval. A summer villa for the seminarians was located at Water Mills and the system of keeping them together during their entire course was successfully inaugurated. A diocesan organ, the "Tablet," was begun 4 April, 1908, and communities of the Passionist Fathers and the Brothers of Mary and the Brothers of the Sacred Heart were admitted to the diocese. As auxiliary bishop, the Rt. Rev. George W. Mundelein was consecrated titular Bishop of Loryma, 12 September, 1909, and ministered as such until his promotion to the archbishopric of Chicago, 9 December, 1915. A second auxiliary, the Rt. Rev. Thomas Edmund Molloy, was consecrated titular of Loria on 3 October, 1920. Bishop McDonnell died on 8 August, 1921, and Bishop Molloy was immediately named administrator of the diocese and transferred in succession as the third bishop of the see, 21 November, 1921. He was born at Nashua, New Hampshire, 4 September, 1885. His collegiate course was made at St. Anselm's College, Nashua, and St. Francis', Brooklyn, after which he was sent to the American College, Rome, where he was ordained in 1908. Returning to Brooklyn, he served as an assistant in St. John's Chapel parish, as secretary to Bishop Mundelein, and as director of the preparatory seminary and St. Joseph's College for Women before he was appointed auxiliary bishop. In the first few months of his administration he established six new parishes, admitted to the diocese a foundation of the Religious of Our Lady of the Cenacle and blessed (27 April, 1922), the Church of St. Peter Claver for the first Brooklyn congregation of colored Catholics.

When the first Catholic parish in Brooklyn was organized on 7 January, 1882, it was found there were then only 70 persons who could be relied on to give it material support. The immense diocese that followed from this beginning began its second century with the following statistical evidences of the splendid progress made in the intervening hundred years: bishop 1; diocesan priests 465; priests of religious orders 122, total 587; churches with resident priests 238; missions with churches 23, total 261; seminary for diocesan clergy 1, students 86; preparatory seminary 1, students 324; colleges for boys 3, students 2250; academies for boys 5, pupils 217; academies for young ladies 11, pupils 1424; commercial high school 1, pupils 380; high school 1, pupils 190; parishes with parochial schools 120, pupils 72,398; orphan asylums 10, orphans 3718; infant asylum 1, infants cared for 700; industrial schools for girls 2, girls 356; House of Good Shepherd 1, inmates 340; total young people under Catholic care 78,082; hospitals

10; homes for aged poor 4, inmates 740; Catholic population 821,337.

During the World War Brooklyn served as an important naval base, and within the diocesan limits two important camps were located, Camp Upton at Yaphank, and Camp Mills at Garden City, Long Island. The latter was used as the aviation center for this section of the country, and the army supply station was also located within this territory. These various activities afforded added opportunities for the zeal of the bishop and clergy, who took an active part in all patriotic endeavors.

Brownsville, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See CORPUS CHRISTI, DIOCESE OF.

Bruges, DIOCESE OF (BRUGENSIS; cf. C. E., III-5b), suffragan of Malines, contains the province of West Flanders in Belgium. The territory of the diocese was occupied by the Germans from 1914-1918, and the section near the French border was the scene of severe and continued fighting.

The episcopal seat is the city of Bruges, and the present bishop is Rt. Rev. Gustave-Joseph Wafelaert, born at Rollegem in the Diocese of Bruges 27 August, 1847, priest in June, 1870, elected 28 June, 1895, consecrated at Bruges 25 July following. On 10 August, 1920, Bishop Wafelaert celebrated the golden jubilee of his priesthood and his silver jubilee as bishop in the presence of Cardinal Mercier, four Belgian bishops, three mitred abbots, two ministers of State, and civil and military authorities. After the ceremony in the cathedral of St. Saviour the cardinal placed the pallium, a reward of the Supreme Pontiff's, on the venerable bishop. On this occasion he was also named an officer of the Order of Leopold by the King of the Belgians.

The diocese of Bruges, like the rest of Belgium, was overrun by German soldiers and officials, but a small portion of the diocese remained unviolated by the enemy, the only spot in Belgium not taken by the German armies. This line from Nieuport to Dixmude to Ypres to the French border was never passed, and throughout the war was the scene of terrific fighting, the three towns mentioned, with their churches, colleges, and convents, were destroyed, but the little Belgian army, later reinforced by British and French troops, remained on the Yser and fought on Flanders fields until the armistice.

The diocese is divided into 15 deaneries, 36 parishes and 293 sub-parishes, 301 of which are partially supported by the State. Of the 845,732 inhabitants 764,879 are Catholics. The diocesan seminary at Bruges has more than a hundred students advanced from the preparatory seminary at Roulers. For the purpose of general education there is an episcopal college at Bruges, and seven other colleges at large centers of the dioceses. The colleges at Ypres, Dixmunde, and Nieuport, which were directly on the fighting lines where the German advance was halted, have been discontinued. For technical education there is the Institute Saint-Léon at Bruges, and four other normal schools throughout the diocese. Many religious orders, both male and female, have houses in the diocese, besides hospitals and asylums for the aged and poor.

Brün, DIOCESE OF. See BRNÔ.

Brunswick (BRAUNSCHWEIG; cf. C. E., III-19a), formerly a duchy in the mountainous central part of Northern Germany, now a republic. Territorially the state is not a unit, but is parcelled into three large and six smaller sections. Both in extent of territory and in population it ranked tenth among the confederated states of the German Empire. The census of 1910 enumerated 494,339 inhabitants, of whom 464,175 were Lutherans, 25,828 were Catholics, and 1,757 were Jews. The area is 1,418 sq. miles, and according to the census of 8 October, 1919, the population was 480,599 (338 inhabitants to the sq. mile). The government of Brunswick was a constitutional monarchy hereditary in the male line of the House of Brunswick-Lüneburg. On 8 November, 1918, the Duke of Brunswick was deposed and the duchy proclaimed a republic. The government was taken over by the Council of People's Commissioners. The present Constitution bears the date 27 February, 1919, and the present Diet, elected 17 May, 1920, consists of 60 men, elected for four years. The Cabinet consists of 6 members. See GERMANY.

Brussels (cf. C. E., III-21b).—During the World War the city of Brussels was under German dominion. On 19 August, 1914, the burgomaster posted a warning to the effect that the German army was at the walls of the city. The Government found it necessary to remove its offices to Antwerp, and the Civic Guard of the city disbanded. On 20 August the German army arrived. For three days the soldiers passed in thousands to the scene of battle; a small force remained in the city, installed itself in the barracks and in the superb Palace of Justice, whose halls were turned into barrack rooms and guard houses. The city was asked for £8,000,000 as its "war contribution"; the inhabitants were forced to give up their firearms, and all Belgian newspapers were suppressed. During this period the Germans had definite plans to make Brussels the center of Flanders, one of the two subdivisions of Belgium. The German occupation of the city ceased in October, 1918, when the great allied advance was in progress. In 1920 was held the International Financial Conference, to which nearly all the nations sent a representative to discuss the world's monetary problems and German indemnities.

RELIGIOUS LIFE.—In 1921 there were 49 parishes in the city and suburbs, and in the city proper 71 priests. The religious houses of women numbered about 95.

Budejovice (Bohemian, BUDWEIS; cf. C. E., III-34d), DIOCESE OF (BOHEMO-BUDVIENSIS).—By the provisions of the papal Bull of 20 September, 1785, the civil districts of Budweis, Tabor, Prachen and Klattau were separated from the Archdiocese of Prague and erected into the new Diocese of Budweis (Czech, Budejovice).

Upon the death of the former bishop, Joseph A. Hulka (16 December, 1907-10 February, 1920), the affairs of the diocese were administered by Joseph Brenner in the capacity of vicar capitular. He was relieved by Simon Barta, formerly professor of Christian Doctrine in the Bohemian gymnasium at Budweis, who, on 16 December, 1920, was officially appointed the new bishop of the diocese. In 1913 a fourth diocesan synod was held.

According to the organization of 1857 the diocese is divided into the vicariate general of Budejovice, on which depend the archdeaconry of Krumau; the provostship of Neuhaus; 5 deaneries: Budejovice, Domazlice, Klatory, Pisek, and Tabor; and 8 archipresbyterates: Budejovice, Klattau, Krummau, Neuhaus, Taus, and Winterberg, with 4 vicariates each, making a total of 34 vicariates. The total population of the diocese (1920) is 1,135,147, of which 1,119,262 are Catholics, consisting of 800,000 Bohemians and 300,000 Germans. The balance of the population is as follows: 1,790 members of the Augsburg Evangelical Church; 2,590 members of the Helvetic Evangelical Church; 10,009 Jews; and 830 of no religious persuasion. The largest parish is Budejovice. The total parishes number 431 with 630 churches, 10 monasteries for men, 1 abbey, 2 convents for men, 1 college for boys with 84 students, 13 public asylums with Catholic sisters in attendance, 9 orphan asylums, and 1 home for the deaf, which is in a small way aided by the support of the Government. Public schools are established in which the Catholic religion is taught.

The clergy number 816 secular and 130 regular priests, assisted by a total of 30 lay brothers. The regular priests are divided as follows: 57 Cistercians from Hohenfûrth with 3 professed clerics, 10 Brothers of the Most Holy Sacrament of the Altar with 9 lay brothers, 15 Premonstratensians, 8 Knights of Malta, 2 Minorites, 5 Reformed Franciscans with 3 lay brothers, 3 Calced and 4 Discalced Augustinians with 3 lay brothers, 7 Servites with 3 lay brothers, 4 Capuchins with 3 lay brothers, and 2 Piarists. The cathedral chapter consists of a provost, a dean, a custos, and 14 capitulary canons to which are added 5 honorary canons; the consistory has 12 members. The seminary at Budejovice has 6 professors and 18 students, with 1 in the Bohemian College at Rome.

In the diocese there are 9 orders of women with 560 sisters and a total of 56 houses, including 50 convents and 4 monasteries. The orders are divided as follows: 285 Poor School Sisters of Notre Dame, 149 Sisters of St. Charles Borromeo, 79 Sisters of the Most Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, 8 Sisters of the Holy Cross, 6 Servites, 8 Carmelites, 23 Franciscans, 2 Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul.

The following clergy of note are recently deceased: Mgr. Anthony Skocdopole, d. 16 January, 1919, at the age of ninety years, the author of a catechism and of various scientific works, and editor of the popular weeklies "Anezka," "Ludmila," and "Vaclar"; Mgr. John Sweda, dean emeritus of Prachen, d. 7 January, 1921, the editor of books of hymns and canticles.

Various associations exist for both clergy and laity. There are two Catholic publications, one semi-weekly and one weekly. During the World War the Catholics, both clergy and laity, assisted in every way to relieve the suffering among the soldiers and civilians.

Budweis, DIOCESE OF. SEC BUDEJOVICE.

Buenos Aires, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BONAERENSIS; cf. C. E., III-37a), or SANTISIMA TRINIDAD, in the Argentine Republic, South America. This sec is now (1922) filled by Most Rev. Mariano Antonio Espinosa, b. in Buenos Aires 1844, ordained 1868, appointed titular Bishop of Tiberiopolis 1893, transferred to La Plata 1898, and promoted 24 August, 1900. Archbishop Espinosa was made an assistant at the pontifical throne 15 January, 1907. In recent years several of the churches of the archdiocese have been erected into minor basilicas: the Church of the Rosary, 23 August, 1909; that of St. Joseph, 15 January, 1912; that of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 November, 1916; the Church of Our Lady of Mercy, where are preserved the trophies and colors of Argentina before it became independent, and the Church of St. Ursula, 8 January, 1919. In 1910 a Catholic university was founded here by the bishops of Argentina, and on 23 December, 1915, the seminary was authorized to confer degrees in philosophy and theology. The archdiocese has jurisdiction over the ancient prefecture of Southern Patagonia, detached from the Chilean territory at the time of the erection of the vicariate apostolic of Magallanes, 4 October, 1916, and divided into four vicariates foraine. In 1916, on 9 July, the centenary of the independence of the republic was celebrated with impressive ceremonies. A National Eucharistic Congress was held which closed on the twenty-third of the month, with the distribution of Holy Communion to 5,000 men and a parade of 200,000.

The 1920 statistics count 1,679,763 Catholics for this territory, 27 parishes in the federal capital, 11 mission centers in other districts, and 127 churches or chapels.

Buffalo, DIOCESE OF (BUFFALENSIS; cf. C. E., III-37c), in New York, has grown rapidly in recent years during the incumbency of Bishop Colton and his successors, Bishops Dougherty and Turner. Bishop Colton's administration (1903-1915) was distinguished by the building of the beautiful marble cathedral designed by Aristides Leonori of Rome. The corner-stone was laid 9 June, 1912, by Cardinal Farley, and was completed before Bishop Colton's death, 9 May, 1915, his funeral being the first public service held in the new cathedral. The famous carillon of bells purchased in France by Bishop Timon were transferred from the old cathedral to the new building.

His Eminence Dennis Cardinal Dougherty, then Bishop of Jaro, P. I., was transferred to Buffalo to succeed Bishop Colton, 6 December, 1915, and filled the see until his transfer to the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, 1 May, 1918. He was succeeded by the sixth and present bishop, Rt. Rev. William Turner, born at Kilmallock, Diocese of Limerick, 8 April, 1871, made his studies at the American College at Rome, ordained 13 August, 1893, having received his degree of Doctor of Theology shortly before that, completed his studies in the Catholic Institute of Paris, and in 1894 was made professor of philosophy at the Seminary of St. Paul, and in 1906 came in the same capacity to the Catholic University in Washington. He was appointed Bishop of Buffalo 10 March, 1919, and consecrated 30 March at the Franciscan Monastery, Mount St. Sepulchre, Brookland, Washington, by His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons.

During the World War the bishop and priests of the diocese were leaders in all patriotic endeavors; thirteen of the secular priests served as chaplains with the American army and one with the Polish army, and the Franciscans, Vincentians, and Passionists were also represented in the service. The percentage of Catholic youth was very high and student army training camps were organized in the three colleges, thus enrolling more than a thousand student soldiers. The army posts at Fort Porter, Buffalo, and Fort Niagara were attended by priests of the diocese.

During recent years a number of prominent clergy of this diocese have died: Rt. Rev. F. Butler, O.F.M., President of St. Bonaventure's college and seminary, d. 25 July, 1911; Rt. Rev. Michael Connery, M.R., vicar general and administrator, d. 7 August, 1912; Rt. Rev. James A. Lanigan, M.R., vicar general and administrator, d. 20 August, 1912; Rev. John Pitass, pioneer Polish priest in Buffalo, d. 11 December, 1913; Rev. Christopher O'Byrne, pastor of St. Nicholas Church, d. 5 October, 1919; Rev. Daniel Walsh, pastor of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, d. 21 February, 1920. By present (1921) statistics the Catholic population of the diocese comprises about 100,000 Poles, 60,000 Irish, 50,000 Germans, 40,000 Italians, 3,000 Hungarians, 1,500 Syrians, and a few hundreds of other nationalities.

There are 345 secular priests and 127 regulars, 15 brothers, 205 churches with resident pastors, 33 missions with churches, and 4 stations. Among the educational institutions are: 1 university with an attendance of 380, 3 colleges for men with an attendance of 1,331, 1 college for women, 4 high schools with an attendance of 1,335, 12 academies with an attendance of 2,520, and 1 training school with an attendance of 174. There are 7 homes for women and working girls, 5 orphan asylums, 2 foundling asylums, 1 school for deaf mutes, 2 refuges for girls, 3 homes for the aged, 2 settlement houses, 2 day nurseries, and 7 hospitals with accommodations for about 1,000 patients.

The Clerical Mutual Benefit Society and the Eucharistic League are established for the clergy, and among the laity are the Holy Name Society, Knights of Columbus, Knights of St. John, National Council of men and women, Federation of Catholic Women, and various parish societies.

The "Catholic Union and Times" is the official organ of the diocese and is published every Thursday.

Buildings, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., III-41a).—THE CHURCH FABRIC (cf. C. E., III-44; V-744).—Except in case of privilege or legitimate custom, the bishop and cathedral chapter, the collegiate chapter, and the rector are the administrators of the temporal property destined for the repairs and decorations and service expenses of the cathedral, collegiate church, and other churches respectively. In some places certain other persons, lay or clerical, are co-opted to assist in the administration; in such a case they with the administrator or his delegate as president constitute the church fabric council. The members of the council, unless otherwise legally appointed, are named by the bishop or his delegate, and they may be removed by him for grave cause. As the council is intended solely for the administration of the temporal property, it must in no way meddle in what belongs to the spiritual office, for instance: the time and manner of ringing the bells, keeping order in the church or cemetery, the manner of making collections, announcements, the arrangement of the altar, the location of the organ, seats, offering boxes, the acceptance or refusal of sacred furniture, or the compilation or custody of books or documents belonging to the parochial archives.

DEFILEMENT AND RECONCILIATION.—The sanctity of a church is violated (C. E., III-43c) only by the following acts, which must be certain, notorious, and must have been performed in the church: (a) the crime of homicide; (b) the wilful and culpable spilling of a considerable quantity of blood; (c) the use of the church for impious or sordid purposes; (d) burial of an infidel or of a person excommunicated by a declaratory or condemnatory sentence. A contiguous cemetery is not affected by the defilement of a church and vice versa (can. 1172). If the defilement takes place before the Canon of Mass which is being said, or after the Communion, the Mass is to be stopped; otherwise the celebrant is to continue to the end of the Communion. A church which has been blessed may be reconciled by its rector or by any priest with his consent, at least presumed; but if it has been consecrated it is the duty of the ordinary or, in case of exempt religious, of a higher superior, to secure the reconciliation; the rector may reconcile it only in grave and urgent necessity, when it is impossible to reach the ordinary, who in this case must be notified later. In reconciling a blessed church ordinary holy water may be used; but in case of a consecrated church the water must be blessed for the purpose according to the liturgical laws; this blessing may be imparted, contrary to the former practice, not only by bishops but by the priest who is reconciling the church.

If a church can no longer be used for Divine service and cannot be restored, it may be put to profane but not sordid use by the local ordinary, who must thereupon transfer its revenue and parochial title, if it be a parish church, to another church.

Bukarest (Rumanian, BUCUREȘTI), ARCHDIOCESE OF (BUCAREȘTIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-45b).—The present archbishop is Raymund Netzhammer, O. S. B., born at Erzingen, Baden, 19 January, 1862; professed in the Benedictine monastery at Einsiedeln in 1881, ordained 1886, honorary Canon of Bukarest, superior of the seminary and rector of the Greeian College at Rome, elected archbishop 16 September, 1905, consecrated at Rome in the monastery of St. Anslem 5 November, 1905, enthroned 17 December, 1905, Grand official of the Order of the Rumanian Crown 1 January, 1912.

The suffering resulting from the World War was extreme. The Catholic schools were destroyed, among them those of the Hungarians, which still remain in ruins, many inhabitants were compelled to seek refuge elsewhere; priests were sent into exile, and five who were forced to flee have not yet effected a safe return. Among the recently deceased of note is Fr. Joseph D'Ester, director of the English Ladies, and for thirty years a zealous laborer in the archdiocese (b. 1847; d. 1921). The Italian Catholics erected their own national chapel in the center of Bukarest in 1914, and dedicated it to the Infant Saviour.

The Catholic population of the archdiocese is about 70,000, with the greater percentage Austrian and the rest either Hungarian, Italian, Polish, French or German. The archdiocesan year-book for 1914 gives the cathedral chapter as composed of 2 canonries with existing vacancies, and 5 resident and 3 non-resident honorary canons. The secular priests number 33, and regular priests 3—Passionist, Benedictine, Lazarist. There are 24 parishes with 23 parish churches and 13 affiliated churches; an archiepiscopal seminary at Bukarest; a college gymnasium for boys with 19 professors and 300 students; 2 archiepiscopal schools for boys at Bukarest with a total of 18 Christian Brothers as teachers, 19 lay teachers, and 1,123 students, of whom about 500 are Catholics; 1 archiepiscopal school for boys at Craiova with 226 students and 8 teachers, of whom 2 are priests and 4 are Christian Brothers; boarding school for boys attached to the archiepiscopal school with 100 pupils; 2 elementary schools in Bukarest with 455 pupils; and 10 elementary schools elsewhere with 846 pupils. The English Ladies, numbering 254, have 2 convents in Bukarest, and 1 each in Brăila, Craiova, and Turn-Severin, with a boarding school for girls attached to each foundation, totaling 1,366 pupils; they also conduct an orphanage with 20 children. The Dames de Sion have 1 foundation in Bukarest with 47 sisters, and boarding school attached with 318 pupils. The Sisters of Mercy have 1 foundation in Bukarest with 6 sisters, who have in charge an attached hospital. Among the clergy there is an organization for the care of infirm or aged priests, and also a society of perpetual adoration. The Marian Congregation for the young and adult of both sexes, an organization of Christian Mothers, and the Third Order of St. Francis are established among the laity. A daily Catholic publication called "Albina" is issued. The Government does not contribute to the support of the Catholic institutions.

Bulgaria (cf. C. E., III-46a).—The frequent changes in the boundaries of Bulgaria make it difficult to determine the general population with any degree of accuracy. By the terms of the treaty of Neuilly the present boundaries of Bulgaria again approach those of 1910, when the official Bulgarian census gave the population as 4,337,513. The estimated area (1920) is 42,000 square miles, and the estimated population 5,000,000. The census of 1910 gave the following figures: Bulgarians, 3,203,810; Turks, 488,010; Rumanians, 75,773; Greeks, 63,487; Gipsies, 98,004; other races, 61,690. Of the new population, added in 1913 after the treaty of Bukarest, 227,598 were Bulgarians, 75,337 Pomaks (Bulgarian Mohammedans), 275,498 Turks, and 58,709 Greeks, total 637,142; but as about 273,000 in the Dobrudja passed to Rumania, the total gain is about 364,000. According to the Peace Treaty of Neuilly, signed on 27 November, 1919, Bulgaria cedes Thrace to Greece, and the Strumitza line and a strip of territory on the northwest frontier to Servia. Bulgaria is deprived of her Egean littoral, but an efficient economic outlet to the sea is provided for her in the treaty.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The total area of Bulgaria is approximately 22,239,000 acres, 6,894,090 acres or 31 per cent of which are cultivated and 4,892,580 acres or 22 per cent uncultivated, the remainder being forest land. The chief products are fruit (109,945 acres), wheat (2,080,000 acres), maize (1,376,900 acres). The new Land Law of Bulgaria allows to each person only what he can work with his hands, or about 30 hectares, thus keeping Bulgaria the nation of small proprietors that it has been. The Labor Law of 20 September, 1920, forces every man and woman between the ages of twenty and fifty to work a certain length of time for the State; thus the time formerly given to military service, which is now forbidden by the Treaty of Peace, will be turned to useful labor. Every Bulgarian youth of twenty years of age must give the state 12 months of labor; every girl of sixteen years of age 6 months of labor. The income tax of Bulgaria is particularly unfortunate, with its drastic impost on large incomes and practical exemption of the great agrarian element from the operation of the law. It deprives the State of a much needed income from the peasants and by its unequal tax on profitable large-scale business it is driving foreign capital from the country.

Coal production in 1919 was 18,141 tons, valued at 43,450 l. There are 388 state-encouraged industrial institutions.

EDUCATION.—Elementary education is obligatory and free for all children between the ages of seven and fourteen. The following are the statistics of various classes of state schools in Bulgaria for 1918-19:

Schools	Num-ber	Instructors		Attendance
		Male	Female	Male	Female
Elementary	3,592	4,172	5,896	271,205	203,037
Gymnasia ...	354	765	1,623	50,950	23,571
Incomplete
Gymnasia	37	233	337	11,835	8,698
Complete	46	820	407	19,431	12,460
Normal Schools.	437	1,828	2,367	82,216	44,729
Professional	78	551	156	7,551	4,231

There are besides three superior training colleges with 19 instructors and an attendance of 98 males and 93 females. There are also 1,199 private schools with 1,671 male and 276 female instructors and 35,948 male and 28,702 females. Private schools are supported by religious communities, societies, and by missionaries.

RELIGION.—According to the census of 1910 the population numbered 4,035,575, divided according to religion into 3,643,951 Greek Orthodox, 32,130 Catholics of the Latin Rite and Uniat Greeks, 12,270 Gregorian Armenians, 40,070 Jews, 602,101 Moslems, and 6,252 Protestants. Of the new population added by the Treaty of Bukarest, 286,307 were Orthodox (227,598 Bulgarians and 58,709 Greeks), and 350,595 Moslems (75,337 Pomaks and 275,498 Turks). In the part of the Dobrudja ceded to Rumania by the same treaty there were about 90,000 Moslems and 100,000 Orthodox.

The Bulgarian exarch at Constantinople was transferred to Sofia after the Second Balkan War in 1913. The last exarch, Monsignor Joseph, died at Sofia in 1915 and has not had a successor. It is possible that another may not be appointed. The Greek Orthodox Church of Bulgaria is divided into twenty-two dioceses. For Catholic statistics see NICOPOLIS, DIOCESE OF; SOFIA AND PHILIPPOLIS, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF.

RECENT HISTORY.—On 5 October, 1908, Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Kohary was proclaimed the Tsar of the Bulgarians. With her political ambitions thus aroused, Bulgaria desired to win back the territories acquired by the Peace of San Stefano. This, together with the continued Turkish misrule in Macedonia, the political aggrandizement of Austria, and the territorial ambitions of the Slavs, led to the union of Servia, Greece, Bulgaria, and Montenegro in the Balkan League against Turkey. In 1912 they demanded autonomy for Macedonia under European governors, the consequence of which demand was war. In the hostilities with the Turks Montenegro was victorious, but was long baffled by the resistance of Scutari, which eventually fell to her on 23 April, 1913; the Servians captured Prishtina, Kumanovo, Skoplye, Priserend, and Monastir, Alessio and Durazzo; Greece overran Thessaly and Epirus, and took Salonica, Chio, and other islands; Bulgaria beat the Turks at Kirk Kilisseh and Luleh Burgas. Adrianople fell to the Bulgars in 1913. By the treaty of London, Turkey ceded Crete to Greece and gave up all territory west of a line drawn from Enos to Midia. Of this Bulgaria demanded the chief share in virtue of a secret treaty with Servia in 1912. Servia, deprived by the allies of Albania, demanded a new apportionment, which Bulgaria refused. A second Balkan War ensued, Servia, Montenegro, Greece, Turkey, and Rumania against Bulgaria. A simultaneous invasion of Bulgaria ensued. Adrianople was re-occupied by the Turks. Closed in from every side the king of Bulgaria sued for peace. By the treaty of Bukarest (1913) Bulgaria surrendered her claims to western Macedonia and ceded Dobrudja to Rumania, but retained a strip of Macedonia and western Thrace, Turkey holding Adrianople. The Turco-Bulgarian treaty of Constantinople (1913) delimited the new frontier in Thrace. The rest of the territory conquered from Turkey was divided between Greece and Servia.

By these two Balkan wars Turkey lost four-fifths of her European territory; Rumania, Bulgaria, Servia, Albania, and Greece emerged with greater territory, but with a hatred for one another of indescribable bitterness. Bulgaria was reconciled with Turkey and Austria, and when the Great European War came she was naturally on their side. In September, 1914, she signed a secret convention with Austria-Hungary providing for a joint attack upon Serbia and for the territorial rewards to Bulgaria. In October, 1914, she declared war upon Serbia. The next day Great Britain declared war against her, and France, Russia, and Italy followed suit. Serbia was overwhelmed by the Bulgarian armies. In January, 1916, they crossed into Albania from Southern Serbia and occupied El Bassan. In the spring of 1918, while the Austro-German troops were making their supreme effort in the west, the allies took advantage of the thin Bulgarian line in Macedonia, and, reinforced by the Greeks, began on 14 September their great offensive against Bulgaria. They had taken Prilip, Babuna Pass, Ishtib, and Strumitza, when Bulgaria suddenly sued for peace. On 4 October, 1918, King Ferdinand abdicated in favor of his son. By the treaty signed at Neuilly near Paris, 27 November, 1919, Bulgaria lost most of the territories which she had appropriated in the Balkan Wars and all her conquests in the Great War. Dobrudja went to Rumania; the greater part of Macedonia to Serbia; and the Thracian coast to the allies. On 22 September, 1920, Bulgaria's great national poet and novelist, Ivan Vazoff, died at the age of seventy-one. Two of his books, the novels "Pod Igoto" (Under the Yoke) and "Virgin Soil" have been translated into English.

Burgos, ARCHDIOCESE OF (BURGENSIS; cf. C. E., III-65d), in Spain. It is at present (1922) under the administration of His Eminence Cardinal Benlloch y Vivo, who succeeded Archbishop Cadena, d. 6 June, 1918. Born in Valencia 1864, ordained 1888, he was appointed titular Bishop of Greater Hermopolis 16 December, 1901, transferred to Urgel 6 December, 1906, and promoted to Burgos 7 January, 1919. On 30 April following the Pope entrusted the new archbishop with the task of founding a seminary for foreign missions, an enterprise which was first started by Father Gerard Villota. On 7 March, 1921, the archbishop was created a cardinal-priest, receiving the hat in Rome 16 June following. By 1920 statistics this territory has a Catholic population of 324,685, divided among 1295 parishes, supervised by 47 archpriests and 1125 priests. There are in the diocese 1295 churches, 800 chapels, 66 convents with 425 religious, and 175 Sisters.

In July, 1921, the old city of Burgos celebrated the seven hundredth anniversary of the foundation of its famous cathedral, the finest example of Spanish ogival art. Its cornerstone was laid 20 July, 1221, by King St. Ferdinand, who also founded the Cathedral of Toledo. To the many treasures preserved here, a relic of its founder, who is buried in the cathedral of Seville, and the remains of the Cid, Spain's great hero, were added on the occasion of the celebration, which lasted for fifteen days. The transfer of the relic of San Fernando was a great religious and patriotic event; infantry and cavalry troops garrisoned in the city took part in the procession, and the cardinal pontificated, accompanied by the Apostolic Nuncio, many Spanish bishops, the Archbishop of Valencia and numerous prelates. The Minister of Public Instruction and the Civil and Military Governors took part in the name of the Government, and the populace entered into the festivities with enthusiasm. In the afternoon the royal family arrived from Santander to attend the pontifical Mass, celebrated the following morning by Mgr. Tedeschini, the papal nuncio, who also read the papal Brief granting the title and privileges of a basilica to the cathedral. The king himself, surrounded by his royal escort, led the procession attending the transfer of the remains of the Cid, and it may really be said that all Spain, irrespective of class or creed, took part in the celebrations, even the newspapers least favorably inclined toward the Church publishing special editions.

Burial, CHRISTIAN (cf. C. E., III-71).—Ecclesiastical burial consists in bringing a corpse to the church, and after the funeral service has been held there, interring the body in a place blessed and lawfully appointed as a resting-place for the dead. Nobody may be buried in churches, even basement or lower churches, except popes, royal personages or cardinals, or residential bishops, or abbots or prelates nullius, who may be interred in their own churches. The Catholic Church has a right to have its own cemeteries. If this right is violated and the majority of those who are being interred in a cemetery are Catholics, local ordinaries should see that the public cemeteries are blessed, or at least that a part is reserved for Catholics and blessed. Where this cannot be done each grave must be blessed as often as there is a burial. The canonical regulations concerning the interdiction, violation, and reconciliation of churches apply also to cemeteries.

Every parish should have its own cemetery unless the ordinary allows one in common for two or more parishes. He may allow moral personalities and private families to have their own places of interment away from the general cemetery. The faithful may erect private burial-places of vaults for themselves and their families in parochial cemeteries, with the written consent of the ordinary or his delegate, or in the private cemetery of an association, with the written leave of its superior. These private burial-places may be alienated with the consent of the ordinary or superior. The graves of priests and clerics should, if possible, be separate from those of the laity and should be located in a more respectable place; furthermore, if it can be conveniently done, the graves of priests should be apart from those of the inferior clergy. The cemetery, should be enclosed and carefully guarded, and the proper authorities should see that no epitaphs, inscriptions, or decorations unworthy of our religion are allowed therein. If possible there should be, in addition to the cemetery that has been blessed, an enclosed protected place for the interment of those who have not been allowed Christian burial. No burial is to be permitted, especially in case of sudden death, until after a lapse of time sufficient to remove all doubt as to the reality of the party's death, and no remains that have received definitive Christian burial may be exhumed without the ordinary's consent, which must never be granted if the body cannot undoubtedly be distinguished from the other corpses.

When a Catholic dies his remains should always be brought to church for the prescribed funeral services, unless there is a serious reason for omitting them; any practice contrary to this is expressly reprobated. The services are to be held in the parish church of the deceased; if he belonged to several parishes they are to be held in whichever of the parishes he died in. If the person died outside of his parish, his remains should be brought to his own parish church, if it is within walking distance and if this can be done conveniently; otherwise the services should be held in the church of the parish where he died. It devolves upon the ordinary to judge if it would be really inconvenient, and if the parishes belong to different dioceses it is the ordinary of the place where the death occurred who decides. The family, the heirs, or other interested parties may always bring the body to the church or burial-place, even when it is inconvenient, provided they pay the expenses. If a cardinal dies in Rome the funeral services are to be held in a church selected by the pope; if he dies outside of Rome, they should be held in one of the more important churches of the place where he died, unless he gave other directions. The remains of a deceased residential bishop, even if he is a cardinal, or of an abbot or prelate nullius, should be brought to his cathedral, abbatial or prelatical church, if this can be arranged conveniently; otherwise they are to be taken to one of the chief churches in the place where the death occurred, unless the deceased chose another church. The body of a residential beneficiary is to be brought to the church in which he held his benefice, unless he selected another. The remains of professed religious and novices are to be brought to the church or oratory of their house, or at least to one belonging to their order, but a novice has the right of selecting another church; the right of removing the body rests with the religious superior. If the death occurs in a place from which it would not be convenient to transport the body to the residence or a house of the order, the corpse should be buried from the parish church of the place where the religious died; though again, a novice may choose another church, and a superior may bring the body home provided he bears the expense. What is here said of novices also applies to servants who were living permanently in a religious house at the time of their death. If a person dies in a religious house or college where he has been residing as guest or for purposes of health or education, or in an hospital, the service should be held in his parish church; seminarians, however, are not under the parish priest's jurisdiction.

Any person is free to select his funeral church or cemetery, if the canons do not expressly deprive him of this right; a wife or child who has reached the age of puberty may make this choice even contrary to a husband's or a father's desire; but professed religious who are not bishops and children below the age of puberty have not this power of selection. In order, however, for the selection to be made validly, one must choose the parish church, or a church of a regular order (now, however, the church of nuns professed with solemn vows, unless in the case of females residing within the clausura as servants or for purposes of education or health or as boarders), or in case of a patron, the church of which he enjoys the patronage, or any other church authorized to hold funeral services. Religious and secular clergy are expressly forbidden to induce anyone to swear or to promise to select their church for his funeral services or their cemeteries for his burial-place, or to bind himself not to change his selection if he has already made a choice; if this injunction is violated the selection is void. If anyone desires to be buried in a cemetery other than that of his parish, his wish should be carried out if the administrator of the cemetery in question raises no objection; should one desire to be buried in the cemetery of a religious order, this may be done if the religious superior consents. A deceased person who has a family burial-ground should be buried in it if possible, if he has not selected any place; a widow in a similar case is to be buried with her husband, or if she has had more than one, with the last; if there are several family burial-places, the decedent's family or heirs are to decide in which of them the interment is to take place.

The parish priest of the deceased not merely has the right, but is bound, except in case of great necessity, to bring the corpse to the parish church and perform the funeral services there, in case the deceased belonged to the parish in which he died. If he did not die in his parish and his remains can be transported conveniently, his parish priest should, after notifying the priest of the place of the death, bring the body to his own church for the funeral services. If the funeral church belongs to regulars or is not under the parish priest's jurisdiction the latter should bring the body thither, preceded by the cross of the church where the ceremony is to be held; but the rector of the funeral church is to officiate. If, however, the church is not exempt from his jurisdiction the right of officiating belongs to the parish priest of the district where the church is situated, provided the deceased was one of his flock. If a nun or novice dies in a convent her remains are to be carried by the sisters as far as the enclosure; then if the nuns are not under the jurisdiction of the parish priest, the chaplain accompanies the body to the convent chapel or oratory, where he officiates; if the nuns are under the jurisdiction of the parish priest, the latter holds the services as usual. If a nun dies outside her convent the ordinary regulations are followed. When the corpse is sent to a place which is not in the parish of the deceased, and no funeral church has been selected, the funeral service, if any, are to be held in the cathedral of that place, or, if there is no cathedral there, in the church of the parish where the cemetery is situated, unless local custom or the diocesan statutes provide otherwise.

The priest who performs the funeral services not only may but must, except in case of grave necessity, either personally or by a delegate priest, accompany the remains to the place of burial. The priest accompanying the body to the church or burial-ground may freely pass through another parish or diocese with his stole and upraised cross without the permission of the parish priest or the ordinary. If the remains are to be buried in a cemetery to which they cannot be carried conveniently, the parish priest or rector of the funeral church has no right to accompany them beyond the limits of the city or district. A parish priest may not, except for a reason approved by the ordinary, exclude secular clergy, or religious, or members of a pious sodality invited by the family or heirs from attending a funeral service and burial; but the clergy of the church of the family or heirs of the deceased should be invited in preference to any others. Notoriously anti-Catholic societies or their insignia must never be tolerated at Catholic funerals. It is to be remembered, moreover, that clerics are forbidden to carry the coffin of a layman.

After the burial the minister should enter in the register of the dead the name and age of the deceased, the names of his parents or spouse, the date of his death, the sacraments administered, the name of the minister, and the place and date of burial.

Burial Fees.—Local ordinaries should draw up for their territories a schedule of funeral taxes or alms if none already exist; this is to be done after consulting the cathedral chapter, and, if it seems good, the diocesan vicars forane and the parish priests of the episcopal city, and allowing for lawful local customs and the varying conditions of persons and places. The taxation should, however, be moderate so as to prevent disputes and remove occasions of scandal. It is strictly forbidden for anyone to demand for funeral services, burials, or anniversary services more than the amount fixed in the diocesan schedule. The poor must have their funeral services and a decent burial according to the liturgy and diocesan statutes entirely gratis. It is the general law that when the services are not held in the parish church of the deceased, his parish priest should receive a parochial stipend, except when the corpse cannot conveniently be brought to that church. If, when the decedent has several parish churches to which his body might easily be brought, the funeral services are held elsewhere, the stipend is to be divided among all his parish priests. The parochial stipend is to be taken only from the money allowed by the diocesan schedule of funeral and burial taxes. The payment of the parochial stipend becomes due if, for any reason the first solemn funeral service not having been held at once, takes place within a month from the day of burial, even if on the same day there were other minor public services. The amount of the parochial stipend is to be fixed by the diocesan schedule; if the parish church and the funeral church are in different dioceses the amount fixed for the diocese of the funeral church is the lawful toll.

Only those persons who have been baptized may receive Christian burial, but catechumens who without any fault on their part die without the sacrament are to be considered as if they had been baptized. The following classes are excluded from ecclesiastical burial unless before dying they have given some sign of repentance: (a) notorious apostates from Christianity, or open members of a heretical or schismatic sect, or of the Freemasons or any similar society; (b) those who have been excommunicated or interdicted by a condemnatory or declaratory sentence; (c) those who knowingly and deliberately committed suicide; (d) those who have been killed in a duel or who die from a wound inflicted in a duel; (e) those who have ordered their bodies to be cremated; (f) other public and notorious sinners. If it is suspected that a deceased person come under any of these classes, the ordinary should be consulted if time permits; should the doubt still remain the person is to receive ecclesiastical burial, steps being taken to avoid scandal. No funeral Mass, not even an anniversary, or other public funeral services may be celebrated for a person who has been excluded from ecclesiastical burial. If the corpse of an excommunicate vitandus has, contrary to the canons, been buried in sacred ground, it should be exhumed with the ordinary's leave and buried in the unblest section of the cemetery if this can be done without grave inconvenience.

Burke, THOMAS A. See ALBANY, DIOCESE OF.

Burlington, DIOCESE OF (BURLINGTONIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-81b), comprising the whole State of Vermont, U. S., has made very marked progress in recent years, the Catholic population having grown from 75,953 in 1908 to about 90,000 at the present time (1921).

The second bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. John Stephen Michaud, after a long illness died 22 December, 1908, and was succeeded by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Joseph John Rice, D.D. He was born in Leicester, Mass., 6 December, 1871, studied in Leicester Academy, Holy Cross College and the Seminary of Montreal, ordained 29 September, 1894, continued his studies in the College of Propaganda, Gregorian University and University of St. Thomas Aquinas in Rome, returned to America and later became professor of Philosophy at St. John's Seminary, Brighton, Mass., being consecrated Bishop of Burlington 14 April, 1910.

During the World War Bishop Rice was an ardent supporter of all war work and under his direction Vermont went far beyond its quota in the Knights of Columbus War Camp Fund, and the first Knights of Columbus soldiers' building in the United States was erected in this diocese. The Revs. Thomas E. McMahon, Arthur J. Le Veer, and George L'Ecuier served overseas as chaplains with the American Army.

The religious communities now represented in the diocese are: the Fathers of St. Edmund, Brothers of St. Gabriel, Sisters of Charity of Providence, of the Holy Ghost, of the Seven Dolors, of the Congregation of Notre Dame, of the Presentation, of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, of the Assumption, Hospital Sisters of St. Joseph, and the Daughters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. By present statistics there are 69 parishes, 27 missions, 96 churches, 94 secular and 12 regular clergy, 30 mission stations, 454 women in religious communities, 21 ecclesiastical students, 3 academies for boys and 6 for girls, 21 parish schools with 8,459 pupils, 2 orphanage schools with 300 pupils, 2 colleges for boys with an attendance of 160, 250 orphans in the diocesan asylum, 2 hospitals and 2 homes for the aged; there are in all 8,900 children under Catholic care. The Priests' Eucharistic League is established among the clergy, and 10 different societies among the laity.

Burma (cf. C. E., III-82b).—In 1919 Burma was excluded from the Government of India Act, for the reasons that her people were in a different stage of political development and that the desire for elective institutions had not yet risen. A promise, however, was given in the Montagu-Chelmsford report (see INDIA) that Burma should have an opportunity of participating in the reforms as far as they were applicable to her circumstances. It was felt that Burma could not be contented to remain in a condition of tutelage while other provinces were obtaining a larger measure of independence. Accordingly the demands of Burma for a separate legislature and a cabinet responsible thereto were discussed in 1921. Except in imperial matters such as army, navy, foreign relations, etc., the entire separation of the country from the Indian Empire was insisted upon, as the Burmese have always been averse to having Indians placed in authority over them. Burma is divided into the following ecclesiastical divisions:

BURMA, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (BIRMANIA ORIENTALIS; cf. C. E., III-82d), is entrusted to the Seminary of Foreign Missions of Milan. Rt. Rev. Rocco Tornatore, who arrived in this mission in 1868, was appointed titular Bishop of Castabala and Vicar Apostolic of Eastern Burma 1890, and died on the Karen Hills, 26 January, 1908. He was the first Apostle of the Karens, Commendatore of the Crown of Italy, and of the Knights of Saints Mauritius and Lazarus. Rt. Rev. Emmanuel Segrada, b. at Lodi, 1860, was appointed his successor, and consecrated titular Bishop of Irina, 24 January, 1909.

Two hundred and forty-five villages on the Karen Hills, having a total population of 19,672, are comprised in this vicariate. The entire population numbers several millions, and of these only 20,192 are Catholic. The 1921 statistics credit it with 251 churches or chapels, 14 mission stations, and 241 sub-stations. The work of the mission is carried on by 18 foreign missionaries, and the Sisters of the Reparation of Nazareth and the Sisters of Charity assist them in educational and charitable works. The various institutions include an Anglo-vernacular school for boys with 190 pupils, a vernacular school for Karen boys who are being trained as catechists, St. Joseph's High School for girls under the Sisters of Reparation of Nazareth, with 200 pupils, a boys' school with 60 pupils, 2 convent schools for girls, 1 with 51 and 1 with 40 pupils, and several other small schools. The parish priests conduct orphanages for boys in their respective parishes, and 3 orphanages for girls are established at Leiktho, Monlaw and Doranko.

BURMA, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (BIRMANIÆ SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., III-82d), in India. The entire population numbers at least 5,000,000 souls, of whom 10,348 are Catholic, divided as follows: 4,000 Burmese, 3,500 Europeans and Eurasians, 175 Kachins, 147 Shans, 2,500 Tamils. There are 64 churches and chapels, 22 European priests of the Foreign Missions of Paris, who have charge of the vicariate, 5 Burmese priests, 49 European nuns, 13 native religious, 17 native lay novices, 5 European lay brothers and 1 native lay brother. A course in philosophy and theology is given at the college in Penang, which is attended by 12 students, and there is a preparatory seminary for boys (15 students). There are also 2 high schools for boys (9 teachers, 90 students), a secondary school for girls (34 students), 12 elementary schools for boys (1,005 students), 8 elementary schools for girls (855 students), 20 co-educational schools (374 boys, 290 girls), 2 girls' normal schools for the training of elementary teachers (21 students). Twenty-two of these schools receive grants-in-aid or half salary for teachers, all the others are under the care of the missionaries and are village schools in the jungle. The following institutions exist in the vicariate: 2 orphanages with 533 orphans, 2 homes for the aged (42 inmates), 9 pharmacies and 10 dispensaries that cared for 5,831 sick (during 1920-21), 1 leper hospital (283 inmates; 3 workshops (97 pupils). During the year 1920-21, 183 infidels and 412 children of Christians were baptized. A conference of St. Vincent de Paul has been organized by the laity. At the outbreak of the war one missionary was sent to the front and was made chaplain in the hospital at Nantes. The others, with one exception, formed part of the reserve army of the Government. The latter was in active service throughout the war and received the croix de guerre. The present vicar of Northern Burma is Rt. Rev. Eugène Foulquier of the Missions Etrangères de Paris, b. at Luc, 26 November, 1866, ordained 7 July, 1889. He went to Burma 21 August, 1906, was consecrated at Mandalay 21 November, made vicar apostolic of Northern Burma 6 December following.

BURMA, SOUTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (BIRMANIÆ MERIDIONALIS; cf. C. E., III-83a), is entrusted to the Seminary of Foreign Missions of Paris, and comprises all that territory of Burma which was subject to the English before the taking of Upper Burma, except the province of Aracan, attached to the Diocese of Dacca, and part of the Toungoo district. The vicariate is presided over by Rt. Rev. Alexandre Cardot, titular Bishop of Limyra, who succeeded to the vicariate, 19 March, 1894.

In 1921 the population of this territory was estimated at 6,500,000, and of this number 60,392 are Catholics. The clergy number 40 European and 21 native priests, and the vicariate has 259 churches and chapels and 30 head mission stations. Schools and institutions are conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Sisters of St. Joseph of the Apparition, Franciscan Nuns, Missionaries of Mary, Little Sisters of the Poor and Native Nuns of St. Francis Xavier. The vicariate supports 20 schools for boys, 19 for girls and 87 for both boys and girls, thus giving Catholic instruction to 5,551 boys and 3,021 girls. Orphanages numbering 35 and sheltering 694 boys and 821 girls are established throughout the vicariate, as well as St. Vincent's Orphanage for Burmese girls at Rangoon under the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, a leper asylum cared for by the Franciscan nuns, Missionaries of Mary, home for the aged under the Little Sisters of the Poor, and a small home for aged women with 6 inmates. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul has four conferences organized, and a preparatory seminary is established at Moulmein. A Catholic association, "The Band," is organized among the laity, and two periodicals the "Voice," in English, and the "Sower" in Burmese, are published. On 22 April, 1920, Rt. Rev. Félix-Henri Perroy was appointed titular Bishop of Media and named coadjutor to the vicar 4 May following. Burma is placed under the jurisdiction of the Apostolic Delegate for India, His Excellency Dr. Pisani, who paid his first visit to the territory in January, 1922.

Burnand, SIR FRANCIS COWLEY, editor and humorist, b. in England, 29 November, 1836, d. at Ramsgate, 21 April, 1917. His father, a stockbroker, was of Huguenot descent; his mother whom he lost in infancy was a descendant of Hannah Cowley, playwright. From Eton he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, where he made a name for himself by founding the first dramatic club at the universities. After his graduation he prepared for the Anglican ministry under Canon Liddon at Cuddesdon, but his studies served only to aggravate certain doubts that had arisen in his mind, and after reading Newman's "Doctrine of Development" and consulting Manning, then superior of the Oblates at Bayswater, he was received into the Church in 1857. Disowned by his father he went to live with the Oblates at Bayswater where his love of a joke, verbal or practical, made his stay an eventful one in the life of the community. Convinced that he had no vocation for the priesthood, he left and tried his fortune as an actor, proved a failure and turned to the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1860. He then began to write for the stage, and the success of his "Dido" enabled him to marry and brought him so many commissions that he gave up his profession. He wrote about 120 farces, burlesques librettos of opera and adaptations from the French, amongst them "Black-Eyed Susan," "Betsy," "Cox and Box," "Paul Olaudian," "La Cigale," and "The Colonel." In 1862 he began his literary burlesque papers in "Punch," "Mokeanna or the White Witness," which won for him a place on the editorial staff. In 1880 he became editor, retiring only in 1906. He possessed the popularity of all Punch's editors, and there were few more successful contributions than those which emanated from his own pen. His "Happy Thought" series issued separately in 1868, went through fifteen editions.

Burnand's humor was based on a subtle sense of the incongruities of human nature and social life and was always kindly. A fervent Catholic, his piety was part and parcel of his whole life and in his later days he was a daily communicant. Two autobiographical works are "My Time and What I Have Done with It," and "Records and Reminiscences" (1904). Knighted in 1902, Sir Frances was for many years editor of the English "Catholic Who's Who," an enterprise to which he gave the value of his name when it was a new and daring venture, and which owes largely to him his success as a record of Catholic activities. He was twice married and had six sons and five daughters.

Cabrières, FRANÇOIS-MARIE-ANATOLE DE ROVERIÉ de, Cardinal, Bishop of Montpellier, b. at Beaucaire, Gard, France, on 30 August, 1830; d. at Montpellier on 23 December, 1921. He was a pupil of the noted Perè d'Alzon in the College of the Assumption at Nîmes; he entered the seminary of Saint-Sulpice in October, 1849, and was ordained at Nîmes on 24 September, 1853. In turn director of the College of the Assumption, private secretary of Mgr. Plantier, canon and vicar general, he was appointed by Pius IX Bishop of Montpellier on 16 January, 1874, and was consecrated by Mgr. Plantier on 19 March following. He was appointed an assistant at the pontifical throne by Leo XIII, who sent him the pallium on 15 July, 1890, an honor very seldom conferred on simple bishops. In 1911 he was made a cardinal priest, and at the time of his death he was senior by years and service in the ranks of the entire episcopacy and by age in the Sacred College, where he was attached to the Congregation of Religious and of Ceremonies. Cardinal de Cabrières, the last seion of a noble family was a scholar, a brilliant writer, a statesman, a royalist by tradition and inclination, and a great churchman. He played a prominent part in the religious life of France during his forty-seven years episcopacy. Where religious principles were at stake he knew no compromise. As early as 1877 he denounced the de-Christianizing tactics of the politicians of the Third Republic. He eloquently and emphatically proclaimed to Gambetta that the clergy had a right to defend themselves in the political arena when they were assailed. He protested vigorously in 1880 against the school laws of Jules Ferry, upholding the right of Christian schools to complete freedom from State autocracy. When Leo XIII informed French Catholics of their duty to accept the Republic, he gave his adhesion at once, but proclaimed aloud that this did not imply acceptance of the anti-Catholic policy of the Government, a declaration which led the Government to deprive him of the pension which by the Concordat they were pledged to allow him; and when the seetaries were exerting all their efforts in 1901 to drive the congregations into exile, he pronounced a magnificent eulogy of the religious life. Yet when the World War threatened the existence of France the union sacrée had no more fervent adherent, a devotion recognized by President Millerand, who when he visited Montpellier in 1921 conferred the Cross of the Legion of Honor on the aged Royalist cardinal who had come to pay him homage.

Cabrini, MOTHER FRANCES XAVIER, foundress of the Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, b. at Sant' Angelo near Lodi, Italy, on 16 July, 1850, of parents belonging to the Lombard nobility; d. at Chicago on 22 December, 1917. From early childhood she gave evidence of great energy, a spirit of piety and religious zeal which characterized her later life. Impressed by the lack of facilities for the education of the Italian poor, she organized a small community for the instruction of poor children and the training of teachers. With four Sisters she opened her first house at Codogno in 1880. Soon there was a demand for similar houses from many places and Leo XIII invited her to Rome to open a pontifical school, and then in view of the increasing tide of Italian emigration to North and South America he counseled her to go to their aid. Within a few months she was in New York where she took charge of a school in St. Joachim's parish for the children of Italian immigrants. Recognizing the necessity of aiding her countrymen in other ways, she ventured on opening a hospital in 1892, Columbus Hospital, New York, which from a lowly beginning is now a large hospital of high standing. The number of adult Italians who were brought back to the practice of religion by contact with the Sisters, inspired her to add the hospital work to that of teaching. In 1905 a Columbus Hospital was founded in Chicago and soon the Sisters were to be found throughout the country. Nothing could cool the ardor or daunt the spirit of Mother Cabrini, her principle was not to discuss the feasibility or manner of assisting the immigrant, the sick, or the ignorant, but to begin the assistance forthwith, trusting to Providence; and the manner in which apparently insurmountable difficulties disappeared before her was evidence of Divine assistance in her work. When this zealous apostle of the immigrant passed away, she had established over seventy houses of her institute, with over three thousand of her religious to carry on her work. Mother Cabrini crossed the Atlantic twenty-five times, and personally made foundations in Peru, Chili, Argentina, Brazil, and Nicaragua. While the greatest developments of her sisterhood has been in the United States, her daughters are at work in France, England, and Spain also. When Italy entered the war, she placed all her houses and her communities there at the service of the Italian Government, and three large military hospitals were confided to them.

Cádiz, DIOCESE OF (GADITANA ET SEPTENSIS; cf. C. E., III-131c), with the united diocese of Cueta, is suffragan of Seville, Spain. This see was filled by Rt. Rev. José Maria Rances y Villanueva, from 1898 until 14 June, 1917, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent. Rt. Rev. Martial Lopez Criado, b. in Cordone 1868, ordained 1891, prelate of the Holy See 1903, appointed 18 May, 1918.

These two dioceses cover an area of 4073 sq. miles, and by 1920 statistics comprise a Catholic population of 268,190, the remainder of the population being made up of about 300 Jews and Moors. Cadiz contains 25 parishes, 190 priests, 58 chapters with 107 religious, and 343 Sisters. Cueta, situated at a point northeast of Africa, comprises 2 parishes, 21 priests and 5 chapters.

Cæsarea, DIOCESE OF (CÆSARIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-133c), a residential see of the Armenian Rite, in Cappadocia, Asiatic Turkey. Rt. Rev. Matthew Sislian, appointed to this see 1901, was retired and transferred to the titular see of Ammedara 3 December, 1909. After a vacancy of about a year and a half, the present incumbent (1922), Rt. Rev. Anthony Bahabaman, b. in Angora 1867, ordained 1892, was appointed 27 August, 1911. This diocese comprises 1500 Armenian Catholics, 50,000 Schismatics, 600 Protestants, and a number of Mussulmans. The Catholics are served by missionary priests who have 4 churches.

For the Latin Rite this is a titular metropolitan see, at present vacant.

Cæsarea Philippi, DIOCESE OF (CÆSARIENSIS PANÆASENSIS; cf. C. E., III-135a), a residential see of the Greek Melchite Rite, in Phœnicia, Asiatic Turkey. The residence of the bishop is at Gedaidat-Margyum, and the see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Clement Maalouf, b. in Zahlé 1862, appointed 24 November, 1901. This diocese comprises 6190 Greek-Melchites, 17,000 Schismatics, 160,000 infidels, 8 secular and 13 regular clergy, and 16 churches or chapels.

For the Latin Rite this is a titular see, suffragan of Tyre, the title being at present filled by Rt. Rev. Antonio Micozzi, appointed 22 July, 1921, and coadjutor in Sabina. He resides in Rome.

Cætitte, DIOCESE OF (CÆTITENSIS), in the State of Bahia, Brazil, South America. This diocese was erected 20 October, 1913, by a division of the Archdiocese of Bahia, from which it took nineteen parishes: Cætitte, Monte Alto, Gentio, Ampara de Umbaranas, Duas Barras, Jacaracq, Conderiba, Caculé, Bom Jésus dos Meiras, Ituaçu, Sincora, Minas do Rio de Contas, Villa Velha de Minas de Rio de Contas, Bom Jesus de Rio de Contas, S. Joa do Paraguassu, Lencoes, Remedios do Rio de Contas, Paramirim, Macahubas, Niacho do S. Anna, Sta Maria do Ouro and Cannabrava. The cathedral is dedicated to St. Anne. Statistics have not yet been published for this diocese.

Cagli e Pergola, DIOCESE OF (CALLIENSIS ET PERGULENSIS; cf. C. E., III-140a), in the province of Urbino-Pesaro, Central Italy, suffragan of Urbino. On 5 September, 1908, Rt. Rev. Ettore Fronzi was appointed to this see, and filled it until his promotion to the Archdiocese of Camerino, 14 December, 1918. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Augusto Curi, archdeacon of the Cathedral of Fermo, appointed 23 December, 1918, and named apostolic administrator of Macerato 26 August, 1919. By latest statistics (1920) Cagli has a Catholic population of 19,500, 40 parishes, 60 secular and 3 regular clergy, 17 seminarians, 2 Brothers, 70 Sisters 104 churches or chapels. Pergola comprises a Catholic population of 14,000, 12 parishes, 35 secular and 4 regular clergy, 7 seminarians, 5 Brothers, 12 Sisters, and 50 churches or chapels.

Cagliari, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CALARITANA; cf. C. E., III-139c), on the Island of Sardinia. Most Rev. Pietro Balestra, appointed to this see 17 December, 1900, died here 1 May, 1912, and was succeeded by Most Rev. Francisco Rossi, appointed 9 April, 1913, transferred 15 December, 1919. The following year, 8 March, the present incumbent, Most Rev. Ernesto Piovella, was appointed. Born in Milan in 1867, he served as vicar general of Ravenna, was appointed Bishop of Alghero 15 April, 1907, and promoted to the archdiocese of Oristano 15 April, 1914, where he served until his transfer.

The latest statistics obtainable (1920) credit this diocese with a Catholic population of 199,859, 81 parishes, 160 secular and 40 regular clergy, 100 students in the upper and lower seminaries, 25 Brothers, 80 Sisters, and 118 churches or chapels.

Cahors, DIOCESE OF (CADURCENSIS; cf. C. E., III-141a), in France, is a suffragan of the Archdiocese of Albi. It is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Joseph-Lucien Giray, b. in Chanas, Diocese of Grenoble, 21 March, 1864, studied at the petit séminaire of Rondeau and at Grenoble, ordained 1888, made vicar general 1911 and appointed Bishop of Cahors 15 February, 1918, consecrated 1 May, succeeding Bishop Cézérac, who was promoted to the Archdiocese of Albi. Bishop Cézérac had filled the see from 1911 when he came to it as a successor to Bishop Laurans (d. 15 July, 1911).

Within recent years the diocese has lost two vicar generals, Rev. Father Pomarel (d. 29 May, 1919), and Rev. Father Laporte (d. 21 February, 1921). During the World War 180 priests of this diocese were mobilized and of these 16 gave up their lives, as did also 6 seminarians.

At present (1921) the diocese has 33 churches with pastors, 449 succursal parishes (mission churches), a number of brothers who have been secularized by the Associations Law of 1901, 71 elementary schools with 140 female and 12 male teachers and an attendance of 300 boys and 1,600 girls. Missionary and charitable work is accomplished through a house of diocesan missionaries at Rocamadour, a home for aged or infirm priests at Souillac, a home for the protection of young girls at Cahors, asylum for the insane, under the Religious of Our Lady of Calvary, 4 Catholic private orphanages at Cahors, 7 hospitals, one of which is still unoccupied, the others are conducted by religious, 1 house of refuge for young girls at Cahors. The public hospitals admit the ministry of priests. The "Fraternal Union," and "League for Clerical Defense," are established among the clergy, and agricultural organizations among the laity. The "Défense," a weekly periodical with a circulation of 11,000, is published as also the "Revue religieuse de Cahors et Roc Amadour," a diocesan weekly. In 1920 the total Catholic population was approximately 205,769.

Caiazzo, DIOCESE OF (CAIACENSIS; cf. C. E., III-141d), suffragan of Capua, is situated in the province of Caserta in Italy. The population, for the most part rural, numbers 30,000, all practical Catholics. There are 35 parishes, 72 churches and chapels, and 70 secular priests. The only religious orders are the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, who direct a pious institute, an orphanage, and 2 infant asylums, and the Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, who are in charge of an infant asylum and some elementary schools for girls. The seminary, which was founded shortly after the Council of Trent, has only ten students making preparatory studies, who go to the regional seminary at Posilipo, Naples, for their philosophy and theology. The pious institute has twenty-five students, and to it is attached an elementary school for day scholars. The orphanage has 17 children. There are two almshouses, one for men and one for women. The elementary schools in each commune and rural center are maintained by the State and usually taught by Catholic lay instructors.

Both the clergy and laity answered the call to arms during the war, and many served on the battlefield, in trenches and in hospitals. At present the see of Caiazzo is vacant, Rt. Rev. Luigi Ermini, b. in Rome 13 December, 1856, elected titular Bishop of Amatha and auxiliary of Porto and Santa Rufina 30 December, 1908, transferred to Sarsina 21 April, 1910; having declined he remained titular of Amatha until 4 December, 1914, when he was transferred to Caiazzo, at the Consistory of 13 June, 1921, he was transferred to Fabriano and Matelica. His predecessor was Rt. Rev. Adolfo Turchi, b. at Balignano, Diocese of Cesena, 24 October, 1863, elected Bishop of Caiazzo 30 June, 1909, named secretary of the Congregation of Religious and titular Bishop of Canopus in July, 1914, taking up his residence in Rome; promoted Archbishop of Aquila 17 July, 1918.

Cajamarca, DIOCESE OF (CAJAMARCENSIS), in Peru, South America, suffragan of Lima (see C. E., XVI-34). This diocese was erected 5 April, 1903, by a division of the dioceses of Chachapoyas and Trujillo, taking a territory of some 20,926 sq. miles, or the whole department of Cajamarca. Rt. Rev. Francis de Paul Grozo, b. in Cajamarca in 1852, and ordained in 1875, was appointed the first bishop 21 March, 1910, and still fills the see. According to statistics published in 1920 the Catholic population of the diocese numbers 443,000, and there are 36 parishes and 1 seminary.

Cajazeiras, DIOCESE OF (CAJAZEIRASENSIS or DE CAJAZEIRAS), in the State of Parahyba, Brazil, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Parahyba. This diocese was erected 6 February, 1914, by a division of the diocese of Parahyba, and has as its limits the stream which flows between the parish of Santa Lucia de Saguly and that of Soldade, as far as the foot of the Teixeira Mountains, and the line which separates the parishes of Patos and Pianco, as far as the State of Pernambuco. The cathedral is dedicated to Our Lady of Pity. So far no statistics have been published.

Calabozo, DIOCESE OF (DE CALABOZO; cf. C. E., III-148a), in Venezuela, suffragan of Santiago de Venezuela, Venezuela. Rt. Rev. Felipe Neri Sendra, appointed to this see 25 September, 1891, died 9 May, 1921, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Arthur Celestin Alvarez, b. in Clarines 1870, appointed Bishop of Zulia 16 August, 1910, transferred to the titular see of Thapsus 18 September, 1919, and made coadjutor to Bishop Sandra. According to 1920 statistics the Catholic population of this diocese numbers 210,430, and there are 38 priests and 70 churches or chapels.

Calahorra and La Calzada, DIOCESE OF (CALAGURITANENSIS ET CALCAETENSIS; cf. C. E., III-148a), in the province of Logroño, Spain, suffragan of Burgos. The see is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Fidelus Garcia y Martinez, titular Bishop of Hippos, appointed 16 December, 1920. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 154,470, 393 parishes divided among 19 archpresbyteries, 460 priests, 393 churches, 316 chapels, and 47 convents with 116 religious and 428 Sisters.

Calbayog, DIOCESE OF (CALBAYOGANÆ; cf. C. E., XVI-34c), in the province of Samar, Philippine Islands, suffragan of Manila. The first bishop to fill this see was Rt. Rev. Pablo Singzon, b. in Calbiga Samur, 25 January, 1851, prelate of the Holy See 3 March, 1904, appointed 12 April, 1910, d. 9 August, 1920. During his administration he wisely governed the new diocese, did many good works, and was responsible for the erection of a new seminary. Since his death the vacant see has been under an administrator, Rt. Rev. Sofronio Hachang y Goborni, titular Bishop of Anemurium, and formerly auxiliary to Bishop Singzon. This diocese comprises a Catholic population of 1,100,000, 80 parishes, 138 missions, 65 secular and 30 regular clergy, 1 seminary, 20 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 14 professors and 300 students, 2 colleges for girls with 12 professors and 250 students. A Catholic periodical, "Eco de Samar y Leyte," is published here.

Calcutta, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CALCUTTENSIS; cf. C. E., III-152b), in India, is under the administration of Most Rev. Brice Meuleman, S.J., D.D., b. at Ghent, Belgium, 1 March, 1862, appointed Archbishop of Calcutta 21 March, 1902, and consecrated 25 May of the same year. Owing to the repatriation of the German Jesuits the archdiocese was given the administration of the prefecture apostolic of Assam in June, 1915, and six of the Fathers have been working in that territory. During the war three of the priests of the archdioceses went to France as chaplains with the Labor Corps sent out from among the Christians of the Chota-Nagpore.

Within recent years the archdiocese has lost two prominent clergymen, R. Alfred Neut, S.J., rector of St. Xavier's College, Calcutta (1883-89), rector of St. Joseph's College, Darjeeling (1885-95), editor of the "Catholic Herald of India" (1902-17), died 4 April, 1921; Rev. John Desmet, S.J., one of the pioneers of the Chota-Nagpore Mission, in which he worked from 1884-1921.

This territory has been entrusted to the Belgian Jesuits since 1859; the other religious orders established now (1921) are: Irish Christian Brothers, Sisters of the Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Rathfarnham (Loretto Nuns), Daughters of the Cross of Liège, Little Sisters of the Poor, Ursuline Nuns and Daughters of St. Anne. There are 8 parishes, 43 missions, 49 churches, 33 mission stations, 2 convents for men and 13 for women, 18 secular and 149 regular clergy, 26 Jesuit lay brothers and 40 Christian Brothers, 260 Sisters, 1 secular seminary with 17 seminarians, and 1 regular seminary with 25 seminarians. The Catholic educational institutions include 3 colleges for men with 90 teachers and an attendance of 2,331, 9 high schools with 250 teachers and an attendance of 2,907, 2 training schools, 422 elementary schools with 1,010 teachers and an attendance of 11,000. The charitable institutions are: St. Joseph's Home for the Aged under the Little Sisters of the Poor, and at Kidderpore St. Vincent's Home, St. Catherine's Hospital for Incurables, and St. Paul's Nursery, all conducted by the Daughters of the Cross. The Gobra Leper Asylum and all the jails and hospitals of the district permit Catholic priests to minister in them. The Apostolic Union of the Secular Priests is established in the diocese, and the Catholic Association of Bengal is organized among the laity. Two periodicals are published: "The Catholic Herald of India," an English weekly, and "Nishkalank" (Immaculate), a Hindu monthly. The Catholic population is approximately 200,432.

Caldey, ABBEY OF. See BENEDICTINE ORDER.

Calgary, DIOCESE OF (CALGARIENSIS), in Canada (see C. E., XVI-34). This see, erected 30 November, 1912, is a suffragan of Edmonton and is under the administration of its first bishop, Rt. Rev. John T. McNally, consecrated 1 June, 1913. The Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate are established here, as well as the Grey Nuns, Sisters of St. Louis, Faithful Companions of Jesus, Sisters of Providence, and Daughters of Jesus.

The progress of the diocese during the few years since its foundation is best shown by the latest statistics, published 1921, which credit it with: Catholic population, 30,000; secular priests, 23; regulars, 15; seminarians, 24; churches with resident priests, 25; churches without resident priests, 36; mission stations, 106; convents with schools, 3; primary Catholic schools, 11; boarding schools for Indians, 3; industrial school for Indians, 1; hospitals, 2; orphanage, 1.

Cali, DIOCESE OF (CALIENSIS), in Colombia, South America, suffragan of Popayan. This diocese, erected 7 June, 1910 (see C. E., XVI-16), is under the administration of its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Eladius Perlaza, b. in Cali 1853, appointed 11 August, 1911. By a decree of the Consistory 11 June, 1920, the region of Balsa was separated from the diocese of Manizales and united to that of Cali. This was done because this region is now in the civil province of Valle, which is part of the diocese of Cali. By 1920 statistics the diocese counted a Catholic population of 12,000.

California (cf. C. E., III-170c), the eighth state of the United States in point of population. According to the official returns of the Federal census of 1920, its total area is 158,297 sq. miles. Of this number 2,645 sq. miles constitute the water area. The capital of the state, Sacramento, has a population (1920) of 65,854. The population of the other chief cities is (1920): San Francisco, 506,676; Los Angeles, 576,673; Oakland, 216,361; San José, 39,642; San Diego, 74,683; Stockton, 40,296; Alameda, 28,806; Berkeley, 56,000; Fresno, 45,000. The total population of the state in 1910 was 2,377,549, an increase of 60.1 per cent upon that of 1900; in 1920 it was 3,426,861, an increase of 44.1 per cent upon that of 1910. According to the United States census of 1920, the population of California is 3,426,861 or 22 persons per square mile. The census of 1920 also presents the following details of population: (a) White, 3,264,711; African, 38,763; Indian, 17,360; Chinese, 28,812; Japanese, 71,952; (b) native-born, 2,583,049; foreign-born, 681,662. Of the total population 68 per cent is urban, 32 per cent is rural. There were 95,592 illiterates over 10 years old, or 3.3 per cent.

RESOURCES. AGRICULTURE.—According to the census of 1910 the total value of all California's agricultural products was $146,526,151. The value of the output in 1919 reached the total of $587,600,000. The following table presents the total output of agricultural products in detail for the year 1918:

Asparagus..	902,236 cases	Hops	45,000 bales
Almonds ..	9,000,000 pounds	Hay	2,970,000 tons
Apricots ..	32,000,000 pounds	Lumber ..	90,584,000 board feet
Apples	12,500,000 pounds	Pears	6,000,000 pounds
Beans	5,585,000 bags	Peschies ..	41,000,000 pounds
Barley	34,321,000 bushels	Plums	1,000,000 pounds
Brandy	5,295,352 gallons	Prunes ...	90,000,000 pounds
Citrus		Raisins ...	367,400,000 pounds
fruits	11,373,127 boxes	Other dried
Canned		fruit	5,500,000 pounds
fruits and		Olive oil..	2,657,836 gallons vegetables	16,136,410 cases	Potatoes..	12,870,000 bushels
Corn	2,975,000 bushels	Walnuts ..	38,544,000 pounds
Cherries ..	822,387 bushels	Wool	12,145,000 pounds
Figs	18,400,000 pounds	Wheat	4,590,000 bushels
Grapes	1,979,686,525 pounds	Wine	42,101,971 gallons

The total annual output of fruit from California farms is $248,000,000. In the year 1919 there were 42,000,000 fruit trees in California. Seven million of these trees belong to Santa Clara Valley alone. The principal fruit trees are as follows: Apple, 3,128,000; apricot, 3,680,000; cherry, 657,000; peach, 9,000,000; pear, 2,400,000; orange, 10,000,000; lemon, 2,880,000. In 1920, 26,313 farms reported 153,195,000 grape vines producing 2,055,644,612 pounds, worth $65,780,628. The nut crop was valued at $19,000,000.

Manufactures.—The total value of the output of manufactures in 1914, according to the census, was $712,801,000. In 1919 it amounted to $1,981,443,000. During 1920 about 163,000 tons of beet sugar was produced. In the same year, there was 11,943 manufacturing establishments in California, representing an investment of $1,333,382,000, and giving employment to 296,000 persons; the sum paid for labor was $380,135,000, and for materials, $1,218,890,000.

Mining.—The value of the total mining output in 1918 was $199,753,837. In 1919 it was $196,473,560. Altogether there are about 1,200 producing mines in the state. The value of the gold output was $16,529,162; silver, $1,427,861; copper, $11,805,883; quicksilver, $2,579,472; petroleum, $127,459,929. It is estimated that in the petroleum industry alone the total invested is more than $50,000,000; 105,-668,000 barrels of oil were produced in 1920.

Lumber.—Nearly 20 per cent of the area of the state is forest-clad. San Francisco alone sends 50,000,000 feet of lumber to the world each year. The total output of the state for 1917 was 1,227,000 m. feet. There are $78,000,000 invested in the industry, 584 mills; and the value of the total output, together with the by-products of the forest, is $49,000,000, the lumber itself amounting to $23,-444,000.

Commerce.—The harbors of the state now carry on an ocean commerce of about $400,000,000 a year. The precise figures for 1918 being: Imports, $231,979,474; exports, $49,074,000. The total foreign commerce of the state for 1918 was $476,420,000. Five great transcontinental railroads carry her passengers and goods to and from her cities, the fifth being recently completed. In 1917 the total railroad mileage of the state was 9,441.

Educational System.—The State Constitution provides for a school board of seven members, appointed by the governor, two every second year. The total number of professors, including the various officers of instruction and research in the University of California, for the year ending 1 November, 1919, was 1,053, as follows: Academic, 607; art, 14; Lick Astronomical Observatory, 18; law, 9; medicine, 167; pharmacy, 10. The total number of students for the same period was 11,633, of whom 4,507 were men, and 7,126 women, the women being nearly 61 per cent of the total enrollment. The university receives $30,000 annually from the Federal Government for its several experiment stations. Everyone of the fifty-seven counties of the state has a high school. Three new normal schools have recently been built at Arcata, Santa Barbara, and Fresno.

In the school year ending 30 June, 1918, there were 3,452 primary and grammar schools in the state and 311 high schools. The total number of teachers in the public schools was 17,276; the total number of pupils, 602,758. The total number of pupils in private schools was 40,000. The total income of her public schools during the scholastic year 1917-18 was $32,017,819. The total value of public school property for the same year was $90,091,819. The total income of the State University for the same period was $3,732,986. The laws governing private or parochial schools are as follows: Private schools (except as noted in last paragraph below) shall be taught in the English language. In order to comply with compulsory education requirements, private and parochial schools must teach the branches taught in public schools, viz.: reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, geography, language, grammar, composition, history of the United States, constitution, duties of citizenship, local civil government, physiology and hygiene, nature study, music, drawing, bookkeeping, humane education. Private school authorities are required to keep an attendance register. No public money shall ever be appropriated for the support of any sectarian or denominational school (IX, 8).

Any educational institution of collegiate grade within the State of California not conducted for profit, shall be exempt from taxation (XIII, la). Certain part-time schools, which shall not be in session during hours of public schools, nor more than one hour each day, six hours each week, thirty-eight weeks each year, may be conducted in a foreign language; provided that no person shall conduct or teach in such a private school, conducted wholly or in part in the language of a foreign nation, in this state unless and until he shall have first applied to and obtained a permit so to do from the superintendent of public instruction or a deputy appointed by the superintendent for such purposes. This shall also be construed to include persons exercising or performing administrative powers in each school. Such permit shall be issued to persons having knowledge of American history and institutions and knowing how to read, write, and speak English. Each applicant must file an affidavit to observe this law and to endeavor to make pupils loyal citizens.

The following figures for the year 1920 will give some idea of the importance of Catholic education in California: 1 archdiocesan seminary, 3 seminaries of religious orders, 1 normal school, 12 colleges, academies and high schools, 97 parochial schools, 35,000 young people under Catholic care.

RECENT HISTORY.—The recent political history of the state has had a national complexion, as the result of passage by the legislature of bills limiting the ownership of land by aliens with the purpose of eliminating the Japanese as owners and proprietors of the land. The rapid increase of Japanese immigrants with their strong trend to land ownership and land control, their industry and application, their oriental standards of living, their large birth rate, and their inability to assimilate with the whites has presented a problem of vital importance to the state as well as to the nation. The first intimation of the problem came in 1906, when Japanese laborers, attracted by the scarcity of labor in California and the prevailing high wages, came in great numbers. The Japanese with his strong social race instinct would acquire a piece of land, and within an incredibly short time, large adjoining holdings would be occupied by people of his own race. Attempts at anti-Japanese legislation were foiled by the intervention of President Roosevelt. The proposed bill, providing for separate schools for the Japanese subjects, caused the United States government to arrange for the limitation of Japanese labor through the "Gentlemen's Agreement." The increase of Japanese in California from 41,356 in 1910 to 87,279 in 1920, or of 111 per cent showed the futility of the agreement, for skillful evasions by means of picture brides, smuggling, and illegal importations were resorted to. The realization of this lack of entire good faith on the part of the Japanese led the Legislature of 1913 to pass a law forbidding the ownership of agriculture lands by the Japanese and limiting their tenure to three-year leaseholds. The spirit of this anti-alien land legislation has been evaded and broken by legal subterfuges, such as corporations, trustee stock ownership, trustee land ownership, and the granting of lands to native children.

Action on the matter was commenced in 1919, but delayed on advice of Secretary of State Lansing, who cabled from the Peace Conference in France that any legislation of this kind would offend Japan, a participant in the conference. However, in 1920 an initiative anti-alien land law aiming at restricting the Japanese ownership of land was approved by the people of California, the vote being 668,483 in favor; against, 222,806 in opposition. This initiative measure is more stringent than the former one, for it not only forbids ownership of land, but the leasing of lands by the Japanese, and the purchase of land by American born Japanese minors under their parents' guardianship.

During the World War California furnished 112,514 soldiers, or 2.98 per cent. Two National Guard Camps were established at Fremont and Kearney.

RELIGION.—The following statistics of religious denominations of California were presented by the United States Census of 1919, published that year:

Denomination	Organ- izations	Churches	Value of Church Property	Number of Com- muni- cants
Adventist	176	133	$ 404,385	11,663
Baptist	279	288	3,277,346	42,039
Catholic	626	515	8,301,361	494,539
Congregational	244	232	3,419,676	34,180
Jewish	34	15	1,209,500	8,178
Lutheran	145	133	1,569,313	19,207
Methodist	869	810	8,413,164	102,654
Presbyterian	397	375	5,500,425	58,061
Protestant Episcopal...	261	241	3,341,629	30,018

The total number of churches was 3,244, total value of church property, $40,510,180; total number of communicants, 893,366.

The Catholic Directory for 1921 gives the following figures: Archbishop, 1; bishops, 2; total priests, 731, secular, 477, regular, 254; total churches, 545; churches with resident priests, 307; missions with churches, 238; stations, 118; seminary, 1; seminaries of religious orders, 3; colleges and academies for boys, 9; academies for young ladies, 46; parishes with parochial schools, 108; orphan asylums, 15; total young people under Catholic care, 38,226; Catholic population about 602,800.

The following religious orders of men are now in the state: Jesuits, Dominicans, Franciscans, Paulists, Salesians Marists, Christian Brothers, Brothers of Mary, Capuchins, Fathers of the Sacred Heart, Sulpicians, Benedictines, Redemptorists and Vincentians.

Marriage and Divorce.—The law of California assigns five grounds of divorce: extreme cruelty; wilful desertion; wilful neglect (failure to provide); habitual intemperance, and conviction of a felony.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—The annual appropriation made by the legislature for every institution maintaining orphans, has been increased to $120 for each orphan and each half orphan. Recent legislative measures provide for the establishment of a state training school for girls and a new psychopathic state hospital (1913); for a workman's compensation act, and an eight-hour day for women. Women suffrage had an important bearing on the presidential election in California in 1912. Owing to the failure of the Taft partisans to nominate the Taft electors on ballot by petition, the Taft voters were practically disenfranchised. The vote was so close that a recount was necessary. California ratified the federal suffrage amendment, 1 November, 1919, the eighteenth state to do so, and the national prohibition amendment, 13 January, 1919, the twenty-fourth state to do so.

California, LOWER, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CALIFORNIAE INFERIORIS; cf. C. E., III-177d), includes territory of the same name, in Mexico. Entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Saints Peter and Paul, of Rome, the present administrator is Rev. John Rosso Mapan, who resides at La Paz. It includes a total population of 45,000, of whom 43,104 are Catholics; 9 priests, 6 parishes, and 25 churches or chapels.

Caltagirone, DIOCESE OF (CALATAYRONENSIS; cf. C. E., III-190a), on the Island of Sicily, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Syracuse. This see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Damaso Pio de Bono, b. in Bivona 1850, appointed 28 November, 1898. According to the latest statistics (1920) there are 115,500 Catholics in this diocese, 25 parishes, 119 secular and 48 regular clergy, 15 seminarians, 16 Brothers, 43 Sisters, and 112 churches or chapels.

Caltanissetta, DIOCESE OF (CALATHANISIADENSIS; cf. C. E., III-190a), in Italy, suffragan of Monreale. Rt. Rev. Antonio Augusto Intreccialagli appointed to this see 22 May, 1907, was promoted to the titular see of Sardica, and made coadjutor at Monreale, 16 March, 1914, succeeding to the archdiocese of Monreale, 31 July, 1919. After his transfer from Caltanissetta, he still acted as administrator of the diocese until the appointment of the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giovanni Jacono, b. at Ragusa, 1873, appointed Bishop of Molfetta, 2 July, 1918, transferred 18 March, 1921. The most important recent event in this diocese was the opening of a new episcopal seminary in 1912. The territory comprises a Catholic population of 160,000, divided among 17 parishes and 95 churches. Present (1922) statistics credit the diocese with 200 secular and 60 regular clergy; 5 convents for men and 9 for women, 2 monasteries for women, 98 religious women, 1 seminary, 40 seminarians, 1 college for women with 5 teachers and 40 students, 28 secondary schools with 69 teachers, 1,118 boy students and 350 girl students, 360 elementary schools with 360 teachers and 14,400 pupils. The various institutions include 3 homes, 7 asylums, and 4 hospitals. One society is organized among the clergy, and 30 among the laity; two weekly papers are published, "Aurora" and "Tolopo."

Calvary, CONGREGATION OF OUR LADY OF (cf. C. E., III-109d).—The twenty monasteries which formed the Congregation of Benedictines of Our Lady of Calvary were despoiled by the revolutionary government in 1792 and the religious dispersed. Some of them managed to live secretly in community during the French Revolution, and these faithful observers of the rule, who survived the destruction of the convents, were the restorers of the congregation. Gradually they re-established their house at Orléans in 1807 and that at Quimper in 1809. Under Louis XVIII the monasteries of Paris, Vendôme, Angers, Poitiers, Machecoul were permitted to revive their religious life on condition that they open for public utility a school or boarding school for young girls or give hospitality to lady boarders. Two royal ordinances authorized the reunion of these seven monasteries into a congregation, 3 January and 17 January, 1827. On 14 November, 1828, Pope Leo XIII confirmed their re-establishment as a congregation, according to their Bull of erection by Gregory XV, 22 March, 1621. In 1904 the French Republic forbade teaching in the monasteries, in 1906 modified the royal ordinances of 1827, and finally 30 June, 1914, decreed the dissolution of the congregation, declaring it to be of no public utility. The World War (1914-18) suspended the execution of this decree.

There are now in France seven monasteries: Orléans, Angers, Vendôme, Poitiers, Machecoul, La Capelle Marival, and Landerneau. At Jerusalem, in Palestine, they founded on the Mount of Olives, in 1896, an orphanage for girls of the Greek Catholic Rite. The foundation made at Sirault (Hainaut, Belgium), in 1903, lasted only sixteen years. After the war, in 1919, the religious of this house returned to France. From 1617 until the time of the French Revolution the congregation had thirteen superior generals. Since its re-establishment it has had eight. The elections are triennial, and the office of superior general may be held for only twelve consecutive years. The religious habit is black with a black scapular. The Constitutions of the Congregation were published in 1634, revised and corrected in 1901, and approved and confirmed by Leo XIII. The religious follow the primitive observance of the Rule of St. Benedict. Two notable changes in the Constitutions are the nomination of a cardinal protector, and the making of temporary vows three years before final vows are taken. The total number of monasteries is eight, with two hundred religious. The present superior general is Mother Marie de St. Anselme.

Calvi and Teano, DIOCESE OF (CALVENSIS ET TEANENSIS; cf. C. E., III-195a), in the province of Caserta, Italy, suffragan of Capua. The usual residence of the bishop is at Teano, but at present (1922) it is temporarily at Pignataro Maggiore. Rt. Rev. Albino Pella, appointed to this see 19 August, 1908, was transferred to Casale-Monferrato 12 April, 1915. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Calogero Licata, b. at Aragona 1872, honorary chamberlain 12 March, 1912, appointed 14 April, 1916.

Statistics published in 1920 credit the diocese of Calvi with 16,294 Catholics, 17 parishes, 46 secular and 5 regular clergy, 20 religious, and 50 churches or chapels; the cathedral has 12 canons and 6 mansionaries. There are 30 students at the new seminary. Teano has a beautiful cathedral with 12 canons and 6 mansionaries. It counts a Catholic population of 55,850, 86 parishes, 117 secular and 19 regular clergy, 20 seminarians, 26 Brothers, 40 Sisters, 175 churches or chapels, and 14 religious houses.

Camagüey, DIOCESE OF (CAMAGUEYENSIS), in Cuba, suffragan of Santiago de Cuba. This see, erected 10 December, 1912 (see C. E., XVI-34), is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Valentino Zubizarreta y Unamunsaga, O.D.C. Born in Marquina Echevarria, Spain, in 1862, made provincial of Navarre, sent as a papal envoy to Cuba, he was appointed first bishop of this diocese 25 May, 1914, and acts as administrator apostolic of Cienfuegos. The statistics published in 1920 credit this diocese with a Catholic population of 200,000, 20 secular and 21 regular clergy, 15 churches with resident priests, 1 community of religious, and 3 communities of Sisters.

Cambodia, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CAMBODGIENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-777d), in Indo-China, with episcopal residence at Phnom-Penh. It is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. Jean-Claude Bouchut, b. in Loire 4 March, 1860, ordained 17 February, 1883, appointed titular Bishop of Panemotichus, 23 July, 1902, and vicar apostolic of Cambodia. This territory comprises about 60,000 Catholics, including Europeans, Annamites, Cambodians, Chinese, and Indians. These are divided among 47 parishes, 183 churches, and 173 mission stations, served by 98 secular priests and 14 brothers. There are 2 convents of men with 14 religious, 11 convents of women with 348 nuns and 15 Sisters, 2 seminaries, 113 seminarians, 2 colleges for boys with 22 instructors and 520 students, 2 colleges for girls with 8 instructors and 150 students, 1 normal school with 2 professors and 25 pupils, 96 elementary schools with 115 teachers, and 7,400 pupils, 5 hospitals belonging to the mission with 437 beds, conducted by Sisters, 2 maternity hospitals and 6 orphanages with 643 children. In 1921, 6,156 children were baptized while dying in the vivariate. An organization, "Amicale des élèves des Frères," is formed among the laity.

Cambrai, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CAMERANCENSIS; cf. C. E., III-209d).—By a pontifical Decree of November, 1913, the districts of Lille, Dunkeque, and Hazelbrouck were separated from the Archdiocese of Cambrai to form the new Diocese of Lille. In consequence the population of this archdiocese was reduced from 1,866,000 in 1912 to 837,000 in 1914. Owing to the World War the population has further diminished and at the present time (1921) it consists of 741,000 French inhabitants, with 20,000 Belgians and 4,000 to 5,000 Poles who work in the mining region. For more than four years the entire country was invaded and laid waste by the enemy. A certain number of parishes near the Hindenburg Line were entirely destroyed. In retreating the Germans seized a large number of church bells and bombarded some of the churches. Of the 464 churches in the archdiocese, 84 were destroyed, one of which has been rebuilt, 289 were slightly damaged, 29 of which have been restored. There are 200 churches which are damaged to the extent that they are useless and the work of restoring them has not yet been begun.

During the war 30 priests and seminarians gave their lives for the cause. The entire clergy, foremost among whom was the archbishop, nobly supported their country and their services were gratefully appreciated and rewarded by the French Government, as well as by the Allies.

In 1917 the archdiocese suffered a severe loss in the death of Rt. Rev. Henry Monnier, titular bishop of Ludda and auxiliary bishop of Cambrai since 1872. He was an earnest and zealous prelate and had rendered distinguished services to the archdiocese. The present incumbent is the Most Rev. John Arthur Chollet, b. at Avocourt, 8 April, 1862, ordained 18 September, 1886, appointed to the see of Verdun, 13 April, 1910, consecrated 29 June following, promoted to Cambrai 20 November, 1913, installed 22 January, 1914, and published the 25 May following.

An event of special importance in the archdiocese took place in 1920 when Sister Madeleine Fontaine and her three companions, Marie Lanet, Thérèse Fanton and Jeanne Girard were declared blessed. These holy women were Sisters of Charity and had nursed the sick and poor in a hospital at Arras during the French Revolution. On refusing to take the oath of allegiance, they were imprisoned, tried and sentenced to death. By order of the ex-priest Lebon, they were taken to Cambrai and executed there on 26 June, 1794. The superior, Sister Madeleine Fontaine, then 72 years of age, while awaiting death, declared that she and her companions would be the last victims at Cambrai. Her prophecy was fulfilled as shortly thereafter the downfall of Robespierre brought to an end the Reign of Terror in France. The cause of these saintly women was introduced at Rome 29 May, 1907, they were declared martyrs, with dispensation of miracles, 6 June, 1919, and solemnly beatified 13 June, 1920.

The archdiocese contains (1921) 429 parishes, 35 deaneries, 685 secular priests, 12 Jesuits, 3 Marists; 2 convents of the Poor Clares, 2 of the Redemptorists; 1 of the Sisters of the Adoration, 2 congregations who care for the sick and whose mother-house is in the archdiocese. The diocesan seminary has 115 students and the preparatory seminary, 103. The following colleges and schools exist in the archdiocese: 6 ecclesiastical colleges where the teaching staff consists of 90 priests (1,520 students); 19 Catholic primary schools for boys, 81 for girls with 278 teachers and 8,500 pupils. The large official colleges also have a chaplain who gives religious instruction to those who desire it. His influence is unimportant. The Little Sisters of the Poor take charge of 5 homes for the aged and nearly all the hospitals, juvenile asylums, orphanages, and crèches are in charge of Sisters of the various orders. With one or two exceptions these institutions have a regularly appointed chaplain who freely visits the sick. The priests have formed two associations called the Apostolic Union and the Association of St. Francis de Sales. The following associations exist among the laity: Association of Fathers of Families, Association of Catholic Committees, Association of Young Men, Patriotic League of French Women and Association of Young Women. There are 7 Catholic papers published in the archdiocese.

Camerino, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CAMERINENSIS; cf. C. E., III-216d), in the province of Macerata, Central Italy, directly subject to the Holy See, with the perpetual administration of Treja. Rt. Rev. Camillo Moreschini, appointed to this see 29 April 1909, d. 24 October, 1918, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Ettore Fronzi, b. in Ostra, 1862, appointed Bishop of Cagli and Pergola, 12 September, 1908, promoted 14 December, 1918.

By 1920 statistics Camerino has a Catholic population of 84,900, 174 parishes, 242 secular and 40 regular clergy, 78 seminarians, and 174 churches or chapels. Treja is credited with 9597 Catholics; 8 parishes, 30 secular priests, and 46 churches or chapels.

Campanha, DIOCESE OF (CAMPANHENSIS), in the State of Minas Geraes, Brazil, suffragan of Mariana. This see, erected 19 March, 1908 (see C. E., XVI-34) is still (1922) under the administration of its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Juan d'Almeida Ferrao, appointed 29 April, 1909. This territory includes a population of 300,000, and 30 parishes.

Campeche, DIOCESE OF (CAMPECORENSIS; cf. C. E., III-222c), in the State of Campeche, Mexico, suffragan of Yucatan. Rt. Rev. Vincent Castellanos y Nunez appointed to this see 7 February, 1912, was transferred 26 August, 1921, and the see is now (1922) vacant. It comprises a total population of 100,000, of whom 80,000 are Catholics; 23 secular priests, 8 seminarians, 14 parishes, 35 churches, 5 chapels, and 3 Catholic schools.

Campinas, DIOCESE OF (CAMPINENSIS), in the state of São Paulo, Brazil, suffragan of São Paulo. This diocese, erected 7 June, 1908 (see C. E., XVI-35), includes a territory of 6196 sq. miles takes from the archdiocese of São Paulo. The cathedral, dedicated to the Immaculate Conception, was installed with a chapter of ten titular and ten honorary canons, 3 November, 1909. According to the 1916 census the diocese comprises a population of 567,832; the 1920 statistics credit it with 39 parishes, 2 colleges, 67 churches, 294 chapels, 1 seminary, established in 1914, 7 convents of men with 49 religious, 21 convents of women with 210 sisters, and 25 schools with 1454 boys and 1616 girls.

The present incumbent is Rt. Rev. Juan Bautista Corrêa-Nery, the first bishop, appointed 3 August, 1907. He was named an assistant at the pontifical throne in 1907 and again in 1915. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Joachim Mamede da Silva Leite, titular Bishop of Sebaste.

Campion College, situated in lower town of Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, had its origin in an independent school known as the Prairie du Chien College. The project proved a failure after a very short trial, and in 1871 the building passed into the hands of the Christian Brothers, who opened a school under the name of St. John's College. After five years, St. John's College proved equally a failure and was closed in 1876. The property was then purchased by Mr. John Lawler, and in 1880 presented to the Jesuits, and that same year the Fathers of the Buffalo Mission opened the "Sacred Heart College" at Prairie du Chien. The opening year there were 61 students, of whom 25 were day scholars.

The first president was the Rev. William Becker, S.J., who had been the founder and first president of Canisius College, Buffalo. The faculty of the new college also numbered among its members the Rev. John Hagen, S.J., at present head of the Papal Observatory at Rome. At the end of Father Becker's presidency the number had so increased that in 1884 a new building was added, and that same year saw the first classical graduates of the college. But in spite of this apparent success undergraduate classes were discontinued from 1888-98 to allow the Jesuits to use the buildings for the higher studies of members of the order. In 1898 the college again opened its doors and in 1901 the Rev. Ulrich Heinzel, S.J., became president, to be succeeded in 1904 by the Rev. Joseph L. Spaeth, S.J. Another building was added to the rapidly growing college about this time, and again in 1910, after the Rev. Jos. M. Horning, S.J., had become president, another wing was added. Upon Father Horning's death in 1911, the Rev. George R. Kister, S.J., succeeded him and presided over the college until March, 1918, when the present head of the college, the Rev. Albert C. Fox became president.

In 1913 the corporate name of the school was changed to "Campion College of the Sacred Heart." The usual curriculum of all Jesuit colleges is followed: the faculty, members, 15, and the total enrollment of students for 1920-21 is 101.

Canada (cf. C. E., III-227b).—The area of Canada is 3,603,336 sq. miles of land and 126,329 sq. miles of water, a total of 3,729,665 square miles. The following table shows the population of the provinces in 1911 and 1921 (preliminary reports):

	1921	1911	Per Cent of Increase
New Brunswick.	388,092	351,092	10.29
Nova Scotia ...	524,579	492,338	6.55
Prince Edward Island	88,536	93,728	5.54 (decrease)
Alberta	581,995	374,663	55.34
Manitoba	613,008	461,630	32.79
British Columbia	523,369	392,480	33.34
Quebec	2,319,067	2,005,776	17.11
Ontario	2,929,054	2,523,274	17.25

The largest cities with their population are: Montreal, 607,063; Toronto, 293,571; Winnipeg, 178,364; Vancouver, 116,700; Ottawa, 107,137; Hamilton, 81,969 (1911); Quebec, 94,058; Halifax, 57,674; Calgary, 63,117; Victoria, 38,682; Edmonton, 58,627.

Immigration slackened between 1914 and 1920, as the following figures attest:

	United Kingdom	United States	Other Countries	Total
1914	142,622	107,530	134,726	384,878
1915	43,276	59,779	41,734	144,789
1916	8,664	36,937	2,936	48,537
1917	8,282	61,389	5,703	75,374
1918	3,178	71,314	4,582	79,074
1919	9,914	40,715	7,073	57,702
1920	59,603	49,656	8,077	117,336

Of the 1920 immigrants, 51 per cent came from the United Kingdom; 42 per cent from the United States and 7 per cent from other countries. They were classified according to occupation as follows: farmers and laborers, 31,282; general laborers, 7,372; mechanics, 14,640; clerks, traders, etc., 3,805; miners, 1,003; domestics, 6,069; not classified, 53,180. Of these the Maritime Provinces received 5,554; Quebec, 13,078; Ontario, 39,344; Manitoba, 11,387; Saskatchewan, 14,287; Alberta, 20,000; British Columbia and Yukon Territory, 13,686; total, 117,336.

The number of Chinese entering Canada has been much reduced in recent years, owing to the operation of the order, renewed every six months since December, 1913, under which the landing in British Columbia of skilled and unskilled artisans and laborers is prohibited. In the fiscal year 1920 the number of Chinese who paid head tax was 363, as compared with 4,006 in 1919. In November, 1921, British Columbia petitioned the Dominion Government to take measures for the exclusion of Asiatic immigration.

The Indian population by provinces in 1917 was as follows: Prince Edward Island, 292; Nova Scotia, 2,031; New Brunswick, 1,346; Quebec, 13,366; Ontario, 26,411; Manitoba, 11,583; Saskatchewan, 10,646; Alberta, 8,837; British Columbia, 25,694; Yukon, 1,528; Northwest Territories, 3,764; total, 105,998. The Eskimos numbered 3,296. Of the total acreage of Indian reservations (4,860,675 acres) 2,143,708 acres were cleared but not cultivated, and 210,024 acres were cultivated; the value of the lands in 1919 was 51,535,245. During 1919 crops to the value of 3,462,147 were raised by the Indians, the corresponding value for 1918 was $3,142,046. They owned 35,285 horses, 52,522 head of cattle, and 117,453 poultry, the total value of the live stock and poultry being $4,443,970. For Indian educational purposes appropriations were made by Parliament for the year 1919-20, amounted to $1,057,663. There were 321 schools with 12,196 pupils. The religious census of the Indians 31 March, 1917, is given as follows: Anglican, 20,183; Presbyterian, 2,155; Methodist, 12,820; Catholic, 43,986; Baptist, 1,297; other Christian beliefs, 1,426; aboriginal beliefs, 8,414.

AGRICULTURE.—The total value of the annual farm production of Canada in 1920 was $1,455,244,650. The production of wheat was 263,189,300 bushels from 18,232,374 acres, an average of 14.5 bushels per acre. The following list of exports reveals the extent of Canadian commerce:

Total exportation...	$1,586,169,792	$1,268,765,285	$1,286,658,709

Fisheries	33,221,175	37,869,394	42,546,979

FORESTRY.—Statistics of the lumber industry in 1917 reveal a capital of $149,266,019; employees on salaries, 3,159; payment of salaries, $4,781,300; employees on wages, 53,318; wages, $34,412,411; cost of materials, $58,403,316; value of products, $68,815,472.

In 1919 the income from the lumber industry was estimated at $122,359,748, distributed as follows: Ontario, $33,671,334; British Columbia, $32,540,244; Quebec, $30,195,640; New Brunswick, $16,477,477; Nova Scotia, $6,262,745; Saskatchewan, $1,326,668; Manitoba, $937,679; Alberta, $696,518; Prince Edward Island, $238,687; Yukon, $12,680.

The crownlands of Canada are situated in the Prairie Provinces, in the Dominion Railway Belt of British Columbia, and in a block in northern British Columbia, containing 3,500,000 acres, known as the Peace River Block. A total of 120,894,407 acres have been alienated from the Crown. In the Maritime Provinces, in Quebec, Ontario, and British Columbia, the public lands are administered by the provincial governments. In Nova Scotia the total area of the crownlands is 816,862 acres; in New Brunswick, 7,250,000 acres. In Quebec 6,330,751 acres of public lands are subdivided and unsold.

FISHERIES.—The capital invested in the sea fisheries of Canada in 1919 was $27,189,212; in the inland fisheries, $4,186,940; in fish-canning and curing establishments, $23,200,874; total of capital invested in fisheries, $54,577,026. In the sea fisheries 58,885 persons were employed; in the inland fisheries, 8,919; in the fish-canning establishments, 18,356. The value of the products of the fishing industry in 1919 was $56,508,479; in 1918, $60,250,544. In 1920 the salmon fisheries of British Columbia brought $15,129,348. In the same year the chief exports went to the United Kingdom ($9,890,805), the United States ($18,568,264), Cuba ($2,387,528), Australia ($538,566), British West Indies ($1,662,398), and Porto Rico ($1,301,354). The value of the fishing boats, nets, traps, and wharves in 1920 was $29,893,213.

MINES.—Mineral production reached $217,775,080 in 1920, the highest figure on record. British Columbia, with $33,296,313, ranked the highest in the value of minerals produced. Gold brought $15,853,478; nickel, $24,454,597; copper, $14,166,479; coal, $76,326,853; asbestos, $13,677,841; Portland cement, $14,798,070.

MANUFACTURES.—The statistics of manufactures in 1918 revealed 678,337 employees, earning in salaries and wages $629,790,644; turning out products worth $3,458,036,975; the capital invested was $3,034,301,915, and the cost of materials $1,900,252,314. Ontario ranked first in the value of products, $1,809,067,001; Quebec second with $920,621,171; and British Columbia third with $216,175,517.

COMMERCE.—The imports from the United Kingdom into Canada in 1921 totaled in value $213,944,814; from the United States, $856,613,430; from all other countries, $169,600,638; total, $1,240,158,882. The exports to the United Kingdom from Canada totaled $489,152,637; to the United States, $464,028,183; other countries, $286,311,278. The total commerce aggregated $2,450,587,001. The duty collected on imports in 1921 was $179,658,474.

TRANSPORTATION.—The increase in railroad mileage in 1919 was the smallest in recent years, owing to the scarcity of capital, being 17; in 1918 it was 275; 1917, 1,170; 1916, 1,852; 1915, 4,787; 1914, 1,491; 1913, 2,577. The total mileage in actual operation in 1919 was 38,896; the total capitalization $2,009,209,510. In 1903 the Dominion Government undertook the construction of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway from Moncton, N. B., to Winnipeg, to be leased to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway for fifty years. Upon the failure of the latter to take over the operation of the road, when completed, the Government undertook its operation. The Prince Edward Island Railway is also the property of the Dominion Government. In 1917 by an Act of Parliament the Dominion acquired the capital stock of the Canadian Northern Railway Company (9,566.5 miles). In 1918 the Quebec and Saguenay Railway (62 miles) was purchased by the Government, and in 1919 the Lotbinière and Megantic Railway (30 miles). The land subsidies granted to railways up to 30

June, 1919, extends to 56,237,383 acres; the total value of public aid, $275,163,228 (exclusive of the capital of the two government railways), of which $219,077,163 represents aid granted by the Dominion Government, $17,914,836 by municipalities, and $38,171,229 by Provincial Governments. During the year ending 30 June, 1919, loans of $25,000,000 were made to the Canadian Northern Railway and of $7,500,000 to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

FINANCE.—The gross debt on 21 March, 1921, amounted to $3,014,483,774, and the net debt to $1,935,946,313. On 31 July, 1920, the net debt was $2,234,496,916. The total war expenditure down to 31 March, 1920, was about $1,670,000,000.

EDUCATION.—Education is more or less compulsory, but the law is not very strictly enforced. In Ontario, Quebec, Alberta, and Saskatchewan there are separate schools for Catholics; in the other provinces the schools are non-sectarian. The following are the latest statistics:

Provinces	Year Ended	Schools	Teachers	Pupils	Expenditure
Ontario	Dec., 1918	6,995	14,357	564,655	$18,558,890
Quebec	June, 1918	7,244	16,995	475,219	14,482,870
Nova Scotia.....	July, 1919	1,797	8,012	106,982	2,097,593
New Brunswick..	June, 1919	1,299	2,107	71,029	1,530,256

Saskatchewan....	Dec., 1918	4,145	6,223	151,326	6,867,515
Total	27,520	54,499	1,684,853	$58,339,001

Canada's recent interest in technical education is evidenced by the Act of 1919, providing for aid to the provinces in promoting and assisting technical education in Canada by annual grants, beginning at $700,000 and aggregating $10,000,000 within a period of ten years. Out of the annual grant each province is to receive $10,000, while the balance is to be divided among the provinces in proportion to their population as shown in the last decennial census. The benefits of the Act are extended to persons over fourteen years who are not provided for by the ordinary day schools, and includes also agricultural studies, the training of nurses and teachers for ordinary schools and all work of university grade. The remarkable growth of expenditure on public education is seen in the increase between 1901, when it was $11,751,625, and 1919, when it was $72,992,667. For twenty-one of the twenty-two universities in Canada, the total value of the endowments and property in land, buildings, equipment, etc. (1920), amounted to $56,830,727; the total income $7,039,089, of which $1,507,579 was derived from fees and the balance from investments, government grants, and other sources. The total expenditure was $6,542,213, and the total number of students 28,486. Adding to these the 10,057 students attending the professional colleges in the same year, the grand total of students in attendance at Canadian institutions of higher education was 38,543.

The successive waves of immigration into Canada during the last decade have created some perplexing situations in the educational status. Twenty-six racial entities are now represented, whereas there used to be only two, the English and French. In the Maritime Provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia the religious and educational relations between the English and French have been amicable; in Nova Scotia French readers are provided for French-speaking children with instruction in English, and English-speaking teachers are not required to know French. The line of cleavage is very sharp in Quebec, where English is taught in Protestant schools and French in Catholic schools, although a confusing element intervenes in the English-speaking Irish population of Quebec and Montreal. The Protestant committee of the Provincial Board of Education wisely insisted on French courses of study in the Protestant schools in certain grades; similarly the Catholic schools are required to use English in the first year. In Ontario the English-speaking population (about 2,000,000) has a greater majority over those speaking over languages (500,000). The same language privileges as in Quebec are allowed to the minority, but the people have never succeeded in enacting the same concessions into law. In recent years there has been an influx of French-speaking settlers into Ontario, displacing the English-speaking farmers. Nevertheless, regulations of increasing severity, requiring the teaching of English in all the schools, passed by the Department of Education, led in 1915 and 1916 to acute and in some localities disastrous situations in French schools and school boards. The trouble was settled in November, 1916, by the judgment of the Privy Council of the Dominion, which held that the right to the use of a certain language concerned only legislative or court use and did not relate to education, but that the right to manage schools as well as that to determine the language to be used in them were alike subject to the regulations of the provincial education departments. The problem in the Prairie Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia is due to the successive waves of immigration which followed each other too rapidly to be assimilated. Of Manitoba's estimated one million, there are nineteen non-English racial units, six of which number more than 50,000. Each race took advantage of the compromise of 1896, which allowed bilingual teaching in localities where ten pupils spoke French or other language than English. In 1915 nearly one-sixth of the schools of Manitoba were bilingual, 143 teaching French, 70 German, 121 Polish or Ruthenian, in addition to English. In 1915 the clause allowing bilingual schools was repealed. In Saskatchewan a new School Attendance Act was passed in 1917, requiring the parent or guardians to send the children to public school "unless the child was under instruction in some satisfactory manner." In Alberta the refusal of the supervisor of foreign schools in 1914 to recognize certain schools, which were considered below the prescribed standard of efficiency, resulted in the closing of almost all the Ruthenian schools and of many German-Lutheran private schools, conducted by theological students from Lutheran colleges in the United States. The racial groups in British Columbia have been too small to cause any trouble in the matter of language instruction in public schools.

GOVERNMENT.—The new status of the Dominion of Canada can be seen in the signing by the Canadian ministers of the Peace Treaties with Germany and Austria in behalf of Canada and the representation of Canada in Washington by her own resident minister. Women have the vote and are eligible for election to Parliament. In the latter part of 1920 there was an increasing demand for the right of Canada to amend her own constitution without applying to the king and his advisers. In this Quebec did not participate because her language and civil law rights are guaranteed against aggression so long as the consent of the British Parliament is required for amendments.

The Naval Service of Canada, established by the Naval Service Act of 1910, is divided into eight branches: naval, fisheries, fisheries' protection, radio-telegraphy, patrol of northern waters, tidal and current survey, hydrographic survey, and life-saving service. At the outbreak of the war two submarines built at Seattle, U. S. A., for Chile were acquired by the Canadian Government, and were brought to the naval base at Esquimalt, B. C.; the Canadian Naval Service was placed legally at the king's disposal, the "Rainbow" being already in commission off the Pacific Coast, and the "Niobe" was rapidly commissioned and put out to sea off the Atlantic coast. In 1920 the nucleus of the Canadian fleet was formed by the gift of Great Britain of the light cruiser "Aurora," the destroyers "Patriot" and "Patrician," and two submarines.

WAR HISTORY.—At the outbreak of the European War in 1914, steps were taken to organize a Canadian expeditionary force, and volunteer troops comprising cavalry, artillery, and infantry, numbering, with subsidiary units, upwards of 35,000 officers and men, were speedily assembled for preliminary training at Valcartier, Quebec. Within ten days the first contingent of over 33,000 troops embarked on transports at Quebec and crossed the Atlantic under convoy of the British navy. After the completion of their training on Salisbury Plain they arrived in France in February, 1915. Proceeding to Flanders they speedily entered into the fight, and during the spring and summer were engaged in four principal battles: Neuve-Chapelle, Ypres, Festubert, and Givenchy. The second division of Canadian troops landed in England on 6 March, and in November a third division was accepted by the imperial authorities. At the end of 1915 Canada's military contribution amounted to 212,690 troops out of an authorized total of 250,000. Legal measures were taken to increase it to 500,000. In 1916 Lieut.-General the Honorable Sir Julian Byng was appointed to succeed General Alderson in command of the Canadian troops at the front, and in June, 1917, on his promotion to command the Third Army, he was succeeded by Major General Sir Arthur Currie. After the second battle of Ypres the Canadian troops were occupied for some months chiefly with minor operations and raids, but they also took part in the severe fighting at St. Eloi in April, 1916, at Sanctuary Wood in June, 1916, and on the Somme in September, 1916. In 1917 the Canadian troops bore a brilliant part in the victory of Vimy (April), and distinguished themselves also at Arleux-en-Gohelle and Fresnoy. Shifting north towards Lens in June and July they battled hard against the Germans, attacking and capturing the famous Hill 70 near Loos. In September they moved toward Ypres where four attacks made in the last days of October and early in November resulted in the capture of Passchendaele and the highly important ground on which the village stands. In addition to the combatant troops valuable services were rendered by the Canadian Forestry and Railway Corps, also by the Aviation Corps. In 1918 the Canadian troops distinguished themselves in the battle of Amiens (6-10 August), the capture of Monchy-le-Preux (26-28 August), the breaking of the Drocourt-Quéant line (2-4 September), the crossing of the Canal-du-Nord and the capture of Bourlon Wood (27-29 September), the capture of Cambrai (1-9 October), the capture of Denain (20 October), the capture of Valenciennes (2 November), and the capture of Mons (10 November). Up to 31 December, 1918, the casualties among the Canadian Expeditionary Forces numbered 9,989 officers and 204,397 men, including 2,456 officers and 45,630 men who were killed in action or died of wounds; 220 officers and 5,185 men who died of diseases; 7,130 officers and 148,669 men wounded and 183 officers and 4,913 men presumed dead and missing. In addition there were 2,221 deaths in Canada and the prisoners of war numbered 3,575, of whom 2,508 were repatriated, escaped, or died while prisoners.

When the war broke out in August, 1914, Canada had a permanent force of only 3,000 men and an active militia of only 60,000. When hostilities ceased Canada had enlisted 595,441 men and had equipped and sent overseas 418,052 troops. The total value of war orders placed in Canada by the imperial government was about $1,200,000,000, and of this amount half was lent by the Dominion of Canada to the British Government. Up to November, 1918, the total outlay for the war was approximately $1,068,607,000. For the Red Cross and other war charities was raised the sum of $98,714,933. The ship-building contracts aggregated $70,000,000, and the war loans totaled $2,636,000,000, besides the war savings stamp issue of $50,000,000. In 1915 munitions to the value of $57,213,688 were exported from Canada; in 1916, $296,505,257; in 1917, $388,213,553; in 1918, $260,711,751.

To facilitate the return of the soldier to civil life a Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Department was created on 24 May, 1918; to assist him in settling on the land and to increase agricultural production, the Soldier Settlement Act was passed in February, 1918. Up to 1920 there were 14,072 settlers on purchased lands, with loans of $69,259,608, 1,964 on encumbered lands with loans of $4,742,778, and 3,735 settlers on Dominion lands with loans of $6,369,364. By order of Council all Dominion lands within a radius of fifteen miles of any railway were reserved for returned soldiers. The total area already occupied by soldier settlers under the Act is 4,854,799 acres. Canada's pension bill for the year, from 1 September, 1920, to 31 August, 1921, amounted to $34,000,000, there being approximately 85,000 disability and dependent pensions and gratuities paid, and 177,000 persons benefited. A special preference in respect to vacancies in the service of the Dominion Government was extended to returned soldiers in February, 1918.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—In 1910 the International Eucharistic Congress was held in Montreal, attended by the Papal Legate, Cardinal Vannutelli, all the bishops of Canada and the United States and many from Europe, about 4,000 priests and more than 500,000 visitors. Two years later the Congrès de la Langue Française en Amérique was convened in the same city, and a permanent committee formed to safeguard the use of French in the schools. On 25 May, 1914, Mgr. Louis-Nazaire Bégin, Archbishop of Quebec, was raised to the cardinalate by Pope Pius X with the title of Sta. Vitale, Gervasius and Protasius. The following year the National Congress of Priests Adorers of the Blessed Sacrament was held at Montreal, in which twenty-four bishops and hundreds of priests participated.

In October, 1916, the Bishops of Canada received a letter from the pope regretting the division amongst Canadian Catholics concerning the use of French in schools and parishes of provinces in which the majority is English, and affirming the right of the French to insist on their rights in this respect. In the same year a monument commemorating the third centenary of the establishment of the Faith in Canada was erected on the site of the convent and Church of the Recollets, the first missionaries to Canada.

In January, 1917, the twelve bishops of the province of Ontario, French and English, signed an important document begging the majority in the province to consider in a sympathetic way the aspirations and demands of their French fellow-citizens with regard to the establishing and functioning of bilingual schools, permitting them to obtain a suitable knowledge of French with a perfect knowledge of English. By disregarding the French minority, politicians threatened to undo the work of union accomplished in the Catholic Confederation of Canada. Since 1913 the school laws for the province of Ontario permitted the inspector of Catholic bilingual schools to be a Protestant and made such restrictions in the teaching of French that the situation became intolerable. A second papal letter recognized the right of the French in the province to demand the use of their mother-tongue in primary education, the faculty of designating by elected commissioners the schools which should be under bilingual régime, and normal schools for the formation of bilingual teachers, and permitted an appeal to the civil authorities with the approbation of the bishop.

During the course of the year 1919 the Dominion entertained three distinguished visitors in the persons of General Pau, Cardinal Mercier, and the Prince of Wales, and celebrated the centenary of the birth of Georges-Etienne Cartier. The first Semaine Sociale was held in Canada 21-25 June 1920. In 1918 Mgr. Petrus di Maria, formerly bishop of Catanzaro in Calabria, was appointed titular Archbishop of Iconium and Delegate Apostolic to Canada and Newfoundland to succeed Mgr. Stagni. The Dominion is divided ecclesiastically into eleven provinces. For statistics see following table and separate articles on listed dioceses:

Canary Islands (cf. C. E., III-243b).—The Canary Islands, with an area of 3342 square miles, consist of the following: Teneriffe, 919 square miles; Grand Canary, 631 square miles; Palma, 318 square miles; Lanzarote, 380; Gomera, 172; Fuereventura, 788; Hierro, 122. The population in 1914 was estimated at 478,500, including about 300 British in Las Palmas. The chief towns are Santa Cruz (population 61,000), the capital of the Canaries, San Cristobal de la Laguna (population 16,000), Las Palmas (population 60,000), the chief commercial town and the judicial capital of the archipelago, and Arucas (population about 9500), the chief center of the cochineal and sugar industries. For administrative purposes the Canary Islands are treated as a province of Spain, under a governor who resides at Teneriffe.

THE DIOCESE OF CANARIES (CANARIENSIS), comprises the whole archipelago of the Canary Islands, is suffragan of the archdiocese of Seville, and was erected by the anti-pope, Benedict XIII in 1404, with the episcopal residence at Lanzarote. Two years later, 1406, the true pope, Innocent VII, erected the see, and in 1435 changed the residence to Las Palmas, but the change did not become effective until 1485. From 1353 until 1485 there was a Bishop of Rubicond (Lanzarote), but this series is independent of the Bishops of Las Palmas. The diocese comprises the islands of Grand Canary, Fuerta-Ventura, and Lanzarote, a territory of 2465 square miles. The patroness of the diocese is Nuestra Senora del Pino, and the church at Las Palmas, dedicated to her, was raised to a minor basilica, 13 January, 1916.

On 22 April, 1919, took place the first diocesan synod held here for two hundred years, at which time the Pope sent a message of approval to the bishop and recommended to him the full application of all canonical rights, as far as the present circumstances of the diocese would permit. This synod was held under the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Angelo Marquina Corrales, who was appointed 18 July, 1913, to succeed Rt. Rev. Adolfo Pérez y Munoz, transferred to Badajoz the same day.

By 1920 statistics these islands count a Catholic population of 150,052, 50 Protestants, 8 Jews, and 23 other faiths; 53 parishes divided among 5 archpriests and 139 priests, 46 churches, 67 chapels and 15 convents with 34 religious and 194 sisters.

Candia, DIOCESE OF (CANDIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-244d), on the Greek Island of Crete or Candia, suffragan of Smyrna. This ancient see was re-established under its present status, as a Latin See, 21 December, 1874. The bishop resides in the city of Candia, on the north shore of the island. The present incumbent is Rt. Rev. Francesco Giuseppe Seminara, b. in Gangi, Sicily, 1863, entered the Order of Capuchins, 1887, ordained 1891, sent to the Candia Mission 1896, made apostolic administrator of the mission 2 April, 1908, and appointed bishop 22 June, 1910, succeeding Bishop Canavo, retired. The diocese counts only 800 Catholics, against 260,000 infidels and Schismatics. The mission is served (1922) by 7 Capuchin missionaries, 5 Brothers, 17 Sisters of St. Joseph of the Apparition, 3 parishes, 8 churches and chapels, 6 schools with 265 children, 3 secondary schools with 180 students, and 1 orphanage with 12 orphans.

Caneos and Macas, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (EQUATEUR ORIENTALIS; cf. C. E., III-249c), one of the four vicariates of Eastern Ecuador, South America. This territory, entrusted to the Dominicans, is at present (1922) under the administration of Rev. Enrique Vacas-Galindo, and comprises a Catholic population of 200,000. No statistics of the vicariate are published.

Canisius College, Buffalo, New York, was opened by the Fathers of the Society of Jesus in September, 1870. On 27 April, 1872, the feast of Bl. Peter Canisius, patron of the new institution, the first corner-stone was laid by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Stephen V. Ryan, D.D. In 1911 the erection of a new building was begun and on 6 January, 1913, the four college classes were transferred to this building, leaving the original building for the high school, which is conducted in connection with the college. This high school and the academic departments were added to the college upon the amendment of the charter to include them, on 25 October, 1906. The educational system followed is substantially that of all colleges conducted by the Society of Jesus based on the "Ratio Studiorum Societatis Jesu," a system outlined by the most prominent Jesuit educators in 1599 and revised in 1832.

The faculty library comprises about 10,000 volumes, the students' library 4,000, and there is a scientific reference library of 2,000. Since January, 1915, the Canisius seismological observatory has become one of two hundred stations co-operating with the United States Weather Bureau, Department of Seismology. The college possesses valuable collections of minerals and numerous biological and floral specimens as well as the Ottomar Reinecke collection of coleoptera and many famous manuscripts and Bibles, including the Antwerp Polyglot. The Rev. Michael J. Ahern, S.J., was appointed president of the college in 1919. There were 364 students registered for 1921.

Canon (cf. C. E., III-252b).—A bishop must consult the cathedral chapter when he wishes: to unite simple benefices to prebends or to suppress prebends on account of the smallness of the revenues; or to fix the time for the canon theologian to explain the Scriptures in church, to appoint to benefices or canonries (even honorary) in the cathedral or collegiate churches—a right now belonging to the bishop, all contrary customs being reprobated and contrary privileges being revoked (this modifies C. E., III-253c). The Holy Sec does not now reserve the collation of benefices rendered vacant in special months. He must obtain the consent of the chapter: to revive extinct dignities or to increase the number of canonical or beneficial prebends; or to alienate ecclesiastical property valued between 1,000 and 30,000 francs, or to lease the same for over nine years; but he does not require their consent or counsel to appoint a special feast day on a particular occasion. A canon must make his profession of faith in presence of the local ordinary or his delegate and the chapter, before taking possession of his benefice (no fixed time is now mentioned as in C. E., III-254a); if he negligently omits doing so, he is to be warned, and if after a reasonable time he fails to carry out his obligation he is guilty of contumacy and may be deprived of his benefice; in the meantime he is not to receive the income. Canons are obliged to take the anti-Modernist oath, are not exempt eo ipso from the yearly examinations in clerical sciences prescribed for priests in the three years following the completion of their studies. Canonries should be conferred only on priests noted for virtue and learning. Bishops should take into account the results obtained in the examinations just referred to. Other things being equal, a preference should be given to doctors of theology or canon law or to those who have worked successfully either in seminary or in the cure of souls.

Canoneses Regular (cf. C. E., III-296b).—Of the older congregations of canoneses only a few communities remain. In Italy, France, and Spain they have suffered severe losses through political difficulties, but are found in a flourishing condition in the communities of Bruges, Belgium, Hayward's Heath, Newton Abbot, and Hoddesdon, England. The two first named have gained a well merited reputation for their educational work. The latter have maintained perpetual adoration for about seventy years. The well known community of English Canoneses of Neully are now well established with an excellent school at Ealing. All these rank under the designation of Canoneses Regular of the Lateran.

The Canoneses Regular of St. Augustine, of the Congregation of Notre Dame, founded by St. Peter Fournier possess houses spread over France, Belgium, England, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Germany, Hungary, and Brazil. Each community numbers between forty and one hundred members divided into choir sisters, lay sisters, and tourières. The choir sisters take a fourth vow binding them to the institution. They sing office in choir and are enclosed.

CANONESSES REGULAR OF THE HOLY SEPULCHRE (cf. C. E., VIII-427a). Due to the zeal of Jean Van den Broeck, first Prior of Ste Odile, and restorer of the Order of the Holy Sepulchre in Lower Germany, the Canoneses Regular were established in 1480 at the convent of Kinroy, and thence spread to many other convents. Clemence Van den Broeck (sister of the prior), and two other religious (Catherine van Brugge and Catherine van Weert) from the convent of Godsboomgaars at Roermond went at the request of Jean Van den Broeck to Ste Odile where they were admitted to profession as canoneses 8 October, 1480, and on the following day, with three novices who had received the habit of the order, repaired to Kinroy. They observed the constitutions of the canoneses sent them from Perugia, recited and sang the Divine Office according to the rite of the patriarchal church of Jerusalem, and gave instruction to little children and young girls. The canoneses remained at Kinroy near Thorn, from 1480 till 1495, and from there founded Haeseyck (1495-1520). Kinroy became the mother-house for all the convents of canoneses established in the Low Countries, in France and in Germany, until the French Revolution. These were: Nieuwstad near Sittard (1486-96), from where they removed to Ste Elizabeth at Liège, remaining there till the end of the eighteenth century; Gartzen St. Antoine (Juliens), established in 1490, canoneses from here occupying Henegomve near Hasselt in 1507; St. Trond (1539-1798); Visé (1616-1822); Ste Walburga at Liège (1622); Huy (1619); Tongres (1640-1797); Bouillon (1626); Malmédy (1627); Wareme (1640); Mariembourg (1629); Marchienne-au-Pont (1637); Verviers (1635); Charleville (1622-1792), re-established in 1818, suppressed in 1904; Aix-la-Chapelle (1626-1805); Maestricht (1627-1797); Paris (Belle-Chasse), remaining there from 1635 till the end of the eighteenth century; Luyennes (in Touraine) Juliens (1644); Neuss; Ste Agathe at Liège (1634-1814); Hasselt (1638-1798); Turnhout (1622-1798); Jupille (1658-1823); Liège (1642), English community which repaired to England in 1793; Baden (1698); Bovigne (1699). Of these Wareme, Huy, Verviers, Ste Walburga and Ste Agathe at Liège, Aix, and Jupille were engulfed and annihilated in the devastating flood of the French Revolution. In consideration of their educational work all the convents were allowed to continue in existence until the death of the last member of the community. Baden was never suppressed and exists to-day. After the Revolution four former religious re-established themselves at Charleville in 1818. The English community of Liège has since 1799 been established in England at New Hall, near Chelmsford. Here they have at the present day a large and flourishing community of fifty-three members, under a superior, elected for life, assisted by a council, the members of which are elected annually. The canoneses, after a year's novitiate, take temporary vows for three years, and are then admitted to final profession. They maintain a boarding-school for the daughters of gentlemen.

Since the French Revolution the canoneses have been restored in Belgium through two different foundations. That of Turnhout, re-established in 1826, by the reunion of seven religious, formerly professed canoneses of Turnhout, who wished to restore it as a mother-house; and Bilsen, founded in 1837 by four religious—2 formerly professed canoneses of Hasselt, one of Ste Agathe (Liège), and one of Maestricht. Turnhout has ten affiliations: Meerhout (1885), Baelen-sur-Neithe (1878), Blauqput (1879), Vosselaer (1895), Meir (1900), Sacred Heart at Turnhout (1902), Tongerlo (1904), Mont Ste Odile (1912), Beeringen (1917), Ste Marguerite at Liège (1917). Bilsen has four affiliations: Alken (1853), Kinroy (1881), St. Trond (1886), Cozen (1903). In 1888 Bilsen restored the convent of Mont Ste Odile, which later became independent, but deprived of its resources, entered under the dependence of Turnhout in 1912, through Mgr. Drehmans, Bishop of Roermond. The organizations of Turnhout and Bilsen are similar. Each has a prioress general aided by a council composed of four members and a procurator general. The prioress and her council are elected by the capitular sisters every three years, though they may be elected for life. The superior of each mother-house carries the title sub-prioress. Each house has its own government, the local superiors being assisted by a council, an economist, and a mistress of lay sisters appointed by the prioress general every three years. The directors of both organizations meet from time to time at Bilsen, at Turnhout, or at one of the dependent houses.

The canoneses are distinguished by their spirit of prayer and sacrifice. They devote one hour each day to meditation, chant the Divine Office or sing it in choir, spend a half hour of recollection daily in the silence of their cells. The mother-house at Turnhout is especially devoted to education, having an intermediate school with preparatory section, courses in ancient humanities and preparatory classes, a primary and intermediate normal school, and a school for lace-making with primary classes; the institute numbers about 600 pupils. The dependent houses all give primary instruction, and Liège has intermediate and professional courses. The convent of the Sacred Heart at Turnhout gives primary instruction to more than 1000 students of the working class and has also a school for lace-making. The Institute of the Holy Sepulchre at Turnhout occupies a prominent place in education in Belgium. Impelled by pedagogical and ethical reasons, the institute, established in a Flemish country, has Flemicized its higher education for young girls, so that the students may now reach the higher grades without giving up their mother-tongue, which required redoubled efforts, and heretofore made many decide to limit their studies to primary grades. The institute has thus rendered a great service to the Flemish population, and set an example which many other schools have followed. A new foundation is to be made by the canoneses in Holland, where the religious intend to establish a catechumenate in order to devote themselves more fully and more directly to the Apostolate.

Canoneses distinguished for the sanctity of their lives and their zeal for the advancement of the order are: Claude de Moy (b. 1572; d. 1627), widow of the Comte de Chaligny, founded the convent at Charleville in 1622; Hélène d'Enckevoert, entered at Visé in 1616, founded Maestricht, Liège (Ste Agathe), and Hasselt, d. 1658; Bl. Alverna von Virmund (b. 1617), professed at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1635, founded Juliens in 1644. Among the prioresses of Turnhout were: Sister Marie-Thérèse de St. Joseph (Montens), prioress for more than thirty years, d. 1778; Sister Marie-Agnes des Sts. Anges (Coomans), prioress for thirty years, organized the young community according to ancient traditions, d. 1882; Sister Marie-Josephine du St. Sacrament (Smeyers), elected prioress at the age of thirty, governed the community for twelve years, during which time the number of religious doubled, founded several houses, affiliated Mont Ste Odile to Turnhout, d. 1914. The present prioress is Sister Marie Clara du Sacré Cœur (Van Goubergen), who founded the houses of Liège (Ste Marguerite) and Buringen. The present number of members in the community of Turnhout is 165.

Canons Regular of the Lateran (cf. C. E., II-293b).—The Congregation at present consists of eight provinces, of which four are in Italy, and the others divided according to nationality: French, English, Spanish-American, and Polish. The abbot general exercises jurisdiction throughout the Congregation and holds office for six years. Each provincial has a visitor general, also elected for six years, whose jurisdiction is limited and variable according to the discretion of the general chapter. In effect, the visitors are representatives of the general each in his own province, and all together form the Definitorium or general chapter. The chapter is convened every six years, and besides those mentioned all abbots of the Congregation have a vote in the election of the abbot general and the visitors. The principal local superiors, whose office runs for three years, are appointed in this chapter. A diet is held at the period of three years between the chapters for the appointment of local superiors as well as to discuss matters relating to the whole congregation. The change is now contemplated of extending to each community the faculty of electing its own superiors, as was the ancient custom in the Order. The actual membership of the Congregation (excluding the Austrian Canons) is roughly 250. In Italy there are ten houses. The French province has one abbey in France and four houses in Belgium. In England there are four, besides dependencies. The Spanish-American Province consists of one house in Spain and two in South America. In Poland there is one house with several dependencies.

For the most part the Canons are occupied in parochial, ministerial, and liturgical work. In some instances a mother-house forms the center of a group of parishes served by them. The communities of Verres (Val d'Aosta), Cracow (Poland), Salta (Argentina), Bodwin (England), have several parishes on this system. In Rome the two large parishes of Sant' Agnese fuori le mura and S. Giuseppe at Porta Pia are in the charge of the Canons.

A very flourishing college at Salta, in the Argentine Republic, has been under the direction of the Canons for some years. The students number something over 300, and the community in charge about fifteen or sixteen. A new foundation has recently been made at Buenos Aires.

The Church of S. Agnese, Rome, is the headquarters of the Primaria sodality of the Children of Mary, which has affiliations in every part of the world, and at the Church of S. Pietro in Vincoli the Canons direct the Confraternity of St. Peter's Chains.

AUSTRIAN CANONS REGULAR OF THE LATERAN (cf. C. E., III-296a).—In Austria there exists a congregation of six houses of Lateran Canons in no way connected with those whose abbot general resides in Rome. According to the catalogues of this year these Canons number altogether 336. All the houses have a number of parishes attached to them; that of St. Florian has as many as thirty-three. When we mention that this house has 102 members in community, it may be realized that it is these Canons who have preserved something of the ancient splendor of the Order, though it is to be feared that they also are now sharing the extreme difficulties with which Central Europe is beset. Cardinal Piffi was Abbot of this congregation before his elevation to the Archiepiscopal See of Vienna in 1914.

Canons Regular of St. Augustine (cf. C. E., III-288c) have under their charge the hospices of the Great St. Bernard and Simplon and the Abbey Nullius of Agaunum (q.v.).

CANONS REGULAR OF THE GREAT ST. BERNARD (cf. C. E., III-295b), number about sixty. The tradition of affording hospitality to travelers is still maintained at the two hospices of the Great St. Bernard and the Simplon, but besides this work they have various activities to engage them, having charge of a school of agriculture for the district of the Valais, and nine parishes dependent upon their monasteries. They have besides the direction of a sanatorium for consumptives, and four other parishes dependent upon the See of Sion. The superior general is called provost, and is elected for life; other superiors are elected every three years. The parish priests are nominated by the provost.

Canton (KUAM-TOM), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, in China. This territory, erected into the prefecture apostolic of Kwang-tung in 1848, was raised to a vicariate apostolic, and its name changed to Canton (Kuam-tom), by a Decree of 6 April, 1914. At the same time part of its territory was taken from it to erect the Vicariate Apostolic of Swatow (Chao-Chiou). Rt. Rev. Jean-Marie Mérel, of the Foreign Missions of Paris, to whom this vicariate is entrusted, former prefect apostolic of Kwang-tung and titular Bishop of Oricus, was promoted to vicar apostolic by the decree of erection. In 1908 Bishop Mérel traveled to Canada and induced the Missionaries of the Immaculate Conception, a newly founded order in Montreal, to open a house at Canton. They established the school of the Holy Ghost which, like their other works, flourished under the zealous guidance of the first superior, Rev. Mother Marie de Lourdes. In 1911 the Chinese Revolution somewhat interfered with the work of evangelization. The Republican party, however, favored religious freedom and the Government confided to the missionaries the care of the lepers. Rev. Father Conrardy was made the first director, and under his wise and prudent administration a small hospital was soon built, which was later enlarged and united to the Government hospital. The institution cared for one thousand lepers. The establishment planned by Fathers Conrardy and Fourquet, and the director of Ho-Ko-tsun, was regulated by an agreement signed by Bishop Mérel and the superintendent of Police at Chang-King-Wa. Later on a similar contract gave to the missionaries the direction of the nurseries and Government orphanages. In 1921 Father Fourquet was officially charged with the charitable works of the city of Canton. Bishop Mérel resigned and became an humble missionary in a Chinese parish in the Diocese of Malacca in 1914, and his successor, Bishop Guébriant was not appointed until February, 1917. During the interim the vicariate apostolic was ably administered by Father Fourquet and also by Father Rayssac, who later became vicar apostolic of Swatow. A Decree of 9 April, 1920, took another portion of this vast territory to erect the vicariate apostolic of Shiu-Kow, entrusted to the Salesian Fathers of Dom Bosco, with Rt. Rev. Luigi Versiglia as vicar apostolic. The erection of Kwang-tung and Hainan, with Bishop Gautier as administrator, took place the following August. The American Missionaries of Maryknoll have joined the Foreign Missionaries of Paris, and are awaiting the time when the region entrusted to their care will be made a separate vicariate.

Since the proclamation of the Republic the educational system has been improved and developed. The Sisters of the Immaculate Conception (Chinese), founded by Father Fourquet in 1897, have done splendid work in directing the schools and in giving religious instruction to women. The Little Sisters of the Poor established themselves in the vicariate in 1913. After having successively served as apostolic visitor to China and Siberia, Bishop Guébriant was elected Superior of the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, and left China to take up his residence in Paris; his successor has not yet been appointed. During the period between 1911 and the present time the people have often chosen the missionaries to act as intermediaries between them and the invading forces. According to 1920 statistics Canton has a total population of 20,000,000, of whom 35,773 are Catholics, 7000 catechumens and 15,000 Protestants. The mission is served by 72 missionary and 26 native priests, 258 churches, chapels and oratories, 1190 stations, 1 seminary with 50 students, 143 schools for boys and 51 for girls with a total of 4300 pupils, 1 college with 300 students, 14 orphanages, 5 Little Brothers of Mary, 16 Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres, 16 Canadian Missionary Sisters of Mary Immaculate, 25 Chinese religious, and 2 leper hospitals caring for 750 cases.

Cap Haïtien, DIOCESE OF (CAPITIS HAITIANI; cf. C. E., III-308c), in the Republic of Haiti. After the destruction of the episcopal residence by fire the present administrator, Bishop Kersuzan built a new and equally imposing edifice which, with the exception of the chapel, was completed in 1908. The seminary for the ecclesiastical province of Haiti had been carried on at Pont-Chateau, in Brittany, but when the French Government outlawed the religious orders, Bishop Kersuzan succeeded in installing his present seminary (Saint-Jacques) at Lampaul in the Diocese of Quimper. It is under the care of former missionaries of Haiti, a superior and 4 professors, and has 30 students. The same bishop has also founded at Cap Haïtien the College of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, which has 17 teachers and 300 students. In addition there are: a normal school for boys with 2 teachers and 30 students, a boys' school conducted by 10 Christian Brothers and some Haitian lay professors, and 22 elementary parish schools with 75 teachers and 1800 pupils. Every month the government gives a very small sum of money to some of the schools.

As a consequence of the revolution the American army has occupied Cap Haïtien since 1915. At first the Americans were well liked by the natives, but the arrogance of the civic functionaries has made them very unpopular. At the outbreak of the World War 14 missionaries left the diocese and joined the army. Of these 2 were killed and others returned home invalidated. Nearly all of them were decorated and 3 received the Médaille militaire. Several laymen also joined the ranks, of whom 1 died and 3 were decorated.

The diocese contains 500,000 Catholics, 25 parishes, 30 churches, 83 missions, 1 convent of Christian Brothers, 5 convents of the Daughters of Wisdom and Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, 1 hospital conducted by the Daughters of Wisdom. The laity of the diocese have formed the following associations: Rosary Society, Society of the Children of Mary, Association for Perseverance, Bona Mors Association, and the Sacred Heart Sodality for men. Since 1907 the diocese has lost two zealous priests: Mgr. Ribault, who as vicar-general and prothonotary apostolic labored in the diocese for 40 years, and Canon Châté, who as vicar-general unselfishly worked in the country for nearly 50 years. The fiftieth anniversary of the priestly ordination and arrival in Haiti of Bishop Kersuzan was celebrated in the diocese 17 November, 1921. In 1909 the bishop received the pallium, and in 1921 was named assistant at the pontifical throne and Roman Count.

Capaccio and Vallo, DIOCESE OF (CAPUTAUQUENSIS ET VALLENSIS; cf. C. E., III-307d), in the province of Salerno, Southern Italy, suffragan of Salerno. Rt. Rev. Paolo Incuzio, appointed to this see 17 December, 1900, was promoted to Sorrento 9 July, 1917, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Francesco Cammarota, succeeded him. Born in Maiori 1874, he was made vicar general of Isernia and honorary chamberlain 1905, and appointed bishop 22 December, 1917.

The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 122,400 Catholics, 102 parishes, 156 secular and 14 regular clergy, 10 seminarians, 9 Brothers, and 282 churches or chapels.

Capizana, DIOCESE OF (CAPIZANENSIS), in the Philippine Islands, suffragan of Manila. This diocese was erected by a decree of 17 December, 1902, which, however, was not put into effect. The name does not appear in the decree of 10 April, 1910, by which Pius X created some new dioceses in the Philippines, and the territory which was originally intended for this diocese has been divided between the dioceses of Calbayog and Zamboanga.

Capocci, FILIPPO, musician, b. in Rome, 1840; d. there on 24 July, 1911. He studied harmony under the direction of his father Gaetano (1871-90), a composer of merit, and in 1861 obtained his diploma as a pianist from the Accademia di Santa Cecilia. In 1875 he became organist in St. John Lateran and in 1898 succeeded his father there as maestro di cappella. Later he was made a commander of the order of St. Gregory, and a member of the pontifical Commission of Sacred Chant. Among his numerous compositions are five striking sonatas and a magnificent oratorio, "Sant' Anastasio" (1863).

Capua, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CAPUANENSIS; cf. C. E., 319c), in the province of Naples, Southern Italy. This see is filled (1922) by Most Rev. Gennaro Cosenza, b. in Naples 1852, appointed titular Bishop of Dioclea 1890, transferred to Caserta 1892, made an assistant at the pontifical throne 20 July, 1899, promoted 4 March, 1913, succeeding Cardinal Capececelatro de Castelpagano, who had been appointed 20 August, 1880, created cardinal 27 July, 1885, d. 14 November, 1912.

The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 109,000 Catholics, 57 parishes, 235 secular and 18 regular clergy, 180 seminarians, 129 religious women, and 96 churches or chapels.

Capuchin Friars Minor (cf. C. E., III-320b).—In the pontifical legislation affecting the Capuchin Friars Minor in recent years, the first place must be given to the legislative acts of Pius X concerning the various families which constitute the Order of Friars Minor, whereby the relation of these families to each other was explicitly determined and what might be termed "a union of charity" set forth.

In the Letter "Septimo jam pleno sæculo" of 4 October, 1909, Pius X reiterated the declaration of his predecessors that the Order of Friars Minor is constituted by three "families": the Friars Minor of the Leonine Union (formerly known as "of the Strict Observance"), the Friars Minor Conventual, and the Friars Minor Capuchin. The ministers-general of the three families, are equally the vicars and successors of St. Francis, each for his own family and for the members of the Second and Third Franciscan Orders, under the respective jurisdictions. In assemblies of ministers-general, precedence is granted to the minister general of the Leonine Union as primus inter pares. To emphasize the fundamental unity of the order, the Letter declares that the two basilicas of St. Francis and St. Mary of the Angels at Assisi, are quasi commune patrimonium of the three families, where all Friars Minor may meet "as in their paternal home"; and the Friars who have the care of these basilicas are to hold them in trust, not merely for the members of their own family but for the entire order. All indulgences and privileges granted to one family of the order are granted equally to the other families, except such concessions as mitigate the Seraphic Rule or affect the constitutions of the respective families.

In the Letter "Pauca ante dictus" of 1 November, 1909, Pius X condemned the proposition that the Capuchins do not represent the direct line from St. Francis; and declared that the Capuchins equally with the Observants and Conventuals represent, and have their origin in, the original undivided Order of Friars Minor; and equally with the Observants and Conventuals may claim the Saints and Beati of the undivided order as their own.

Like other religious orders, that of the Capuchins has had to bring its constitutions into harmony with the more recent legislation of the Church. At the General Chapter of 1908 a revision of the constitutions was ordered to be made. This revision was completed by Easter, 1909. Substantially the revised constitutions remain the same as the original constitutions, even the very wording being maintained. The modifications chiefly concerned the studies of those destined for the priesthood and the discipline of the junior members of the order.

The foreign missions accredited to the order in 1920 comprised 7 dioceses, 8 vicariates apostolic, 6 prefectures apostolic, and 21 missions governed by regular superiors. The number of Capuchins serving these missions was 1011; the number of Catholics served by the missionaries was 1,886,504. There were 795 mission stations, 584 schools and 59 colleges for higher education, and 65 orphanages. The number of baptisms registered in 1920 was 51,853. In 1921 a new mission field was taken over by the Swiss Capuchins in British East Africa. According to the general statistics of 1920, the order is divided into 54 provinces comprising 824 convents and hospices. The number of Friars in that year was 9650, of whom 5320 were priests. The European War of 1914-18 tended to reduce the number of religious, both because of the closing of the novitiates in many provinces and by the losses incurred on the battlefields. During the war 3082 Capuchins served in the various armies, of whom 506 served as chaplains and the others either as combatants or as members of the Red Cross staff. Of these 187 lost their lives. Twelve convents were totally destroyed within the war area.

Caqueta, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (CAQUETENSIS; cf. C. E., III-328a), in Colombia, South America, is dependent on the Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs. It is entrusted to the Capuchins, the present prefect apostolic being Rev. Mgr. Fidelio de Montclar, b. at Montclar, province of Catalonia, 1887, entered the Order of Capuchins 1882, appointed 25 January, 1905. This prefecture should be raised to the rank of a vicariate, but circumstances make such a change inadvisable at the present time (1922).

Carabobo, DIOCESE OF (DE CARABOBO; cf. C. E., II-307b); also known as Barquisimeto, although the name was changed by a decree of the consistory of 12 February, 1907, in Venezuela, South America, suffragan of Santiago de Venezuela. After the death of Rt. Rev. Bishop Rodriguez, about 1901, the see was left vacant until the appointment of Rt. Rev. Agatón Felipe Alvarado, b. at Bopare, 1845, ordained 1871, appointed 16 August, 1910, and consecrated 6 November following. By 1920 statistics this diocese is credited with a Catholic population of 80,000, 74 parishes and 49 chapels.

Caracas OF SANTIAGO DE VENEZUELA, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANTI JACOBI DE BENEZUELA; cf. C. E., III-328c), in the Republic of Venezuela, South America. This see is now filled (1922) by Rt. Rev. Felipe Rincon Gonzales, b. in Chinquiquiva 1861, prelate of the Holy See 24 August, 1915, appointed 10 August, 1916, to succeed Rt. Rev. Juan Bautista Castro, d. 7 August, 1915. The population of this territory, numbering 600,000, is almost entirely Catholic. The 1920 statistics credit it with 183 priests, 86 parishes, 257 churches or chapels, 49 religious, and 224 Sisters.

Caratinga, DIOCESE OF (CARATINGENSIS), in Brazil, South America. This diocese was erected 15 December, 1915, by a division of the archdiocese of Mariana, the whole eastern part, comprising 13 parishes, being taken to form the new diocese. It comprises the civil provinces of Caratinga, Manhuassu, Carangola and the communes of Jose Pedro, São-Manuel do Motum and Aymores. The western boundary line of these territories forms the division line for the Diocese of Caratinga.

The first bishop appointed to this see, 28 January, 1918, was Rt. Rev. Joachim Maurede da Salva Leite, titular Bishop of Sebaste, but he refused the appointment. Rt. Rev. Manuel Nogueira Duarte, b. in Rio Preto, was then appointed, 4 April, 1918, but after a short administration he retired, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Carlos Fernão da Silva Tavora, was appointed, 18 December, 1919. No statistics have yet been published for this diocese.

Carcassonne, DIOCESE OF (CARCASSONENSIS; cf. C. E., III-331c), in the province of Aude, France, suffragan of Toulouse. This ancient see is now filled (1922) by Rt. Rev. Paul Félix Beuvain de Beauséjour, b. in Vesoul 1839, ordained 1863, made vicar general of Besançon 1892, member of the Academy of Besançon from 1875, and for some time president of it, appointed 9 June, 1902. This diocese has in its possession one of the winding-sheets which enveloped the sacred body of Christ. It was brought to Carcassonne in 1289 by two Augustinian monks driven from Palestine by the Turks, who had obtained it from a noble Jewish family. The authenticity of the relic was confirmed by King Charles VI and Pope Benedict XIII, and many miracles have been performed through it. It reposes in the cathedral.

In 1915 there were thirty principal establishments of religious women in this territory, belonging to the Dominicans, Sisters of Charity, Sisters of the Holy Family of Nevers, of Our Lady of Sorrows, of St. Aignan, of St. Francis of Assisi, of St. Joseph of Lyons, of St. Joseph of Cluny, of Bon Secours of Troyes, Little Sisters of the Poor, Sisters de l'Action de Grace, of the Holy Name of Joseph, of the Angel Guardian, of Our Lady of Refuge, Dominican Sisters of the Sick and Poor Clares.

The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with a population of 300,537, almost all of whom are Catholic, and 30,689 of whom are in Carcassonne proper. There are 37 first class parishes, 378 succursal parishes, 70 vicariates formerly supported by the State, 600 secular priests, 20 seminarians, 450 churches or chapels, 3 secondary schools with 550 pupils, and 60 primary schools with 3,200 pupils. One Catholic periodical is published.

Cardiff, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CARDIFFENSIS; cf. C. E., XI-18a), in Wales, was formerly known as the Diocese of Newport. It was erected into an archdiocese 7 February, 1916, and the name changed to Cardiff, with Menevia as a suffragan see. At the same time the Most Rev. James Romanus Bilsborrow, O.S.B., was appointed the first archbishop, 7 February, 1916, to succeed Rt. Rev. John Cuthbert Hedley, O.S.B., who had filled the see of Newport and Menevia (changed to Newport 1896) from 1881, died 11 November, 1915. Archbishop Bilsborrow was born 27 August, 1862, ordained 1889, consecrated Bishop of Port Louis 24 February, 1911, and translated from that see to Cardiff, which he resigned, owing to illness, 1 September, 1920.

The second archbishop and present incumbent, Most Rev. Francis Mostyn, born 6 August, 1860, ordained 14 September, 1884, consecrated Vicar Apostolic of Wales 14 September, 1895, translated to Menevia 14 May, 1898, was promoted to the Archdiocese of Cardiff 19 March, 1921.

On 12 March, 1920, a secular chapter consisting of eight canons was erected and the regular chapter ceased to exist. During the World War few of the clergy could be spared, but five of the secular and five regular priests entered the service as chaplains, and the Catholic men enlisted out of all proportion to their numbers and many of them were killed.

By present (1921) statistics the archdiocese numbers: 53 missions, 53 churches, 32 stations, 1 abbey of men, 22 convents of women, 53 secular and 52 regular clergy, 5 high schools with 50 teachers and an attendance of 899, 1 training school with 4 teachers and an attendance of 60, 39 elementary schools with 408 teachers and an attendance of 12,604, 3 industrial schools with 12 teachers and an attendance of 314, one secondary and all the elementary schools are aided by the government. There are 3 homes for children, one of which cares for the aged as well, 1 hospital in charge of the Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary, and 3 refuge homes for women. A fund for infirm secular clergy is established and there is a Catholic Young Men's Society among the laity; one parish magazine and the "Welsh Catholic Herald" (a weekly) are published.

Cardinal (cf. C. E., III-333b).—Cardinals are priests or bishops chosen freely by the pope to aid him by their advice and co-operation in the government of the Church. They may be chosen from any nation, but the Code now provides that only those who have received priestly orders are to be selected. The college of cardinals is now limited to 70 members, 6 cardinal bishops, 50 cardinal priests, and 14 cardinal deacons. The official "Annuario Pontificio" for 1921, however, gives a list of 53 cardinalial titles and 16 cardinalial deaconries: S. Maria della Scala and S. Maria in Cosmedin are now permanent deaconries, but SS. Cosma e Damiano and S. Maria in Aquirio have been raised for this occasion to the rank of presbyteral titles. The following persons are excluded from the cardinalate: (a) those who are of illegitimate birth, and those who are irregular or prevented by canonical discipline from exercising their sacred orders, notwithstanding the fact that by Apostolic authority they may have been dispensed so as to receive orders and dignities not excluding the episcopal; (b) those who have a living legitimate child or grandchild, or (c) those who are related by blood in the first or second degree to any living cardinal.

Clerics who are promoted to the sacred purple by the very fact not only vacate their dignities, churches, and benefices, but lose their ecclesiastical pensions, unless the Pope provides otherwise in a particular case. By an option made in the consistory and approved by the Pope, cardinal priests, while respecting priority of order and promotion, can take another title; so, too, cardinal deacons may select another deaconry, and if they have been cardinal deacons for ten years can become cardinal priests. In the last case the cardinal ranks ahead of all the cardinal priests who received the sacred purple after him. If a suburbicarian see becomes vacant, cardinal priests who at that time are in the Curia or are temporarily absent from it transacting business for the pope, can exercise the right of option regarding the vacant see, observing priority of promotion. Cardinals to whom a suburbicarian see has been assigned cannot exercise an option on another; however, the dean of the cardinals, that is the cardinal who has held a suburbicarian see longest, is always appointed Bishop of Ostia, while retaining his old see. Cardinals are obliged to reside at the papal court and may not absent themselves without the pope's leave; however, the cardinal suburbicarian bishops require no permission to go to their dioceses; those who are bishops of non-suburbicarian dioceses are exempt from residence at court, but when they come to Rome they must present themselves before the Sovereign Pontiff and may not leave the City without asking his permission.

PRIVILEGES.—Among the privileges which every cardinal enjoys from the time of his promotion in the consistory are the right: of hearing confessions, even those of religious of either sex anywhere, and of absolving from all sins and censures, except censures reserved very specially to the Holy See, and those arising from a violation of the secrecy of the Holy Office; of choosing for himself and his attendants any confessor who, if he lacks jurisdiction, obtains it by being thus selected, even in regard to all sins and censures, except the censures just mentioned as being beyond the competence of a cardinal; of preaching everywhere; of celebrating Mass on Holy Thursday and three Masses at night on Christmas, or of permitting a priest to do so in his presence; of celebrating Mass on a portable altar not only at home, but wherever he is, and of allowing another Mass to be said on it in his presence; of saying Mass at sea, on taking the proper precautions; of saying Mass according to his own calendar in any church or oratory; of enjoying a personally privileged altar daily; of gaining in his private chapel all the indulgences which are conditioned on a visit to a church or public building in the place where he is stopping, a privilege which may be enjoyed by his attendants also; of bestowing the episcopal blessing everywhere, but if he is in Rome this may be given only in churches and holy places and at gatherings of the faithful; of carrying a pectoral cross over his mozzetta, and of using the mitre and pastoral staff; of celebrating Mass in any private chapel, but without prejudice to the individual holding the indult; of pontificating with a throne and canopy in any church outside of Rome; however, if the church is a cathedral, the cardinal must first inform the ordinary; of sharing everywhere the honors usually accorded to local ordinaries; of speaking with authority in the external forum, when testifying as to papal pronouncements; of having a chapel exempt from the ordinary's visitation; of freely disposing, even by will, of what has been acquired with the income from his benefices—however, a cardinal having a domicile in Rome must leave to the pontifical treasury his sacred equipment, except his rings and pectoral cross—and all things intended permanently for Divine worship, no matter with what funds they were purchased, unless he bequeaths them to a church, public oratory, pious place, ecclesiastic or member of a religious institute; of consecrating and blessing churches, altars, altar equipment, abbots, etc., anywhere, but observing the due formalities; however, he may not consecrate the sacred oils if he is not a bishop, and he must get the consent of the ordinary to bless or consecrate a sacred place; of precedence over all prelates and patriarchs, and even papal legates, unless the legate be a cardinal resident in his own territory—outside of Rome a cardinal legate a latere precedes all others; of conferring first tonsure and minor orders, provided the candidates have the proper dismissional letters; of administering confirmation, but in this case he must make the proper entries in the parochial register; of granting indulgences of two hundred days, to be gained as often as the conditions are fulfilled in places or institutes and by persons under his jurisdiction or protection—he can also grant the same to be gained in other places by those who are present there, though not toties quoties; of entering the cloister of convents; of conferring on his own and even private oratories all the rights and privileges of semi-public oratories; of keeping or reading books forbidden by the merely ecclesiastical law. Finally, cardinals are exempt from penalties imposed by canon law unless they are expressly included.

Anyone who without permission of the Holy See dares to bring a cardinal before a lay tribunal on a matter arising out of his office incurs an excommunication specially reserved to the Holy See; a similar excommunication is imposed on anyone who lays violent hands on a cardinal, such a culprit is in addition ipso jure rendered infamous and is deprived of his benefice, office, dignities, pension and position, the Church if he held any.

It is the privilege of the dean of the cardinals to ordain and consecrate the pope-elect, if he is not already a priest or bishop; in doing so he wears the pallium; in his absence the sub-dean enjoys this right, but if he also is unable to officiate the ceremony is to be performed by the oldest suburbicarian cardinal bishop. The cardinal proto-deacon acting for the pope imposes the pallium on those entitled to it or on their representatives; it is he also who announces the name of the newly elected pontiff to the people. A cardinal promoted to a suburbicarian see and sent into it canonically is the true bishop of the diocese, enjoying in it all the powers of a residential bishop. The other cardinals after taking canonical possession of their titles or deaconries enjoy there all the rights which local ordinaries have in their own churches, but they have not the power of holding trials or of exercising jurisdiction over the faithful; they may, however, regulate discipline, correct morals and supervise the service of their own churches. A cardinal priest can pontificate in his own title with throne and canopy, and a cardinal deacon can assist pontifically in his own deaconry and no one else is permitted to do so there without his consent; but in other churches in Rome the cardinals require papal permission to have a throne and canopy.

Cardinal Protector (cf. C. E., III-341a).—Religious orders and institutes have their cardinal protectors whose only office is to help them by his counsel and to protect their rights. Unless otherwise expressly provided for in particular cases the cardinal protector has no jurisdiction over the institute or its members, and cannot interfere in its internal discipline or the administration of its property.

Cariati, DIOCESE OF (CARIATENSIS; cf. C. E., III-347d), in the province of Cosenza, Southern Italy, suffragan of Santa Severina. The bishop of this see bears the titles of Baron of Santo Nicolo dell'Alto and Abbé of St. Peter and St. Mark. Rt. Rev. Giovanni Scotti, b. in Barono 1874, was appointed to this see 21 February, 1911, and filled it until his promotion to the Archdiocese of Rossano, 13 December, 1918. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Antonio Caruso, was appointed to succeed him 10 March, 1919. The statistics of 1920 count the Catholic population of this diocese at 60,000, and credit it with 30 parishes, 4 vicariates, 64 secular priests, 30 seminarians, and 70 churches or chapels.

Carmelite Order (cf. C. E., III-354a).—Recent discussion about the antiquity of the Order has led to little more than a re-assertion of the well known arguments on both sides. An important item of evidence, however, has been found by Fr. Gabriel Wessels in the writings of the Dominican Stephen de Salanhaco, b. about 1210, became Prior of Limoges in 1249, of Toulouse in 1259, Visitor in Scotland in 1261, and died at Limoges 8 January, 1291. He asserts that the Patriarch of Antioch, Aymericus de Malafayda, wrote a rule of life for the hermits whom St. Berthold had gathered together on Mount Carmel. This rule, which is also referred to by a number of somewhat later writers, has been identified by Father Wessels with the one commonly attributed to John XLIV (or more correctly XLII), Bishop of Jerusalem in the fourth century. It had long since been observed by critics that it could not be the work of a Greek author, but was clearly by a Latin who was very slightly, if at all, acquainted with the Greek language, and that the Latin language used showed clear traces of the French nationality of the author. All this is fully borne out by Fr. Wessels' discovery and the conclusions he arrived at, and it disposes of one of the great difficulties with which the whole question of the antiquity of the order is beset. Perhaps the deacon Joseph of Antioch, author of the (lost) treatise inscribed "Speculum perfectæ militiæ primitivæ ecclesiæ" may have been a contemporary of Aymericus, since Possevin's contention that he belonged to sub-Apostolic times, is clearly impossible.

Among the recent Generals of the Discalced Carmelites must be mentioned Cardinal Jerome-Mary Gotti, born at Genoa 29 March, 1834, member of the Order since 1850, procurator-general 1872 till 1881, when he became general, which office he held until his nomination as internuncio to Brazil in 1891. He was consecrated titular Archbishop of Petra 22 March, 1892, recalled to Rome in 1895, and elevated to the cardinalial dignity. For about fifteen years he held the most important office of prefect of the Congregation of Propaganda. He died 19 March, 1916.

The most important recent contributions to Carmelite literature are "Analecta Ordinis Carmelitarum," published in Rome (under the editorship of Fr. Gabriel Wessels), by order of the General Chapter of the Calced Carmelites of 1908. In connection with this periodical was edited in 1912 the first volume of "Acta Capitulorum," containing the chapters from 1318 to 1593, the text being edited by Fr. Wessels, and practically all the notes by Fr. Benedict Zimmerman, O.C.D. The Discalced Carmelites publish, since 1911, "Études Carmelitaines historiques et critiques" (Paris, Gabalda).

In 1918 there were 18 provinces and 112 convents of Calced Carmelite Friars, with about 2800 members; in 1913 there were 14 provinces and 3 semi-provinces with 172 convents and residences of Discalced Carmelite Friars and about 1900 religious. The number of convents of Discalced Nuns in 1912 was 375, with over 5000 religious. There are (1921) 16 convents of nuns in England and 12 in Ireland. In the United States there are communities at Baltimore, St. Louis, New Orleans, Boston, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Santa Clara (Cal.), Wheeling, Los Angeles (two houses), Seattle, Bettendorf (Ia.), Grand Rapids, and New York. The New York foundation was made 16 July, 1920, by five Carmelite nuns from Baltimore. On May, 1875, some nuns from Reims established a convent at Hochelaga near Montreal, and another Canadian foundation was made at St. Boniface 26 July, 1912. The American Province of Calced Carmelite Friars has a novitiate and scholasticate at Niagara Falls, Ont., and priories in the Archdioceses of Chicago and Toronto, and Dioceses of Newark, Pittsburgh, Altoona, and Leavenworth. The Ratisbon Province of Discalced Carmelite Fathers has a foundation at Milwaukee, Wis., and the Cataluna Province has a foundation at Tucson, Arizona. Fathers of the Irish Province of Calced Carmelites are represented in the Archdiocese of New York. On 1 February, 1921, the Holy See issued a decree of dissolution of the convent of Marienthal in Alsace, and of secularization of the religious guilty of insubordination to ecclesiastical authority.

Carmes, MARTYRS OF THE.—On 26 January, 1916, the cause of beatification or declaration of martyrdom of Jean Marie du Lau, archbishop of Arles, François-Joseph de la Rochefoucauld, Bishop of Beauvais, Pierre-Louis de la Rochefoucauld, Bishop of Saintes and their 210 companions, martyrs of the Carmes, was introduced and signed by His Holiness Pope Benedict XV. The three prelates and their companions were victims of their loyalty to the Church in their refusal to subscribe to the civil constitution of the clergy which at the end of the eighteenth century the infidel government of France sought to impose on her. Jean Marie du Lau, b. in Perigaux in 1738, was distinguished for his piety and love of learning from his youth. He received his philosophical and theological training at the Seminary of St. Sulpice and as Archbishop of Arles devoted himself particularly to the studies, spirit and discipline of his clergy. Refusing to take the oath to the civil constitution he was brought to Paris and cast into the prison of the Carmes, formerly a Carmelite monastery, where he was assassinated. François-Joseph de la Rochefoucauld, b. in Angoulême in 1736, studied theology in the seminary of St. Sulpice and the College of Navarre and in 1772 was appointed bishop of Beauvais. He wrote and worked in the defense of the Faith and was noted for his goodness to the poor. His brother Pierre-Louis de la Rochefoucauld, b. in Angoulême in 1744, studied at St. Sulpice and passed from one ecclesiastical dignity to another, being finally promoted to the see of Saintes. His principal care was the education of youth, and he was a vigorous antagonist of Jansenism. As president of the States Provincial of Saintonge and deputy of the States General he signed the principles set forth against the civil constitution of the clergy. Together with his brother, the bishop of Beauvais, he was imprisoned in the Carmes, where persisting in their refusal to take the oath, they were put to death.

Caroline Islands, formerly a German possession, now under the mandatory of Japan, according to the Treaty of Versailles (1919). The chief islands are Ponapé, Yap, Truk, and Kusai. For administrative purposes, the islands were divided into two groups: (a) the Eastern Carolinas, with Truk and Ponapé as centers of administration, and (b) the Western Carolinas with Palau and Yap as administrative centers. In Yap there are 76 Japanese, 8,537 natives, and 3 Europeans.

The world wide interest which has centered in the tiny island of Yap is due to the fact that the cable lines connecting San Francisco, Shanghai, New Guinea, and the East Indian Islands cross at this point, which is the crux of the Pacific cable communication. After the outbreak of the European War in October, 1914, the Japanese fleet took possession of the Caroline Islands and by a special arrangement effected in November, 1914, became the sole administrators of the island. The cables connecting New York and Germany were cut and diverted respectively by France to Brest and by Great Britain to Halifax, so that American press dispatches must be sent by way of Manila. As Japan was awarded the mandate over the former German islands north of the equator, she claimed that Yap was included in the mandate. This award put Japan in control of the cable communications, also, and to this the United States vigorously protested. At the Congress of Communications called in Washington in 1920, mainly to determine the disposition of the cables taken from Germany during the war, the United States insisted that the above two cables should be restored to Germany and that the Far East line crossing the Pacific by way of Yap be internationalized.

The controversy rising from this question was settled at the Disarmament Conference in Washington in 1921 and the following agreements were made: The United States was to have free access to Yap and as Japan was to maintain on the island an adequate radio-telegraphic station co-operating effectively with the cables and other radio stations, the United States gave up its right to establish radio-telegraph stations in Yap. No cable censorship was to be exercised by Japan; the free entry and exit of all persons and property was to be guaranteed; no taxes, port, harbor, or landing charges or exactions, either in the operation of the cables or pertaining to property, persons or vessels were to be levied. Traffic in arms and ammunition was to be controlled. The supplying of intoxicating spirits and beverages to natives was prohibited, also military training of natives, except for police and local defense. No military or naval base could be established or fortifications erected. With respect to missionaries, Japan was to insure complete freedom of conscience and the free exercise of all forms of worship, consonant with public order and morality and freedom of access to all missionaries who could acquire and possess property, erect religious buildings and open schools throughout the country. The above clause regarding the missionaries will reopen more than one hundred Christian schools throughout the mandated area, as under a ruling of the League of Nations, the Japanese had closed these mission schools and established their own secular instruction in accordance with the laws of Japan. The United States Senate ratified the treaty with Japan, 1 March, 1922.

In 1911 the Prefecture Apostolic of the Caroline Islands was suppressed with that of the Mariana Islands, their territory except the island of Guam, being then created into the VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF THE MARIANA AND CAROLINE ISLANDS (q.v.).

Carpi, DIOCESE OF (CARPENSIS; cf. C. E. III-374c), in the province of Modena, Italy, suffragan of Modena. This see is at present (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Andrea Righetti, b. in San Colombano Cornice, 1843, appointed 14 December, 1891, made an assistant at the pontifical throne, 16 May, 1916. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 78,005 Catholics, 31 parishes, 78 secular and 4 regular clergy, 18 seminarians, 4 Brothers, 54 Sisters, and 50 churches or chapels.

CARR, JAMES, educationist, b. at Preston, England, November, 1826, d. at Formby, England, 9 November, 1913. Entering Ushaw in his eleventh year, he was ordained in 1850, two years before his time, owing to the need for priests in the Diocese of Liverpool, as a result of the typhus plague. He was at once appointed to St. Nicholas' pro-cathedral and with a fellow-curate founded a school for the children of the Whitechapel district. In 1854 he was made rector of Douglas, Isle of Man, where he built the Church of St. Mary, said to be the most remarkable building on the island. During his eight years there, besides erecting a presbytery and school, he founded missions at Ramsey and Peel. Recalled to England in 1862 to become rector of Formby, a small country parish near Southport, where he soon erected the beautiful Church of Our Lady of Compassion to replace the small chapel that had been used since penal days. In 1866 he was raised to the Liverpool chapter.

Ten years later through the generosity of a benefactor, Canon Carr was able to begin the erection of the present well-equipped Formby Schools, and in 1880 the bishop, wishing to systematize the work of religious instruction, appointed Canon Carr the first diocesan inspector of the training colleges for England and Scotland, a post entailing years of uphill work. Some time previously he and Mgr. Richards of Westminster, seeking to improve the Catholic school system, invited the Sisters of Notre Dame at Namur to come to England, knowing they had English postulants in their community. They were established in a house in Mount Pleasant, Liverpool, the beginning of the Mount Pleasant foundation, which today includes the most notable training college for teachers in the United Kingdom.

In addition to his other work, Canon Carr found time to write twelve doctrinal manuals, two of which "The Catholic Pupil Teacher" and "The Lamp of the Word," are still standard works of their class. In recognition of these services to the Church, Pope Leo XIII made him a domestic prelate. From 1885 to 1895 Mgr. Carr was president of St. Edward's Ecclesiastical College, Liverpool, and on the death of Bishop O'Reilly in 1892 was appointed vicar capitular. The new bishop chose him as his vicar general; he was also chairman of the Liverpool Catholic Truth Society and the Liverpool Catholic Reformatory Association. A gifted preacher, his lofty panegyric on Pope Leo XIII was one of the most remarkable sermons delivered in Liverpool. At the time of his death Mgr. Carr had been a priest for sixty-four years and a generation ago was considered the greatest Catholic educationist of the English speaking world.

Cartagena, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CATHAGENA IN INDOS; cf. C. E., III-384b), in Colombia, South America. The present and first archbishop is the Most Rev. Pedro Adan Briochi of the Foreign Missions of Milan, b. at Tradate, 7 April, 1860, elected bishop of Cartagena 15 April, 1898, made archbishop 27 July, 1901, when the see was erected into an archbishopric. The following important religious events have taken place in the archdiocese since 1907: the third diocesan synod was held in 1912, the second provincial council in 1915 and the fourth diocesan synod in 1918, all during the administration of the present archbishop.

The inhabitants of the diocese number more than 400,000. There are 84 parishes, 1 seminary under the care of the Eudist Fathers, with 8 professors and about 50 seminarians. As the churches are built of straw, and are only temporary edifices it is difficult to determine their number. There is only one mission, which is in the vicinity of the St. George River and has two houses, one of the German Fathers of the Society of the Divine Savior for the pueblo of Ayapel, and the other of native missionary priests for the pueblo of Ure. A university has been established which is supported by the government, but has very few students. At Cartagena and at Barranquil there are two high schools for boys and girls. Four hospitals and 2 asylums exist in the archdiocese. Religious orders and congregations having foundations in the archdiocese are: Capuchin Fathers (1 house); Augustinians (2); Eudists (3); Fathers of the Divine Savior (3); Missionary Sons of the Sacred Heart of Mary (1); Christian Brothers (2); Jesuits (2); Salesians (2); Sisters of the Presentation of Tours (5); Franciscan Tertiaries of Our Lady of Perpetual Help (5); Franciscan Tertiaries of the Holy Family (1); Little Sisters of the Poor of St. Peter Claver (2); Missionary Sisters of the Immaculate Conception of St. Catherine (1).

Cartagena, DIOCESE OF (CARTHAGINENSIS; cf. C. E., III-384c), in Spain, suffragan of Granada. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Vicente Alonso y Salgado, of the Pious Schools, b. in the Diocese of Orense, 1895, appointed Bishop of Astorga 1894, transferred 25 June, 1903. The principal events of this diocese during recent years have been: the holding of two general councils, the consecration of the diocese to the Sacred Heart, and the organization of a rural federation of Catholic syndicates. During the influenza epidemic of 1919, 14 priests died while performing their parochial duties. Other clergymen of prominence deceased in recent years are: Rev. Pedro Gonzalez Adalid, Rev. Francesco Orsonu Bautista, and Rev. Pedro Belando, who was active in Catholic social work and labored unceasingly among the poor.

By latest statistics (1922) the diocese contains 302 parishes, 713 churches, 30 monasteries for men, 93 convents for women with 1,040 Sisters, 560 secular priests, 86 regulars, 125 lay brothers, 1 seminary and 235 seminarians. The institutions include 1 university, 2 normal schools, 24 asylums, 11 hospitals, and 36 other charitable institutions of various kinds. Two dailies, 1 weekly, and 11 monthly periodicals are published here. The following religious associations have been organized among the clergy: Unio Apostolica, Association of secular missionary priests, League for the defense of the clergy, Monte Pio del Clero Cartaginense, and Association Sacerdotal de Sufragio.

Carthage, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CARTHAGINENSIS; cf. C. E., III-385b), including the entire Regency of Lunis, Africa. This ancient see, founded in the first century, and re-established as a metropolitan see in 1884, was filled by Rt. Rev. Bartholomew Clement Combes, b. in the diocese of Carcassonne (France), 1839, ordained 1864, made a Knight of St. Gregory, 6 September, 1879, appointed Bishop of Constance, 13 May, 1881, promoted 15 June, 1893. In 1908 he was made apostolic administrator of Algiers, and on 22 January, 1909, he was made Archbishop of that see as well as of Carthage; he resigned from the former see 11 March, 1917. In 1914 Archbishop Combes celebrated the golden jubilee of his priesthood and died 12 February, 1922. Mgr. Alexis Lemaître, titular archbishop of Cabasa, was his coadjutor with right of succession.

The statistics of 1911 are the latest published for this archdiocese; these count the population at 1,600,000, of whom 148,776 are Europeans (French, Italians, and Maltese), and of this number about 35,000 are Catholic. The cathedral was made a minor basilica, 5 August, 1918. A seminary was opened in October, 1917, at Sidi-ben-Said, and had an enrollment of 23 students in 1920. The archdiocese comprises 54 parishes and 14 vicariates.

Caruso, ENRICO, operatic tenor, b. at Naples, 25 February, 1873; d. there on 2 August, 1921. As a youth he sang in his parish church choir, and after three years' study under Vergine he appeared in opera at the Teatro Nuova, Naples, in 1894 in "L'Amico Francesco." His Marcello in "La Bohème," at Milan in 1898, placed him definitively in the rank of great tenors, and his success as Loris in Giordano's "Fedora" in 1899 was followed by engagements in Petrograd, Moscow, Paris, Lisbon, and Buenos Aires. He won fresh laurels with Melba in "La Bohème" at Monte Carlo in 1902, and then appeared at London as the Duke in "Rigoletto." In the autumn of 1903 he made a successful début in the same role at the Metropolitan Opera House, where his extraordinarily beautiful and powerful voice was soon to make him the chief attraction till his death. Caruso who commanded an unprecedented salary during his later years, was noted for his charity. He was made a member of the Royal Victorian Order (British) in 1907, and in 1918 he married Miss Dorothy Benjamin in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York. Shortly before his death he made a pilgrimage to the sanctuary of Our Lady of Pompeii. Caruso sang in all the current Italian and French operas, and created the leading tenor role in "Fedora," "La Maschere," "Adriana Lecouvreur," "Germania," "Madame Butterfly," and "La Fanciulla del West."

Casale-Monferrato, DIOCESE OF (CASALENSIS), in the province of Alessandria, Northern Italy, suffragan of Vercelli. This see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Albino Pella, b. in Valdengo, 1865, appointed to the see of Calvi and Leano, 4 August, 1908, promoted 12 April, 1915, succeeding Rt. Rev. Lodovico Gavotti, promoted to Genoa, 22 January, 1915. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 180,000 (1920), 140 parishes, 312 secular and 45 regular clergy, 80 seminarians, 25 Brothers, 280 Sisters, and 562 churches, chapels, or oratories.

Casanare, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CASANARENSIS), in the Republic of Colombia, South America. By a Consistorial decree of 26 May, 1915, the northern part of this vicariate was detached, and erected into the prefecture apostolic of Arauca. The present (1922) vicar apostolic of this territory is Rt. Rev. Santos Ballesteros, Augustinian Recollect, titular Bishop of Capharnaum, appointed 22 April, 1920. No statistics are published for this vicariate.

Caserta, DIOCESE OF (CASERTANENSIS; cf. C. E., III-399d), in the province of the same name, in Southern Italy. Rt. Rev. Gennaro Cosenza now (1922) Archbishop of Capua, filled this see from 12 June, 1893, until his promotion 4 March, 1913. His successor, Rt. Rev. Mario Palladino, b. in Campobasso, 1842, appointed Bishop of Ischia, 15 April, 1901, and transferred to Caserta, 2 June, 1913, died 17 October, 1921. No successor has as yet been appointed. Caserta is a suffragan of Capua, and has 96,800 Catholics, 51 parishes, 215 secular and 36 regular clergy, 90 seminarians, and 176 churches or chapels.

Cashel, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CASALIENSIS or CASSILIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-401a), includes the principal part of Tipperary, and part of Limerick counties, and holds the perpetual administration of the diocese of Emly. Most Rev. Thomas Jennelly who succeeded to this see in 1902, after serving as coadjutor for a year, retired 7 May, 1913, and was appointed to the titular see of Methymna. His successor was appointed in the person of Most Rev. John Harty, who now (1922) fills the see. He is a native of Cashel, born 1867, and educated in the Jesuit College, Limerick; St. Patrick's College, Thurles, and Maynooth. After completing his studies at the Gregorian University, Rome, he returned to Maynooth as Professor of Dogmatic Theology, and at the time of his appointment, 4 December, 1913, was senior Professor of Moral Theology. In 1906 he assisted in founding the "Irish Theological Quarterly," and since that time, has acted as one of its editors.

In 1918 the people of County Cashel, Tipperary, pledged themselves to erect a statue to the Blessed Virgin, if the national struggle against conscription was successful. In fulfillment of this promise the Lourdes Grotto was erected by the townspeople, 9 October, 1921, with impressive ceremonies, in the presence of the archbishop, who delivered a short address. On 4 July of the same year, at a conference of the archbishop and clergy of the dioceses of Cashel and Emly, a resolution was passed to send a message of encouragement and good wishes to the conference of Irish leaders, meeting in Dublin.

The religious orders represented in the archdiocese include: Augustinian Monks, Christian Brothers, Brothers of St. Patrick, Ursuline Sisters, Sisters of the Presentation, and Sisters of Mercy. The 1911 census credits this territory with a Catholic population of 106,000, and 3,655 non-Catholics. According to 1922 statistics there are 46 parishes, 43 parish priests, 3 administrators, 71 curates, 117 secular clergy, 85 parochial and district churches, 3 houses of regular clergy, 17 convents with 322 religious, 6 monastic houses, 2 colleges for boys, 1 superior school for girls, and 195 primary schools.

Cassano all' Ionio, DIOCESE OF (CASSANENSIS; cf. C. E., III-403d), in the province of Cosenza, Italy, suffragan of Reggio. Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Rovetta, appointed to this see 29 March, 1911, was transferred to the titular see of Ephestum, 16 December, 1920, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Brunone Occhiuto, was appointed his successor, 11 November, 1921. Religious communities which formerly flourished in great numbers in this diocese, have been almost entirely abolished by the Italian Government. There are now (1922) only 1 convent of Capuchins with 3 priests, 1 convent of Poor Clares with 2 Sisters, and 1 convent of the Sisters of Reparation. The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 130,300 Catholics, 51 parishes, 37 vicariates, 253 secular and 10 regular clergy, 50 seminarians, 42 Sisters, and 200 churches or chapels.

Cassovia, DIOCESE OF. See KOSICE.

Castellamare di Stabia, DIOCESE OF (STABIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-408b), in the province of Naples, Italy, suffragan of Sorrento. This see is filled (1922) by Rt. Rev. Michele de Jorio, born in Mont-Cassin, 1845, appointed Bishop of Bovino, 25 November, 1887, transferred 4 February, 1898, named an assistant at the pontifical throne, 9 July, 1906. Most Rev. Paolo Iacuzio, Archbishop of Sorrento, was appointed administrator of this diocese, 23 January, 1920. On 15 July, 1916, the Church of Our Lady of Pozzano was erected into a minor basilica. By 1920 statistics this diocese comprises 70,500 Catholics, 27 parishes, 200 secular and 20 regular clergy, 10 seminarians, 13 Brothers, 70 Sisters, and 100 churches or chapels.

Castellaneta (CASTANIA), DIOCESE OF (CASTELLANETENSIS; cf. C. E., III-408b), in Southern Italy, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Taranto.

The Rt. Rev. Bishop de Nittis who had filled this see for twenty-two years, died 27 February, 1908, and was succeeded by Bishop de Martino, whose administration lasted for only five months when he died, 26 August, 1909. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Augustus Tacra, who was pro-vicar general of the prelature nullius of Acquaviva before his appointment as Bishop of Castellaneta, 23 June, 1910, consecrated 24 June of the same year.

By present (1921) statistics this diocese numbers 6 parishes, 46 churches, 2 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 36 secular priests and 6 regulars, 4 brothers, 50 sisters, 1 seminary with 35 seminarians, 1 elementary school with 3 teachers and 70 pupils, 1 home, 3 asylums, and 3 hospitals. In 1920 the total Catholic population was 38,600.

Castle, EGERTON, author, b. 12 March, 1808, in London; d. there 16 September, 1920. He was the grandson of Egerton Smith, founder of the Liverpool "Mercury," and was educated at Cambridge and at the Universities of Paris and Glasgow. He also passed through all the courses of submarine mining at Chatham and Gosport, qualifying as Captain in the Royal Engineer Militia. Though a Londoner to the core, a clubman of the "Athenæum" and the "Garrick," he was a cosmopolitan in interest and in bearing. A noted swordsman, in 1884 he wrote his "Schools and Masters of France," and later the "Story of Swordsmanship," the latter delivered as a lecture at the Lyceum Theater under Sir Henry Irving, and subsequently repeated at the request of the Prince of Wales. In 1908 he was Captain of the British épée and saber teams at the Olympic games. He was likewise a lover of book-plates, and in 1892 published "English Book-plates."

However, it is as a writer of romance that Castle is best known in contemporary literature. With his fellow-fencer, Walter Pollock, under whose editorship he contributed to the "Saturday Review," he wrote "Saviola," a play for Sir Henry Irving, and later composed "Desperate Remedies" for Richard Mansfield. He also translated Stevenson's "Prince Otto" into French. Castle married Agnes Sweetman, sister of Mrs. Francis Blundell, and in collaboration with her wrote many clever romantic novels, deservedly popular and meriting a high place in modern fiction. Amongst them are the "Pride of Jennico," and "The Bath Comedy" (both dramatized and produced in New York, the latter under the name "Sweet Kitty Bellairs"); "French Nan," "The Incomparable Bellairs," "If Youth But Knew," "A Little House in War Time," "Pamela Pounce," and many others. His marriage proved a very happy one and through it he was brought into close contact with the Catholic religion, which he embraced before his death.

Catalonia (cf. C. E., III-428a), a principality within the Spanish monarchy, occupying an area of 12,427 square miles in the northeast corner of the Iberian peninsula. According to the census of 1910, Catalonia had a population of 2,084,868, an average of 185.8 to the square mile. It is divided into four provinces. The province of Barcelona has an area of 2,065 square miles, including 310 municipalities, its capital Barcelona, has a population of 582,240. The 185 municipalities of the second province, Taragona, aggregate 2,505 square miles in area. Its capital, Taragona contains 23,195 inhabitants. Lerida, the largest, but the least wealthy, province of Catalonia has an area of 4,690 square miles, divided into 325 municipalities. The fourth province, Gerona, area 2,261 square miles, is divided into 247 municipalities, and has for its capital, Gerona with a population of 14,929. For further statistics, see SPAIN.

Catamarca, DIOCESE OF (CATAMARCENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI-35a), in the Republic of Argentina, South America, suffragan of Buenos Aires. This diocese was erected 21 January, 1910, embracing the province of Catamarca, an area of 84,461 sq. miles, and the department of the Andes, a district of 40,575 sq. miles. It is under the administration of its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Barnabé Piedrabuena, b. at Tucuman, 10 November, 1863, appointed Bishop of Castrus, 16 December, 1907, transferred 8 November, 1910.

In April, 1916, the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the crowning of the statue of Nuestra Señora del Valle, was celebrated in the diocese. Mgr. Locatelli attended the ceremonies, as papal delegate, and the Pope granted special indulgences in honor of the anniversary. On 22 May, 1920, upon the request of the bishop, the territory of Los Andes was separated from this diocese, and united to the diocese of Salta. During recent years the diocese lost two prominent members; Dr. Rafael Castillo, deputy to the National parliament, and one time minister of the Interior, and Mgr. Rafael D'Amico, vicar general of the diocese, and largely instrumental in the erection of the sanctuary of Nuestra Señora del Valle, and the seminary. By present statistics (1922) the diocese comprises 15 parishes, 112 churches and chapels, 2 convents of men, 25 secular and 20 regular clergy, 4 Brothers, 1 seminary, 40 seminarians, 1 college for men with 6 professors and 120 students, 2 colleges for women with 7 teachers and 235 students, 2 asylums, and 5 hospitals. Catholic schools, colleges, asylums, and hospitals are assisted financially by the Government. Various societies are formed among the laity, and 2 periodicals are published.

Catania, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CATANIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-429d), in Sicily, directly subject to the Holy See. This see is filled by His Eminence Cardinal Francica-Nava di Bontifé, born in this diocese, 1846, ordained 1869, named a papal chamberlain, 1876, vicar general of Caltanissetta, 1877, appointed titular Bishop of Alabanda and auxiliary at Caltanissetta, 1883, promoted to the titular metropolitan see of Heraclea, 1889 and made nuncio to Belgium, transferred 18 March, 1895, made nuncio to Madrid, 1896, and created Cardinal, 19 July, 1899. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Emilio Ferrais, titular Bishop of Lystra. By 1920 statistics the archdiocese counts a Catholic population of 376,653, of whom 90,000 are in Catania proper; 43 parishes, 374 secular and 112 regular clergy, 140 seminarians, 40 Brothers, 159 Sisters, and 223 churches or chapels.

Catanzaro, DIOCESE OF (CATACENSIS; cf. C. E., III-430c), in the province of Calabria, Italy, suffragan of Reggio. Rt. Rev. Pietro di Maria, appointed to this see 6 December, 1906, was promoted to the titular see of Iconium, 11 June, 1918, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Agapito Augusto Giovanni Fiorentini, was appointed his successor 25 September, 1919. Born in Castrocaro, 1867, he was appointed Bishop of Tricarico, 27 June, 1909, and filled that see until his transfer. A regional seminary was erected in Catanzaro by Pius X and conferred degrees for the first time, 7 January, 1918. Eight seminarians received the degree of Bachelor of Theology, and at the same time a feast was solemnly celebrated in honor of Pius X; Pope Benedict XV blessed the reunion, and Cardinals Gasparri, Bisleti, and de Lai sent telegrams of congratulation to the rector, Mgr. Coccia.

The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 85,000 Catholics, 48 parishes, 5 vicariates, 80 secular and 6 regular clergy, 21 seminarians, 5 Brothers, 36 Sisters, and 97 churches or chapels.

Catenian Association, THE, which takes its name for the Latin word catena—a chain, is a British fraternal organization, strictly Catholic, constitutional, and non-political. Membership is confined to laymen of the professional and commercial classes. Founded in Manchester in June, 1908, the association now has "circles" (symbolized by an endless chain), in London and most of the principal towns of Great Britain. The primary object of the association is the cultivation of social intercourse amongst its members in the belief that such friendly union is conducive not only to the individual and collective prosperity of Catenians, but also to the general advancement of the Catholic cause. A certain portion of each circle's annual revenue is allocated to a central benevolent fund from which practical aid is given to such members who "in the strenuousness of life have fallen distressed by the wayside." A special feature of Catenian activity is the furtherance of the interests of Catholic youths entering professional and commercial life. Applicants for memberships must have reached their twenty-fifth year, except sons of members who are admitted at twenty-one. According to its present constitution, membership is reserved to those who have attained to recognized positions of definite responsibility (members' sons excepted). There is a tendency, however, to relax the original restrictions, and to adapt the organization to the needs of the times. Normally, the association, as such, does not identify itself with any work outside its own special province, but two exceptions (understood not to be precedents) have been made: (1) In 1915 at a meeting of the "Grand Circle" of the Association held in London, a resolution was unanimously adopted by virtue of which the Association undertook the sponsorship of a special issue of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA (this was published as the "Catenian Edition," and by its effective circulation, much useful work was accomplished in overcoming Protestant prejudices and misconceptions of Catholic teaching.) (2) At the request of the English hierarchy, personally voiced by Cardinal Bourne (1920) and subsequently renewed by Pope Benedict XV, the Catenian Association undertook to raise amongst its members funds to enable the Collegio Beda, Rome, to tide over a period of financial stringency; this purpose having been accomplished, the association is now concerned with a scheme to enable the college to be re-established, free from debt, in a new and permanent home. During the war the Catenian Association co-operated, on their own territory, with the Knights of Columbus in their work for the temporal and spiritual welfare of men on active service.

Cathedraticum (cf. C. E., III-441b).—All churches or benefices under the jurisdiction of the bishop, as well as all lay confraternities have to pay the cathedraticum annually. The amount of this tax, if not fixed by ancient custom, is to be determined by a provincial council or a meeting of the bishops of the province; the decision of the bishops, however, has no force until it has been approved by the Holy See.

Catholic Actors' Guild of America, THE, was organized in March, 1914, by Rev. John Talbot Smith and a number of prominent Catholic actors in order "to bring the Catholic actor and playgoer together in social intercourse, to stimulate the one by encouragement and the other to a deeper interest in the stage, to assist the Catholic actors in any proper way and to prepare for the Catholic theater and drama of the future." At the time of its institution the Church had let down the barriers erected against the modern stage. Since in the days of morality plays, the drama was an effective teacher in moral and religious training, it was deemed advisable to bring this great and beneficent force into modern Catholic life and thought, and by so doing rescue this important social institution from the secularism that had so completely absorbed it and lowered its standards. The logical way to bring this about was to devise ways and means to aid the members of the theatrical profession and direct their influence into proper channels. They were no longer frowned upon, but were considered as human beings. Many of them were Catholics, and of this number, some by reason of their nomadic existence, had grown out of touch with Catholic ideals and principles.

The aims and work of the Guild comprehend all phases of helpful care for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the theatrical profession. Although not a religious organization in the restricted sense of the word, it is conscious of its obligation to provide all possible means by which the members of the profession may keep in touch with their religious duties. Through its chaplain, specially designated by the Archbishop of New York, many avenues have been developed by which this is possible. Every year during Holy Week a spiritual retreat for Actors is held, and at a later date a solemn Mass of requiem for the deceased members of the profession. Through the courtesy of the pastor of St. Malachy's Church, a special Mass for actors is said every Sunday at 11:30, at which the ushers, singers, etc., are all connected with the profession. The Guild has met a long-felt need in placing in every theater and theatrical hotel in the country a decorative placard containing information as to the situation of the nearest Catholic church, the hours of Masses, confessions, etc. Arrangements have been made with New York hospitals whereby the office of the Guild is to be notified on admission of a Catholic member of the profession. It co-operates actively with all theatrical relief organizations and cares for all cases where Catholics are concerned. Its burial plot in Calvary Cemetery offers a solution of the problem of Christian burial of Catholic members of the profession. Its affiliation with the National Catholic Welfare Council has opened avenues by which actors who are taken ill en tour may be cared for, and this by reason of their constant travel has made a special appeal to the actor of every denomination, and has impressed upon the profession the interest of the Church in their temporal as well as their spiritual welfare.

As New York is the mecca of all aspirants to the stage, and as so many hundreds of Catholic young men and women are constantly arriving there to pursue the study of the arts, the Guild is desirous of having all Catholics register at its office. There the stranger in the metropolis will find a welcome and a bureau of information and guidance through which he or she may be helped in the realization of worthy ambitions. The Guild in this way is a broadly based effort to supply a practical and protective influence to our young Catholics who desire to enter the theatrical profession. It acts also in the spirit of guidance and direction for managers and producers who desire the Catholic viewpoint on any given subject.

It is planned to open branch offices in the larger theatrical centers and to establish organizations of a similar nature throughout the country under the supervision of chaplains to be appointed by the bishops of the various dioceses. Eventually a large building capable of affording living accommodations for members will be erected in New York. Included in its membership of 2,700 are many non-Catholics and social members. The office of the Guild is situated at 220 West 42nd Street, New York City.

Catholic Big Brothers.—This organization was founded in New York in 1914 by Rev. Thomas J. Lynch as a preventive and protective agency in regard to juveniles just beginning to become delinquent or who had already appeared in the Children's Court. Its object was not to coddle or countenance ill behavior on the part of the boy through any mistaken leniency because of his offense; but to bring home to him the necessity of doing what was right by having some one outside of his family interest himself in him and exercise a beneficial influence upon him. Its measure of success has varied with the years; but its value as a boy-saving agency cannot be disputed, depending upon the efficiency and zeal of those who seriously take up its work. Statistics are not available in regard to its success.

Catholic Boys Brigade of the United States (C.B.B.U.S.), a semi-military organization introduced into New York in 1916 with the approval and special recommendation of his Eminence, Cardinal Farley by the Rev. Thomas J. Lynch, with the assistance of Michel Lonergan, who brought from Ireland experience in this kind of work. The movement was completely re-organized in November, 1919, and the best features found in other boys' organization were worked into a varied but well regulated program, including simple military drill, athletics, games, sports, contests, outings, parades, exhibitions, camping, procuring of employment and promotion of higher Catholic education. The regular weekly meetings are divided into a recreational, a military and an educational period of 30-40 minutes each. Everything is subject to the selection of the reverend director.

Many prelates and prominent educators have approved of the Brigade, which is entirely under ecclesiastical control and exclusively Catholic. The Holy See blessed it and granted a plenary indulgence for the monthly corporate Communion and an indulgence of 300 days for each pious recital of the following Brigade Pledge: "We pledge allegiance to Jesus Christ, our invisible Head, to His Vicar and other representatives on earth, our leaders in the battle against our outward and inward enemies, and to Mary our Immaculate Queen under whose protection we hope to gain the victory and an eternal triumph in heaven." To which is added: "Equally sincere we pledge allegiance to our flag, and loyalty to the country over which it waves; obedience to authority and to the Constitution upholding liberty, religious freedom, justice and equality for all." Finally the National Catholic Welfare Council made the national extension of the Brigade one of its activities.

The special aims of the Brigade are: (1) to reach boys not attending parochial schools and therefore in no immediate contact with their clergy; (2) to draw Catholic boys away from non-Catholic organizations by providing something which is attractive, really Catholic and within the reach of nearly every parish; (3) to reach through the boys their families, especially those who are in need of pastoral care; (4) to keep pupils of parochial schools longer under the influence of the priest by promoting higher Catholic education and procuring suitable positions for those who desire to work; (5) to lead boys to join religious societies or sodalities and to the regular reception of the Sacraments. In a word, having the motto "For God and Country," the Brigade seeks to make boys faithful Catholics and patriotic citizens.

The Brigade has a neat uniform. It has chosen the Immaculate Virgin as its primary patroness and has adopted a special standard consisting of two square fields of papal yellow and white, with a blue circular field surrounding a white star in the center. A cross surmounts the pole. The standard symbolizes the pledge of the Brigade. The indulgences granted by the Sacred Penitentiary on 19 April, 1921, can be gained only by members of duly chartered branches, who are registered at New York General Headquarters. The continual extension of the Brigade and its welcome reception by the hierarchy prove its need, usefulness and adaptability. Affiliated cadet corps although retaining their original scope, name, government and outfit, participate in all present and future privileges of membership in the Brigade.

Catholic Colonization.—Colonization is here assumed as the grouping of a class of people in one place to promote their mutual interests. In Catholic Colonization the religious feature is emphasized, without, however, neglecting the temporal aspect of the work. Religious instruction, the Sacraments and the Mass, are of such importance that the settlers, or at least their children, lose the faith if they are long left without these influences. Catholic example and a Catholic atmosphere are equally important. It is a recognized law of history that immigrants scattering broadcast over churchless districts first greatly miss the religious practices in which they formerly engaged, but soon get accustomed to live without them. It is also a matter of experience that Catholics grouped together grow in number and in fervor, and gradually form strong Catholic settlements. Catholic colonization endeavors to group Catholics together, so that they can strengthen one another in their faith. It makes sure of church and school facilities, and supplies priests and Sisters, and by systematically grouping Catholic settlers in certain well defined districts it multiplies Catholic parishes and communities. Besides providing for the religious needs of the Catholic settler, Catholic colonization endeavors to guide and protect him in the choice of lands suited to his means and his other personal qualifications.

GENERAL HISTORY.—There were two kinds of colonies established in North America, political and social. Political colonies were organized by European powers for the benefit of their respective nations. These colonies generally shared the fortunes of the mother country, some prospering, others gradually dying out. The result of the Colonial wars was that the English secured most of the colonies. The Latin colonies were Catholic. The first white settlers in the United States were the Spanish and French immigrants, coming with their families and also inter-marrying with the Indians. The Indian reductions were social colonies, founded by the Franciscan Fathers in the Southwest. They were situated in the best sites of California, New Mexico, and Arizona. Anyone acquainted with the facts, and looking for good lands, will first direct his attention to the ancient Indian colonies. The Indians increased and prospered. There were as many as 5000 individuals in a village, and they produced everything they wanted for their own use. As proof of their efficiency they built substantial churches and schools, which to this day form conspicuous landmarks of the country. These colonies have disappeared, partly for political reasons, but mainly because of economic factors, the chief of which was the fact that the barbarian and the half civilized man cannot compete with the fully civilized man and commercial enterprises and colonies organized by him.

Protestant Colonization.—In the English colonies the practice of the Catholic religion was forbidden, except in Maryland and Pennsylvania. From Maryland a number of Catholic colonists went to Kentucky and other Southern states, forming there incipient Catholic colonies. The number of Catholic Irishmen who were deported to the Southern States from Great Britain was very great, as is testified by the names of many towns found in various parts of the South. No doubt these martyrs deported on account of their faith died in the Faith, but the same cannot be said of their children. Without priest or religious ministrations their descendants were lost to the Faith and their religious affiliations were entirely obliterated, even in their own minds. The French and Spanish colonies founded in the South retained their racial and religious characteristics in a very marked degree. These Latin colonies, wherever they were not destroyed by rival influence, developed into great communities and cities, such as St. Augustine, New Orleans, and others.

Irish Catholic Colonization Association.—Heroic attempts were made in the latter part of the nineteenth century to group that immense number of Catholic immigrants from Europe who were scattering throughout the churchless regions of the United States. The railroads were building through the great basin of the Mississippi and opening immense territories to settlers. People of every denomination and especially Catholics, flowed into those new fields, the more so that they were the men who built the new lines. There was neither church nor priest for hundreds of miles. It was just at that time that the Irish immigration, brought on by the great famine in Ireland, was most numerous. There was a new world forming without temple or sacrifice, many being wholly lost to the church in this way. The only remedy was seen to be a grouping together of these people, and many individual efforts were made to colonize this vast army in quest of homes on the virgin soil of America.

Finally in 1879 there was formed the Irish Catholic Colonization Society of America, which founded such flourishing settlements as the colonies at Adrian and Ghent, Minnesota, Greeley and Spaulding, Nebraska, and others. The success of the Irish Catholic Colonization Society was demonstrated on a glorious occasion when Archbishop Ireland, who was the soul of this enterprise, consecrated at one time six bishops for the dioceses of his province. These dioceses were the direct offspring of the colonization endeavors of the Irish Catholic Colonization Society. The immigrants who came to this country from Germany and other European countries, because of economic and religious reasons, were also settled in colonies throughout the Middle West through the individual enterprises of zealous bishops and priests.

CATHOLIC COLONIZATION SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES.—In our day the Catholic Colonization Society, U. S. A., represents the organized National Catholic Colonization endeavors in the United States. It is the only national colonization society, and the only organization of its kind which has received the recommendation and encouragement of the Board of North American Archbishops. At their annual meeting, held in Washington in 1912, the late Archbishop of Chicago, Most Reverend Edward Quigley, presented the following resolution which was accepted by all the Archbishops: "This body has heard with great satisfaction that there is to be called a meeting of Bishops and Priests at St. Louis, to consider a movement with the idea of completely organizing the Catholic Colonization Society, now in existence, and give it responsible direction. The Archbishops are deeply interested in the development of the work designed to aid Catholic immigrants, and to direct them to Catholic localities where their faith may be safeguarded by church, school, and pastor."

A special promotion meeting, called by the Archbishop of St. Louis, Most Reverend John J. Glennon, was held at St. Louis, 4 and 5 May, 1911. It was attended by twenty-three representatives (bishops and delegates of bishops). Archbishop Glennon presided over the meeting. A National Society of Colonization was established and a working organization formed. It was a convention of capable minds and auspicious prospects. On 11 July, 1911, a second general convention of the Society was held in Chicago. It was honored by the presence of the four metropolitans of Middle America, Archbishops Quigley, Ireland, Glennon, and Messmer. At this convention the constitutions, by-laws, and other regulations for the guidance of the executives and officers of the Society were drawn up and adopted. These resolutions gave the central organization the power of initiative in starting colonies, with a proviso to co-operate with diocesan bureaus of colonization wherever they existed. The work was centralized in the national bureau established at Chicago. Thus the society, as the National Catholic Colonization Society of the United States, came into being under most worthy and promising auspices, and was immediately placed in the Catholic Directory as a national organization of the Catholic Church. This society was saluted by both the secular and religious press as a long felt want.

Character and Policy.—The Catholic Colonization Society is not a financial or money making concern. It neither buys, sells, nor owns lands in any of its colony projects. Through the Catholic Land Information Bureau, U. S. A., associated with it, the Catholic Colonization Society seeks to cover the entire United States in search of suitable lands, so that there may be a wide range of choice for its clients. Such lands are carefully investigated by this bureau, some of the best known and most reliable agriculturists and land experts in the United States being employed by it for this work of investigation. In the case of every colony project, the business standing and responsibility of the company handling the lands are carefully investigated to ascertain whether the prospective colonists may be safely entrusted to these parties. Then the bureau proceeds to examine the particular tract of land in question, as to its agricultural merits. Special attention is given to climatic and sanitary conditions, quality and productiveness of the soil, its adaptability for special cultivation (fruit, grain, vegetable, dairying, cattle raising, etc.), facilities of transportation, marketing, supply of wood, lumber, fuel, drinking water, etc. Only when the aforementioned examination of the land is thoroughly satisfactory, and when other matters intended for the welfare of the settler have been properly arranged, will the Catholic Colonization Society issue a formal recommendation of the project and bring it before the public here and in Europe. Such a recommendation will be given only when the society is fully satisfied as to the adaptability of the project for the Catholic settler. While it is clearly impossible to give an absolute guarantee in undertakings of this kind, which depend largely on human conduct, yet once the Catholic Colonization Society has recommended land, the settler may rest assured that every precaution which may be reasonably demanded, has been used in the investigation of such a project. Naturally, so far as the future is concerned, it will rest entirely with the colonist to make his land bear fruit and profit. Here, as elsewhere, labor is the source of wealth. The shiftless, and careless settler, who may eventually come to grief on land recommended by the society, must blame himself, not the Catholic Colonization Society. In order to protect the religious interests of the settlers, it is the fixed policy of the Catholic Colonization Society not to recommend any land project unless a church with regular divine services is established on the spot to care for the religious needs of the incoming settlers.

Reports which describe the actual merits and limitations of any colony project and which tell how the land should be handled in any particular place, are made by expert agriculturists, working especially for the Catholic Colonization Society. Thus the society puts at the disposal of every man of small means the service of land experts, which up to the present time could be secured only by the man of wealth or the rich institution. The small land-seeker was without such expert and practical guidance until the society found means and ways to distribute the benefits of this expensive talent and experience without cost to the inquirer. By bringing a great number of settlers into the land in a short time, the danger of isolation which so often discourages the individual settler and causes him to fail is overcome. Archbishop Sebastian Messmer, of Milwaukee, is at present Director General of the Catholic Colonization Society, Rev. Julius E. de Vos of Chicago, President, and Rev. Peter J. Cichozki, Secretary. Its headquarters are at Chicago. Projects recommended by the Catholic Colonization Society are made known to the public by a wide and efficiently planned system of publicity and advertising. The happy result has been a number of prosperous and steadily increasing Catholic communities located in various states of the Union. Among these may be mentioned three Catholic colonies in the Riviera district of Texas on the Gulf of Mexico, the colony at Fruitland in Northwestern New Mexico, the flourishing colony at Ladysmith in upper Wisconsin, and a number of other Catholic settlements which have been built up in recent years. A great summer colony at Victory Heights in the North Woods of Wisconsin was opened recently to the Catholic population of the cities, where they may spend their summer outdoors, in clean healthy amusement, and attend Mass and divine services regularly. These colonies amply demonstrate that systematic Catholic colonization work, carried on along practical lines, is a factor of the utmost importance for the religious and temporal good of the settler himself, and in a larger sense for the good of the Nation and of the Catholic Church in the United States.

Catholic Evidence Guild, THE, is a part-time voluntary organization of the laity for the purpose of teaching their religion to non-Catholics. Its (active) members are ordinary lay-folk, men and women, who devote part of their leisure time to the work; it thus differs radically from the missionary orders, although, in spirit and outlook, it seeks to copy them. In method it is largely original, partly on account of the new present-day setting of the problem of preaching the Gospel, and partly on account of the peculiarities of structure rendered possible, or necessary, by the character of its membership. Together with its main object, i. e., that of preaching the Church as the Message of God, are bound up as subsidiary objects those of preaching the utility and beauty of various doctrines and practices of the Church, taken separately, of supporting whatever remains of Christianity outside of the Church, and of confirming the faith of Catholics in the crowd.

The methods adopted are those of studying the topics in the Catholic system upon which non-Catholic interest is liveliest, and of using them as, at least, jumping off spots for discourse. All subjects are treated positively, i. e., by means of explanatory description. The aim is to build roads into the wilderness, from the City on the Hill, so that men may not only see the City but also, close to hand, the highway leading to it. Hence negative and sterile argumentation is avoided; and also abstract disquisitions and matter suitable only for Catholic audiences. The actual state of mind of the crowd addressed is throughout, uppermost in the speakers' thoughts. The common material of Catholicism is accordingly variously shaped to meet the varying needs of different audiences. A popular style of oratory is aimed at, e. g., talks are preferred to set speeches or formal lectures.

As regards the Catholic community, the Guild aims at increasing whatever degree of apostolic spirit the laity may already possess; at the mass production of speakers; and at the wise employment of the forces thereby brought into action. Its organization is planned to subserve these ends; there are outdoor training, propaganda and finance departments. The outdoor work is the root of the matter; everything else is subordinate to success out-of-doors. The outdoor organization is in "Squads" of speakers and literature sellers (usually about ten to twelve in all), in charge of the meetings held usually at three "Pitches." The squad leaders form the Outdoor Committee (chairman, the master of the Guild), in general charge of the work. The training system is built up from the practical experience gained in the outdoor work and, so far as regards its more rough-and-ready side is in the hands of the (mainly lay) Practical Training Committee, composed of the leading suitable speakers of the guild. More advanced work is under the personal control of the Director of Studies. The Propaganda Committee advertises the work among Catholics and recruits new members. Finally, the financial needs, general amenities, and administration of the Guild, headquarters, etc., are in the hands of a special Finance, etc., Committee. The governing body is the Council, which decides general policy, and in effect is a meeting ground for the special Committees.

The Guild was founded at Westminster in 1918. Its Masters have been Vernon C. Redwood (1918-1920), Mark Symons (1920-1922). Its speakers in Westminster now (March, 1922) number about seventy, with forty auxiliary members (literature-sellers, etc.); it conducts thirty meetings weekly, totalling seventy hours speaking. The Guild is diocesan in organization, and acts under the close direction of the bishop: it now exists in Westminster, Birmingham, Portsmouth, Plymouth, Liverpool, Brentwood and many other dioceses, and is in process of formation in various places overseas.

Catholic Guardian Society.—The Catholic Guardian Society of the Archdiocese of New York supervises the children discharged from the Catholic institutions for dependent children, and co-operates with similar societies in other parts of the United States. The children under its care are in two groups, those returned to relatives and those discharged directly to the Society. The service rendered the first group consists of visiting them in their homes at least twice a year for at least three years, following up their school and church attendance, their reception of the Sacraments, their work, and their general conduct. They are given the use of the Society's employment bureau and recreational activities.

The important work of the Society is for the boys and girls who have no relatives to take them. Towards these the Society stands in loco parentis. The director of the Society visits every child-caring institution of the archdiocese at least once every year in order to become acquainted with the boys and girls before their discharge. The children look upon him as their medium of contact with the outside world. They appeal to him when they think that they should come out and they consult him about the kind of work they would like to take up. Upon their discharge they are brought to the Society's office where the director interviews them at length, takes their history, explains to them that the Society has been established for their protection and care and asks them to do their part by always consulting him before making any change in boarding place or work. An approved boarding place is procured, the board is paid, money is given for carfare and lunches, and employment is secured. The boy or girl is followed up very closely for a while and after being given a good start the supervision narrows down to a monthly interview either in the office or at the boarding home. This supervision is continued until the twenty-first year, but is not so frequent towards the end. For this group the Society is exerting itself to the utmost, providing for the girls evening entertainments, a scout troop, and the visitation of two trained nurses; for the boys, boy scouts, baseball teams, social evenings, and frequent meetings in its offices. Two men are employed for the work with the boys. The Society is constantly trying to teach thrift to these boys and girls, who have at present in its care bank books, Liberty Bonds, War Savings Stamps, and cash amounting to many thousands of dollars. The Society boards most of its boys and girls in small groups of two or three in family homes in Manhattan and the Bronx, but it has several larger places conducted solely for its boys or girls.

The Society takes care of its boys or girls when they become sick and pays their board when they are out of work, advances money for clothes and shoes, and has a loan fund and a relief fund. It arranges for dental care and medical examinations, also for mental examinations and, when necessary, for commitment to proper institutions. It has had to bury several of its charges who had no one else to perform that last service for them.

The staff of the Society consists of the director, the chief clerk, five assistant clerks, a supervisor of case work, four women agents, two men agents, and three women who give part time to the work. Last year over 12,000 visits were made by the Society's agents, nearly 4,000 children visited the Society's offices, and over 2,000 boys and girls attended the Society's annual reunion. The president of the Society is His Grace Archbishop Patrick J. Hayes, the director Rev. Samuel Ludlow. The offices of the Society are at 480 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

Catholic Guild of Israel, THE.—This movement was initiated by a Hebrew Catholic and established at its present headquarters, the Convent of Our Lady of Sion, Bayswater, London, on 18 December, 1917, as an extension of the Archconfraternity of Prayer which for over half a century has been supplicating the conversion of Israel. The Guild was approved and blessed by Pope Benedict XV, and partakes in the indulgences granted to the Archconfraternity by Pope Pius X, on 22 March, 1906. In addition its activities have been welcomed and are being supported by the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, the Cardinal Archbishop of Paris, and other prominent ecclesiastics throughout the world. The hundreds of Masses which are said every year in practically every country for the Guild's intention prove the widespread recognition of its importance.

The object of the Guild is the conversion of Israel. The means adopted are: (I) Prayer. (II) Sermons and lectures to Catholics on the work of the Guild, and articles in Catholic newspapers and magazines. (III) Correspondence center for inquiring Jews, and for collecting and spreading information. (IV) Publication of literature in English, Yiddish and other tongues. (V) A Reference Library of Hebrew and Catholic books for the use of lecturers and students to qualify as such. (VI) Public lectures to Jews in the Ghetto districts from the Guild's own platforms (the emblem chosen for the platforms consists of Crucifix in center, on the left the Shield of David, and on the right the Keys of St. Peter). The public lectures already delivered have given the Guild great encouragement. The Guild of Our Lady of Ransom and the Catholic Evidence Guild are giving valuable assistance in this particular branch. The president of the Guild is Very Rev. Bede Jarrett, O.P., Chairman Mr. Hugh Israelowicz-Angress, Hon. Sec. Mrs. Murray. The principal members of the Executive Committee are members of the community of Our Lady of Sion, Bayswater, who through their unceasing energy have helped to bring the Guild to its present flourishing position.

HUGH I. ANGRESS.

Catholic Laymen's Association, an organization, the first of its kind, composed entirely of laymen and women, formed in 1916 to counteract the influence of bigotry in Georgia, where, after years of agitation, hatred of Catholics had been stirred to the point that in 1915 the state Legislature provided for the inspection by grand juries of Catholic schools and convents. Following the enactment of this law, its sponsors began to agitate other anti-

Catholic measures, including the abrogation of convents, the inhibition of clerical celibacy, the disfranchisement of Catholics, and similar barbarisms, when, at the instance of a number of laymen from Macon and Augusta, the Bishop of Savannah, Rt. Rev. Benjamin J. Keiley, D.D., invited two lay representatives from each parish in the diocese to convene for action. At the resultant meeting the Catholic Laymen's Association of Georgia was formed. It was decided to use all the channels of publicity available to inform the people of Georgia with regard to Catholic teaching and practice. The assistance of the Religious Prejudice Commission of the Knights of Columbus was secured, a central bureau was created, with a trained newspaper man in charge, advertisements were inserted in all the papers of the State, inviting questions about Catholics and their belief. Every unfavorable reference to things Catholic, appearing in any of the two hundred papers in Georgia, was promptly corrected from the central office. In a short time the Association had built up a large mailing list. Its file of correspondence in reply to inquiries reached huge proportions and dealt with every possible phase of Catholic teaching and practice. The work attracted the attention of Catholics throughout the country. It became known in Rome and was approved and blessed by Pope Benedict XV. During one year the Association sent out 500,000 pieces of literature, answered 2,500 inquiries, wrote 5,500 letters and published numerous articles in the press.

Since the Association was formed the Diocese of Savannah has had the greatest proportion of converts of any diocese in the province of Baltimore. When the Convent Inspection Law was passed in 1915, only one paper in all Georgia condemned the anti-Catholic sentiment exhibited, while a large percentage of Georgia's two hundred papers were outspoken in favor of it, and more than a score of papers regularly carried anti-Catholic diatribes. In 1921 anti-Catholic articles in legitimate newspapers in Georgia numbered less than a dozen for the entire year. The secret of this success is found in three main features of the work, viz.: (1) it is persistent, like the constant drop of water on a hard rock; (2) it is personal and local, every letter being written for the one occasion and every article being prepared with Georgia conditions in mind; (3) it is patient, kind, free from controversy, based on the duty of loving one's neighbor as one's self. In addition to its other activities the Association promotes lay retreats and publishes a paper, "The Bulletin," which issues fortnightly and circulates in every State and in many foreign countries. Branch Associations exist in all the principal cities of Georgia. The Central Bureau is at Augusta.

Catholic Protective Society, THE, of the Archdiocese of New York, founded March, 1911, by the Rev. Thomas J. Lynch, with the approval of Cardinal Farley, who appointed him Supervisor of Correction Work for Catholics for the diocese. The charter of the Society was granted the following June for the purpose of separating the work for delinquents from that for purely dependant subjects, the care of whom still remained under the direction of the Supervisor of Charities. The Society has grown to be the largest and only fully equipped Catholic Church agency for court and prison work in the United States. Its activities cover the Magistrate's, Special Sessions and Domestic Relations Courts, also the special Night Court for Men and the Women's Court, in all of which its efforts are confined to purely missionary endeavors for adult misdemeanants, the probation work being in charge of civil service appointees, with whom the society's officers co-operate.

In its missionary field its greatest part has proved to be the Children's Court, where it looks after the interests of the Catholic juveniles arraigned there and through its Children's Bureau has kept each pastor in touch with every case brought there from his parish, informing him of the nature of the offense, etc., with the request that home conditions be inquired into and if necessary remedied. It has dealt with 40,000 children, and when required placed at their services a paid legal representative. Its staff of officers has been maintained entirely through individual charity. In the General Sessions and Supreme Courts, however, the society was given, through the will of the united judges, complete control of probation matters, as the various religious societies were favored rather than any irresponsible civil agency to investigate and supervise those adjudged guilty of felonies. It has covered this ground most commendably for eleven years, having made over 20,000 investigations for the judges of the General Sessions and Supreme Court, with over 5000 suspended sentences as the outcome, of which 87% of those committed to it for oversight have proved faithful to the trust reposed in them by the judges who placed them on probation. All of this involved the securing of positions for the men and women probationers, the amelioration of home conditions and the bringing of these subjects under the immediate spiritual care of their pastors.

A most practical evidence of the value of probation both as a cure and a future deterrent may be seen from the fact that through the Society's efforts complainants who were damaged in their goods, received restitution from probationers to the extent of $45,509.47 paid through the Society's office. Besides saving from the convict's brand and the loss of citizenship these men who were thus committed to its care, the Society has saved the tax payers in its eleven years of probation work, an amount of not less than $2,000,000. As the average cost per year of a State prisoner is not less than $400 the amount saved to the State by the 5000 probationers that have been kept out of its institutions, aggregates the huge sum mentioned above, all of which work has been done without one penny of compensation from the State; and all through the charity of the friends of the Society. Another feature of the Society's work has been its parole system, done voluntarily and without compensation from the State, for the men and women released from the four State prisons of New York. It has had paroled to it nearly 4000 men and women of all nationalities and colors, Catholics at least by Baptism, and so effectively has it dealt with the problems of these difficult cases that it has not lost of them, either by disappearance from oversight or by new offenses against the law, more than 15% in any year and sometimes as low as 7%. Despite the trying economic conditions and other elements militating against success, as every priest in the State acts as a parole officer in regard to those who come from his parish, the rehabilitation of the paroled man has been steadily and consistently brought about. It has also taken care of prisoners from the Federal prisons of Atlanta and Leavenworth.

Its work for women has been most fruitful. Since 1916 it has maintained a shelter for women charged with offenses by the courts and for the unmarried mothers, who were given pre-natal and maternity care in their need; so that during the four years preceding November, 1920, it cared for 1632 unmarried mothers with babies; women and girls 1820; returned 273 girls to their homes and supplied 40,800 meals. This is but a part of the work accomplished, which will be continued at the permanent quarters procured for the Catholic Big Sisters through the generosity of Archbishop Hayes, by the purchase of a house at 457 West 22nd Street, New York, which will be maintained by the Catholic Big Sisters for the purpose already mentioned. Its industrial department since 1911 has been gathering clothing, furniture, etc. Its aid in re-constructing homes and getting families together again has been most marked and practical. Besides the departments already mentioned, there was inaugurated under the charter of the society the Catholic Boys' Protective League afterwards known as the Catholic Big Brothers and also the Catholic Boys' Brigade, which had for its purpose the welfare of the Catholic boys in the public schools, both of which are now independent organizations. Since its inception until January, 1921, all the expenses incurred by the Society in its various lines of activity were borne by funds supplied by private charity.

Catholic Social Guild, an organization whose aim is to excite a keener interest among Catholics in social questions, and to assist in working out the application of the Church's principles to actual social conditions. At the annual conference of the Catholic Truth Society, held in Manchester in 1909, a small private meeting was convened, in which the view was unanimously accepted that the time was ripe for Catholics to take an active part in the great social movement of the day. A provisional executive was appointed which met at Oscott in the following October and framed a constitution. Early in 1910 the first of the series of "Year Books" of the Guild appeared, wherein the field and forces of Catholic social action were displayed. The Encyclical of Leo XIII "On the Condition of the Working Classes" was published at once as the charter and programme of the society's work. Other pamphlets speedily followed. In the publication of these early studies the Guild was indebted to the co-operation of the Catholic Truth Society. On the retirement of the first secretary, Mrs. V. M. Crawford, after nearly ten years of successful organization, the office of the Guild was removed to Oxford.

The Guild is a teaching service. It produces books and pamphlets, organizes meetings, conferences, study clubs, and examinations, gives lectures and acts as a medium of information both national and international. Besides the pamphlets of a more general character, there are volumes under the general heading of "Catholic Studies in Social Reform," embracing such burning topics as "Sweated Labor and the Trade Board Act," "The Housing Problem," "The Church and Eugenics," "Christian Feminism." "The Primer of Social Science" is now in its fourth edition. The regretted Father Plater's "Primer of Peace and War" was pronounced by a non-Catholic contemporary to be far the ablest textbook on War from the Christian standpoint which had appeared in English. Nearly 100,000 copies have been sold of "The Nation's Crisis," by Cardinal Bourne, "The Pope's Peace Note," and Fr. Bernard Vaughan's pamphlet on "The Worker's Right to Live." A quarterly Bulletin was commenced in 1911, giving an account of the activities of the Guild and its publications. At the urgent instance of workmen this was superseded in January, 1921, by "The Christian Democrat," which is published monthly.

From the outset study clubs were founded in various parts of the country. At the present there are some 140 such clubs in connection with the Guild, using chiefly as their textbooks "The Primer of Social Science," "The Christian Citizen," and "The Christian Social Crusade." Correspondence tuition is carried on in social science, industrial history, and political economy. An examination board has been formed in connection with the secondary schools. Adult candidates are examined in the same subjects, and diplomas of merit are granted on certain conditions. Much excellent work has been produced by this class of candidates. Progress has hitherto been delayed by the shortage of available tutors and lecturers, but this deficiency is being gradually remedied. As a means of special instruction and social intercourse a summer school was held at Oxford in 1920 and 1921 which will probably become an annual event. Most conspicuous among the recent achievements of the Guild is the establishment of a college at Oxford for Catholic workmen. The college is in effective working order with its head and professors. The men in residence are maintained on scholarships provided by fellow-workers in Preston and Liverpool. Arrangements are being made to found a Westminster scholarship, and a second is to follow at Liverpool. This significant advance will doubtless lead very shortly to the establishment of a similar college for Catholic women.

As the movement promoted by the C. S. G. was to some extent antagonistic to prevailing notions as to capital, employer and worker, it is no cause for wonder that in some quarters the C. S. G. aroused suspicion. It was blamed by some for being too advanced, and by others for not being advanced enough. It may here be stated that not a line written by the Guild has incurred censure, nor a single one of its speakers been called to order by ecclesiastical superiors. "Its attitude towards Socialism was explained by the President at Cardiff (1914) with a clearness and thoroughness that met with the express and emphatic approval of H. E. Cardinal Gasquet and Bishop McIntyre, both present on the platform." (Year Book, 1919).

Catholic Theater Movement.—A society founded in New York City on 18 December, 1918, to counteract the evil tendencies in the modern drama by furnishing correct information about current theatrical productions. The first meeting was called at the instance of Miss Eliza O'Brien Lummis, and was presided over by John Cardinal Farley, first honorary president. The cardinal's successor, Archbishop Patrick J. Hayes, has likewise been emphatic in his endorsement of the movement, the direction of which from the first has remained in the hands of Mgr. M. J. Lavelle, rector of the cathedral. In the initial number of the "Bulletin," the official publication of the Catholic Theater Movement, Cardinal Farley asked for its "campaign of education," not only the support of the Catholic public, but the co-operation of all God-fearing people in a concerted effort to defend themselves, their families and their children from the evil tendencies of amusements opposed to Christian standards of right thinking and right living. The best known and perhaps distinctive activity of the movement has been the publication of a "White List" of plays. This list is put forward as a suggested, not an imposed guide, to plays which in the main are adjudged to be free from objectionable features. Counsels of perfection are not insisted upon, and plays are included in the White List which must be tolerated rather than approved. Reports on plays, other than those submitted for the White Lists, are also made in the "Bulletin," coming under three heads: plays which because of some objectionable feature cannot receive even qualified commendation; plays with an assumed serious purpose, the support of which must be left to the conscience of the adult playgoers; and plays which in effect are part of a propaganda in the interest of social and moral anarchy, ranging from problem plays with anti-Christian bias down to the lowest forms of salacious farce.

Catholic University of America (cf. C. E., III-455a), formally opened in Washington, D. C., on 13 November, 1889, has made marked progress in recent years, the number of professors and instructors having grown since 1907 from 32 to 86, and the total number of students from 210 to 1,834. With a view to providing the teaching Sisterhoods with the necessary training for this work, a teachers' college was established in 1911, and approved by Pope Pius X in his letter to the Cardinal Chancellor on 5 January, 1912. On 22 April, 1914, the college was incorporated as a separate institution under the title of "The Catholic Sisters' College."

With the authorization of the trustees of the university, other colleges, high schools and novitiates may be affiliated with the university, the affiliated institution preserving its autonomy. At the present time (1921) the institutions affiliated with the university number: colleges, 15; high schools, 177; novitiates, 46.

Owing to numerous endowments received, the university has been able to add substantially to its libraries and the law library now numbers over 14,000 volumes.

In 1919 several scholarships were established in the university by the War Activities Committee of the Knights of Columbus, with a view to providing educational facilities for men returned from war service.

In 1908 the Rt. Rev. Dennis J. O'Connell, Bishop of Sebaste and rector of the university, was made auxiliary bishop of San Francisco, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Shahan succeeded him as rector 1909. That same year Monsignor Shahan was appointed a domestic prelate, and in 1915 was made Bishop of Germanicopolis. Bishop Shahan is still (1921) rector of the university.

Catholic Writers' Guild, THE, was organized at a meeting held at the residence of the Most Rev. Patrick J. Hayes, Archbishop of New York, on 12 December, 1919. Its first meeting was held on 25 March, 1920, at which the organization was perfected and a constitution adopted. The idea of a Catholic Writers' Guild was that of the Rev. Dr. John Talbot Smith who at the first meeting outlined the objects of such an association, these being the mutual aid which Catholic authors, journalists, artists, illustrators, and playwrights can be to each other if organized in a body and the value such a body can be to the Church. Archbishop Hayes was asked to accept the honorary presidency, and he graciously accepted. The second meeting was a reception in honor of His Grace.

The first president of the guild was Mr. Thomas F. Meehan, the "dean of Catholic journalists." He was succeeded in 1921 by Arthur Benington of the editorial staff of the New York World. The present officers are as follows: Honorary president, His Grace the Most Rev. Patrick J. Hayes, Archbishop of New York; president, Arthur Benington; vice-presidents, Dr. Condé B. Pallen, Miss Elizabeth Jordan, Thomas F. Woodlock; treasurer, Hugh A. O'Donnell; secretary, Thomas C. Quinn; spiritual director, Rev. John B. Kelly.

Board of Governors: Rev. John Talbot Smith, Mrs. Thomas A. McGoldrick, Austin J. Ford, James Blaine Walker, Rev. John J. Wynne, S. J., Daniel L. Ryan, Edward P. McNamee, Dr. Harold Beckett Gibbs, Rev. John J. Burke, C. S. P., Augustin McNally, Patrick T. Rellihan, Dr. Joseph H. Wade, Eleanor Rogers Cox, John Tyrone Kelly, Nathaniel P. Babcock, Miss Mary Sullivan, John F. O'Neil, Rev. Francis P. Duffy.

The Guild's early activities have included an imposing commemoration of the 600th anniversary of the death of Dante. This so impressed the National Dante Committee that it awarded one of the commemorative medals, issued by the Casa di Dante in Rome, to the guild.

Cattaro, DIOCESE OF (CATARENSIS; cf. C. E., III-456d), in Jugoslavia, suffragan of Zara. This see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Francesco Ucellini, born in Lopud 1847, appointed titular Bishop of Benda 18 May, 1894, transferred 18 March, 1895, and named an assistant at the pontifical throne 28 February, 1914. In 1920 this diocese had a Catholic population of 14,294, 15,000 non-Catholics, 19 parishes, 10 vicariates, 29 secular and 8 regular clergy.

Cava and Sarno, DIOCESE OF (CAVENSIS ET SARENENSIS; cf. C. E., III-467c). In the province of Salerno, Southern Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Izzo, who succeeded to this see 3 December, 1890, was made an assistant at the pontifical throne 18 March, 1906, died 15 January, 1914, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Luigi Lavitrano. Born in Forio 1874, made an honorary canon 3 March, 1904, director of the Leonine College at Rome 1901, appointed 25 May, 1914. The diocese of Cava, according to 1920 statistics, has a Catholic population of 28,000, 18 parishes, 118 secular and 7 regular clergy, 54 seminarians, 6 Brothers, 20 Sisters, and 100 churches or chapels. Sarno is credited with 36,204 Catholics, 8 parishes, 95 secular and 9 regular clergy, 40 seminarians, 7 Sisters, and 40 churches or chapels.

Cayes, DIOCESE OF (CAJESENSIS; cf. C. E., III-469d), in Haiti. The Catholic population of 528,000 is mostly made up of negroes from various parts of Africa and originally brought into the diocese as slaves; the balance of a small minority is European or American. There are 39 secular priests, 34 parishes, 98 churches, 3 convents for men and 11 for women, 1 seminary for the natives with 9 seminarians, 55 elementary schools with 61 teachers and 3,000 pupils, many primary schools with 130 teachers and 7,000 pupils, 1 home, 2 asylums and 1 orphanage. The government contributes in part to the support of the Catholic institutions. For the clergy there are a Society of Perpetual Adoration and a fund for infirm priests. Many religious societies exist among the laity. One periodical is published for the entire province.

Of the 23 priests who fought in the army as soldiers during the war, 1 was killed and many were wounded, 21 returned to their former diocesan duties. On 17 August, 1911, the diocese was swept by a cyclone which did great damage. The American soldiers were at one time quartered in the region. Two of the ordinaries of the diocese recently resigned and two others were elected. There was an epidemic of small-pox during 1919 and 1920.

Cebu (DIOCESES NOMINIS JESU), DIOCESE OF (CÆBUANENSIS; cf. C. E., III-471a), in the Philippine Islands. By decree of 10 April, 1920, a portion of the diocese was taken to form the new diocese of Calboyog. The first American bishop to fill this see was Rt. Rev. Thomas Augustine Hendrick, b. in Penn-Yan, N. Y., 29 October, 1849, consecrated in Rome 23 August, 1903, d. of cholera 28 November, 1909. He was succeeded by his auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Juan Bautista Gorordo, b. in Barili, Cebu, 20 April, 1862, made prelate of the Holy See 17 October, 1905, appointed titular Bishop of Nilopolis and auxiliary at Cebu 24 April, 1909, succeeded 27 November, 1911.

The principal events of the diocese in recent years were the celebration of the golden jubilee of the coming of the Mission Fathers, and on 16 March, 1921, the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the Philippine Islands. The following persons of note have died in the diocese in recent years: Rev. Juan Alcoseba, author of popular Catholic books; Rev. Domingo Javier, author of a popular theology; Rev. Filigonio Solon, editor; Hon. Segundo Singzon, ex-Governor of Samar and judge of the Court of First Instance; Señor Leoncio Alburo, ex-member of the Cebu Provincial Board; Señor Mariano A. Cuenco, Catholic controversialist and poet. The diocese comprises a wholly Catholic population, chiefly Filipinos, numbering 1,368,274. These are served through 93 parishes, 96 churches, 2 mission stations, 2 convents of men and 3 of women, 90 secular and 47 regular clergy, 6 lay brothers, 26 Sisters, 1 seminary, 30 seminarians, 1 college for men with 23 professors and 500 students, 1 college for women with 18 professors and 300 students, 1 dormitory for young girls attending the public schools, and 1 orphan asylum. The government hospital, the jail, and all the public schools permit the priests to minister in them. A society "Pia Union de Misa" is organized among the clergy and the "Federation Catolica" among the laity; two periodicals, "El Boletín Católico" and "El Precursor," are published.

Cefalù, DIOCESE OF (CEPHALUDENSIS; cf. C. E., III-476b), in Sicily, suffragan of Palermo. Rt. Rev. Anselmo Evangelista Sansoni, born in Terranova-Bracciolini, 1859, entered the Order of Friars Minor, and was appointed to this see 11 November, 1907. He died 18 June, 1921, and up to this time (1922) no successor has been appointed. This diocese is one of the richest in Italy, receiving an annual revenue of 139,284 lire from rents and royalties. In 1920 it had a Catholic population of 160,320, 22 parishes, 301 secular priests, 50 seminarians, 90 Sisters, and 265 churches or chapels.

Celebes, one of the four great Sunda Islands in the Dutch East Indies between Borneo on the west and the Moluccas on the east, extending from latitude 1° 45' North to 5° 45' South, and from longitude 118° 45' to 125° 17' East. It has an area of 72,070 sq. miles, and consists of four great peninsulas stretching east and south, and separated by three gulfs of Tomini or Gorontalo, Tolo or Tomaiki, and Boni. Though completely in the torrid zone, the maritime tropical climate is healthful, the temperature ranging generally between 77° and 80°, the extremes being about 90° and 70°. Vegetation is remarkably rich, the most important foods grown being rice, maize, coffee, coconuts, sage, obi or native potato, bread fruit, and tamarind. Indigo, cotton, and tobacco are also grown, the bamboo and rattan palm are common in the woods and among the larger trees are sandalwood, ebony, sapan, and teak. The products of the forest supply more than half the total exports. Gold, copper, tin, and iron are found on the island.

The native population is of Malayan stock: the three most important peoples are the Bugis, the Macassars, and the Mandars. Though nominally Mohammedan their religion is largely mingled with superstition. The Macassar language is spoken in parts of the southern peninsula, but Beguinese has a much larger area, and is the most cultivated and copious.

For administrative purposes the Dutch have divided the island into the Government of Celebes, with dependencies, and the Residence of Menado, administered by a Dutch governor. According to the official estimate the population in 1917 was 3,094,074. The capital is the town of Macassar, where all the products of the neighboring islands, as well as those of Celebes itself, are sold. The chief harbor of the north is that of Kema.

Celebes was first discovered by the Portuguese in 1512. In 1607 the Dutch formed a connection with Macassar and in 1618 obtained a definite establishment there. By the treaty of Bongo (or Banga) in 1666 the Dutch were recognized as protectors, and have gradually extended their influence till in the nineteenth century they made their supremacy complete. A series of revolts of various chiefs in 1905-6 was quelled after considerable fighting.

THE CELEBES ISLANDS (DE CELEBES), PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF, erected 19 November, 1919, comprising the Island of Celebes and eight adjacent islands. These islands were evangelized in the sixteenth century by Portuguese missionaries, but after the Dutch occupation Calvinism destroyed the work they had accomplished. On 4 April, 1808, two secular priests returned to the mission, and in 1859 the Dutch Jesuits arrived. The territory, which is five times as large as Holland, covering an area of 116,196 sq. miles, was formerly a part of the vicariate apostolic of Batavia, from which it was separated in 1919. It is separated from the Philippines, lying north of it, by the Celebes Sea. Besides the mission station of Macassar, which has 506 Catholics, mostly Europeans, the chief center is the mission of Minahassa, which in 1920 was served by 6 Jesuit Fathers, 60 native catechists, 31 Sisters of Bois-le-Duc, 3 churches and stations, 36 chapels (2 of which belong to the Sisters), 34 Catholic schools with 57 teachers and 1138 Catholic pupils and 631 non-Catholic pupils, 6 schools conducted by Sisters with 12 religious and 5 lay teachers, with 176 Catholic and 315 non-Catholic pupils, 1 normal school for teachers and catechists at Wolsan with 50 pupils, 1 Catholic periodical, "Geredja Katolite," and a number of pamphlets on apologetics. Minahassa counts a total population of 742,026, of whom 10,763 are native Catholics and 10 Asiatic Catholics. According to the 1918 census these islands comprise a total population of 3,131,984, of whom 3,061,758 are natives, 42,223 Europeans, and 28,003 Asiatics, mostly Chinese and Arabs. This mission is entrusted to the Holland Province of the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart of Issoudun. The first and present prefect apostolic is Rev. Gerard Vesters, appointed in January, 1920, and embarked for Brindisi 23 June following.

Celebret (cf. C. E., III-477a).—A strange priest should be allowed to say Mass in a church on presenting certified and still valid commendatory letters from his ordinary, if he be a secular priest, or from his superior if he be a religious, or from the Sacred Congregation for the Eastern Church if he belong to an Oriental Rite, unless it is certain that he has committed an offense that deprives him of the right to say Mass. If he has not got his letters, he may be admitted if his moral standing is well known to the rector of the church; should he be unknown to the rector he may be allowed to say Mass once or twice, provided he is dressed as a cleric, receives no compensation at all from the church for saying Mass there, and signs his name, office, and diocese in a book kept specially for that purpose. Bishops may issue further regulations on this subject which must be obeyed by all rectors, even by exempt religious, except where there is question of allowing a religious to say Mass in a church of his own order.

Cenacle, RELIGIOUS OF THE (cf. C. E., III-518c).—The Society has houses in Belgium, France, Italy, England, Holland, Switzerland, and the United States. The mother-house is at Brussels, and the continental novitiate at Yvoir, Belgium. The houses in France are at: Paris, Versailles, Lyons, Paray-le-Monial, Marseilles, Montpellier, Nancy, Amiens, Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Mulhouse (Alsace). In Italy there are houses at Rome, Naples, Turin, Milan, where for a number of years the present Holy Father, Pope Pius XI, was director of the community; and San Giorgio; in England at Liverpool, Manchester, London and Grayshott; in Holland at Tilburg; in Switzerland at Fribourg. The total number of foundations is thirty, four of which are in the United States, where an American Province has been established with Mother Marie Majoux as vicar-provincial. From the Cenacle of St. Regis in New York, which is the novitiate for the United States, the Society has made three other foundations: Newport, R. I. (1906); Brighton, Mass. (1910); Chicago, Ill. (1920). There are 151 Religious of the Cenacle in the United States. The present superior general is Mother Marie Aimée Lautier, who resides at Brussels, Belgium.

Ceneda (or VITTORIO VENETO), DIOCESE OF (CENETENSIS; cf. C. E., III-519b), in the province of Treviso, Italy. Since 1818 a suffragan of Venice. In 1797 Ceneda was part of the Cisalpine Republic; in 1805 of the Kingdom of Italy, founded at the Peace of Pressburg; became Austrian territory from 1815 until 1866, when it was liberated from foreign domination and united with the neighboring city of Serravalle, made a commune in the Kingdom of Italy under Victor Emanuel II, who re-named the city Vittorio Veneto.

Vittorio Veneto underwent a further hostile invasion during the last war (October, 1917–October, 1918). The whole diocese, being occupied by Austrian troops, suffered heavily, as the seat of battle for long months lay between the Piave and the Livenza on a front that stretched from Monte Grappa to the sea. Vittorio Veneto again proved true to its name when a great Italian victory and rout of the Austrian army took place there (24 October–4 November, 1918). This was the last victory of the war and was conducive to the armistice which followed.

The present bishop of Ceneda is Rt. Rev. Eugenio Beccagato, b. at Fossalta Padovana, diocese of Treviso 23 December, 1862; ordained 10 April, 1866; elected titular bishop of Sinope and apostolic administrator of Ceneda 19 May, 1917, consecrated in Treviso 17 June following, publish 10 March, 1919, to succeed to the see in place of Mgr. Caroli, promoted. Mgr. Caroli was born in Rome 16 December, 1869, ordained 1 April, 1893, rector of the Lombard Seminary in October, 1911, elected Bishop of Ceneda 18 June, 1913, consecrated in Rome by Cardinal de Lai 19 October following, promoted to titular archbishopric of Tyre 8 May, 1917, named internuncio to Bolivia 28 April, 1919, and died at La Paz 25 January, 1921, after having given great service there for religion and the nation.

The clergy of the diocese rendered efficient service during the war, and especially during the invasion of the diocese. They strove to keep up the morale of the people, to give material assistance and distribute food to the needy. Many priests were rewarded for their services by the Government, first among them Bishop Beccagato, who was created a commander of the Order of Saints Maurice and Lazarus.

The population of the diocese is 250,000, practically all of whom are Catholics. There are 118 parishes, 167 sacramental churches, 361 non-sacramental churches and stations, 192 secular and 35 regular priests, 10 Brothers, 1 Cistercian monastery, 310 nuns, 1 seminary with 14 professors and 130 seminarians, 3 colleges for boys with 25 instructors and 340 students, and 3 for girls with 30 instructors and 330 students, 1 school of agriculture with 10 instructors and 80 pupils, 1 professional school with 8 instructors and 60 pupils, 1 bureau of emigration, 6 refuges, 60 asylums for infants, 10 hospitals, 6 orphanages, 3 associations among the clergy, and various unions among the laity; 1 Catholic weekly, "L'Azione," is published.

Censorship of Books (cf. C. E., III-523).—Publishers must obtain ecclesiastical permission before printing sacred pictures with or without prayers. Permission to publish books or pictures may be granted by the local ordinary (a) of the author, or (b) of the place of printing, or (c) of the place of publication; but if one of these refuses permission another is not to be asked unless he is informed of the refusal of the other ordinary. Religious must obtain the permission of their higher superiors before approaching the local ordinary. Secular clergy require the consent of their ordinary and religious of both the ordinary and their higher superior to publish books treating of profane matters, or to write for or edit newspapers or periodicals; and Catholic laymen must not write for newspapers or periodicals hostile to Catholicism or morality, unless for a just and reasonable cause approved by the local ordinary. Authentic collections of prayers and pious works to which the Holy See has annexed indulgences, or schedules of Apostolic indulgences, or summaries of indulgences formerly collected but never approved, or those now for the first time collected, must not be published without the express permission of the Holy See. In publishing liturgical books, wholly or in part, and also litanies approved by the Holy See, the ordinary of the place of printing or publication must first certify that the work agrees with the approved editions. Vernacular translations of the Holy Scripture must not be printed unless they are approved by the Holy See, or unless they are published under the supervision of the bishops, with annotations taken chiefly from the Fathers and learned Catholic writers. Approval is also required for translations or new editions of a work already approved in the original text; but articles from periodicals when re-issued separately are not considered new editions and do not need a new approbation.

The diocesan curia should have its ex-officio censors, secular or religious clergy of suitable age, men of prudence and learning who will observe a just mean in approving or condemning doctrine. In examining works the censors must disregard personalities, keeping before their eyes only the dogmas of the Church, the common teaching of Catholics as shown by the decrees of general councils, the constitutions and ordinances of the Holy See and the consent of approved learned writers. The censor, whose name is never to be made known to the author unless he has passed a favorable judgment, must make his report in writing. If the censor approves of the work the ordinary is to authorize its publication with the censor's decision signed by his name; the censor's name must never be omitted, except in a very rare and extraordinary case when the ordinary deems the omission prudent. If the ordinary refuses to authorize the publication of a work, the author on inquiring must be told why approval has been refused, unless there is a grave reason to the contrary.

Authors and publishers who without the requisite leave cause books of the Holy Scripture or Scriptural annotations or commentaries to be printed thereby incur excommunication reserved to no one. This is a modification of the canon law, as under the older discipline the censure was incurred not only by those who caused the works to be printed, but by the printer also.

PROHIBITION OF BOOKS (cf. C. E., III-526b).—Not only may the Holy See for just reason forbid any member of the Church to read, keep, or sell certain books, but local councils and bishops may impose similar restrictions on their own subjects, though in the latter case an appeal without suspensive effect may be made to the Holy See. The abbot of a monastery sui juris and the general of an exempt clerical religious order with his chapter or council may forbid certain books to their subjects for just reasons; when there would be danger if action were not taken promptly the other higher superiors also with their councils may do so, but in such a case they must notify the head of the order as soon as possible. When a book is condemned by the Holy See it is thereby forbidden in all places and in all languages. If it has been prohibited it may not be published, read, kept, sold, or translated without permission of the proper authorities, nor may it be republished before the necessary corrections have been made and permission has been granted by the person who issued the prohibition or by his successor or superior. Booksellers must not supply, sell or keep professedly obscene books; as to other forbidden books, they should obtain permission from the Holy See; but they must not sell them except to those who they believe have a right to ask for them. Persons who have obtained permission of the Holy See to read and retain prohibited books are not authorized to read or keep books condemned by their ordinaries, unless this is expressly stated in the Apostolic indult granted to them.

The following general classes of works are forbidden by law: (a) editions of the original text and of ancient Catholic versions of the Scriptures, including those of the Eastern Church, made by non-Catholics; also translations into any language made or edited by non-Catholics; (b) books of any writers which upheld heresy or schism, or undermine the foundations of religion; (c) books attacking religion or morality; (d) books written by non-Catholics treating professedly of religion, unless it is clear that they contain nothing contrary to the Catholic Faith; (e) certain books which have not obtained the requisite imprimatur before publication, namely, the Bible, Scriptural annotations and commentaries, vernacular translations of the Bible, books or booklets relating new apparitions, revelations, visions, prophecies or miracles, or proposing new devotions, even when they are intended only for private use; (f) books attacking or ridiculing any Catholic dogma, or defending errors condemned by the Holy See, or detracting from Divine worship, or intended to upset Church discipline, or attacking the hierarchy or the clerical or religious state; (g) books teaching or recommending any kind of superstition, charms, divination, magic, or evocation of spirits; (h) books upholding the lawfulness of duelling, suicide, or divorce, or which in treating of the Masonic societies and others of the same kind declare them to be useful and not injurious to the Church and civil society; (i) books professedly treating of, narrating, or teaching obscene and lascivious things; (j) editions of liturgical works approved by the Holy See, in which there has been made any change which causes them to vary from the authentic editions approved by the Holy See; (k) books containing indulgences that are apocryphal or have been proscribed or revoked by the Holy See; (l) all representations of Christ, the Blessed Virgin, angels, saints or servants of God not consonant with the mind or decrees of the Church.

The Scriptural works just referred to under (a), as well as translations that have not received the requisite imprimatur, may be used only by those engaged in any way in theological or Scriptural studies, provided they are edited faithfully and in their entirety, and that the introductions or annotations make no attack on Catholic dogma. Ordinaries may grant permission to their subjects in case of urgency to read individual books prohibited by the general law or by Apostolic decree. Cardinals, residential and bishops, and other ordinaries, if they take the necessary precautions, are not bound by the ecclesiastical regulations prohibiting books.

Codex jur. can., 1385-1405.

Censures, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., III-527d).—In stating the relation of the Code of Canon Law to the earlier discipline and practice, canon 6 declares that all penalties, spiritual or temporal, medicinal or vindictory, latae or ferendae sententiae, which are not mentioned in the Code, are abolished. So, too, are disciplinary laws not contained expressly or implicitly in the Code, unless those that are laid down in the approved liturgical works or such as are of positive or natural Divine law.

Censures latae sententiae are multiplied: (a) if different offenses, each of which entails the censure, are committed, by the same or distinct acts; (b) if the same offense, entailing the censure, is repeated so as to form a distinct offense; (c) if the crime when punished by different superiors with different censures is committed once or oftener. Censures ab homine are multiplied if several precepts or several sentences or more than one distinct part of the same precept or sentence imposes a separate censure.

Censures may be reserved to the Holy See simply, or specially, or very specially. A censure latae sententiae is not reserved unless the law or precept expressly so states; in case of doubt, whether of law or fact, the reservation does not hold. Ignorance which is not affected or crass excuses from censures latae sententiae when perfect deliberation is required, that is when the law uses the words dare, knowingly, rashly, or the like. In ordinary cases, however, it excuses from medicinal but not from vindictory censures.

Reservation of censures is justified only in very grave circumstances, and is to be interpreted strictly. In case of a censure which prohibits the reception of the sacraments (excommunication and personal interdict), it implies reservation of the sin to which it was annexed (absolution from the censure must precede absolution from the sin); whereas in the case of other censures (suspension and local interdict), the sin may be forgiven while the censure remains; but the reservation of the sin ceases as soon as one is excused or absolved from the censure, with one exception: accusing a priest to his superiors on a false charge of solicitation is a sin reserved to the Holy See independently of the censure now attached to it. The reservation of a censure in a particular territory ceases when the offender is outside of that territory even if he has left in order to obtain absolution; but a censure ad homine if reserved is reserved everywhere. If a confessor who does not know of the reservation absolves a penitent from the censure and sin, the censure is validly absolved, provided it is not ab homine or one very specially reserved to the Holy See.

If several censures have been incurred, the culprit may be absolved from one and not from the others. In asking for absolution all the cases of censures should be mentioned, otherwise only the case mentioned is absolved; however, if only a particular absolution has been asked and the absolution given was general, the censures omitted in good faith are remitted provided they are not very specially reserved to the Holy See. In the extra-sacramental forum no particular formula is necessary in absolving from censures, but in case of excommunication it is better to use the formula given in the ritual (can. 2250). Absolution from a censure in the external forum is valid also for the internal; if a person has been absolved in the internal forum, he may act as if he had been absolved in the external, provided there is no scandal; but unless the absolution is proved or at least legitimately presumed in the external forum, the superior of that forum to whom the culprit owes obedience may consider the censure in force until absolution in the external forum has been given. When a person is in danger of death any priest can absolve him from all censures; but if the censure was ab homine or was very specially reserved to the Holy See, the culprit on recovering is obliged, under penalty of re-incurring the censure, to have recourse to him who imposed it, if it be a censure ab homine, or to the Sacred Penitentiary or the bishop or other authorized person, within a month at least by letter or by his confessor if that can be done without grave inconvenience, and to obey their order, if the censure was a jure. When there is no danger of death absolution can be given: (a) from unreserved censures by any confessor in confession; or extra-sacramentally by anyone possessing jurisdiction in the external forum over the culprit; (b) from censures ab homine, by him who inflicted the censure, or who passed sentence, or by his lawful superior, successor, or delegate, and this even if the culprit should have acquired a domicile or quasi-domicile elsewhere; (c) from reserved censure a jure, by him who created the censure or to whom it is reserved, or by their successors or lawful superiors or delegates. Consequently if the censure is reserved to the bishop or ordinary, any ordinary may absolve his own subjects, and a local ordinary may absolve peregrini also; if it is reserved to the Holy See, the Holy See can absolve and so may those who have obtained from it general power of absolving, if the censure is simply reserved, or who have special power, if the censure is reserved specially, or very special power if the censure is reserved very specially.

In more urgent cases when censures latæ sententiæ cannot be observed exteriorly without danger of grave scandal or loss of good name, or if it would be hard on the penitent to remain in the state of sin until the authority to absolve could be obtained any confessor may absolve a person in the tribunal of confession from any censure no matter how it was reserved; but he must impose on the penitent, under penalty of re-incurring the same censure, the obligation of having recourse within a month, at least by letter and by confessor, if this be possible without grave inconvenience (the culprit's name, of course, being suppressed) to the Sacred Penitentiary or a bishop or other superior having the requisite faculties, and of carrying out his instructions. The penitent, however, after receiving absolution in this manner and submitting his case to the superior in the manner just described, may go to another confessor who has the requisite faculties and receive absolution from him, after confessing to him at least the sin to which the censure was annexed when he has been thus absolved the confessor must impose on him the usual injunctions (such for instance as to repair the injury done or scandal given, or to remove the occasion of the sin). As result of this, his case being now closed, he may disregard any instructions he may receive later from the superior to whom he first submitted the case. If in an extraordinary case, except when the censure has been incurred from the crime of solicitation, this recourse to a competent authority is morally impossible, the confessor may, after imposing the usual obligations, absolve the penitent without obliging him to have recourse to the higher authorities, and impose on him a fitting penance and satisfaction for the censure which are to be performed within a reasonable time under penalty of re-incurring the censure.

Cervia, DIOCESE OF (CERVIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-545b), in the province of Ravenna, Italy, suffragan of Ravenna. The present incumbent (1922) is Rt. Rev. Pasquale Morganti, b. at Lesmo 13 January, 1853, appointed Bishop of Bobbio 9 June, 1902, promoted to the archdiocese of Ravenna 14 November, 1904, and named also Bishop of Cervia 7 January, 1909, succeeding Rt. Rev. Federico Foschi, d. 7 October, 1908. He is assisted by a coadjutor, Rt. Rev. Antonio Lega, titular Bishop of Attalia, who has right of succession.

During the World War all the priests of this diocese served at home by lending aid to the families of the soldiers, securing news of the scattered men or those fallen in the field, and by giving shelter to the refugees from invaded countries; in the army many filled positions in the ranks, or as military chaplains.

The most important development in the diocese in recent years was the erection of four infant asylums, conducted by the Sisters. According to present statistics the diocese now comprises 13 parishes, 26 churches, 35 secular priests, 30 Sisters, 1 seminary, 1 seminarian, 20 communal schools with 30 teachers and 2,000 pupils, 5 asylums, and 1 hospital. Five of the public institutions permit the priests to minister in them, and all the communal schools are supported by the Government. An association is formed among the clergy for deceased priests, and the "Giunta Diocesana" among the laity.

Cesena, DIOCESE OF (CÆSENATENSIS; cf. C. E., III-546d), in the province of Forlì, Central Italy, suffragan of Ravenna. This see was filled by Rt. Rev. Giovanni Cazzani from 5 August, 1904, until his transfer to the diocese of Cremona, 19 December, 1914. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Fabio Berdini, born in San Elpidio 1865, was appointed to succeed him 4 June, 1915. The latest statistics of this diocese, 1920, credit it with 66,700 Catholics, 59 parishes, 131 secular and 40 regular clergy, 31 seminarians, 30 Brothers, 90 Sisters, and 99 churches or chapels.

Ceylon (cf. C. E., III-547c), an island in the Indian Ocean, off the southeast coast of India. It is a Crown Colony of Great Britain, administered by a governor, an executive council of seven members, and a legislative council of twenty-one members. The executive council includes the officer commanding the troops, the colonial secretary, the attorney-general, the controller of revenue, the colonial treasurer, the government agent of the Western Province, and one member nominated by the governor. The legislative council includes the executive council, four other office holders, and ten unofficial members (six nominated by the governor and four elected) representing different races and classes in the colony. It is proposed to increase the membership of the legislative council to thirty-seven.

The estimated population of Ceylon in 1919 and census returns for 1911 were as follows, distributed according to races: Europeans, 7,349 (8,524); Burghers, 29,336 (26,673); Singalese, 2,989,380 (2,715,686); Tamils, 1,424,649 (1,060,167); Moors, 276,631 (267,054); Malays, 14,105 (12,992); Veddahs and others, 16,146 (19,271); making a total of 4,757,596 estimated in 1919, and 4,110,367 according to the 1911 census.

Education is under the Department of Public Instruction. In 1919 government schools numbered 884, with an attendance of 130,389; aided schools numbered 1,855 with 207,676 pupils; unaided schools 1,363 with 28,649 children. English and Anglovernacular schools numbered 265, with an attendance of 46,888. There were 84 industrial schools.

Religious statistics for 1919 give: 2,866,560 Buddhists, 1,087,063 Hindus; 328,613 Mohammedans, 474,060 Christians. Estimates for the distribution of the Christian population are as follows: Catholics, 366,327; Anglicans, 14,733; Presbyterians, 3,500; Wesleyan Methodists, 29,690; Baptists, 28,821; Congregationalists, 11,099.

Ecclesiastically Ceylon comprises the Archdiocese of Colombo and suffragan sees of Galle, Jaffna, Kandy, and Trincomali. Colombo and Jaffna are entrusted to the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, Galle and Trincomali to the Society of Jesus, and Kandy to the Benedictines of the Congregation of St. Sylvester. In Ceylon there are 245 priests, both European and native, and religious communities of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Sisters of the Holy Family, Franciscan nuns, Missionaries of Mary, Little Sisters of the Poor, Sisters of Charity of Jesus and Mary, and several congregations of native sisters. The present delegate apostolic is Mgr. Pietro Pisani (1920), with residence at Bangalore.

General ecclesiastical statistics for 1919 are: churches and chapels, 673; schools, 736, with 67,573 pupils; seminaries, 5, with 160 students (in the central or "Leonianum" Seminary at Kandy there are 81); orphan asylums, 18, with about 1,000 orphans; 9 European secular priests, 21 native priests, and 225 religious (Oblates, Jesuits, Benedictines); and about 650 sisters in the various educational and charitable institutions.

Chabanel, Noël (cf. C. E., III-551a).—The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome, 9 August, 1916.

Chachapoyas, DIOCESE OF (DE CHACHAPOYAS; cf. C. E., III-551b), in Peru, suffragan of Lima. Rt.

Rev. Emilio Lisson, now Archbishop of Lima, filled this see from 16 March, 1909, until his promotion 25 February, 1918. The see was left vacant for more than three years, until the appointment of his successor, the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Octavio Ortiz Arrieta, Salesian, appointed 21 November, 1921. The census of 1876, the last collected, credits this territory with a population of 95,370. In 1920 these were divided among 6 deaneries, comprising 35 parishes.

Chaco, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE CHACO), in Bolivia, South America, was erected 22 May, 1919. It is bounded on the east by the frontiers of Brazil and Paraguay, and on the south by those of Paraguay and Argentina. Contrary to the usual ruling, which places a vicariate apostolic in charge of the Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, the decree of erection placed Chaco under the Congregation of Propaganda, and entrusted it to the Friars Minor. The official residence is at Santa Rosa di Cuevo Taraija, Granchaco. The first and present (1922) vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Ippolito Ulivelli, born in Castelfiorentino, Italy, 1879, appointed vicar 1 August, 1919, and titular Bishop of Orthosias 13 August of the same year. No statistics are published for this vicariate.

Châlons-sur-Marne, DIOCESE OF (CATALAUNENSIS; cf. C. E., III-566b), in the department of Marne, France, suffragan of Reims. Upon the promotion of Rt. Rev. Hector-Irénée Sevin, appointed to this see 11 March, 1908, the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Joseph-Marie Tissier, was appointed to succeed him 20 December, 1912. Born in La Ferté-Beaumont, 1857, he was ordained in 1880, and has published a number of books.

This territory figured prominently in the World War, and saw some of the heaviest fighting. On 6 October, 1918, its bishop was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor by M. Poincaré in the presence of Marshal Pétain and Generals Maistre and Gouraud. Of the priests and seminarians 114 were mobilized, and of this number 4 priests and 7 seminarians gave up their lives, 1 was decorated with the legion d'honneur, 3 with the médaille militaire, and many received the croix de guerre.

By 1920 statistics this diocese comprises a Catholic population of 436,310, 25 first class parishes, 312 succursal parishes, and 6 vicariates formerly supported by the state. On 13 January, 1914, the Church of Notre Dame de l'Épine was made a minor basilica.

Chamberlain, PAPAL.—The title of chamberlain is given to certain distinguished officials attached to the private apartments or the person of the pope. As at present constituted, papal chamberlains date from the sixteenth or seventeenth century, though the institution goes much further back. They are members of the papal court and of the official papal family or household. Their numerous duties and privileges are laid down in their letters of appointment. Papal chamberlains are divided into the following classes: (a) privy chamberlains participanti, that is, active—laymen and clerics; (b) privy chamberlains supernumerary—clerics only; (c) privy chamberlains of sword and cape participanti—laymen only; (d) privy chamberlains of sword and cape, who may be (1) di numero or (2) supernumerary—laymen only; (e) chamberlains of honor with the violet costume—clerics only; (f) chamberlains of honor extra urbem—clerics only; (g) chamberlains of honor of the sword and cape, who are either (1) di numero or (2) supernumerary—laymen only.

The privy chamberlains participanti carry out their duties under the supervision of the papal majordomo and the maestro di camera.

They comprise both clergy and laymen. The first in rank among them is the papal almoner, who is always an archbishop; his tenure of office continues during a papal vacancy but terminates after the election, if he is not re-appointed. After him in rank come the secretary of Briefs to rulers, the secretary of the Private Code, the Regent of the Datary, the secretary of Latin Letters, the Pincera or cup-bearer who assists the Holy Father at table, the Secretary of the Embassy, the Master of the Wardrobe, and the Prefect of the Apostolic Sacristy.

In 1921 there were about 1,160 supernumerary privy chamberlains, all clerics, ranking as monsignori. They are appointed from all over the world, the title being generally accorded as a reward for zeal and virtue. The members of the College of the Masters of Pontifical Ceremonies, excepting the prefect, are supernumerary privy chamberlains, their office does not cease with the death of the pope and during the vacancy they act as chamberlains participanti. The honorary chamberlains of the violet robe number about 500; they are all clerics, and have the same insignia and privileges as the supernumerary privy chamberlains, but rank lower at court. Their dignity ceases on the death of the pope. Finally the honorary chamberlains extra urbem, 47 in number, all clerics, have the same insignia and titles as the chamberlains of the violet robe, but they may enjoy these only when residing outside of Rome. Their office also ceases on the death of the pontiff.

The privy chamberlains of sword and cape were instituted in the sixteenth century. They are all laymen. Four of them are chamberlains di numero and take charge in turn of the antechamber to the pope's private room, where they are assisted by the supernumeraries (who numbered about 380 in 1921) in regulating the admission to audiences with the Holy Father. There are also honorary chamberlains of sword and cape who rank below the preceding class, and in 1921 comprised 5 chamberlains di numero and 130 supernumeraries; the latter but not the former lose their office and dignity on the death of the pope. The privy chamberlains of sword and cape participanti are the Quartermaster Major of the Sacred Palaces, who is second in command to the papal majordomo and who has care of the buildings and the furnishings; the Master of the Stables, whose office terminates on the death of the pope; the papal Postmaster; the colonels and higher officers of the Noble Guard, and the colonel of the Swiss Guards.

The chamberlains of sword and cape have two court dresses. The first is a sixteenth century Spanish dress comprising: (1) a black cloth tunic reaching to slightly above the knee; the skirt is pleated and has a bank of black velvet reaching from the neck to the extremity and running round the lower end; the cuffs of the tunic are trimmed with lace. The collar is of batiste à la Henri IV; (2) short black cloth trousers, closed below the knee with a black rose centered with a large aquamarine button; (3) black silk stockings with patent leather shoes, having a black velvet rose bow with a aquamarine button center; (4) a black velvet mantle lined with black silk, attached over the left and under the right shoulder; (5) a gilt silver triple chain united by ten enamel medallions, with an enamel tiara and keys hanging from the middle. The distinctive enamel medallion of the privy chamberlains is red with the letters C.S.N. (camerarius secretus di numero) interlaced; that of the chamberlains of honor being blue with the interlaced initials C. H. N. (camerarius honorarius di numero); (6) an ebony-handled sword with a black patent leather scabbard, hanging from a black velvet belt; (7) a black velvet cap ornamented with a black ostrich feather.

The other dress comprises a black cloth coat with a standing velvet collar and velvet cuffs, a cravat, a white vest, and long black trousers with gold braid on the outer seam. The velvet, red in the case of chamberlains of honor and blue in the case of privy chamberlains, is embroidered with golden olive leaves. The city dress comprises: (1) an open red cloth swallow-tail coat, lined with red silk. The cuffs and standing collar are black velvet, embroidered with golden olive leaves and buds. The buttons are gilt and have a tiara and crossed keys in the center; (2) a white cravat; (3) a white cashmere vest with similar but smaller buttons; (4) long black cloth trousers with gold braid seam; (5) a sword with gilded guard, mother-of-peal handle, suspended from a golden galloon cincture.

The Spanish costume is worn only in the chapels and during solemn service, at which times the chamberlain wears his triple chain with its suspended white enameled tiara and keys. When the other service costume is worn the chamberlains carry white kid gloves in their hand. Except when the chamberlains are in presence of His Holiness or in service, the city dress is de rigueur. However, it is now customary for chamberlains of sword and cape when in Rome, if not engaged at the Vatican, to wear a black coat with the golden chain and the tiara and keys. By a special concession of Pius X supernumerary chamberlains, both privy and of honor, may wear an oval medallion enameled red or blue respectively, with the name of the pope in golden letters. It is only half the size of the medallion of the chamberlain di numero. The distinctive insignia of the chamberlains di numero is worn on the right breast of their official costumes and of their frock coats; the supernumeraries may wear theirs only on their frock coats and on the left breast. When there are no solemn receptions at the Vatican the chamberlains in service wear a black coat and the chain as just mentioned. When a chamberlain comes to Rome and wishes to go on duty, he arranges with the maestro di camera for a week's service. At the end of this period he is received by the Holy Father. The supernumerary privy chamberlains and chamberlains of honor of sword and cape are employed by the papal majordomo to keep order in the galleries or corridors of the chapels or the pontifical apartments. They may be called upon by the papal maestro di camera to assist in the antechamber to the pontifical apartment. They do so uncovered, the privy chamberlains doing duty in the privy antechamber and the others in the throne room. They aid the maestro di camera in receiving the persons about to have an audience with the sovereign pontiff.

Chambéry, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CHAMBERIUM; cf. C. E., III-566d), in the Department of Savoie, France, is under the direction of Most Rev. Dominique Castellan, who was promoted from the see of Digne on 26 May, 1915, to succeed His Eminence François-Virgile Cardinal Dubillard, Archbishop of Chambéry, from 1907 until his death, 1 December, 1914.

The diocese now (1921) shows a record of: 171 parishes, 2 monasteries for women, 2 abbeys for men, 1 convent for men, 334 secular priests and 30 regulars, 1 higher seminary and 1 lower with 45 grand seminarians, 4 colleges for boys with 60 professors and 650 students, 2 colleges for girls with 30 teachers and 250 students, 1 high school with 10 professors and 80 students (girls), 12 elementary schools with 30 teachers and 600 students.

The various institutions throughout the diocese include: 1 home for the aged, 3 orphanages, 2 anti-tuberculosis hospitals, 3 public hospitals under the direction of religious, 1 refuge home with 18 religious and 120 assistants, the "Drop of Milk Society" (Oeuvre de la goutte de lait), and one Government lycée which permits the ministrations of a Catholic chaplain.

There are various societies for young people in the diocese, also a Catholic Union and a Diocesan League; the periodicals are: "Semaine Religieuse," "Croix de Savoie," "Rosier de St. François," and parish bulletins.

In 1910 the diocese lost one of its most valuable workers by the death of M. le Canon Coster de Beauregard, who founded the orphanage for boys; in 1921 the centenary of the death of Joseph de Maistre was celebrated. During the World War 9 priests and 12 seminarians of the diocese of Chambéry were killed, and 4 priests decorated with the Legion of Honor.

Champagnat, MARCELLIN-JOSEPH-BENOÎT, VENERABLE, religious founder, b. at Marlhes, Loire, France, 20 May, 1789; d. near St. Chamond, 6 January, 1840. It is said that a wonderful light shone around his cradle on several occasions, leading observers to believe that he was to be remarkable for sanctity. He studied in the grand séminaire of Lyons and on 23 June, 1815, was ordained, two of his companions on that occasion being Blessed Jean Baptiste Vianney, popularly known as the Curé d'Ars, and Venerable Jean Claude Colin, the founder of the Marist Fathers. Champagnat was appointed to the little parish of Lavalla lying below Mont Pilat. The ignorance of the population and the lack of moral training of the young which confronted him there in his daily ministry inspired him with the idea of founding the Congregation of the Little Brothers of Mary for the Christian education of children. In this he was aided by the advice and counsel of Venerable Jean Colin, who with him and Blessed Pierre-Louis-Marie-Chanel were later to be among the first professed members of the Marist Fathers. The cause of Champagnat's canonization was introduced on 9 August, 1896, and on 11 July, 1920, the Holy See issued a decree declaring that he had practiced virtue in an heroic degree.

Changanacherry, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CHANGANACHERENSIS; cf. C. E., III-573a), in Travancore, British India, a vicariate of the Syro-Malabar Rite. The present (1922) vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Thomas Kurialacherry, born in Kalluread, 1873, studied in the College of Propaganda and ordained in Rome, 1899, appointed titular Bishop of Pella and vicar apostolic of Changanacherry 28 August, 1911. By a Brief of Pius X, 29 August, 1911, this territory was divided into two vicariates, the ancient vicariate of Kottayam being re-established. The boundaries of the new vicariate have not been determined, but it comprises all the Sudist Catholics scattered through the two vicariates of Changanacherry, and Ermaculam. The Sudists are descendants of fourth century immigrant Syrians, thus called to distinguish them from the Nordists or descendants of native Malabar castes. The latest statistics of the vicariate credit it with a Catholic population of 159,024; 116 parish churches, 72 chapels, 254 secular priests, 111 seminarians, 1501 neophytes, 18 catechumens, 415 catechumens, 1 college, 4 high schools for boys and 1 for girls, 8 middle schools, 8 vernacular high schools, 151 vernacular elementary schools, 12 boarding houses for students, 12,702 boys and 7530 girls receiving Catholic education, 4 Carmelite monasteries with 99 nuns, 9 Carmelite convents with 142 Sisters, 7 Adoration convents with 103 Sisters, and 7 Clarist convents with 153 Sisters. Four Catholic periodicals are published.

Chaplain (cf. C. E., III-579d).—The Council of Trent allowed parish priests to appoint whatever chaplains were necessary for their parishes, but the Code reserves their appointment to the ordinary who is to consult the rector. The rights and obligations of chaplains are fixed by diocesan statutes or by the bishop or parish priest. Navy chaplains seem to fall under the general law concerning the jurisdiction that may be granted to priests who are traveling by sea and so they could enjoy the power of hearing confessions not only aboard ship, but also on shore at any intermediate port of call.

Chapter (cf. C. E., III-252b; 582b).—The erection, modification and suppression of collegiate and cathedral chapters is entrusted by the pope to the Congregation of the Consistory. In each capitular church there should be dignitaries and canons, among whom the offices are to be distributed; there may be also other minor beneficiaries of varying rank, but the chapter consists only of the canons and dignitaries—unless the capitular statutes provide. The appointment of dignitaries is reserved to the Holy See: the chief dignitary of the cathedral chapter should, if possible, be a doctor of theology or canon law. A bishop has a right to appoint honorary canons, not necessarily his own subjects, after consulting the chapter to which they are to be nominated. To act validly, however, if the person to be thus honored is not his subject, the bishop must ask the consent of the nominee's bishop, informing him also of the insignia and privileges attached to the honorary office. The number of extra-diocesan honorary canons must be less than one-third of the number of titular canons. Honorary canons of churches outside of Rome can enjoy their insignia and privileges only in the diocese in which they were appointed, except when they accompany the bishop or represent him or the chapter at councils or other solemn assemblies. Chapters draw up their own statutes, which are to be submitted for approval to the bishop, without whose leave they cannot later be abrogated or changed. If a chapter should fail to draw up statutes within six months after the bishop has so ordained, the bishop may formulate them himself and impose them on the canons.

In certain cases canons may absent themselves from choir without losing the fruits of the benefits or the daily distributions, e. g. when they are prevented from attending by illness or other physical impediment; or when they are representing the bishop at councils, or assisting him in solemn services or on visitation; or when with the consent of the chapter they are absent in the interests of the chapter or of their church; or while making a retreat, but not more often than once a year; or, in the case of the canon penitentiary, when he is hearing confessions. On the other hand, if they be absent teaching theology or canon law, or while acting as vicar general, vicar capitular, official, chancellor, or episcopal secretary, they do not share in the distributions, however, if the fruits of a prebend consist only of distributions or are less than one-third of the amount of the distributions, they are to share in two-thirds of the prebendary income and the distributions. After forty years continuous faithful attendance at choir in the same church or at least in the same diocese a prebendary may ask the Holy See for an indult jubilationis; if it be granted he can receive both the fruits and the distributions, even those restricted to dignitaries actually present in choir, unless the express will of the founders or donors, or the statutes or customs of the church in question forbid it.

When the cathedral or collegiate church is also a parish church the general regulations governing the relations of the chapter and the parish priest are as follows: It is the right or duty of the parish priest: (a) to offer Mass for the parishioners, to preach to and catechize his flock; (b) to keep the parochial registers and make official abstracts from them; (c) to perform the parochial duties that are reserved to parish priests, such as baptizing solemnly, giving communion to the dying, blessing marriages, holding funeral services, the chapter having the right of holding such services only in case of funerals of dignitaries, canons (including honorary canons) or beneficiaries; (d) to perform other customary services not strictly parochial, provided they do not interfere with the choir service or are not performed by the chapter; (e) to collect alms for the parish; to receive, administer, and distribute offerings, according to the wishes of the donors. On the other hand, the chapter: (a) takes care of the Blessed Sacrament, but the parish priest must have a second key to the tabernacle; (b) sees that the parish priest observes the liturgical regulations while officiating in the capitular church; (c) takes care of the church, administering its property and pious bequests. Neither party must interfere in the other's duties; if a dispute arise it must be referred to the local ordinary; the chapter, moreover, is bound in charity to assist the pastor in his parochial work, especially if he lacks assistants, in accordance with the arrangements of the local ordinary.

There must be a canon theologian, and if possible a canon penitentiary in every cathedral church, and similar appointments may be made for collegiate churches also. The canon penitentiary should preferably be a doctor of theology or canon law, and at least thirty years of age; he must not at the same time hold any other office in the diocese entailing jurisdiction in the external forum; he has by law ordinary power, which, however, he cannot delegate, of absolving strangers in the diocese and diocesan subjects outside of the diocese from sins and from censures reserved to the bishop; he must be ready to hear confessions in the capitular church at whatever time the bishop considers convenient for the people, and also during Divine service; he must not hold the office of vicar-general, and is exempt from officiating as sub-deacon or deacon at the chapter services. If he neglects his duty he may be warned by the bishop and punished by a curtailment of his revenue; if he does not amend within a year after being warned, he may be suspended, and if he remains recalcitrant for six months longer he may be deprived of his benefice.

The cathedral chapter is to be invited to plenary and provincial councils; it sends two deputies as representatives, but they have only a consultative vote. When a see is vacant the chapter must, if necessary, appoint an oconomus and notify the Holy See as soon as possible about the death of the bishop; the new selected vicar capitular must similarly announce his own election. If the bishop is not dead, but is prevented entirely from communicating with his subjects, his place is taken by the vicar general or other delegate, if the Holy See has not provided otherwise; if these should be similarly impeded the cathedral chapter appoints its vicar to act with the powers of a vicar capitular.

Charity (cf. C. E., III-604d), CONGREGATION OF THE BROTHERS OF.—At present the Brothers conduct numerous schools and institutions in Belgium. They also have three houses in England, one in Ireland, three in Holland, and two in the Belgian Congo. In Canada they have six houses and in Boston, Mass., one flourishing institution. A census taken of the congregation in 1920 showed that, despite the ravages wrought in the ranks by the World War, it numbered 1,100 brothers. These were divided among 50 communities, which sheltered and provided for 7,000 insane men, with some hundreds of men rendered helpless and dependent by age and senility, 13,000 orphan, deaf and dumb, blind, and feeble-minded boys. At the Montreal Reformatory there are 500 boys under the care of 36 brothers, the St. Benedict-Joseph Labre Insane Asylum near Montreal has 120 patients, the Mount St. Bernard's College and Scientific school at Sorel, P. Q., has 250 students taught by 16 brothers, the Sacred Heart Academy, at Sorel, has 600 pupils taught by 20 brothers. In Drummondville, P. Q., the brothers teach all the boys of the district. They also teach all the boys of the St. Guillaume d'Upton district. In Boston, Mass., they conduct the house of the Angel Guardian, a home and school for orphan, half-orphan, and destitute boys, with an industrial department attached to it, where the boys, after passing through the grades, are taught useful trades.

Charity, SISTERS OF (cf. C. E., III-605b).—The various sisterhoods included under this general title are treated of below under their respective names.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, with mother-house in Paris, are under the jurisdiction of the Superior General of the Congregation of the Mission. Prominent among these successors of St. Vincent are John Baptist Etienne, whose generalate ended in 1874, and Antoine Fiat, who resigned at the age of eighty-two years (1914) and died in 1915. The present Superior General is François Verdier, elected 30 September, 1919, succeeding Emile Villette. The Mother General is elected every three years and can be re-elected only once. She alone bears the title of Mother; the Superioress of each house is addressed simply as Sister. The community is divided into over thirty provinces outside France, in which a Director represents the Superior General and a Sister Provincial the Mother General; but all matters of importance are referred to the Council of the Community at the mother-house in Paris.

A candidate for admission to the congregation spends three months in one of the Sisters' houses before she enters the novitiate or seminary, and after five years she takes her vows, which are renewed every year. The novices from Germany, Austria, North and South America, and China do not go to the mother-house for their novitiate, but are trained in local seminaries. Those from England and Italy make the first part of their seminary in their own countries, but in times of peace go to the mother-house to receive the habit.

The English Province, erected in 1885, includes all the houses of Great Britain and Ireland. In Ireland there are 16 houses, 7 of which are in Dublin; there are 15 houses in London and 47 in other parts of England; in Scotland there are 14 houses. In the entire Province the Sisters have 53 institutions, including industrial and poor-law schools, special schools for the blind, deaf-mutes, and cripples, orphanages, and homes of different kinds. They teach 48 elementary schools and 1 secondary school. They visit the poor and have charge of various parish works and associations in 70 parishes. They also visit 5 prisons, and nurse the poor in 9 hospitals.

During the Franco-German War the Sisters nursed both French and German wounded and in the recent war about 5,000 Sisters nursed the wounded in hospitals and ambulances, and even on the field of battle.

The following figures give some idea of the work of the Sisters in foreign missions. In one mission in China, where there are 104,983 Christians, 400,000 patients seek assistance from the Sisters in hospitals and dispensaries, and were there accommodations the number could be increased tenfold. Also in China, in a vicariate where there are 40 Sisters, of whom 25 are Europeans and 15 Chinese: in 8 hospitals 3,175 men and 440 women have been received; there are 165 old men and women in homes, and 1,074 children are being educated; in 5 dispensaries 198,806 remedies have been distributed, and 25,126 visits have been made to the sick in their homes. The missions at Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and Nazareth include the care of lepers, blind, cripples, and deserted infants, both Christians and Turks receiving like ministrations. These works were threatened with destruction by the recent war, but a few Syrian and Maronite Sisters have carried them on in spite of every difficulty. In Constantinople and other eastern missions from which French Sisters were banished, a few Syrian members of the community continue their works of charity.

The beatification of Louise de Marillac, foundress of the Sisters of Charity, took place at Rome, 9 May, 1920. The four Sisters martyred at Cambrai in 1794, Sisters Madeleine Fontaine, Jeanne Gérard, Thérèse Fantou, and Marie Lanel, were beatified 13 June, 1920. Two other Sisters martyred during the French Revolution were Sister Marianne and Sister Odile, who were shot by the revolutionists 1 February, 1793.

The Province of these Sisters of Charity in the United States was divided in 1910 into an Eastern Province and Western Province. Very Rev. J. J. Sullivan, C.M., Director of the Sisters and Sister Eugenia Fealy, Sister Assistant at Emmitsburg, opened the Central House of the Western Province at St. Louis, Mo. Fr. Sullivan was named Director, and Sister Eugenia Fealey, Visitatrix. Very Rev. J. P. Cribbons, C.M., succeeded Fr. Sullivan as Director of the Eastern Province (Central House at Emmitsburg), and Mother Margaret O'Keefe was retained as Visitatrix.

There are in the Eastern Province 1,033 Sisters and 76 houses, 11 of which have been opened since 1908. These institutions include: 32 hospitals, of which 21 are general hospitals, 8 maternities, and 3 for nervous patients only; 24 schools, of which 21 are day schools and 3 asylums and schools; 1 college, St. Joseph's, at Emmitsburg, Md.; 9 infant asylums; 19 orphan asylums; 3 industrial schools; 4 day nurseries. In several of the establishments two or three works are carried on. For example, Providence Hospital, Detroit, is a general hospital; it is also a maternity hospital and an infant asylum. St. Vincent's Asylum, Buffalo, is known also as St. Vincent's Technical School; and so of others. St. Margaret's Hospital, Dorchester, Mass., is connected with St. Mary's Infant Asylum. Columbia Day Nursery, Boston, is taken care of by Sisters from Carney Hospital, Boston. Therefore, although the number of houses in the Eastern Province is but 76, the number of works is much greater. A boys' school was recently opened (1918) in connection with St. Mary's School, Troy, N. Y. There are social service departments at St. Joseph's Hospital, Philadelphia, Pa., and Providence Hospital, Washington, D. C.

In the Western Province, on 31 December, 1910, there were 744 Sisters in charge of 58 houses. On 31 October, 1921, there were 849 Sisters in charge of 66 houses. Nine houses have been opened since 1910, and one house (infant asylum in San Francisco) has been closed. During 1920 the community took charge of a boys' school in Mobile, and during 1921 of a boys' school in Santa Cruz, as well as St. Patrick's School, St. Louis; but these three schools are attached to old works, and are not counted above as new houses opened. In New Orleans, during 1921, two asylums were consolidated; a new work, a settlement, was opened in the house formerly occupied by one of these asylums, but it is not counted above as a new house. The different works of the province include: 30 hospitals, of which 22 are general hospitals, 6 maternities, and 2 for nervous patients only, with 100,000 patients cared for during the year, 23,000 free patients in hospitals, and 156,000 treatments in clinics; 20 schools with 7,200 pupils; 7 infant asylums sheltering 3,300 children; 11 orphan asylums sheltering 2,800 children; 3 industrial schools; and 6 settlements. During the World War ten Sisters went to Italy, in charge of the nursing in Hospital Unit No. 102.

The total number of institutions throughout the world is 3,359, including all sorts of charitable works, from infant asylums to homes for the aged and schools of all grades. These are under the charge (1 January, 1919) of 37,234 Sisters.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL (Mount St. Vincent, New York; cf. C. E., III-607d).—The mother-house of this community, the novitiate with a finely equipped training school, the College of Mt. Saint Vincent (founded 1910), a high school, and academy are situated at Mount St. Vincent, N. Y. The superior general is the Archbishop of New York, and the community is governed by a council consisting of the mother general and her four assistants, all residing at the mother-house, to which the ninety missions are subordinate. The present general superior is Mother Vincentia McKenna, elected in 1922 to succeed Mother Josepha Cullen. The community numbers about 1500 members and has the following establishments in the Archdiocese of New York and the dioceses of Brooklyn, Albany, and Harrisburg: 1 college, 8 high schools, over 85 parochial schools, 1 vocational school, 5 homes for children, including a founding hospital with more than 3000 children and 500 homeless and needy mothers, 1 day nursery, 9 hospitals, 3 convalescent homes, 1 home for the aged, 1 retreat for nervous and mental diseases.

SISTERS OF CHARITY (Halifax, Nova Scotia).—The congregation of the Sisters of Charity in the Archdiocese of Halifax, whose mother-house is at Mount St. Vincent, Rockingham, N. S., is a branch of the Sisterhood founded in 1809 at Emmitsburg, Maryland, by the venerated Mother Seton. In 1846 there were in the Archdiocese of New York several missions of the institute, and in that year a separate mother-house was established for New York. In 1849, just three years later, the superiors of the new congregation, at the earnest solicitation of Archbishop Walsh of Halifax, sent four Sisters to establish a mission in his metropolitan see, the purposes of which were the education of youth, the care of orphans, and the visitation of the sick. The rapid growth of these works, coupled with the impossibility on the part of the young mother-house in New York to furnish the necessary help, led Archbishop Walsh to formulate a plan for a separate mother-house, in which the superiors in New York graciously concurred. This plan met with the approval of the Holy See, and on 8 December, 1855, the Halifax mission became a separate mother-house endowed with the same privileges conferred on previous foundations. Sister M. Basilia McCann, who had governed the mission from its establishment, was elected mother superior of the new foundation. She had been educated at Emmitsburg and received as a member of the community at St. Joseph's by Mother Seton. Notwithstanding the many difficulties which the Halifax mother-house had to encounter in the process of its development, it flourished, and at present counts 35 houses, 6 of which are in the Diocese of Boston, and 1 in Bermuda. In the scope of its works the institute embraces grammar school and higher education, the care of orphans, the sick, aged, and infirm ladies, and the protection of working girls. It has 8 academies, and is in charge of 14 public schools and 7 parochial schools. It has 3 hospitals, a home for working girls, one for aged ladies, an orphanage for boys, one for girls, and a founding asylum. On the completion of the first building at Mount St. Vincent on Bedford Basin the mother-house was translated to it 15 August, 1873. By an act of legislature Mount St. Vincent enjoys the privilege of a normal school for the training of its own members for positions in the public schools of the provinces. The novitiate is attached to the mother-house, and the institute numbers about 700 members.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF NAZARETH (cf. C. E., X-724d) celebrated the centennial of their foundation in 1912. In the same year occurred the death of Mother Eutropia McMahon, the first Mother General elected, in 1911, according to the new Constitution of the Order. She devoted her energies to many good works, encouraged educational activities, and improved the Academy. She was succeeded by Mother Rose Meagher, elected 19 July, 1912, and re-elected in 1918 for a second term of six years. Since 1911 the following foundations have been made: Nazareth School, South Boston, Mass.; St. Ann's School, Morganfield, Ky. (1912); St. Agnes' Sanitarium, St. Agnes' Parochial School, and St. Helena's Commercial College, Louisville, Ky. (1913); St. Dominic's School, Columbus, Ohio (1914); St. Peter's Parochial School, Lexington, Ky. (1915); Nazareth School, Roanoke, Va. (1916); Sacred Heart Academy, Klamath Falls, Oregon (1917); St. Theresa House, Lynn, Mass., a gift of Mgr. Teeling to St. Mary's Parish and a real home for working girls (1918); Hinde-Ball Mercy Hospital, Mount Vernon, Ohio (1919). In 1911 the Sisters resumed teaching at St. Patrick's School, Louisville, Ky., and in 1914 they reopened St. Thomas' Parochial School on the site of Old Nazareth. Nazareth Academy was affiliated with the State University in 1913 and with the Catholic University of America in 1914. The opening of Nazareth College at Louisville, Ky., on 4 October, 1920, was to meet the demand for higher education of women, and it is the first woman's Catholic college in Louisville.

The mother-house of the Society, situated at Nazareth, Kentucky, has 65 branch houses in the Archdioceses of Baltimore and Boston and the Dioceses of Louisville, Covington, Nashville, Little Rock, Natchez, Columbus, Baker City, and Richmond. The order is thus represented in Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Ohio, Massachusetts, Maryland, Virginia, and Oregon. The Sisters conduct the following institutions: 3 colleges, one of which is a commercial college and another a junior college; 15 academies; 58 parochial schools; 5 hospitals and infirmaries, caring yearly for 10,349 patients; 6 orphanages, having in all about 856 orphans; 1 home for aged men; 1 home for working girls; 1 sanitarium. The society numbers 978 members with 20,180 pupils under their instruction. Educational work is not their only activity, for they care also for the sick, invalids, prisoners, and the insane. The governing body of the society consists of a Mother General and five assistants, one of whom is treasurer general and another secretary general. During the last decade thirty-two golden jubilarians have died, besides many other members. Among the deceased are: Mother Alphonsa Kerr (d. 1913), Sister Marie Menard (d. 1914), Sister Aurea O'Brien (d. 1916), Sister Euphrasia Stafford (d. 1917).

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF CINCINNATI, OHIO (cf. C. E., XIV-28a).—Mother Mary Florence Kent succeeded Mother Mary Blanche Davis in 1911 and held the office of Mother Superior until 1917. During the first years of her term the foundation of the new Good Samaritan on Dixsmuth and Clifton Avenues was laid and two wings of the hospital were built. The community took charge of the St. William School, Price Hill, Cincinnati, and of the Corpus Christi School, Dayton, Ohio, in 1912; of the St. Sebastian School, Chicago, in 1913; of the Holy Name School, Cleveland, Ohio, and of the Annunciation School, Clifton, Cincinnati, in 1914. The St. Rita Institute, a boarding school for the deaf at St. Rita Heights, near Lockland, Ohio, was founded on 17 October, 1915, when the Sisters took their pupils thither from the school in Cincinnati. In 1916-17 the Sisters had temporary charge of St. Teresa's Home for the Aged.

Mother Mary Bertha Armstrong succeeded to the office of Mother Superior in July, 1917, and was re-elected in 1920. During her first term of office the influenza following the World War spread over the country and she imitated the example of her predecessors of cholera and Civil War periods by permitting the Sisters to serve as volunteer nurses in the infected districts of Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Colorado, and New Mexico. As in the earlier days, the community enrolled names of martyrs to the cause. The new Code of Canon Law coming into effect at this time made but one change in the constitutions of the community, that of requiring the heads of institutions to be changed at the end of six years. The College of Mount St. Joseph-on-the-Ohio with its normal department was chartered under the laws of Ohio in April, 1920, and opened to students in September of the same year. The community numbers between 900 and 1,000 members, teaching 50 parochial schools, 3 academies for girls, 1 for boys, 1 college, 1 boarding institute for the deaf, 1 day school for colored children. It has 9 hospitals and sanitariums, 1 infant asylum and maternity hospital, 1 Italian Institute for welfare work, and a day nursery. It has charge of domestic affairs of Mount St. Mary's of the West and of the diocesan orphanage and owns and conducts an orphanage in Santa Fé, New Mexico. The school in connection with the Church of the Resurrection, Price Hill, Cincinnati, was opened by the Sisters in 1919.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF LEAVENWORTH.—A pioneer band of Sisters, several of whom had been schooled at Nazareth, determining to venture forth into the unexplored West, in 1858 offered their services to Bishop Miege of Leavenworth, who was glad to have their assistance in his extensive Kansas vicariate. The guiding spirit of the community was Sister Xavier Ross, whom they elected Superior. Her conversion and entrance into the Nazareth Sisterhood had been bitterly opposed by her parents and their relentless hostility was her great sorrow. She governed the order through twenty years of missionary ventures and financial difficulties. A little cottage in the frontier town served the first Sister as a convent. This gave place to St. Mary's Mother-house and Academy, built at the cost of infinite pains. The beautiful chapel, just recently completed, is an exact facsimile of the Church of San Alphonso at Rome.

In 1869 at the insistent urging of Fr. De Smet, their staunch friend and wise adviser, the Sisters undertook to establish a colony in the Rocky Mountain Mission. They settled in Helena, Montana, and there found a field peculiarly their own. They accompanied the adventurous pioneers and railroaders to teach their children, to care for their sick, or mother their orphans. Foundation followed foundation, until today these nuns have forty houses in the Archdiocese of Santa Fé, and the Dioceses of Cheyenne, Denver, Great Falls, Helena, Kansas City, Leavenworth, and Lincoln. They direct 30 parochial schools and 9 high schools and academies, with an aggregate enrolment of 8,000 pupils; 12 hospitals caring for 15,415 patients, and 3 orphanages with 500 inmates. The Society numbers 462 professed Sisters, 9 novices, and 12 postulants.

The Sisters are well trained for their important work of teaching, being under the direction of trained supervisors and attending each year summer normal courses at the mother-house or the universities. This annual reunion of the teachers promotes the community spirit as well as educational efficiency, and they are spiritually rehabilitated by the annual retreat. By the provisions of the papal Decree, approving the Constitutions of the community, the Sisters administer their own affairs, subject directly to the control of the Congregation of the Religious at Rome. Cardinal Donato Sbarretti is the Cardinal Protector of the community. The time of probation for admission to the Sisterhood is six months postulancy and one year of noviceship, and the vows are perpetual. The Rule is, in the main, that of St. Vincent.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF ST. ELIZABETH (cf. C. E., III-608c), with mother-house at Convent Station, N. J., were founded by Mother Mary Xavier Mehegan, who died 24 June, 1915, after fifty-six years as superior of the community. She was ninety-one years of age, and had consecrated herself to God at the age of twenty-two as a member of the community of the Sisters of Charity in New York. Mother Mary Cecilia Casey, the second and present superior, succeeded the saintly foundress. The community numbers 1,300 professed Sisters and 90 novices and postulants, having 97 foundations, with 110 institutions under their care, the greater number of institutions being explained by the fact that 13 are expansions of foundations long established. New foundations since 1908 include 1 hospital, 1 academy, 8 high schools, 10 parochial schools, and 1 home for working girls. The total number of institutions includes: 1 college, 7 academies, 77 parochial schools, 8 high schools, 1 preparatory school for small boys, 5 orphanages, 6 hospitals, 1 home for the aged, 1 home for incurables, 1 foundling asylum, 2 day nurseries, and 1 home for working girls. The academies offer classical, scientific, and commercial courses, while each of 20 of the parochial schools has, in addition to an elementary grammar school course, a free commercial department. During the year 1920-21 there were 1,895 students in the colleges and academies and 42,963 in the parochial and high schools; 18,976 patients were cared for in the hospitals; 341 inmates of homes for aged and incurables, 234 children in foundling asylums and nurseries, 597 orphans, and 195 working girls were under the care of the Sisters.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY (cf. C. E., III-609a).—Since the establishment of the mother-house at Dubuque, Iowa, in 1843 the Sisters have answered calls to conduct schools in eighteen dioceses in twelve States of the United States. In 1914 Pius X authorized the erection of four provinces in the institute, rendered necessary by its growth and development. In 1911 he had appointed Cardinal Merry del Val their Cardinal Protector. The constitutions of the congregation are based upon the rule of St. Ignatius and provide for a central government under a superior general, assisted in the administration of her office by four councillors. All these officials, together with the secretary and treasurer general, are elected for a term of six years. The postulancy lasts six months, the novitiate two years. The members of the congregation are given every opportunity to meet modern educational requirements in professional training and state certification. Connected with the mother-house and novitiate are schools for normal and college extension courses. In all the institutions under their direction the Sisters aim at the highest standards of discipline, religious training, and scholarship. A work to which they attach great importance is that of the parochial grade and high schools and they have met with remarkable success. St. Mary's, the first Catholic central high school for girls in Chicago, was begun in 1899 with 72 girls under the instruction of 5 Sisters. A new building has been erected, added to, and furnished with all modern equipment, and in 1921 there were 30 teachers in the faculty and 800 girls were in attendance from 47 parishes. The Immaculate, a central high school, which promises to be for the North Side of Chicago what St. Mary's is for the West Side, was opened by the Sisters in 1921 with a registration of 210.

By special rescript of the Holy See the foundress of the congregation, Mother Mary Frances Clarke, remained superior general until her death in 1887. Under her 50 schools were opened. She was succeeded in 1888 by Mother Mary Gertrude Regan, who had entered the Sisters' novitiate at Philadelphia in 1841, the community then numbering only 14 members. Mother Gertrude celebrated her diamond jubilee in 1916 and died in 1919. The third superior general was Mother Mary Cecilia Dougherty, who three times held the office. She died before the expiration of her third term, in 1919. It was through her formal petition that the Catholic University opened university courses to the teaching sisterhoods, and the Sisters' College in Brookland, Washington, D. C., was inaugurated as an integral part of the Catholic University of America. The first students to matriculate were six Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary from Dubuque. Mother Mary Lilly, who became superior general in 1912, obtained from the Holy See, in 114, perpetual vows for the sisterhood. The installation of provincial government and the revision of the constitutions, rendered necessary by the change, were ably conducted under her supervision. The present superior general is Mother Mary Isabella Kane.

Since its foundation in 1833, 2,000 young women have entered the congregation. At present there are 1,400 members, conducting 95 schools which include 1 college, 8 academies, 13 high schools, and 73 parochial schools, with a total enrollment of 33,220 pupils. These schools are located in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Colorado, California, Montana, Oregon, Washington.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, St. John, New Brunswick, (cf. C. E., III-608d).—The rules given the community by the founder have been revised, and as Constitutions conform to the new code of Canon Law. The affairs of the community are administered by a mother general with four assistants, a general secretary, and a general treasurer. The first mother general under the revised Constitutions was Rev. Mother Mary Thomas, who was succeeded by Rev. Mother Mary Alphonsus, the present mother general. Under their wise guidance the charitable and educational works of the community have been greatly extended. Hospitals have been opened in the west at Prince Albert, Sask., and in St. John, N. B. A home for destitute infants is another great charity undertaken by the Sisters. A modern boarding-school and academy has recently been opened, and in 1921 the Sisters opened in Regina, Sask., a Girls' Guild (called Rosary Hall) for the accommodation of young women living away from home and earning their own livelihood. Thus the 18 houses of the Institute number over 200 Sisters who care for the poor, the sick, and infirm from infancy to old age. The community is engaged in all the educational activities of the times from the primary, intermediate, through the high school grades. Their pupils pass with honors the matriculation, State, and all departmental examinations.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF THE INCARNATE WORD. See INCARNATE WORD, SISTERS OF CHARITY OF THE.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF JESUS AND MARY (cf. C. E., III-609c).—This congregation with mother-house at Ghent, is administered by a superior general, a secular priest nominated by the Bishop of Ghent, and a mother general, elected for six years from among the members of the congregation. The superiors general are assisted by their council, residing at the mother-house. Each affiliation is administered by a superior nominated for three years by the general superiors. All the affiliations depend on the mother-house. The constitutions are taken from the Rules of St. Bernard and St. Vincent de Paul, to suit the mixed life of contemplation and active works. The work of revision of the constitutions will be sent to Rome. The new Canon Law has been put into execution since 1920.

The present superior general is Canon Eugène van Rechem, b. at Beveren-Audenarde in April, 1858, appointed superior general, 1 November, 1903, created titular Bishop of Carpasia, 26 March, 1914, consecrated auxiliary Bishop of Ghent 14 May, 1914, chevalier of the Order of Leopold. The mother general is Mother Bernardette (Clemence Van Reeth), b. at Antwerp, 1 November, 1853, formerly Superior of Mons, elected general superior 11 December, 1920, entitled chevalier of the Order of Leopold in 1921. She succeeded Mother Ghislaine (Rosalie Spillemeackers), b. at Boom in September, 1845, chevalier of the Order of the Crown, elected superior 2 September, 1899, and re-elected three times consecutively in 1905, 1911, and 1919, celebrated the golden jubilee of her profession in 1919, and died 17 November, 1920.

Other notable members recently deceased are: Mother Mary of the Trinity (Teresa Lockens), superior at Lahore (Punjab), where she founded the school for Parsees, d. 1908; Mother Corine (Margaret Frederix), superior at St. Trudon (Congo) where she took care of the victims of the sleeping sickness, contracted their disease, and died at the mother-house in 1910; Sister Ancina (Elizabeth Dicteren), contracted the sleeping sickness at St. Trudon, d. at St. Trond, Belgium, 1910; Mother Amalia (Van der Stegen), one of the first caravan of Sisters who went as missionaries to the Congo in 1891, returned to Belgium 1912, d. 1913, chevalier of the Order of Leopold; Sister Edith (De Blauwe), author of an account of her trips to India and Ceylon (edited 1901 and 1905), began the review "Caritas," d. 1914; Sister Finnbarr (Hammond), with Senior Oxford certificate and the degree of LL. A. St. Andrew's, head-mistress of the boarding school of Claremont, d. 1915 of an epidemic which broke out among the Belgian refugees to whom she ministered; Mother Idonie (M. Ottevaere), superior of the institute for abnormal children of Lokeren, consecrated twenty-seven years to the education of mentally deficient children, d. 1917; Mother Josepha (Clara Hellebaut), one of the ten first missionaries for the Congo, decorated chevalier of the Order of Leopold for her services at the hospital of Kinkanda, founded for Belgians working at the first railway, returned to Belgium 1905, d. 1917; Sister Gamaliel (Lucie Delaye), for twenty-five years teacher of the deaf and dumb at the Royal Institute of the Rampart des Moines, Brussels, d. 1917; Mother Mary of the Cross (Clemantine van Driessche), former superior general, d. 1918; Mother Colette (Hortense Grosse), superior of St. Trond, which sheltered many refugees during the war, the sick and unfortunate, d. 1918; Mother Pacific (Caroline Janssens), successively superior at Mons, Eecloo, Courtrai, and Beirlegem, d. at Lockeren 1919; Mother Félicité (Stéphanie Van Durme), superior at St. Genois near Courtrai, d. at the civil hospital of Manseron where she was obliged to seek refuge a few days before the armistice, 6 November, 1918; Sister Flore (Marie Bauwens), professor at the Institute of Notre Dame aux Epines at Eecloo, author of a history of Notre Dame aux Epines and of the institute (edited 1921), d. 1918; Sister Frederique (M. Verstraeten), professor of religion and philosophy at the Institute of Notre Dame aux Epines, d. 1919; Sister Seraphine (Amélie Janssens), for thirty-three years teacher of deaf and dumb children at the mother-house, decorated in 1912 with the first class Civil Cross, d. 1918; Mother Rosalie (M. Van Goethem), foundress of the house at Tottington, England, superior at Tournai, died at Ghent where she had retired during the war.

At present (1921) the congregation numbers 1,600 members with 45 foundations, of which 30 are in Belgium, 1 in Holland, 1 in England, 6 in Belgian Congo, 4 in India, and 3 in Ceylon. Under the care of the Sisters there are in Europe: 1 normal school, 9 boarding schools, 15 day schools, 18 primary schools, 10 professional schools, 1 institute for the blind, 3 institutes for the deaf and dumb, 4 institutes for mentally deficient children, 1 institute for the disabled, 2 institutes for incurables, 1 asylum for the abandoned, 1 house of preservation, 1 poor law school, 1 house for young working girls, 1 model nursery, 7 lunatic asylums, 1 sanatorium for tuberculous patients, 1 sanatorium for little girls having symptoms of consumption, 3 hospitals, 11 hospitals for incurables and old men, 1 hospital for old blind men, 4 refuges for blind adults, 3 refuges for deaf and dumb, 13 houses of retreat; in India (Punjab): 1 school for parrees and Indian girls, 3 boarding schools and day schools for Europeans, 2 industrial schools for natives, 1 nursery, 2 dispensaries for natives; in Ceylon: 3 boarding schools and day schools for Europeans, 1 nursery, 3 English and Singalese schools, 3 industrial schools, 3 industrial schools for native girls; in Belgian Congo: 1 school for white children, 4 schools for native children, 2 hospitals for Europeans, 1 hospital for contagious diseases, 1 hospital for incurables, 2 hospitals for sleeping sickness, 2 dispensaries for natives. The congregation thus had the following pupils under instruction (1912): guardian schools, 2,769; primary classes, 6,118; secondary classes, 781; secondary teaching, 55; normal school, 285; humanities, 16; commercial school, 50; domestic economy schools, 241; Sunday schools, 2,239; abnormal children, 805. The Sisters take care of 1,502 sick, infirm, and old men, 2,632 lunatics, 115 blind adults, 71 deaf and dumb adults, 406 paying guests, 80 tuberculous patients, 42 with symptoms of tuberculosis.

The expropriation of the Asylum of Ghent was an occasion of establishing the Pavilion System, the "open doors" unknown in Belgium. The Caritas asylum was inaugurated at Melle near Ghent, 27 October, 1908, by the late Bishop Stilleman, M. Renkin, Minister of Justice, and about fifty notable personages interested in the organization of the new asylum. At present there are 671 patients and 82 Sisters. At the same time Holland asked for an institute like the one at Venray and the pavilions were erected on an estate of 125 acres. The first Sisters were introduced there November, 1908, and on 11 June, 1911, the official opening took place. The Diocese of Galle, Ceylon, was endowed with two new missions in 1908, at Matara, and in 1909, at Kegalle. There the Sisters have a boarding school, a day school, schools for English and Singalese pupils, and an industrial school. In 1909 the hospital for the blind on Boulevard du Midi, in Brussels, was given in charge of the Sisters of Charity. In 1910 the Institute of Notre Dame aux Epines, at Eecloo, opened its pavilion for young ladies who are completing their education, and in 1913 that of St. Teresa, which is a center for Oxford examinations and has Greek-Latin and commercial sections. In the institute there are 1,588 pupils and nearly 200 Sisters. At Renaix in 1911 the Sisters took charge of the Canfyn Hospital, near which a new civil hospital was begun in 1914 and completed in 1920. The Sisters have been in charge of the civil hospital at Renaix since 1825.

In 1911 a mission was founded at Elizabethville (Katanga). There the Sisters have a boarding school, day school, the State hospital, the hospital of the blacks, and the dispensary of the "Drop of Milk" for the protection of black children. In May, 1912, was laid the foundation stone of the Ave Maria, a sanatorium for insane people at St. Servais-lez-Namur, opened in January, 1914, and on the way to completion. It shelters almost 600 patients, taken care of by 72 Sisters of Charity. In 1916 the Sisters took possession of an estate at Lovenjoul, belonging to the University of Louvain, an ideal place of convalescence for ladies with non-contagious disease. In 1917 the French Dominican Sisters gave over to the Sisters of Charity the direction of the institute for deaf and dumb boys and girls at Bouge-lez-Namur. In 1921, at the request of Bishop Heylen of Namur, the Sisters took charge of the sanatorium for tuberculous patients at Mont-sur-Meuse.

SISTERS OF CHARITY OF OUR LADY MOTHER OF MERCY (cf. C. E., III-610b).—According to the changes made in the constitutions of the community by the new Code of Canon Law the General Superior, elected for six years, may be re-elected only once. Previously mother generals, re-elected many times, often held their office until death. Local superiors are appointed for a term of three, instead of six years. Mother General Teresina Favier had succeeded Mother Leocritia in 1909, at the latter's resignation due to failing health. She had been Superior of St. Mary's Convent, Willimantic, Conn. In 1910 she visited the houses in the United States, and appointed Mother Alphonsa Superior of the Holy Family Academy, Baltic, Conn., as successor to Mother Aloysia Spight, who had been recalled to Europe in 1909. Under Mother Alphonsa a new wing was added to the academy buildings. In 1920 Mother Favier again visited the houses in the United States, changing, according to the new regulations, local superiors whose term of three years had expired. In 1921 Mother Favier resigned, and canonically elected as superior general Mother Christine Borsten who had been assistant to the governing faculty for many years. In 1916 the former superior general, Mother Leocritia, died at Tilburg. Previous to her election as mother general, she had been superior of three different houses in Holland, superior of St. Joseph's Convent, Willimantic, Conn., for four years, and assistant to the mother general in 1887. The Cardinal Protector of the Congregation is Cardinal Van Rossum.

Three foundations have been made in different parts of the world since 1908. In 1910 a hospital was founded in Utrecht, Holland, and a second house of the congregation was opened in Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, South America, for the twofold purpose of nursing the sick and teaching the native children. In the leper colony located at some distance from Paramaribo the Sisters are engaged in caring for these unfortunate people who belong to various creeds and nationalities. Numbers of these poor victims, by the charitable ministrations of priests and Sisters, have been brought into the Church. In 1909 one of the nursing Sisters contracted the dreadful malady, but the doctors succeeded in arresting the progress of the disease, so that she is able to continue her labors among the lepers. The third recent foundation was made in the East Indies at Tondjong, Sakti, where the Sisters give catechetical instruction and training in household work, sewing, etc., to the half-civilized women and girls and teach the native children.

Previous to the World War the congregation had eight houses in Belgium, some of which were situated in the war zone. These institutions had sheltered and cared for the sick among the troops of the invading army, when on their way to the front, so that out of regard for these charitable services the convents were spared when those of various other orders were destroyed. In 1917 the Belgian Sisters suffered much, and as many fell sick for want of proper nourishment, they were recalled to Holland. Two of the Belgian houses were subsequently closed on account of post-war conditions.

From the first year of the war until November, 1919, the houses on the Belgian frontier in Holland were taxed to the utmost to accommodate the refugees who poured in from France and Belgium. When Antwerp was besieged most of the women and children who escaped from that city fled to Tilburg, which is but twenty miles distant; here numbers arrived in a pitiable condition. The Sisters in Tilburg did all they could to relieve the sufferers. In several houses the parochial school buildings became improvised hospitals for soldiers and civilians. The inmates of an orphan asylum, about 100 children and their teachers, were received by the Sisters at the Hague. It was a difficult problem to provide sufficient food and clothing for these refugees, but Divine Providence watched over the community in a special manner, and they never lacked the necessities of life.

The principal aim of the congregation is to nurse the sick in hospitals and teach parochial schools. Many of the communities in Holland devote themselves to the twofold work of hospital and school. The Sisters also direct institutions for the aged, asylums for orphan girls, and schools for the blind and for the deaf and dumb. They conduct 3 normal schools and 7 academies. The total number of houses in 1921 was 100; professed members, 3,608; children taught, 57,732; sick and aged cared for, 3,990. In the United States there are 105 Sisters in charge of schools and hospitals in the Diocese of Hartford, with 1,997 pupils under their instruction.

Charleston, DIOCESE OF (CAROLOPOLITANA; cf. C. E., III-630c).—The present bishop of Charleston, Rt. Rev. William T. Russell, who was consecrated 15 March, 1917, succeeded Bishop Northrop, who died 7 June, 1916. The Catholic population of the diocese is 10,000. There are 21 parishes with churches, 17 missions, 95 stations, 31 secular priests and 2 regulars. There are 110 sisters in the diocese and 12 seminarians; 1 high school with 9 teachers and an attendance of 180; 5 academies with an attendance of 750; 9 elementary schools with an attendance of 1,221; 1 hospital; 1 settlement house. All the public institutions in the state admit the ministry of priests.

Deaths among the clergy since 1908 include those of Rt. Rev. P. L. Duffy and Rev. J. D. Budda. Diocesan clergy administered to the spiritual needs of the soldiers and sailors at the recreation centers which were established during the war in Charleston, Columbia, Spartanburg, Greenville, Moultrieville, and Beaufort, S. C.

Charlottetown, DIOCESE OF (CAROLINAPOLITANA; cf. C. E., III-632b), comprises Prince Edward Island, Canada, and is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Halifax. The Rt. Reverend James Charles McDonald, who had filled this see since 1891, died 1 December, 1912, and was succeeded by Rt. Reverend Henry J. O'Leary. Bishop O'Leary was consecrated 25 May, 1913, and filled the see of Charlottetown until his transfer to the Archdiocese of Edmonton in 1920. He was succeeded by his brother, Rt. Reverend Louis James O'Leary, the present incumbent, who was consecrated titular Bishop of Hierapolis and made auxiliary to the Bishop of Chatham 29 January, 1914, and transferred to the diocese of Charlottetown 10 September, 1920.

Prominent clergy of this diocese who have died within recent years are: Rev. James McDonald, Rev. Peter McCarvill, Rev. Father Brisco, Rev. J. T. Murphy, Rev. Augustus McDonald, Rev. James Phelan, and Rev. Stephen Phelan. During the World War two of the priests of the diocese served as chaplains.

The principal events of the diocese during recent years have been the erection of a new cathedral, a new orphanage, a home under the Sisters of St. Martha and the burning of the hospital of Charlottetown.

By present statistics there are: 40 parishes, 40 churches, 10 missions, 10 mission stations, 59 secular priests, 1 university with 12 professors and an attendance of 200, 2 academies for girls with 35 teachers and 250 girls, 2 academies for boys with 100 boys, 1 elementary school with 12 teachers and 450 pupils, 1 home, and 1 hospital. St. Bernard's Society is established among the clergy, and the Knights of Columbus, League of the Cross and B. I. S. among the laity. The total Catholic population is 49,200 composed of Irish, Scotch, and French.

Chartres, DIOCESE OF (CARNUTENSIS; cf. C. E., III-635b), comprising the whole department of Eure et Loir, in France, suffragan of Paris. This see, founded in the third century, is now filled by Rt. Rev. Henri-Louis-Alfred Bouquet, born in Paris, 1839, ordained 1864, professor to the Faculty of Theology in Paris, administrator of the church of the Sorbonne, appointed Bishop of Mende 18 April, 1901, transferred 21 February, 1906. He is a chevalier of the légion d'honneur and an officer of public instruction. In 1917 the centennial of the re-establishment of the diocese of Chartres was celebrated, the see having been suppressed from 1801-17. Bishop de Latil, the first bishop after the re-establishment, was granted the personal privilege of wearing the pallium. With his promotion, however, the privilege was discontinued, but it was given back to the see by Benedict XV 15 November, 1917.

In 1906 the Upper Seminary was expelled from the house which had sheltered generations of priests, and from that time until 1920 it took refuge in the Carmelite monastery, from which the Sisters had departed for Holland. In 1920 it became permanently established in a house at 1 Rue St. Emano, which belonged to the Religious of Providence, and which for centuries before the spoliation of the Revolution was the property of the Abbey of St. John. In 1914 the Apostolicity of the Church of Chartres and the ancient foundation of the famous statue of the Virgin, which is said to have been there in the time of the Druids, was confirmed by a decree of the Congregation of the Consistory, in refutation of an article written by Dom Leclercq, in which he questioned the authenticity of these facts and mentioned them as mere legends.

During the World War 142 priests and 35 seminarians were mobilized from this diocese, and of this number 8 priests and 14 seminarians gave up their lives, 2 were decorated with the legion d'honneur, 5 with the médaille militaire, and 36 with the croix de guerre. According to 1920 statistics the total population of this territory numbers 273,823, of whom 272,255 are Catholic. The diocese comprises 24 deaneries, 25 first class parishes, 351 succursal parishes, 40 vicariates, 450 secular and 4 regular clergy, 35 seminarians, 4 communities of religious women, and 70 Catholic schools with 4500 pupils. A number of charitable institutions and societies are established, and a periodical, "Voix de Notre Dame de Chartres," is published.

Chatham, DIOCESE OF (CHATHAMENSIS; cf. C. E., III-642a), Canada.—In 1913 Mgr. Henry O'Leary, then pastor of Bathurst in the Diocese of Chatham, was consecrated Bishop of Charlottetown. In 1914 Mgr. Louis O'Leary, chancellor of the diocese and author of the article on "Chatham" in the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, was consecrated titular bishop of Hierapolis and auxiliary to Bishop Barry of Chatham, who died in January, 1920. In the following August Bishop O'Leary was transferred to the see of Charlottetown, and Bishop Patrice-Alexandre Chiasson, Vicar Apostolic of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, succeeded to that of Chatham. The Catholic population of the diocese is 184,000, of whom 92,000 are French and Irish Acadians, 75,000 French-Acadians and 17,000 Irish. There are 59 parishes, 113 churches, 54 missions, 1 monastery of men (Trappist) and one of women (Trappistines), 75 secular priests, 25 regulars, 9 brothers, 15 convents of women, 298 sisters, 18 seminarians. The educational institutions include 2 colleges for boys with 20 professors and 400 pupils, 10 high schools with 30 teachers and an attendance of 450 (150 boys, 300 girls), 12 parochial elementary schools with 35 teachers and an attendance of 700. There are two asylums for orphans and one for the aged; 4 hospitals, one of which is for lepers and is under government support, as are also two schools. Two public hospitals admit the ministry of priests. The Société St. Michel is organized among the clergy.

Chauvance, LOUISE-THERÈSE DE MONTAIGNAC DE, religious foundress, daughter of Aimé, and Anne de Ruffin, b. at Le Havre de Grâce, Normandy, 14 May, 1820; d. 27 June, 1885. She was educated at Montlucon by an aunt, after whose death she devoted herself to works of charity, in particular aiding poor churches. In 1852 she founded an orphanage near her own home and established in connection with it an association of pious women to join in visits of reparation to and adoration of the Blessed Sacrament every Thursday. On 21 December, 1874, her Pious Union of the Oblates of the Sacred Heart of Jesus received episcopal approbation, and in 1879 she opened the Little School of the Child Jesus as a nursery for priestly vocations. As the Oblates had already spread into many other dioceses a general congregation was held and she was elected general on 17 May, 1880. The union received its decree of praise from the Holy See in 1881, and in 1895 its rule was definitely approved. On 23 December, 1914, the Pope confirmed the decision of the Congregations of Rites introducing the cause of canonization of the foundress.

Che-Kiang, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CE-KIAM ORIENTALIS; cf. C. E., III-677d), in the third ecclesiastical region of China, with official residence at Ning-po. This vicariate, first erected in 1696, was re-established in 1846 and entrusted to the Lazarists. The present vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Paul-Marie Reynaud, born in the department of Loire, France, 1854, entered this congregation 1873, was ordained 1879, and appointed titular Bishop of Fussola and vicar apostolic, 7 March, 1884. He is Dean of the Chinese bishops. On 28 May, 1919, Bishop Reynaud received a letter from His Holiness congratulating him on his thirty-five years in the episcopate, and on the splendid work he had carried on for forty years in the Chinese mission. At the same date the president of the Chinese Republic decorated him with the Epi d'or of the second class, in recognition of his devotion to the people of China during forty years, and in particular for the moral and financial aid which he gave during the inundations of 1917-18. At this time he offered his fur cloak for sale, and it brought over 10,000 piastres for the sufferers; the cloak has since been placed in the museum. He also obtained 40,000 francs from the Pope and 20,000 from Propaganda to be used for relief work. Other decorations were conferred on some of the priests who assisted the bishop during the famine of 1912 or the floods; Revs. J. B. Lepers, A. Buch, C. Arond, A. Defehvre, Lazarists; and J. Ing, M. Ou, and J. Chu, native priests, as well as two sisters; Sister Gilbert, of the Sisters of Charity, superior of St. Joseph's Hospital, at Ning-po, and Sister Hélène de Shaohing, a Chinese religious of the Sisters of Purgatory.

The 1920 statistics credit this territory with a total population of 11,000,000, of whom 38,460 are Catholic, 12,577 catechumens, and 17,000 Protestants. There are 17 European and 7 native priests, 5 lay brothers, 401 catechists 28 churches, 131 chapels, 2 seminaries with 117 students, 16 hospitals, 136 schools, 4 secondary schools, 9 orphanages, 10 homes for the aged, and 11 dispensaries. The Sisters of Charity, numbering 44, and the Sisters of Purgatory, numbering 67, are established here. The following statistics of the spiritual fruits of the mission for the year 1920-21 give an idea of the progress being made; conversions of heretics or schismatics, 88; baptisms, of adults 1,526, of sick or dying, 372, of children of Christian parentage 1,673, of children in danger of death, 6,396; confirmations, 1,259; confessions, annual, 15,823; of devotion, 98,959; communions, annual, 14,965; of devotion, 275,421; extreme unctions, 306. A weekly review "Le Petit Messager de Ningpo," is published in French. In 1917 the mission celebrated the jubilee of one of its oldest missionaries, Rev. Dominic Procacci, C.M., who had labored in this territory for forty years, never leaving it. On this occasion he received a letter of congratulation from His Holiness, Benedict XV. In 1919 Bishop Reynaud launched a drive for the establishment of a fund for the maintenance of Chinese priests, and on the 13 December the Pope sent word that in order to encourage this work, he had deposited 50,000 lire, the interest of which would be used for the support of a Chinese priest who should be called the Pope's missionary.

Che-Kiang, WESTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XVI-82b), in China, comprises the civil prefectures of Kia-Shing, Hu-chow, Hang-chow, Yen-show, Chuchow, and King-wa. The present Vicar Apostolic (1922) is Rt. Rev. Paul Albert Faveau, titular bishop of Tamassus, appointed 10 May, 1910. This vicariate covers a territory of 26,250 sq. miles, and comprises a Catholic population of 21,161, 7,750,000 infidels and 15,000 heretics. The missionary work is carried on by 10 European, 15 native priests, and 1 lay brother of the Congregation of the Mission; 9 secular priests, 17 Daughters of Charity, 36 Daughters of the Sacred Heart, 127 male teachers, and 35 female teachers and baptizers. The missionaries have established 14 residences, 5 sub-stations, 13 churches, 106 chapels, 110 oratories, 1 upper seminary with 26 seminarians, 2 lower seminaries with 50 seminarians, 1 normal school with 12 pupils, 54 primary schools for boys with 1,050 pupils, 18 primary schools for girls with 843 pupils. The various charitable institutions include arms and work shops, 6 industrial schools for girls with 324 girls, 2 orphanages for boys with 10 inmates, 3 for girls with 346 inmates, 2 hospitals for men in which 806 cases were treated, 2 for women in which 79 cases were treated, 2 homes for aged men with 17 inmates, 2 for women with 19 inmates, 9 dispensaries from which 266,169 cases were treated and 5,198 visits made to homes, and 3 pharmacies. The following statistics for the past year show the spiritual progress of this mission; conversion of heretics and schismatics 5; catechumens 2,870, baptisms of adult catechumens 1,017, of adult pagans in the hospitals or at the point of death, 114; of children of Christian parents, 707, of infidels, in danger of death, 3,817; confirmation, 1,605; confessions of devotion 70,656, annual, 11,029; communions of devotion, 193,926, annual, 10,395; extreme unctions, 253, marriages 177, men and boys making retreats, 301, women and girls, 630.

Chelmno (German, CULM), DIOCESE OF (CULMENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-566b), in the regency of Marienwerder, Poland, suffragan of Gniezno. The official residence was at Lobau, but since 1824 the bishop resides at Pelplin. The see is at present (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Augustin Rosentreter, born in the diocese in 1844, ordained in 1870, and appointed 23 February, 1899. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. John Klunder. Appointed titular Bishop of Selymbria, 6 July, 1907. The cathedral is at Pelplin, as well as a theological seminary which, in 1909, had 95 students and one boarding house for collegians. The diocese is divided into 26 deaneries; the 1920 statistics credit it with 267 parishes, 36 filial parishes, 502 secular priests of whom 279 are pastors, 835,585 Catholics, and 716,863 non-Catholics. There are no religious orders of men in the diocese, but there are four congregations of women distributed through 21 religious houses.

Chesterton, CECIL EDWARD, publicist, b. at Kensington, England, on 12 November, 1879; d. in the military hospital, Boulogne, France, on 6 December, 1918. He was the son of Edward and Marie Chesterton, and the brother of the noted writer, Gilbert Keith Chesterton. After studying at St. Paul's School he entered the journalistic field in which he soon made his mark. His sympathy with the oppressed classes led him into the Socialist camp and he became a member of the Executive of the Fabian Society. However, he was received into the Church in 1912, and subsequently as editor of the "Eyc-Witness" and of its successor "The New Witness," he was associated with his brother and Hilaire Belloc in an exposure of the corruption of British politicians. In 1917 he married Miss Ada E. Jones ("John K. Prothero"). The previous year he had volunteered as a private in the Highland Light Infantry for service on the Continent; shortly after the Armistice he was carried off by a brief illness resulting from exposure in the trenches. Among his writings are: "The Prussian hath said in his Heart," "Party and People," and "Nell Gwynne." His "History of the United States," written after a visit to that country during the War, but published after his death, though written with brilliancy and charm was received in the United States as an essay written by an Englishman primarily for Englishmen.

Cheyenne, DIOCESE OF (CHEYENNENSIS; cf. C. E., III-651c), comprises the State of Wyoming and all the territory of Yellowstone Park, an area of 101,262 sq. miles. The first Mass recorded in this territory was celebrated by the Rev. Peter J. De Smet, S. J., on 5 July, 1840, and on 9 August, 1887, the district was erected into the Diocese of Cheyenne, Rev. Maurice F. Burke of Chicago, being appointed bishop. At this time the diocese had a Catholic population of about 4,500 and about 300 more at the Indian Mission, only 5 secular priests and 1 religious and 8 churches, 1 hospital, 1 academy and 2 parochial schools. The new bishop, after studying conditions decided that the establishment of the see had been premature and made an unsuccessful effort to have it suppressed. However a few years later (1893), he was transferred and the see was allowed to remain vacant for several years, its affairs being managed by Very Rev. Hugh Cumiskey, administrator.

In 1897, on 24 February, a second bishop, Rev. Thomas M. Lenihan was consecrated and during the few years of his administration the new diocese made rapid progress and the state law, taxing property used for religious and educational purposes, was repealed largely through his efforts. Bishop Lenihan died 15 December, 1901, and his successor Rt. Rev. James J. Keane, D. D., was named bishop on 10 June, 1902. Feeling that Wyoming was still but a missionary field he put every effort into the spreading of the Faith, building new churches, appealing to Catholics in more prosperous parts of the country for money to carry on his work, and finally succeeding in establishing a fund which has been of permanent benefit in furthering the cause of religion throughout the diocese. He was also responsible for the building of the new cathedral of Cheyenne, which was dedicated on 31 January, 1909, and the new bishop's residence. On 11 August, 1911, Bishop Keane was promoted to the archiepiscopal see of Dubuque, and Rt. Rev. Patrick A. McGovern, the present bishop, was appointed to the Diocese of Cheyenne on 19 January, 1912, being consecrated 11 April of the same year.

The following statistics for 1921 show the rapid growth of this diocese: it now comprises a Catholic population of 23,661; secular priests 19, religious priests 7; churches 55 including 36 mission churches; resident pastors 19; ecclesiastical students, 13; 1 academy; 2 parochial schools; 1 Indian school with 50 boys; 1 Indian schools with 51 girls; total students in Catholic schools 506; baptisms; infants, 780; adults (converts) 104.

Chiapas, DIOCESE OF (DE CHIAPA; cf. C. E., III-652b), in the state of the same name, in Mexico, suffragan of Antequera, with residence at San Cristobal las Casas. Rt. Rev. Maximino Ruiz; appointed to this see 8 July, 1913, was transferred 8 March, 1920, and succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Gerardo Avaya y Diez de Bonilla, b. in Tepetpan 1881, appointed 8 March, 1920. By 1922 statistics this diocese comprises 32 parishes, 21 secular priests, 6 Brothers, 2 colleges for men with 9 professors and 110 students, 2 for girls with 12 professors and 115 students. Four societies are organized among the laity.

Chiavari, DIOCESE OF (CLAVARENSIS; cf. C. E., III-652c), in the province of Genoa, Northern Italy, suffragan of Genoa. Rt. Rev. Giovanni Gamberoni, appointed to this see 10 April, 1911, was promoted to Vercelli, 22 March, 1917, and Rt. Rev. Natale Serafino was appointed his successor, on the same day, but he was permitted to retire 4 August following, to enter the house of the Fathers of Cottolengo. The present incumbent (1922), Rt. Rev. Amedeo Casabona, was then appointed, 3 November, 1917.

During the World War thirty-nine clerics in minor orders, and sixty-one priests from this diocese, entered the army. Of this number eleven were officers, eight military chaplains, five were killed, three wounded and six decorated. The clergy at home were active in all patriotic works, tracing men in the service and those missing, assisting refugees, etc. By 1922 statistics this diocese comprises 144 parishes, 3 convents of men, 275 secular priests, 1 seminary, 80 seminarians, 5 secondary schools for boys, 10 for girls and 1 professional school. Charitable institutions such as homes, hospitals and asylums are established in all the principal centers. One society is organized among the clergy and two among the laity; two periodicals, "La Svegliata" and "Il popolo," are published.

Chicago, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CHICAGIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-653b), comprises 3,620 sq. miles of the State of Illinois, U. S. A. Most Rev. James Edward Quigley, promoted to this see 8 January, 1903, died 10 July, 1915. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. George W. Mundelein, b. in New York, 2 July, 1872, ordained in Rome, 8 June, 1895, made chancellor to the Bishop of Brooklyn, prelate of the Holy See, 21 November, 1906, appointed titular Bishop of Loryma, 30 June, 1909, and auxiliary to the Bishop of Brooklyn, promoted 9 December, 1915, and made an assistant at the pontifical throne, 8 May, 1920.

The rapid growth of the Archdiocese of Chicago in recent years has been very remarkable. "Chicago, Yesterday, To-day, To-morrow," published by the Chicago Association of Commerce, says, "It's system of charity under the direction of Archbishop George W. Mundelein and the Associated Catholic Charities, is one of the best and most effective, and its educational plans are as far-reaching as is the vision of the greatest industrial and commercial leaders."

Archbishop Mundelein made a notable departure from precedent, in appointing Jesuit professors for his School of Philosophy, at St. Mary of the Lake, to be opened in September, 1922. This will be the only theological school in the country under diocesan control, in which Jesuits teach. The president will be Rev. John B. Furay, S.J., former president of Loyola University, Chicago, and the administration will be in charge of diocesan priests from the Quigley Memorial Seminary, Rev. Gerald A. Kealy, D.D., acting as rector and prefect of discipline. The school will open with the first year of philosophy, with an enrollment of fifty students.

On 21 November, 1921, Bishop Alexander Joseph McGavick, titular Bishop of Marcopolis and auxiliary of Chicago, since 2 December, 1898, was transferred to the see of Ia Crose. While in the Chicago diocese Bishop McGavick accomplished a work for the Holy Name Society and for welfare organizations, particularly among the boys of the Big Brother Movement, which is probably unsurpassed. He increased the Holy Name Society from thirty-three branches, in 1915, to 200 with a membership of 90,000, and some twenty junior branches. The Big Brother Movement was developed so that each parish now has a Big Brother committee, and some 20,000 Catholic boys have been advised and assisted, while 1,200 from other sections of the country have been helped back to their homes. An employment bureau, a legal aid society, and a lecture bureau composed of priests, and professional and business men, have been organized, and the interests of the Catholic press, greatly advanced.

A new auxiliary was appointed to the archdiocese, 21 November, 1921, in the person of Rt. Rev. Edward Hoban, appointed, at the same time, titular Bishop of Colonia. He is a native of Chicago, educated in the parochial schools and St. Ignatius College, making his ecclesiastical studies at St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, and the Gregorian University, Rome. At the time of his appointment the new bishop was serving as chancellor of the archdiocese.

During the past year (1921) the Catholics of Chicago contributed over one million dollars to charities here and abroad. The Peter's pence collection alone amounting to $130,000, a level, says the archbishop's pastoral letter, never before attained by any church in Christendom. The latest census, taken in 1909, counts the Catholic population of the archdiocese at 1,150,000.

A comparison of some statistics published after the great fire, 1872, with those of 1921, shows the rapid growth of the Church in the city. There are now 227 churches where there were only 23; 202 parochial schools against 23; 130,000 pupils in these schools, against 10,000; 643 diocesan priests against 138; 350 priests of religious orders against 31. The 1921 statistics also credit the archdiocese with: 111 country churches with resident priests, 19 mission stations, 50 chapels, 144 diocesan ecclesiastical students, 5 seminaries for religious with 206 students, 1 preparatory seminary with 450 students, 12 colleges and academies for boys with 7,291 students, 25 academies for girls with 5,375 students, 22 high schools with 2,172 students, 72 country parochial schools with 19,488 pupils, 1 school for mutes with 118 pupils, 4 training schools and orphanages for boys with 1,705 pupils, 5 industrial schools and orphanages for girls with 1,120 pupils, 3 infant asylums caring for 267 children, 1 working boys' home with 445 inmates, 3 working girls, homes with 365 inmates, 5 homes for the aged, 18 hospitals, and 2 communities nursing the sick.

Chicoutimi, DIOCESE OF (CHICOUTIMIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-658b), Canada, is under the direction of Rt. Rev. Michel-Thomas Labrecque, appointed 8 April, 1892, made an assistant at the pontifical throne 14 May, 1917. During recent years the diocesan seminary and the Cathedral of Chicoutimi were destroyed by fire, but they have both been replaced by fire-proof buildings. With the death of Monsignor F. X. Belley on 1 October, 1919, Chicoutimi lost a prominent clergyman who had been at one time vicar-general of the diocese.

A most important event occurred in 1920 when the industrial congress of Chicoutimi was held from 19-21 July. The success of this congress was largely due to the efforts of Mgr. Lapointe, Abbe Fortin and Abbe Hébert, and a decision was made to form a national confederation of Catholic workmen of Canada. The object of this confederation is: (1) To establish a central body to lend support to, and to study the interests of different groups of workers affiliated with the confederation. (2) To assist organized Catholic movements as far as possible by means of an open press and salaried organizers. (3) To render all possible assistance to groups affiliated to the confederation by the foundation of food and credit centers and pensions for the aged, whenever their particular circumstances show them to be deserving, in times of sickness or enforced idleness. This confederation will have representatives in various public organizations and start negotiations to obtain an annual allotment of money toward its support. The executive committee was charged to prepare a constitution and by-laws and to submit them on 15 March, 1921, to all groups of workers eligible to be affiliated. This constitution will be fully enforced upon its adoption at the next convention.

At the present time (1921), the diocese comprises 97,500 French Canadian Catholics and has: 64 parishes, 69 churches, 10 missions, 1 monastery for men, 7 convents for men and 30 for women, 142 secular priests and 17 regulars, 85 brothers, 780 religious (women), 1 seminary with 600 students in the higher and 50 in the lower seminary, 15 colleges for boys with 28 professors and 1,500 students, 8 academies with 68 teachers and 500 students (girls), 1 normal school with 11 teachers and 100 girls, 426 elementary schools with 600 teachers and 23,854 students; the normal school receives financial aid from the Government. There are 3 Catholic hospitals and 3 homes in the diocese, 2 societies organized among the clergy and several among the laity, and 2 Catholic periodicals are published.

Chieti, ARCHDIOCESE OF (THEATENSIS; cf. C. E., III-659a), in the province of Naples, Southern Italy, with the perpetual administration of the diocese of Vasto (Vastensis). This see was filled by Rt. Rev. Gennaro Costagliola, from 15 April, 1901, until his death, 15 February, 1919. He was succeeded by the present (1922) incumbent, Rt. Rev. Nicolas Monterisi, born in Barletta, 1867, appointed Bishop of Monopoli, 22 August, 1913, promoted in November, 1919. In 1920 this archdiocese counted a Catholic population of 300,500, 115 parishes, 263 secular and 32 regular clergy, 90 seminarians and 442 churches or chapels.

Chihuahua, DIOCESE OF (CHIHUAHUENSIS; cf. C. E., III-659b), in Mexico, suffragan of Durango. Rt. Rev. Nicolas Gavilan y Echeverria, appointed to this see 20 February, 1902, d. 3 December, 1919, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Antonio Guizar y Valencia, b. in Cotijo, 28 December, 1879, appointed 30 July, 1920. During the disasters of 1917, the suffering people of this diocese chose the Patriarch St. Joseph as their special patron and intercessor, and on 9 January, 1919, His Holiness Benedict XV confirmed their choice. By 1922 statistics the diocese comprises 31 parishes, 117 churches, 120 chapels, 10 shrines, 5 of which are dedicated to Our Lady of Guadalupe, 1 mission, 43 priests, 1 seminary, 25 seminarians, 2 secondary schools for girls with 20 teachers and 280 pupils, 1 asylum for boys and 3 for girls, and 1 hospital under construction. The religious communities established here include: Men: Jesuits, Lazarists, and Dominicans. Women: Servants of the Sacred Heart and of the Poor, and Sisters of Calvary. Various brotherhoods and confraternities are organized, the "Pacto Josephino," among the clergy and 4 syndicates of good works among the laity. A periodical "El Defensor del Obrero," is published here.

Chilapa, DIOCESE OF (DE CHILAPA; cf. C. E., III-659b), comprising the State of Guerrero, Mexico. This diocese erected in 1863, is under the administration of its fourth bishop, Rt. Rev. Francisco Campos y Angeles, born in St. Nicolas de Actopan, Mexico, 1860, entered the seminary of Lulacingo, of which he became rector, appointed Bishop of Tabasco, 7 November, 1897, and transferred 12 October, 1907. In 1920 this diocese comprised 361,239 Catholics, 64 parishes, 94 priests, 585 churches, and 58 chapels.

Chile (cf. C. E., III-660c).—The area of the country is 289,829 square miles. According to the census of 1920 (15 December), there were in Chile 3,754,723 inhabitants, an increase of 505,444 over the census of 1907. This denotes an annual increase of 1.20% during the last thirteen years. Of the population, 46.8% was urban (1,749,562); 53.4% was rural (2,005,161). The proportion of urban population has shown a marked increase from census to census, and reflects the tendency to concentrate in cities. The total number of foreigners included in the census of 1920 was 115,763, as against 134,524 in 1909, a decrease of 18,761; the greatest decline was among the Peruvians, 15,088 of whom emigrated. They were followed by the Bolivians, numbering 6,011. There are about 100,000 Araucanians, 1,550 of whom are in Tierra del Fuego. The largest cities are: Santiago 424,993; Valparaiso 218,465; Concepcion 74,808; Iquique 47,677; Talca 43,044.

EDUCATION.—Education has been compulsory since 26 August, 1920. There were in 1919, 3,061 public primary schools with 320,898 pupils and 7,038 teachers; and 293 private primary schools with 1,012 teachers and 41,143 pupils; 15 public normal schools with 1,955 pupils and 409 teachers; 90 public and 136 private secondary schools with 32,598 and 22,295 pupils respectively; 11 public commercial schools with 179 teachers and 2,974 pupils. The cost of maintaining the public primary schools in 1919 was £715,138, that of the national normal schools, £98,075, and that of the Government secondary schools, £357,496. An industrial university was opened at Valparaiso and another at Concepcion in 1920. The State University had 4,138 matriculated students in 1919.

GOVERNMENT.—For judicial purposes, there are seven Courts of Appeal, one in each judicial section, in addition to a High Court of Justice in the capital, tribunals of First Instance in the departmental and subordinate courts in the districts.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—The total area of the agricultural land is 42,183,663 acres; of forest area, 9,495,483 acres; of fruit trees, 276,704 acres; of meadows, 18,393,252 acres. The number of farms in 1919 was 96,794. The principal crops of Chile in 1919 were, wheat, 1,235,400 acres, 11,459,500 cwts; barley, 110,500 acres, 1,596,775 cwts; and beans, 109,000 acres, 932,602 cwts. Extensive natural forests are found, the largest being in the province of Valdivia (1,885,406 acres), in Llanquihue (1,406,024 acres), and Chiloé (1,188,572 acres). Chile's chief mineral wealth lies in its nitrate, of which, in 1920, 2,606,571 tons were produced and 2,870,809 tons were exported. Chile has almost a complete monopoly of the production of nitrate, and the Government therefore was able to levy a heavy export tax without directly curtailing the sale of the product. From this tax was drawn 40 per cent of the total revenue of the national Government. The immediate and direct effect of the war in 1914 was to cut off almost completely the shipment of nitrate, resulting in a sharp decline in the revenue of the Chilean Government. After the first five months, however, the Powers' demand for nitrates in their munition-making caused prosperity to reign again in Chile, which lasted until the war ceased, and with it munition-making. To provide against the inevitable deficit in the national budget which follows a cessation of nitrate export, the Chilean Government is now considering tax reforms. Chile ranks second in the world production of copper and has an enormous coal output (1,516,524 tons in 1919).

On 1 January, 1921, the foreign debt amounted to 29,675,080 and the internal debt to 59,794,092 pesos. In 1918 Chile had 2,320 manufacturing establishments, using raw material to the value of 403,707,096 gold pesos, which were manufactured into merchandise to the value of 766,776,872 pesos. The number of workmen employed was 70,920.

RECENT HISTORY.—After the declaration of war in Europe in 1914, Chile declared that she would adopt the conventions of the Second International Conference of The Hague relating to the rights and duties of neutrals in time of war, even though she had not ratified them, and as proof ordered all wireless apparatus on all ships to be dismantled.

This neutrality was often endangered by the presence of belligerent warships in Chilean waters, by the torpedoing of the French ship "Valentine" by the cruiser "Leipzig" and the sinking of the German cruiser "Dresden" on 4 July, 1915, by a British naval division at Juan Fernandez. The latter case caused international complications. On 2 April, 1915, the British squadron appeared in Chilean waters and opened fire on the German cruiser "Dresden." Rather than lose his ship the captain of the Dresden blew up his vessel. Chile demanded an apology from Great Britain for the intrusion of the British squadron and its violation of Chilean neutrality. This was granted and accepted, to the intense displeasure of Germany, who protested, denying all the allegations in the British note of apology and demanding satisfaction. On 25 May, 1915, Chile signed the A. B. C. treaty in Buenos Aires (see BRAZIL).

Chile's conflict with Peru and Bolivia over the territories of Tacna and Arica still continues. The Treaty of 1883, which took from Peru the department of Tarapaca and provided that Chile's occupation of the provinces of Tacna and Arica was to be temporary and was to terminate, subject to a plebiscite in 1893, has not been carried out as regards its essential provisions. The conditions of the plebiscite have never been agreeable to both sides and the plebiscite, therefore, has never been carried out. In the meantime Chile has remained in possession of the territory by force of arms. In the Treaty of 1904 Bolivia ceded Antofogasta to Chile, and in return Chile began the construction of a railroad from Arica to La Paz at her own expense ($25,000,000). This railroad was completed in 1913. Peru protested against the construction of this line, saying that it was to cross Tacna, part of the territory subject to a plebiscite decision. This resulted in the suspension of diplomatic relations between Peru and Chile in 1910. After the European War Peru supposed that the League of Nations would annul the Treaty of 1883 and return to Peru all she lost in the war of 1879 (Tarapaca), and Peruvian sympathizers rejoiced at the possibility of the League's annulling the treaty of 1904 with Chile. This policy tended toward influencing Bolivia against the Chilean project of making a Bolivian port in Tacna and Arica, and instead presented to the Bolivians the expectation of reconquering without effort the rich littoral of Antofogasta. The movement was resisted by Señor Gutierrez Guerra of the Bolivian Government, who desired to keep the national faith pledged by the treaty of friendship with Chile. This caused a revolution in Bolivia. The new Government declared the treaty null and void. This concerted action of Peru and Bolivia to provoke Chile brought on a crisis in 1919. Peru brought the question before the League of Nations, which, however, did not desire to engage in treaty revision, fearing to establish dangerous precedents for other countries. It must not be forgotten that Bolivia enjoys in practice all the advantages of having seaports. By the treaty Chile granted her the right to have her own custom houses in the Chilean ports and at present there are Bolivian custom houses in both Arica and Antofogasta. The final settlement of the dispute is expected at the conference to be held in March, 1922, in Washington between the plenipotentiaries of Chile and Peru.

RELIGION.—In 1920 the Chilean legation to the Holy See was raised to the rank of embassy. In 1916 the Vicariate Apostolic of Magellan (q.v.) was erected from the Chilean territory of the former Prefecture Apostolic of Southern Patagonia.

For Catholic statistics see SANTIAGO, ARCHDIOCESE OF; CONCEPCION, DIOCESE OF; SAN CARLOS DE ANCUZ, DIOCESE OF; SERENA, DIOCESE OF; TARAPACA, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; ANTOFOGASTA, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; ARAUCANIA, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF.

Chi-li, CENTRAL, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CE-LI CENTRALIS), erected 14 February, 1910, comprising the civil Prefectures of Pao-ting-fu and Yehien in China, formerly part of the Vicariate of Northern Chi-li (see C. E., XVI-82). It is entrusted to the Lazarists with the official residence at Pao-ting-fu. The present (1922) vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Joseph-Sylvain Fabrègues, titular Bishop of Alali, born in Montpellier 1872, ordained 1896, and joined the mission at Northern Chi-li, director of the district of Pao-ting-fu 1905, appointed 22 February, 1910. He is the first vicar apostolic of this vicariate. The following statistics show how rapidly the Faith has spread in this territory: in 1880 there were 5,463 Catholics; 1890, 7,970; 1899, 12,026; 1902, 12,700; 1905, 26,283; 1910, 72,531; 1913, 84,196; and in 1920 out of a total population of 3,000,000, 85,836; this growth is particularly remarkable in consideration of a massacre of 2,000 Christians which occurred in this mission in 1900. The statistics of 1920 also credit the vicariate with 37 mission stations, 720 villages where a mission is given each year, 61 missionary priests, 140,000 confessions, and 200,000 communions for the year, 22 students in the upper seminary, 85 in the lower seminary, and 60 in the preparatory seminary. In 1920 Pope Benedict XV addressed a letter to Bishop Fabrègues commending the splendid work he has done in recruiting and training native clergy.

Chi-li, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CE-LI ORIENTALIS; cf. C. E., III-677b), is one of six vicariates dividing the territory of Chi-li in Northern China. It is under the care of the Lazarist Fathers of Holland, to whom it was entrusted upon its erection in 1899.

The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Ernest Francis Geurts, titular Bishop of Rhinocolura, born 9 December, 1862, ordained at Cheng-Ting 1887, consecrated 4 February, 1900. The episcopal residence is Yungpingfu.

An important event in this diocese was the erection in 1920 of a higher seminary at Chala near Peking, to be used as a central seminary for the five vicariates of Northern China in charge of the Lazarists: Central, Eastern, Northern, Southwestern, and Maritime Chi-li.

By present statistics (1921) this vicariate counts: 10 parishes, 45 chapels and churches, 224 missions, 10 mission stations; 17 regular clergy, 30 Sisters, 1 seminary with 31 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 6 teachers and 91 pupils, 1 normal school with 3 teachers and 44 students, 74 elementary schools with 75 teachers and 1,102 pupils and 3 orphanages with 55 orphans. The Catholic population numbers 15,600, all Chinese, out of a total population of 4,000,000.

Chi-li, MARITIME (TIEN-TSIN), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CE-LI MARITIMUS), erected 27 April, 1912, comprising the civil prefecture of Tien-tsin-fu, formerly part of the Vicariate of Northern Chi-li or Peking (see C. E., XVI-82). This vicariate, territorially one of the smallest, but numerically one of the largest in China, is entrusted to the Lazarists with the episcopal residence at Tien-tsin. Rt. Rev. Paul Dumond, born in Lyons 1864, ordained 1888, made director of the district of Pao-ting-fu 1898, was appointed titular Bishop of Curubis and first vicar apostolic of this vicariate, 27 April, 1912.

In 1920, upon the creation of the Vicariate of Kiang-si, Bishop Dumond was made its apostolic administrator. The present (1922) administrator of Maritime Chi-li is Rt. Rev. Jean de Vienne de Hautefeuille, titular Bishop of Abrytus and coadjutor at Northern Chi-li. In 1920 this vicariate counted a total population of 2,000,000, of whom 38,118 are catechists and 2,000 catechumens. The mission is served by 9 European and 11 native priests.

CHI-LI, NORTHERN OF PEKIN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CE-LI SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., III-677a), comprises two prefectures of Choun-tien-fu and Suan-hao-fu in China, and has a Catholic population of 300,000, out of a total population of 4,324,178.

The present vicar apostolic is the Rt. Rev. Stanislaus Francis Jarlin, a Lazarist, b. in the diocese of Montpellier 20 January, 1856, ordained 1889, consecrated titular Bishop of Pharbaetus 29 April, 1900, and made coadjutor to Bishop Favier, vicar apostolic of Northern Chi-li, with the right of succession; succeeded as vicar apostolic 4 April, 1905. His coadjutor is Rt. Rev. Jean de Vienne de Hautefeuille, titular bishop of Abrytus and administrator of Maritime Chi-li. The cathedral and episcopal residence are at Peking.

The various religious orders established in this territory now (1921), besides the Lazarists, who have 19 European and 23 Chinese priests and 2 brothers, are: the Cistercians with 23 priests, 22 choir religious and 45 brothers, the Marist Brothers with 22 Europeans and 26 Chinese, the Daughters of Charity with 5 homes and 58 religious, Franciscan Missionaries of Mary with 1 house and 9 religious, Daughters of St. Joseph with 27 houses and 70 native religious. In addition to the missionary Fathers there are 2 European secular priests and 69 Chinese; 62 parishes, 69 European churches, 465 public chapels, and 69 oratories; 1 higher seminary with 37 students (philosophical and theological), 1 lower seminary with 131 Latin students, 1 normal school with 68 students, 9 catechism schools with 182 pupils, 8 schools for European sciences and languages with 1,022 pupils, 6 Chinese schools with 114 pupils, 554 schools for boys with 12,567 pupils, 258 schools for girls with 7,756 pupils, 927 schools for catechumens with 19,936 adult pupils and 1529 children.

There are 3 hospitals and in addition to these care is given to the sick in their homes and through 9 dispensaries, 1 home for the aged and 3 asylums for orphan girls and 1 nursery. None of these institutions receive any aid from the Chinese government, but the French government allots them a certain sum annually. The mission has established a very active press which publishes a number of religious and educational books in Chinese and Latin, not only for this mission but for many of the others in China. The "Catholic Bulletin of Peking" and the "Sacerdos in Sinis" are also published, as well as a Catholic Directory "Catholic Missions of China and Japan," published annually, in French, since 1916. A recent event of interest in the vicariate, was the conversion of His Excellency René Lou-Tseng-Tsian, former Minister Plenipotentiary, and since 1912 serving the government in various capacities such as Minister of Foreign Affairs, Premier, and delegate and high commissioner at the conference of Versailles. The city of Peking has entrusted the Daughters of Charity with the administration of its largest hospital, giving it the name of "Central Hospital," and religious services are permitted here just as in a religious institution. Since the revolution the Bishop is received once a year by the President of the Republic and accorded the same honors as a member of the diplomatic Corps, but given a private conference. During the World War, out of all the missionaries who were mobilized only a few were called to France, and of this number none were killed but several wounded; two were decorated with "Croix de Guerre," and "Légion d'Honneur."

CHI-LI, SOUTHEAST, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CE-LI MERIDIO-ORIENTALIS), comprises the 5 prefectures of Hokienfu, Scheuchow, Kichow, Kwangpinfu and Tamingfu and 37 sub-prefectures. It is entrusted to the Jesuit Fathers, the present vicar apostolic being the Rt. Rev. Henri Lécroart, titular Bishop of Anchialos.

The Catholic population at present (1921) numbers 105,291 baptized Chinese and 45,000 catechumens out of a total population of 8,300,000. There are 1,085 parishes and missions, 114 churches, 761 public chapels and oratories, 2 convents for men, 24 secular and 55 regular clergy, 38 Sisters, 1 seminary with 20 seminarians, 2 colleges for men with 30 teachers and 420 students, 3 colleges for girls with 15 teachers and 135 pupils, 2,085 elementary schools with 2,344 teachers and 40,134 pupils. The various charitable institutions include 40 homes of different kinds, 5 asylums, and 3 refuges. There is a Catholic press which publishes the necessary Catholic literature.

CHI-LI, SOUTHWEST, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CE-LI MERIDIO OCCIDENTALIS), is entrusted to the care of the Lazarist Fathers, the present vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Hubert-François Schraven, titular Bishop of Amyclæa, who came to the see as successor to Bishop de Vienne de Hautefeuille (transferred 1919), who had been made coadjutor to Bishop Coqset (1915) and succeeded him as vicar (1917) when he was transferred to Kiang-si. The episcopal residence is at Chengtingfu. Within recent years the vicariate has lost 8 of its European missionaries, 5 of these having died during an epidemic of typhoid in 1917, which also took 13 of the native missionaries. This epidemic was brought on by the great flood which occurred in 1916, and was followed in 1920 by a severe drought which brought famine to over 20,000,000 people. During these calamities the missionaries took an active part in helping the afflicted and their work went far toward making them better known and destroying the existing prejudice against them, and to this they attribute the remarkable increase in the number of catechumens (20,000 in all) during the present year, an increase of 4,000 to 5,000 on previous years.

In addition to the Lazarists, who number 17 European and 21 native priests and 3 brothers, the other religious communities established are: Paulist Sisters (with 46 members), Daughters of Charity (26), and Josephine Sisters (124). By present statistics (1921) there are 21 native secular priests, 17 parishes, 86 churches, 484 public chapels, 88 oratories, 926 mission stations, 1 higher seminary with 28 students, 1 lower seminary with 100 students, 2 normal schools with 116 students, 1 school for foreign languages with 35 pupils, 18 native schools with 646 pupils, 143 elementary schools for boys with 3,777 pupils, and 98 for girls with 4,943 pupils. Among the charitable institutions are 12 asylums with 715 children, 5 farms and workhouses with 72 inmates, 4 workshops with 654 inmates, 3 orphanages for boys with 180 orphans, and 4 for girls with 656 orphans, 2 hospitals for men with 1,194 patients, 2 for women with 708 patients, 2 homes for aged men with 163 inmates and 2 for aged women with 135 inmates.

China (cf. C. E., III-663b).—AREA AND POPULATION.—The Chinese Republic, situated in Eastern Asia, includes China proper or the Eighteen Provinces (She-pa-sheng), the so-called New Dominion of Sinkiang (including East Turkestan), Manchuria, Outer Mongolia, Inner Mongolia, and Tibet, with a total area of 3,913,560 square miles, of which China proper extends over 1,532,420 square miles. These figures are given by the Government Gazette (27 February, 1911), which estimates the total population at 320,650,000. The "Almanach de Gotha" (1914) and the "Statesman's Year-Book" (1921) give for the Eighteen Provinces an estimated population of 325,817,760 and 302,110,000 respectively. The population of each province is as follows: Chi-li, 32,571,000; Shan-tung, 29,600,000; Shan-si, 60,700,000; Ho-nan, 25,600,000; Kiang-su, 17,300,000; Ngan-hwei, 17,300,000; Kiang-si, 14,500,000; Che-kiang, 17,000,000; Fu-kien, 13,100,000; Hu-pe, 24,900,000; Hu-nan, 23,600,000; Kwang-tung, 27,700,000; Kwang-si, 6,500,000; Yun-nan, 8,500,000; Kwei-chow, 11,300,000; Shen-si, 8,800,000; Kan-su, 5,000,000; Sze-chwan, 23,000,000.

GOVERNMENT.—The government of China is republican in form. The source of all executive powers is the president (elected for five years, and eligible for one re-election), who promulgates the laws, issues orders for their execution, is commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and appoints all civil and military officials. If he dies in office he is succeeded by the vice-president. The National Assembly, the legislative branch of the Government, is made up of a Senate (Tsan I Yuan) and a House of Representatives (Chung I Yuan). The Cabinet is composed of a Premier (Kuo Wu Tsung Li) and the ministers of nine executive departments, or Ministries (Pu) of Foreign Affairs (Wai Chiao), Interior (Nei Wu), Finance (Ts'ai Cheng), War (Lu Chun), Marine (Hai Chun), Justice (Ssu Fa), Education (Chiao Yu), Agriculture and Commerce (Nung Shang), and Communications (Chiao Tung). Eight councillors are attached to the Cabinet Office, also a number of semi-independent bureaus, as the Bureaus of Laws, of Statistics, of Printing, the Civil Service Bureau, etc. Chiang Chun Fu is a military advisory board of the President. The Central Salt Administration was organized in 1913, comprising a Chief Inspectorate of salt revenues under a Chinese chief inspector (Tsung Pan) and a foreign associate chief inspector (Hui Pan). The Revenue Council (Shai Wu Ch'u), formed in 1906, supervises the maritime customs through the foreign Inspectorate General of Customs at Peking and the Chinese superintendents of customs at the different ports. The General Staff is organized on the same basis as a ministry under a Chief of Staff. The Supreme Court is the highest judicial tribunal in the country. The Administrative Court (Ping Cheng Yuan) tries the impeachment of officials. The Department of Tibetan and Mongolian Affairs (Meng Tsang Yuan) has charge of the affairs of the outlying Chinese territories of Mongolia and Tibet.

At the beginning of the Republic many of the provinces under their military governors were slipping from the control of the Central Government. In 1914 a new system of provincial administration was promulgated. In each province there is a civil governor (Seng Chang), appointed by the president, and controlling the civil officials, police, and militia. He also exercises direct control over the lesser territorial officials in the province, the Taoyins and district magistrates. The military governor (Tu Chun) has authority over military matters, subject to the orders of the president, the Ministry of War, and General Staff. A special envoy for foreign affairs (Wai Chiao Pu T'ie Pai Chiao) is stationed in each province to conduct the relations with foreigners. The Chief of the Department of Finance supervises the collection of taxes. There are also the Departments of Education and Industry. The chief judge of the Higher Court (Kao Teng Shen P'an Ting) is the principal judicial authority in the province. Each province is divided into a number of large circuits, varying between two and seven, and called Tao, each under the jurisdiction of an official, called a Taoyin, who acts under the supervision of the governor of the province. These circuits are subdivided into districts (Hien), authority over which is vested in district magistrates, also subject to the governor. Rival factions within the Republic during recent years have united under the leadership of the military governors, whose power in their respective spheres has thus become supreme. The Unification Mandate, issued in 1920, attempted to restore central control.

CALENDAR.—According to a resolution passed by the Tze Cheng Yuan on 20 November, 1911, China adopted the western calendar. The old method of reckoning dates has not been entirely abolished in the provinces, but all official documents are marked according to the European calendar.

EDUCATION.—Great progress has been made in education in China since the change in the educational system in 1905, and especially of recent years. A phonetic script system, invented in 1913, serves to unify the spoken dialects, help the study of Chinese characters, and educate the illiterate. The Board of Education supervises higher education, and primary education is under provincial control. Schools have been established in every town, and an attempt has been made to make primary education compulsory. Thirty-four technical colleges and six higher normal schools have been founded. The Peking Government University, completely reorganized in 1917, has 1,500 students and 90 teachers. There are many missionary schools and colleges. The extension of medical science in recent years is noteworthy. Since 1900 China has sent about 400 students to be educated in the United States, a special preparatory institution in Peking having been established. In 1920 there were 175 students in the United States receiving support from the Chinese government, 168 in Europe, and 1,241 in Japan. There were altogether 1,600 Chinese students in the United States. The total number of schools in China in 1919 was 134,000, with 5,500,000 students.

RELIGION.—The native religions of China are Confucianism, Taoism, and Buddhism. Proposals to make Confucianism the state religion have failed, though it is the basis of ethical teaching in national education. The Constitution accords freedom of worship to the people. In an audience given to the Bishop of Peking on 26 February, 1912, the president assured full religious liberty to all, and the abolition of old disabilities. A Presidential Mandate of 30 August, 1918, appointed the Minister of the Interior to reverently perform, in behalf of the president, the ceremonies connected with the worship of Confucius.

Mohammedans are numerous in China, but accurate statistics for them are unavailable. According to Broomhall there are in China 8,500,000 Mussulmans, of whom 3,500,000 are in Kan-su and over 1,000,000 in Yun-nan. D'Ollone brings the total down to 5,000,000. The Chinese Year Book (1919) gives from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000. According to the last source there are 600 Jews in China.

The Russian Ecclesiastical Mission in 1918 consisted of a monastery, a hermitage, a nunnery, 5 convents, and 32 churches, with 5,587 baptized Chinese adherents. The bishop is resident at Peking.

Protestant missions date from 1807 and at various times no less than 138 societies have had representatives in China. According to the "World Statistics of Christian Missions" in 1916 there were 108 Protestant missionary societies active in China, with a total foreign staff of 5,750 and a total native staff of 15,680; 4,082 organized churches and 4,037 other places where regular services were held; 257,431 communicants, 77,925 baptized non-communicant adults and children, 114,525 others under Christian instruction; 3,003 Sunday schools with 166,054 teachers and pupils. Attached to Protestant missions in 1915 were 24 colleges, 120 normal and training schools, 29 theological schools, 216 middle schools, 5,212 elementary schools, and 386 hospitals and dispensaries. In 1915 the publications of the Chinese agencies of the three Bible societies (British and Foreign, American, and the National Society of Scotland) amounted to 6,301,522 copies of the whole Bible or portions thereof. Of these 2,875,000 are in Mandarin, 265,000 in simple Wen-li, and 98,000 in classical Chinese.

Catholic Missions.—By decree of Pope Leo XIII, 23 June, 1876, China was divided into five ecclesiastical regions, which are made up of the following vicariates apostolic.

First Region.—In the Chi-li province: (1) South-eastern Chi-li, erected 1856; under the care of the Jesuits; residence, Chang-kia-chwang, in the Prefecture of Hokien; vicar apostolic, Henri Lécroart, titular Bishop of Anchialos. (2) Northern Chi-li, erected 1856; under the Lazarists; residence, Peking; vicar apostolic, Stanislas Jarlin, titular Bishop of Pharbatus; coadjutor, Jean de Vienne, titular Bishop of Abrytus. (3) Southwestern Chi-li, erected 1856; under the Lazarists; residence, Chengting; vicar apostolic, Hubert-François Schraven, titular Bishop of Amyclæa. (4) Eastern Chi-li, erected 1899; under the Lazarists; residence, Yungping; vicar apostolic, Ernest Francis Gcurts, titular Bishop of Rhinocolura. (5) Central Chi-li, erected 1910; under the Lazarists; residence, Pao-ting; vicar apostolic, Joseph Fabrègues, titular Bishop of Alalis. (6) Maritime Chi-li, erected 1912; under the Lazarists; residence, Tien-tsin; vicar apostolic, Paul Dumond, titular Bishop of Curubis. In the Ho-nan province: (7) Northern Ho-nan, erected 1869; under the Foreign Missions of Milan; residence, Wei-hwei; vicar apostolic, Martin Chiolino, titular Bishop of Calama. In Manchuria: (8) Southern Manchuria, erected 1838; under the Foreign Missions of Paris; residence, Mukden; vicar apostolic, Felix-Marie Choulet, titular Bishop of Zela. (9) Northern Manchuria, erected 1898; under the Foreign Missions of Paris; residence, Kirin; vicar apostolic, Pierre-Marie Lalouyer, titular Bishop of Rhaphanæ; coadjutor, Auguste Ernest Peter Gaspais, titular Bishop of Canopus. In Mongolia: (10) Eastern Mongolia, erected 1883; under the Missionaries of Scheutveld (near Brussels); residence, Sung-hui-tsoci-tze; vicar apostolic, Conrad Abels, titular Bishop of Lagania. (11) Central Mongolia, erected 1883; under the Missionaries of Scheutveld; residence, Si-wan-tze; vicar apostolic, Jerome Van Aertselaer, titular Bishop of Zarai. (12) Southwestern Mongolia, erected 1883; under the Missionaries of Scheutveld; residence, Eul-she-sze-king-ti; vicar apostolic, Louis Van Dyck, titular Bishop of Abbir.

Second Region.—(1) Northern Kan-su, erected

1878; under the Missionaries of Scheutveld; residence, Liang-chou; vicar apostolic, Geoffrey Frederix, titular Bishop of Thagaste. (2) Southern Kan-su (Prefecture Apostolic), erected 1905; under the Missionaries of Scheutveld; residence, Ts'in-chou; prefect apostolic, Constantin Daems. (3) I-li or Kuldja (Mission), erected in 1888; under the Missionaries of Scheutveld; residence, Sui-ting; superior of the mission, Joseph Hoogers. (4) Northern Shen-si, erected 1844; under the Franciscans; residence, Yen-an-fou; vicar apostolic, Celestin Ibañez y Aparicio, titular Bishop of Bagi. (5) Southern Shen-si, erected 1887; under the priests from the Seminary of Sts. Peter and Paul, Rome; residences, Ku-lu-pa and Hanchung-fu; vicar apostolic, Antonio Capettini, titular Bishop of Evania. (6) Central Shen-si, erected 1911; under the Franciscans; residence, Si-ngan-fu; vicar apostolic, Eugene Massi, titular Bishop of Jaffa. (7) Northern Shan-si, erected 1844; under the Franciscans; residence, Tai-yuan; vicar apostolic, Agapito Augusto Fiorentini, titular Bishop of Rusaddir. (8) Southern Shan-si, erected 1890; under the Franciscans; residence, Lu-ngan; vicar apostolic, Albert Oederic Timmer, titular Bishop of Drusipara. (9) Northern Shan-tung, erected 1839; under the Franciscans; residence, Tsi-nan; vicar apostolic, Adalbert Schmucker, titular Bishop of Elearchia. (10) Eastern Shan-tung, erected 1894; under the Franciscans; residence, Che-fu; vicar apostolic, Adéodat Wittner, titular Bishop of Miletus. (11) Southern Shan-tung, erected 1885; under the Society of the Divine Word of Steyl; residence, Yen-chou; vicar apostolic, August Henninghaus, titular Bishop of Hypæpa.

Third Region.—(1) Eastern Che-kiang, erected 1696; reestablished 1846; under the Lazarists; residence, Ning-po; vicar apostolic, Paul-Marie Reynaud, titular Bishop of Fussola. (2) Western Che-kiang, erected 1910; under the Lazarists; residence, Hang-chow; vicar apostolic, Paul Faveau, titular Bishop of Tamassus. (3) Southern Ho-nan, erected 1882; under the Foreign Missions of Milan; residence, Nan-yang; vicar apostolic, Flaminio Bellotti, titular Bishop of Sufetula. (4) Western Ho-nan, erected 1906; under the Congregation of St. Francis Xavier of Parma; residence, Siang-cheng; vicar apostolic, Lodovico Calza, titular Bishop of Termessus. (5) Eastern Ho-nan, erected 1916; under the Foreign Missions of Milan; residence, Kai-feng-fu; vicar apostolic, Noè Tacconi, titular Bishop of Aradus. (6) Southern Hu-nan, erected 1856; under the Franciscans; residence, Heng-chou; vicar apostolic, Pellegrino Luigi Mondaini, titular Bishop of Synaus. (7) Northern Hu-nan, erected 1879; under the Augustinians; residence, Li-chu; vicar apostolic, Angelo Diego y Carbajal, titular Bishop of Caloe. (8) Northwestern Hu-pe, erected 1870; under the Franciscans; residence, Lao-ho-kou; pro-vicar apostolic, Fr. Ermengild Ricci. (9) Southwestern Hu-pe, erected 1870; under the Franciscans; residence, Ichang; vicar apostolic, Modestus Everaerts, titular Bishop of Tadama. (10) Eastern Hu-pe, erected 1870; under the priests of the Irish Maynooth Mission; residences, Wuchang and Hankow; vicar apostolic, Gratien Gennaro, titular Bishop of Jericho. (11) Kiang-nan or Nanking, erected 1660; reestablished 1856; under the Jesuits; residence, Shanghai; vicar apostolic, Prosper Paris, titular Bishop of Silandus. (12) Kiu-kiang (formerly Northern Kiang-si), erected 1696; reestablished 1838; under the Lazarists; residence, Kiu-Kiang; vicar apostolic, Louis Fatiguet, titular Bishop of Aspendus. (13) Yü-Kiang, formerly Fu-Chow (formerly Eastern Kiang-si), erected 1885; under the Lazarists; residence, Fu-chow; vicar apostolic, Louis Clerc-Renaud, titular Bishop of Elea. Southern Kiang-si (erected 1869) divided in 1920 into two vicariates as follows: (14) Ki-anfu; under the Lazarists; residence, Ki-anfu; vicar apostolic, Nicholas Ciceri, titular Bishop of Dausara. (15) Kan-chow, under the Lazarists; residence, Kan-chow; administrator, Paul Dumond, vicar apostolic of Maritime Chi-li.

Fourth Region, under the Foreign Missions of Paris.—(1) Kwei-chow, erected 1708; reestablished 1847; residence, Kwei-yang; vicar apostolic, François-Lazare Seguin, titular Bishop of Pinara. (2) Northwestern Sze-chwan, erected 1696; residence, Cheng-tu; vicar apostolic, Jacques-Victor Rouchouse, titular Bishop of Ægea. (3) Eastern Sze-chwan, erected 1860; residence Chung-king; vicar apostolic, Célestin-Félix Chouvellon, titular Bishop of Dansara. (4) Southern Sze-chwan, erected 1860; residence, Sui-fu; vicar apostolic, Marie-Pierre Fayolle, titular Bishop of Lampa. (5) Yun-nan, erected 1702; reestablished 1840; residence, Yun-nan; vicar apostolic, Charles-Marie de Gorostazu, titular Bishop of Aila. (6) Tibet, erected 1846; residence, Khanting; vicar apostolic, Pierre-Philippe Giraudeau, titular Bishop of Thynias. (7) Kien-tchang, erected 1910; residence, Ning-yuan-fu; vicar apostolic, Joseph Bourgain, titular Bishop of Archelaïs.

Fifth Region.—(1) Fu-kien, erected 1696; under the Dominicans; residence, Fu-chow; vicar apostolic, Francis Aguirre, titular Bishop of Bothrys. (2) Amoy, erected 1883; under the Dominicans; residence, Amoy; vicar apostolic, Emmanuel Prat, titular Bishop of Mactaris. (3) Hong-Kong, erected 1874; under the Foreign Missions of Milan; residence, Hong-Kong; vicar apostolic, Domenico Pozzoni, titular Bishop of Tavia. (4) Canton (until 1914 prefecture of Kwang-tung), erected 1858; under the Foreign Missions of Paris; residence, Canton; vicariate vacant. (5) Western Kwang-tung, erected 1920; under the Foreign Missions of Paris; residence, Fort-Bayard; vicar apostolic, Auguste Gauthier, titular Bishop of Doberus. (6) Swatow, erected 1914; under the Foreign Missions of Paris; residence, Swatow; vicar apostolic, Adolphe Rayssac, titular Bishop of Cotiaëum. (7) Kwang-si, erected 1875; under the Foreign Missions of Paris; residence, Nan-ning; vicar apostolic, Maurice-François Ducoeur, titular Bishop of Barbalissus. (8) Shiu-kow, erected from Canton in 1920; under the Salesians; residence, Shiu-kow; vicar apostolic, Aloysius Versiglia, titular Bishop of Carystus. (9) Macao (Diocese), erected 1516. The diocese, suffragan of Goa, India, includes the Portuguese colony of Macao, the prefecture of Chaoking and sub-prefecture of Siangchan in China; while outside of China it includes the Island of Timor and the Portuguese missions of Malacca and Singapore. The vicar capitular is Mgr. José da Costa Nunes with residence at Macao, a city of 40,000 opposite Hong Kong.

Religious Orders.—At the outbreak of the European War many of the missionaries of French orders and missionary societies returned to France. It is estimated that one-third of the French missionaries at this time were mobilized. We can realize the effect of this when we remember that the majority of the missionaries in China at the outbreak of the war were of French nationality. The Jesuits, Vincentians, and Foreign Missionaries of Paris, who hold between them 25 of the 53 vicariates into which China is divided, are almost entirely French. This depletion of missionary ranks, owing to war and its after effects, has been the incentive in other countries for many far-reaching missionary movements. Since 1910 no less than eleven new organizations have been appointed to missions in China. These particularly come from America and Ireland. From America we have the Foreign Mission Society of Maryknoll, the Society of the Divine Word, the Chinese Mission Society of Omaha, the Dominicans, the Vincentians, and the Passionists. From Ireland have come the Fathers of the Society for Chinese Missions and the Christian Brothers of Ireland. In 1920 the American Dominicans were appointed by the Holy See to a mission in the Province of Fükien. This province is under the care of Spanish Dominicans who set aside a portion of their territory for the American province. The American Vincentians took over a new mission in Southern Kiang-si in 1921, and Mgr. Dumond, formerly Vicar Apostolic of T'ien-tsin, was appointed as vicar apostolic. The Passionists were appointed to Northwest Hu-nan in 1921. In 1918 the first band of missionaries from the Foreign Mission Society of Maryknoll reached China, following their appointment by the Holy See to a section of the Province of Kwangtung. Recently they obtained further territory in the Province of Kiang-si with mission headquarters at Wu-chou on the borders of the two provinces. The Chinese Mission Society received its appointment to the Province of Hu-pe in 1919 and the following year its first band of missionaries reached China. The headquarters of the Society are at Han-yang, in the Province of Hu-pe. The Society of the Divine Word was appointed to a new vicariate in Kansu during 1921 as a compensation for the missions they lost during the war. The American province of the Society with headquarters at Techny, Ill., sent its first missionaries to Shan-tung in 1919. In addition to these missionary forces we must also add the Irish Vincentians who have opened schools in Peking, and two American secular priests who have gone to engage in educational work in the Vicariate of Eastern Ho-nan under the direction of the Foreign Missionaries of Milan.

Two orders of Sisters opened institutes in China during 1920 and 1921. In 1920 the Sisters of Divine Providence of St. Mary's of the Woods, Ind., sent six Sisters to open schools in the Vicariate of Eastern Ho-nan. The following year the first band of the Missionary Sisters of St. Dominic, organized by the Foreign Mission Society of Maryknoll, New York, reached China and will work in the missions of the Society in Kwang-tung and Kiang-si. In 1921 the Christian Brothers of Ireland arrived at Han-yang, Hu-pe. This order has taken over the educational work for the Chinese Mission Society in the Province of Hu-pe. The China Mission College at Almonte, Canada, sent its first missionaries to Kwei-chow in 1919.

The native orders of men are the Paulists and the Brothers of the Sacred Heart. Two unsuccessful attempts have been made in the last half century to establish the Congregation of the Mother of God. The first was made by Mgr. Languillat, who established the Congregation of St. Joseph. This was to be a native order of catechists and teaching brothers. It was unsuccessful and the few brothers who remained after its dissolution were received into the Congregation of the Mother of God, then in its infancy. The latter congregation was founded by Mgr. Garnier at Nan-king. In 1909 this order was united with the Marist Brothers by Mgr. Paris, Vicar Apostolic of Kiangnan. The union lasted three years, and difficulties arose. The Marists believed these difficulties to arise from a difference in spirit and training and required all the members of the old congregation to make their novitiate over again under the Marist rule. This ruling was refused by all the members except thirty-six, who accepted. The others left the community and went back into the world. The Congregation of the Mother of God was dissolved, but is now again under consideration for reorganization. The Paulist Institute was founded by Mgr. Bruguière, Vicar Apostolic of Southwestern Chi-li, in 1894 as a teaching order for his vicariate. This order still exists with its motherhouse at Cheng-ting-fu, and numbers at present thirty-five religious. The Brothers of the Sacred Heart were founded in Eastern Mongolia in 1911. This congregation is entirely religious with three vows. The members take vows for a period of five years, after which they may renew them for a further period of five years, then for ten years, and after this latter period they are admitted to perpetual vows. At present they number sixteen professed brothers. They wear a Chinese costume of black material.

The native orders of women have made far more progress than native orders of men. The men are usually absorbed by foreign missionary orders while the native women have developed their own organizations. It is a common thing in China to find women making vows of virginity in early life, as in the early Church. These women live in their own homes and sometimes adopt the rule of some community as far as possible. The Community of Chinese Virgins in Zechewan was the first attempt to organize a native Sisterhood. They do not live in community, but scattered among the Christians whom they instruct. The Chinese Virgins of Tibet follow a rule drawn up by Mgr. Giraudeau, and live in community. The Religious of the Sacred Heart of Mary were founded in 1858 in Northern Manchuria and have made great progress and rendered many services to the missions of Manchuria during the last half century. After a novitiate of three years they devote themselves to teaching and works of mercy. The motherhouse of the order is at Siaopakiatzé, Manchuria. The motherhouse is elected annually. At present this congregation numbers 105 members, including novices. The Sisters of St. Joseph were established after the persecutions of 1872 by Mgr. Delaplace, Vicar Apostolic of Peking, and the first postulants were trained by the Daughters of Charity. They have one or two establishments in almost every parish of the Vicariate of Peking, numbering at present seventy-four religious. From this order have branched off the Marist Sisters of Yung-ping-fu (1901), the Josephines of Cheng-ting-fu (1878), the Josephines of Pao-ting-fu (1910), and the Josephines of Tien-tsin (1912), all of whom follow the same rule and were detached when these new vicariates were established. The Josephines of Pao-ting-fu number 34 religious, and the Josephines of Tien-tsin number 14 religious. The Josephines of Cheng-ting-fu had their constitutions changed somewhat in 1910. The superior general resides at the principal house at Cheng-ting-fu. This congregation at present numbers 133 religious. From them were established, in 1914, by Mgr. Calza, Vicar Apostolic of Western Honan, the Josephines of Honan, who now number 25 religious. The Sisters of the Immaculate Conception were detached from the Josephines of Peking by Mgr. Geurts, first Vicar Apostolic of Eastern Chi-li. This branch comprises four establishments and 30 religious, including novices. Its principal house is at Yung-ping-fu. The Institute of the Immaculate Conception was founded by the Belgian Fathers in Eastern Mongolia in 1884. They spend six years of study in preparation for their work, and numbers at present 191 members. Their novitiate is at Sung-shut-suitze. Their habit consists of the Chinese women's dress of black cotton. The Sisters of the Sacred Heart were formed in December, 1919, by a wealthy lady in Central Mongolia and approved by the Vicar Apostolic. The Daughters of the Sacred Heart were established in 1914 in the vicariate of Western Che-kiang by Mgr. Faveau, Vicar Apostolic, as a teaching order. The society numbers 30 members. Its principal house is at Hang-chou. These Sisters dress in the ordinary Chinese women's costume. The Congregation of the Presentation, founded in 1869 in the Province of Nan-king, conducts schools in the missions of the Vicariate of Nan-king and at the present time numbers 189 members, of whom 32 are novices. They have 89 establishments throughout the vicariate. The motherhouse is at Sicawci. Another branch has been established in the Vicariate of Southeast Chi-li. Both of these vicariates are under the care of the Jesuits (French). The Daughters of St. Anne, founded in 1895 in Southern Kiang-si, have 10 foundations and a community of 32 religious. The Virgins of Our Lady of Good Counsel were founded in 1907 by Mgr. Paul Ferant, Vicar Apostolic of Northern Kiang-si. They teach the young and work in orphanages, and have four establishments in Kiang-si with a total of 25 members. The servants of the Sacred Heart, founded in 1910 in Eastern Sze-chwan, is a teaching community with principal house at Chung-king and a total of 26 religious. The Virgins of Purgatory were founded in Che-Kiang in 1892 by Mgr. Reynaud, present Vicar Apostolic of Eastern Che-Kiang. The order comprises 80 members, of whom 15 are novices. They wear a religious habit. The motherhouse and novitiate is at Ning-po. The Religious of the Immaculate Conception were founded in 1918 at Canton by Mother Angeline of the Sacred Heart, and now number 26 professed Sisters and 25 novices. The Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis were under the direction of the Canossan Sisters at Wu-Chang from 1908 to 1917, when they were made an independent society. The motherhouse is at Wu-Chang, Hu-pe. The members take three vows. The society numbers 25 professed Sisters, 4 novices, and 24 postulants. The Franciscan Tertiaries of the Holy Childhood were organized in 1905 at King-chou-fu by Mgr. Everaerts of Southwest Hu-pe. The first postulants were Chinese Virgins who had lived the religious life in their own homes and worked among the young. They took their vows in the new congregation in 1907. The motherhouse is at King-chou-fu. The society has three establishments and 39 members, of whom 6 are novices. The Oblates of the Holy Family were founded in 1910 by Mgr. Henninghaus, Vicar Apostolic of South Shang-tung. They take annual vows of poverty and obedience. The principal house is at Yen-chou-fu. The society numbers 22 professed Sisters, 23 novices, and 7 postulants.

Catholic Press.—There are two monthlies published at Shanghai in China, "Yesou Cheng-Sin-Pao" and "Cheng-Kia-Tsa-Dje," "Tchoung-Che-Pao" is a Chinese weekly published at Chung-king, Sze-chwan, with a French supplement, "La Verité," A Latin theological monthly review, "Sacerdos in Sinis," is conducted by the Vincentian Fathers at Peking. The only Catholic publication in the English language in the Far East is "The Rock," published monthly at Hong-Kong by Catholic laymen. French publications are: "Le Bulletin Catholique de Peking," monthly organ of the Vincentian missions at Peking; "L'Echo de St. Michel," parish monthly of the Legations at Peking; "Petit Messager de Mingpo," monthly organ of the Vincentian missions in Che-Kiang; "L'Echo du Chantung Oriental," organ of the Franciscan mission in Eastern Shan-tung, issued every two months; "L'Ami des Missionnaires du Kiangsi Septentrional," organ of the Vincentian missions at Kiu-kiang, published irregularly; "La Verité," supplement of a weekly paper in Chinese, the "Tchoung-Che-Pao," published at Chung-king, Sze-ch'wan; "L'Echo de Tientsin," a daily sympathetic towards Catholic interest; "Calendrier-Annuaire de L'Observatoire de Zi-ka-wei," annual, published by the Jesuit Fathers at Sikawei. The "Bolotin do Governo Ecclesiastico da Diocese de Macao" is a Portuguese monthly of the Diocese of Macao.

Trade.—The revenue of the customs in 1919 was Haikwan taels 46,009,160 (1 Haikwan tael=$139 U. S.), as against Haikwan taels 22,742,104 in 1897. It included import duties, taels 19,631,697; export duties, tls. 19,835,823; coast trade duties, tls. 2,582,059; tonnage dues, tls. 1,443,891; transit dues incoming, tls. 1,490,304; transit dues outgoing, tls. 1,025,886. SHIPPING.—In 1919, 112,565 steamers (89,844,371 tons) and 97,190 sailing vessels (5,881,564 tons), in all 210,755 vessels (95,725,935 tons) entered and cleared Chinese ports, of which Chinese shipping vessels (foreign type) numbered 49,043 (22,553,448 tons), Chinese junks 88,532 (4,536,314 tons), British 36,074 (36,284,312 tons), Japanese 27,182 (27,532,449 tons), French 471 (414,161 tons), German 298 (53,142 tons), American 4,433 (2,569,887 tons), Norwegian 311 (302,959 tons), Portuguese 118 (50,292 tons), Danish 93 (185,697 tons), Swedish 18 (53,650 tons), etc.

RAILWAYS.—China now possesses 6,835 miles of railway, with 2,000 miles under construction. An imperial edict of 9 May, 1911, ordered that all trunk lines under construction or projected be taken over by the government, while branch railways were "to be allowed to be undertaken by the people according to their ability." Under the Republic steps have been taken to nationalize railway expansion in China. The Chinese government railways comprise fourteen lines: Peking-Han-kan (810,821 miles), Peking-Mukden (563,030), Tientsin-Pu-kow (687,348), Shanghai-Nan-king (193,127), Shanghai-Hang-chou-Ning-po (177,853), Peking-Sai-yuan (304,540), Cheng-Tai (150,872), Tao-ku-Ching-hwa (94,672), Kai-feng-Honan (114,885), Kirin-Chang-chun (79,301), Chuchou-Ping-hiang (56,200), Canton-Kow-loon (88,857), Canton-San-shui, Chang-chou-Amoy (17,388). In addition to these are the provincial and private railways, with a total of 424,143 miles, making the total subject to the Ministry of Communications 4,431,614 miles. The Concessioned Railways have a total of 2,400,165 miles, and include the Chinese Eastern (1069), South Manchurian (714), Shantung (306), Yun-nan (289), Canton-Kow-loon (British section, 22).

The railway system now in operation in China is located principally north of the Yang-tse River. The Shanghai-Nanking line, with the recently connected up Shanghai-Hang-chou-Ningpo line, extends the system into south China. China has approximately 460 square miles of territory and 107,000 population for each mile of railway, in contrast with the United States, with 12 square miles of territory and 3,800 population for each mile of railway. The extent of waterways will probably always serve to keep these average figures higher in China than in countries not so favored. Yet railways tend to become more an integral part of the industrial machinery of a nation, and these averages therefore measure to a certain extent the advance of industrial progress.

Projected Railways.—Yam-chou via Nan-ning, Po-shan, Sin-yi to Yun-nan-fu, thence via Weining to Chung-king (1,000 miles); Nan-king via Ning-koe, Hui-chan, Nan-chang, Ping-hiang (1,000 miles); Heng-chou-fu-Chin-chou (560 miles); Chu-kiao-Yen-cheng-Nan-yang-Siang-yang (225 miles); Sin-yang-chou (227 miles); Yun-yang-Han-chung-fu (360 miles); Chin-chou-Aigun (800 miles); Peking-Jehol-Chihfeng-Chingchow-Kalgan-Dolonor-Chih-feng (780 miles); Harbin-Mergen-Aigun-Blagovest-chensk (660 miles); Ta-tung-fu-Cheng-tu (960 miles); Canton-Nan-ning-Lang-son (550 miles); Shansi-Sin-yi-fu (760 miles); Yun-nan-Sze-chwan (450 miles); I-li-Lan-chou-Sian-fu-Tung-kwan-Honan-fu-Kai-feng-Heng-chou-fu-Tsing-kiang-pu-Hai-chou (3,000 miles); Sui-yuan-Kiakhta (750 miles); Kao-mi-Yih sien (200 miles); Yen-chou-fu-Kai-feng-fu via Tsao-chou-fu (230 miles).

TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.—On 30 September, 1920, there were 49,259 miles of land lines, 73,873 miles of wires, 1,002.53 miles of submarine cables, 46 miles of river cables, 837 telegraph offices. In 1918 the Government contracted with the Marconi Wireless Company for the purchase of 200 wireless telephones for the Chinese army, and for the erection of three powerful wireless stations at Kashgar, Urumchi, and Lanchowfu. In 1921 the American Federal Telegraph Company was given the right to erect five powerful stations in the largest cities of China in consideration of a loan, payable in ten years. Among China's demands at the Paris Peace Conference and the Disarmament Conference was the demand that no foreign wireless or telegraphic installations of any kind shall be set up on Chinese territory, and that such installations as have been established shall be handed over to China upon due compensation being given.

POSTAL SYSTEM.—At the end of 1917 there were 9,103 localities open to postal business, and the number of articles dealt with had increased to nearly 260,233,000. The number of parcels reached 2,640,355 and money orders about $21,523,300.

RECENT POLITICS.—As early as 1906 preparations were made in China for the introduction of constitutional government. In 1908 an edict promised the convocation of a Parliament and the proclamation of a Constitution, drawn in the ninth year from the date of the edict, i. e., 1917. Until then, certain measures of reform were to be undertaken each year. In October, 1910, the Senate convened in Peking to form the nucleus of the future Parliament, it however had only deliberative power and the Throne refused to yield to its demand that the Grand Council be made responsible to it. A most determined demand for an earlier opening of a Parliament resulted in the edict commanding that the Parliament be convened in 1913. A rebellion in the autumn of 1911 precipitated matters; in October Wuchung was taken by the revolutionaries and an independent military government declared. The provinces seceded, one by one, until fourteen out of twenty-two including Manchuria, Kiang-si, Hu-pe, Hu-nan, and the viceroyalty of Liang-Kwang, had thrown off their allegiance to the Manchu government. The learned Dynasty offered to grant every demand of the people, retaining for itself the mere title of sovereignty. A constitution was immediately drawn up and sanctioned by edict issued on 3 November, 1911, and on 26 November the Regent in behalf of the emperor took the Oath of Constitution. He summoned Yuan Shih-kai former viceroy of Chi-li, whom he had dismissed in 1900, granted him the powers of dictator, and appointed him Prime Minister and General of the forces. A constitutional monarchy with the Manchus as a figurehead was decided upon, and accepted by most of the northern provinces, but not by the southern provinces, whose aims were more anti-dynastic. A truce was called to decide on the exact form of government. On 6 December the Regent abdicated and the young Emperor was provided with two guardians, one a Manchu and the other a Chinese. On 29 December the Nan-king (Republican) Assembly, a provisional convention in which the 14 provinces only were represented, unanimously elected Dr. Sun Yat Sen President of the Republic of China and adopted a provisional constitution. In February, 1912, the Manchu dynasty abdicated. Under the provisional constitution, a provisional Parliament was assembled in Peking and in due time passed laws for the election of a bi-cameral legislature, at the same time determining its powers and functions. The new Parliament met on 8 April, 1913, and appointed a Committee to draft a permanent constitution for the Republic. The Committee sat from 21 July to 25 October, and completed a draft of the Constitution consisting of 113 articles, of which only those dealing with the election and term of office of President and Vice-President became law by the act of Parliament. By virtue of these, Yuan Shih-kai was celebrated president for five years. At the end of 1915 he engineered a campaign to revert to a monarchical form of government, and as a result of elections, was invited to ascend the throne as Emperor. The southern provinces, however, immediately rose in revolt. The movement failed and finally ended in the death of Yuan Shih-kai in June, 1916. In accordance with the constitution, Li Yuan-hung became President. The provisional Constitution of Nan-king (10 March, 1912), was restored; Parliament which had been suspended by Yuan Shih-kai was formally opened. Yet the constitutional differences between Parliament and the Cabinet continued and resulted in the dismissal of the Premier, Tuan Chi-jui and the dissolution of Parliament in June, 1917. In the next month there was an attempt to restore the Ching dynasty, with the Manchu Emperor, Hsuan Fung on the Dragon Throne. Chang-Hsun, the military commander of the Yang-Tze provinces, who had come to Peking with a number of troops, was bombarded in Peking. His defeat, and flight to a foreign legion, ended the Manchu restoration, and Tuan Chi-jui was premier once more, with Feng Kuo-chang as acting President in the place of Li Yuan Hung who had resigned.

In the meantime the Radical party of the Parliament which had been dissolved by Li Yuan Hung in June, 1917, gathered in Canton and under the leadership of Sun Yat Sen, set up an independent military government and declared a state of war between the South and the North, claiming that it alone represented the constitutional government established by the treaty of Nan-king after the revolution of 1911. Military operations continued intermittently until November, 1918, when Hsu Shih-Chang who had been unanimously elected President by the Parliament in Peking ordered a cessation of hostilities. The Canton government did likewise, and a conference of the two parties was called at Shanghai, but failed to establish an entente.

The Northern Military party which has had control of the Peking government for the last four years has from the first been divided into two factions, known as the Chihli and the Anhui factions. The increasing supremacy of the Anhui faction, aided by the An Fu (pro-Japanese) party, was resented by the Chihli faction and friction between the two developed into open warfare, in July, 1920. The Anhui faction was defeated. The government ordered the disbanding of the troops but instead they were incorporated into the armies of the rival military governors and the central government was powerless to enforce its decision.

The only real power and authority in China is in the hands of the Tuchuns or Military Governors of the separate provinces, each acting for himself in his own field, and taking advantage of the weakness of the central government to raise large armies to serve their own ends and thus to usurp complete autocratic local power. China is now, therefore a conglomeration of separate states under the autocratic control of Military Governors who tax their people to the limit and who have raised large loans, for the support of their armies and their own enrichment principally from the Japanese, for which the provincial resources are pledged. These armies are a horrible incubus upon the people, and the system which keeps them up is intolerable, but there is no force in China strong enough to compel their disbandment. At present (1922) there are three super Tuchuns or "Inspectors General," who aim for supremacy in the Peking government: Chang Tso-lin, the uncrowned King of Manchuria, who controls the Peking-Mukden railway; Tsaokun, war lord of the Chihli party, with headquarters at Pao-ting-fu; and Wu Pei-fu, former chief lieutenant of Tsao-kun, in charge of the Yang-tze regions. The main factor in the south is the Canton government under Dr. Sun Yat-sen. Another political division exists in the three southwest provinces of Yun-nan, Kwei-chow and Sze-chwan, but these are fluctuating between Dr. Sun and Wu Pei-fu.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.—Soon after the outbreak of the European War, China proclaimed her neutrality by a Presidential Mandate of 6 August, 1914. A week later Japan delivered an ultimatum to Germany demanding the surrender of the leased territory of Kiao-chow "with a view to eventual restoration of the same to China." Failing to receive a reply to her ultimatum, Japan declared war on Germany, 23 August, 1914. The first contingent of Japanese troops, 20,000 strong, despatched to attack Tsing-tao, landed unexpectedly at Lung-khau, and on their way across the peninsula to Kiao-chow, occupied cities and towns en route, even Wei-Hsien and Tsi-nan. With the help of the British they forced the Germans to surrender the bombarded Tsing-tao and their garrison on 8 November, 1915. Eight days later they entered the city. Seeing that with the complete surrender of the Germans, hostilities had terminated and military measures had been abandoned, the Chinese demanded the withdrawal of the Japanese from the interior of Shan-tung to Tsing-tao, but the latter had assumed possession of all administrative authority exercised by the Germans, had taken possession of the Shan-tung railway, and had extended their authority to certain cities outside and leased territory. At this time (18 January, 1915), the Japanese government, to the dismay of China, presented twenty-one demands, including the following: China was to give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese government may hereafter agree with Germany, relating to the disposition of all rights, interests, and concessions in Shan-tung. Negotiations lasted until 7 May, when Japan sent an ultimatum to China, demanding a reply within forty-eight hours. In face of the increasing Japanese garrisons in Manchuria and Shantung, China was forced to yield. In the treaty signed on 25 May, 1915, she agreed never to alienate any territory on or near the coast of Shan-tung to a foreign power, to give the Japanese a free hand in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, to extend the leases of Port Arthur and Dairen for a period of ninety-nine years, also the leases of the South Manchurian Railway, and the Antung-Mukden Railway. At the Peace Conference at Versailles in 1919, Japan claimed, on the ground of conquest, the leased territory of Kiao-chow and all Germany's economic privileges in Shantung; whereas China asked the Conference for a settlement which would secure to her the restitution of the leased territory and the cancellation of Germany's economic privileges. Japan, however, obtained recognition of her claim in the treaty, which China flatly refused to sign, the indignation of the whole nation being promptly expressed by a boycott of Japanese goods.

The controversy was brought up again at the Washington Disarmament Conference in 1922. In a treaty signed between the two powers, China and Japan, on 4 February, 1922, Shan-tung with all the former German properties, concessions, railway, port, mining, maritime customs, and other rights, was finally returned to China, who was to pay the assessed value of the properties taken by the Japanese from the Germans during the World War, plus the value of the improvements added by Japan, making allowance for depreciation. Japan promised to withdraw all her military forces from Shan-tung, as soon as China sent her own troops to guard the railway there. Great Britain offered to return her concessions, Wei-hai-wei, and France, Kwang-chow-wan. Other matters concerning China's welfare were also settled in the Conference. Under the nine-power treaty of 4 February, a complete revision of China's revenues was made, and instead of the arrangement adopted in 1843 under which China was technically to receive a 5 per cent quota of the revenues, but under which she actually received a scant 3½ per cent ad valorem, a new arrangement was effected so that China will receive 5 per cent of the revenues and a surtax of 2½ per cent on some goods; and the likin will be abolished. The nine-power pact also declared for the integrity of Chinese sovereignty and for equal opportunity in trade intercourse. Each of the powers (United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, Holland, and Portugal) was pledged to refrain from seeking any unfair or special advantages, to respect Chinese neutrality, and to come together in a conference with China, if any situation should rise to involve the application of the stipulations of the treaty. China, on her part, undertook not to alienate or lease any portion of her territory or littoral to any power. China was requested to reduce her armies and to reveal all her secret treaties (one of these was a secret treaty of alliance with Russia in 1896). There are plans to finance China's present transportation needs by an International Consortium, formed by the bankers of the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan, as the country is too large to be financed by one power.

THE WORLD WAR.—At the outbreak of the World War China preserved the strictest neutrality, but with the entrance of the United States into the struggle, China sided with that country in her protest against the submarine warfare and declared war against Germany and Austria-Hungary on 14 August, 1917. The allies responded by agreeing to the postponement of the Boxer indemnity for a period of five years, commencing from 1 January, 1918, Russia, however, consenting to the suspension of only one-third of its annual share. The internal condition of China forbade anything like active participation, but in the end China joined the Allied Expedition to Siberia to stem the tide of Bolshevism and the Interallied Railway Technical Commission to help reorganize Russia's railways. In January, 1918, Peking concluded with Tokio the so-called Arms Pact under which Japan agreed to supply China with arms and ammunition to the amount of 40,000,000 yen—the ostensible object being to equip the Chinese expedition to Europe, but in reality both the proceeds and arms went to help the Northern militarists to crush the Constitution-defending South. One month before the Armistice, on 3 October, 1918, the Republic extended its recognition to the Czechoslovaks operating in Siberia, and allowed them passage on the Chinese Eastern Railway. If circumstances such as a lack of transportation facilities prevented the Chinese soldiers from serving in France, their place was nobly taken by the Chinese laborers, of whom two thousand perished in France. They also served in Mesopotamia, Egypt, and South Africa, in all, no less than 150,000. China signed the Treaty of Peace with Germany on 10 May, 1921; the Bulgarian Peace treaty at Neuilly on 27 November, 1919; the Hungarian Peace Treaty at Trianon on 4 June, 1920.

Chioggia, DIOCESE OF (CLODIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-689b).—Chioggia is a seaport on the Gulf of Venice in Italy. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Domenico Mezzadri, b. in San Rocco al Porto, diocese of Lodi, 30 January, 1867, elected bishop 2 July, 1920, took possession of the see 22 October, 1920, in succession to Rt. Rev. Antonio Bassani, resigned. Bishop Bassani was born in Chioggia 3 January, 1854, elected titular Bishop of Delcos and coadjutor of the bishop of Chioggia 22 January, 1905, succeeded to the bishopric 21 November, 1908, resigned and transferred 1 October, 1918, to the titular see of Troas.

In the diocese there are 31 parishes, 52 churches, 2 convents for men and 5 for women, 110 secular and 8 regular priests, 2 clerics, 70 nuns, 1 seminary with 30 seminarians, 3 colleges for girls with 20 students in each, 2 refuges, 1 for men and 1 for women, 3 asylums, 3 hospitals. There is a clerical federation, and among the laity a mutual aid organization and Popular Union. A diocesan bulletin is published, and also "Annali della B. V. della Navicella." There are about 100,000 inhabitants in the diocese, all Catholics.

Bellemo Cav. Vincenzo, famous Italian historian, died 30 January, 1917, leaving his library to the seminary. Twelve priests and all the clerics took up arms for their country, 1 being severely wounded. In recognition of special service the Government made Papal Chamberlain Rossetti archpriest of Cavarzere, and Carlo Lorenzi chaplain of St. Pietro in Volte, Knights of the Crown of Italy.

Chios, DIOCESE OF (CHIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-689c), comprises the islands of Chios, Chesme, Samos, and other small islands in the Greek archipelago, off the coast of Asia Minor, suffragan of Naxos. The see is at present (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Nicolas Charichiopoulo, born in the diocese of Tinos, 1866, studied at Propaganda, Rome, served as chancellor of the Cathedral of Constantinople and was appointed 3 January, 1917, to succeed Rt. Rev. Dionisio Nicolosi, died 24 January, 1916. The Catholics of this diocese, who number only 170, are descended from the first settlers of the islands; about eighty are Italians and the rest Greeks or French. In 1912, on 11 December, the Turks were expelled from the islands and the Greeks took possession, those Greeks already there joining the army to help their fatherland. During the war the poor suffered severely, especially from famine. In recent years the diocese lost three of its small number of clergy by the deaths of Revs. Antonius Sigola, Thomas Rostand, and Canon Pantaleo Cochini. It now comprises 2 parishes, 5 churches, 3 at Chios and 2 at Samos, 2 convents of religious, 1 at Chios and the other at Samoo, 1 mission station, 3 secular and 3 regular clergy (1 capuchin and 2 French missionaries). The Sisters of St. Joseph of the Apparition and Sisters of St. Joseph of Lyons, conduct schools for girls with 180 pupils, of whom 25 are Catholic, and young Catholic boys also attend schools conducted by the Sisters, and complete their studies in other cities. The Children of Mary and other associations of women are organized.

Chiusi-Pienza, DIOCESE OF (CLUSINENSIS ET PIENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., III-690d), in Tuscany, Central Italy, Chiusi is suffragan of Sienna and Pienza is directly subject to the Holy See. These united sees were filled by the Rt. Rev. Giacomo Bellucci from 30 December, 1889, until his death, 19 February, 1917. The present (1922) incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Conti, was appointed to succeed him 22 March following. Born in the diocese of Fiesole, Italy, 1871, he served as vicar general of that diocese, was made a papal chamberlain, 3 October, 1903, and prothonotary apostolic, 22 December, 1914. These sees have a Catholic population of 38,000, 56 parishes, 91 secular and 50 regular clergy, 31 seminarians, 19 Brothers, 55 Sisters, and 125 churches or chapels.

Choco, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (DE CHOCO), in Colombia, South America. This prefecture, erected 28 April, 1908, is entrusted to the Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, the present (1922) prefect apostolic being Rev. François Gutiérrez, of this congregation. No statistics are published for this territory.

Christchurch, DIOCESE OF (CHRISTOPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., III-699b), in Canterbury, New Zealand, suffragan of Wellington. The first bishop of this diocese, Rt. Rev. J. J. Grimes, S. M., born in Bromley, England, 1843, consecrated 26 July, 1887, died in Sydney, 15 March, 1915. His successor was appointed in the person of the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Matthew J. Brodie, born in Coromandel, New Zealand, 1864, ordained 1888, made a prelate of the Holy See, 1912, appointed 27 November, 1915.

The religious orders established in this diocese include: Society of Mary with 23 Fathers, Marist Brothers with 5 Brothers, Missionary Sisters of Notre Dame with 90, Sisters, Sisters of Mercy numbering 148 Sisters, Religious of the Sacred Heart with 29 nuns, Sisters of Good Shepherd with 30 religious, Sisters of St. Joseph of the Sacred Heart with 16 Sisters, Sisters of Nazareth with 16 Sisters, and Nursing Sisters of the Little Company of Mary with 14 Sisters. This diocese counts a Catholic population of 30,000, and comprises 21 districts, 63 churches, 22 secular and 28 regular clergy, 8 boarding and high schools, 29 primary schools, 1 asylum, 1 industrial and preservation school, 1 orphanage, 1 home, and 2 girls' hostels.

Christian Brothers of Ireland (cf. C. E., III-710b), have 200 houses in Ireland, England, Australia, and India. The first foundation in the United States was made in All Saints' parish, New York, in 1906, and was soon followed by others in the United States and Canada, all of which, together with the houses in Newfoundland, were formed in 1916 into the American province. The provincial novitiate is near West Park in Ulster Co., N. Y., and is known as St. Mary's on the Hudson. In Newfoundland the Brothers have charge of St. Bonaventure's College and St. Patrick's School at St. John's, Holy Cross College at Riverhead, and a boy's orphanage and industrial school at Mount Cashel. In Canada there is a novitiate at Longueuil, P. Q., and the Brothers have two schools in Montreal, St. Patrick's Academy in Sherbrooke, P. Q., and Saint Coloman College at Cornwall, Ont. In 1921 a community of four Christian Brothers sailed for Han Yang, China, to establish a high school in connection with the work of the Maynooth Mission to China. The superior general of the institute is Br. Patrick Jerome Hennessy, elected in 1920.

Christian Charity, SISTERS OF (cf. C. E., III-711a), also called DAUGHTERS OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, a congregation whose principal activity is the education of youth, but which does not exclude any of the other works of Christian charity, founded at Paderborn, Germany, on 21 August, 1849, by Pauline von Mallinckrodt (b. 3 June, 1817, at Minden, Westphalia; died 30 April, 1881), sister of the famous Hermann von Mallinckrodt. Mother Pauline's first field of labor was the care of the blind. The institute, which was confirmed 4 February, 1888, by Leo XIII, had attained great success throughout Germany when, in 1873, the Kulturkampf deprived it of its principal activity—Christian education. Some of the Sisters went to South America, where there are now many flourishing communities. Others emigrated to New Orleans, La., U. S. A., where, in May, 1873, they founded a house and took charge of a parochial school. A provincial mother-house was erected in Wilkes-Barre, Penn., in 1874. The institute spread rapidly, and the Sisters now have houses in the Archdioceses of Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and St. Paul, and in the Dioceses of Belleville, Brooklyn, Detroit, Harrisburg, Newark, Scranton, Sioux City, and Syracuse. They have in these establishments 784 Sisters, 41 novices, and 20 postulants, conducting 4 academies, 51 parochial schools, and 1 orphan asylum. In 1916 the mother-house of the North American province was transferred to Wilmette, Ill. The Sisters have houses not only in Germany but also in Bohemia, and in 1920 they opened a house in Rome, Italy. The total membership of the congregation in the three provinces, the European, North and South American, is 1,900.

Christian Church (AMERICAN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION) is the name of a small American sect, which is perhaps the most logical of the numerous forms of Protestantism, in that it sets forth absolutely no creed or statement of doctrine (except the Bible), and in that no differences of theological belief, due to different interpretations of the Bible, constitutes a bar to membership, providing one is a "follower of Christ." Although the general tendency of this church is "evangelical" it is not clear that denial of the Divinity of Christ would exclude a member provided he accepted Christ as Master and Leader. Baptism is not considered necessary for members, although some preach its reception as a duty. Immersion is the form generally used, but any form is admitted. Open communion (admission of non-members to reception of the communion) is practiced, since no religious test is required even of members. In organization this sect is congregational, the bond of union being conferences whose functions are chiefly administrative.

This denomination is the result of the fusion of defections from the Methodists in Virginia, the Baptists in New England and the Presbyterians in Tennessee and Kentucky between 1792 and 1803, under the respective leadership of James O'Kelley, Abner Jones, and Barton Stone (and others), who desired more freedom of private interpretation than was possible in the churches which they left. A general organization was effected in 1819, but the name "Christian" (adopted because they claimed to be the exponents of the true doctrine of Christ), dates from 1794 when O'Kelley and his followers dropped the name "Republican Methodists," which they had at first adopted. The qualifying phrase "American Christian Convention" is the title of their quadrennial conference. The present official title of the church dates from 1916, previous to that the title being "Christians (Christian Connection)" in official reports. This sect is often confused with the Disciples of Christ (Campbellites) owing to the fact that Barton Stone and many of his associates joined the latter in 1832, retaining, however, the name "Christian." A division in the church occurred in 1854 due to the slavery question, the two factions uniting again in 1890.

Foreign missionary work is carried on in Porto Rico and in Japan, the mission in the latter country forming a conference independent of control by the American conference. In the two countries there were in 1920, 12 American missionaries, 22 native helpers and 1,639 communicants. In the United States this church controls seven educational institutions (including one for negroes), with about 1,500 students. The headquarters of the church are at Dayton, Ohio, where are issued the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," a weekly, founded in 1808, and claiming to be the oldest English-language religious newspaper in the United States, the "Christian Missionary" (monthly), the "Christian Vanguard" (monthly), and the "Christian Annual." This sect reported in 1920, 1,204 churches, 1,037 ministers, 105,310 members (118,000 in 1916). In 1922 the statistics of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ gave the membership of this church as 97,084, terming it a gain of 21,653 over the figures for 1921. The various statistics are not entirely reliable; it is safe to conclude that the membership is about 100,000. This denomination has its greatest strength in Ohio, North Carolina, Virginia, Illinois, and Indiana.

GERALD SHAUGHNESSY.

Christian Science (CHURCH OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST), an American sect, chartered in 1879 by Mrs. Mary Baker Glover (Patterson) Eddy, is a theosophic, therapeutic religious system of "healing" which rejects doctrinal belief as a religious basis and claims, through a revival of the apostolic healing of Christ (hence the name Christian) to depend on the application of scientific rules (hence Science) in the accomplishment of its work.

TENETS, GOVERNMENT, RITUAL.—No creed as such is recognized in this church, but the official textbook, Mrs. Eddy's "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures," contains the teachings and the rules for healing of the sick and saving the sinner, and in the "Manual" are found the tenets which must be subscribed to by one obtaining membership in the church. These tenets are as follows: 1. As adherents of Truth we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life. 2. We acknowledge and adore one supreme and infinite God. We acknowledge his Son, one Christ; the Holy Ghost or divine Comforter; and man in God's image and likeness. 3. We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal. But the belief in sin is punished so long as the belief lasts. 4. We acknowledge Jesus' atonement as the evidence of divine efficacious love, unfolding man's unity with God through Christ the Way-shower; and we acknowledge that man is saved through Christ, through Truth, Life, and Love as demonstrated by the Galilean Prophet in healing the sick and overcoming sin and death. 5. We acknowledge that the crucifixion of Jesus and His resurrection served to uplift faith to understand eternal life, even the ailment of Soul, Spirit, and the nothingness of matter. 6. And we solemnly promise to watch and pray for that Mind to be in us which was in Christ Jesus; to do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and to be merciful, just, and pure.

Explanatory of the foregoing is the "scientific statement of being": "There is no life, truth, intelligence, nor substance in matter. All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is

All-in-all. Spirit is immortal Truth; matter is mortal error. Spirit is the real and eternal; matter is the unreal and temporal. Spirit is God, and man His image and likeness. Therefore man is not material; he is spiritual."

Christian Science claims to be essentially a method of healing; of curing both body and soul; it seeks "the mental, moral, and physical regeneration of mankind." Power to heal sickness and sin is the sign of true discipleship of Jesus, and Mrs. Eddy asserted that He gave a command, binding on all His followers, to preach and heal. Sickness, sin, matter, pain, pleasure, death, evil in general, are declared to be nothing, to be "mortal mind," while only Mind (immortal, infinite Mind) is real, and God is Mind. Disease being mental error, the cure consists in convincing the patient of the error. There are no sacraments in Christian Science; there is no prayer, properly so-called, for "man cannot influence God; God influences man."

The organization is highly centralized, the "First Church of Christ, Scientist" in Boston, the "Mother Church," being the center. This center is governed by the "Manual of the Mother Church" (by Mrs. Eddy), which contains "the Church Tenets, Rules, and By-Laws, as prepared by Mrs. Eddy." Until her death Mrs. Eddy was at first Pastor and later Pastor Emeritus with practically unlimited power. There are besides a Board of (5) Directors, who elect also a President, a Clerk, a Treasurer, and two Readers. In addition there is a Board of Trustees who conduct the business of the Christian Science Publishing Society, the Board of Directors having power to declare vacancies in this Board. The branch churches are forbidden to use the "Manual," and while they are declared to have each its own form of government, subordination to the Mother Church is obtained through the regulation requiring at least 16 members, four of whom must be members of the Mother Church, before a branch can be organized, while in addition every Reader in a branch church must be a member of the Mother Church. Since Mrs. Eddy's death the question of the possession of supreme authority has been disputed by the two boards, and is not yet definitely settled.

There are no pastors in the usual sense of the term in Christian Science, the Bible and "Science and Health" taking their places according to the decree issued by Mrs. Eddy in 1895: "Humbly, and as I believe, divinely directed, I hereby ordain the Bible and 'Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures' to be hereafter the only pastor of the Church of Christ, Scientist, throughout our land, and in other lands." Services are conducted in accordance with the "Order of Service" contained in the "Manual," and consist of fourteen exercises: a hymn, a Scriptural selection, silent prayer, followed by the audible repetition of the Lord's prayer with its "spiritual interpretation," another hymn, a "solo" the lesson-sermon (a correlation of Scriptural texts and excerpts from "Science and Health," indicated in advance by the central authorities and read alternately by the Readers, the first Reader, as being the most important reading the "Science and Health" passages), then after the collection another hymn is followed by the reading of the "scientific statement of being" (see above), and the meeting closes with a benediction, which consists in reading a verse from Scripture. This service is conducted on Sunday morning and evening. There is also a Wednesday evening service of a similar nature, characterized by the giving of "testimony" in regard to cures performed or experienced. The Lord's Prayer, with its "interpretation," is as follows:

Our Father which art in Heaven,
Our Father-Mother God, all harmonious,
 Hallowed be Thy name,
Adorable one,
 Thy Kingdom come,
Thy Kingdom is within us, Thou art ever present,
 Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven.
Enable us to know—as in Heaven, so on earth
—God is omnipotent, supreme.
 Give us this day our daily bread;
Give us grace for today; feed the famished affections;
 And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors;
And Love is reflected in love;
 And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil,
And God leadeth us not into temptation, but delivereth us from sin, disease, and death,
 For thine is the Kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever.
For God is infinite, all-Power, all-Life, Truth, Love, over all and All.

For the convenience of its members and the propagation of its teachings among visitors, every Christian Scientist Church conducts a free reading room, in which are to be found books and publications issued by the Publication Society.

HEALING.—Actual treatment of cases to be healed is generally carried on (or supposed to be) in connection with the Church, and a regular fee is charged. Individual practitioners also treat cases, having offices and office hours after the manner of physicians. According to "Science and Health" the human mind (since it is unreal) is not a healing agent, is not a factor in the principle of Christian Science which denies that it cures by mental suggestion or human will-power or by any form of faith cure. Healing is attributed to Mind (that is, God), through the mere knowledge of or belief in this Mind on the part of the patient. "Human will-power," according to Mrs. Eddy, is not science. "Human will belongs to the so-called material senses, and its use is to be condemned. Wishing the sick to recover is not the metaphysical practice of Christian Science, but is sheer animal magnetism." "The efficient remedy is to destroy the patient's false belief by both silently and audibly arguing the true facts in regard to harmonious being—representing man as healthy instead of diseased, and showing that it is impossible for matter to suffer, to feel pain or heat, to be thirsty or sick. Destroy fear, and you end fever." "Mind [capitalized] has no affinity with matter, and therefore Truth is able to cast out the ills of the flesh." The following excerpt illustrates somewhat the principles of Mrs. Eddy: "You say a boil is painful; but that is impossible, for matter without mind is not painful. The boil simply manifests, through inflammation and swelling, a belief in pain, and this belief is called a boil. Now administer mentally to your patient a high attenuation (sic) of truth, and it will soon cure the boil. The fact that pain cannot exist where there is no mortal mind to feel it is proof that this so-called mind makes its own pain—that is, its own belief in pain." Surgical cases, as Mrs. Eddy decreed after several unfortunate experiences, are not to be treated by Christian Scientists: "Until the advancing age admits the efficacy and supremacy of Mind, it is better for Christian Scientists to leave surgery and the adjustment of broken bones and dislocations to the fingers of a surgeon, while the mental healer confines himself chiefly to mental reconstruction and to the prevention of inflammation. Christian Science is always the most skillful surgeon, but surgery is the branch of its healing which will be the last acknowledged." Carrying its principles to their logical conclusion Christian Science conducts no charitable or philanthropic work, and naturally maintains no hospitals. However, the Mother Church founded, in 1919, for the benefit of its members, "The Christian Science Benevolent Association."

HISTORY.—Mary A. Morse Baker, who was to become the founder of Christian Science, was born in Bow, New Hampshire, 16 July, 1821, of Congregational parents who were of a humble station in life. Of a peculiar "mystical" temperament, the young girl imagined at the age of eight that she heard "voices" calling her, an experience which she later compared to the call of Samuel. Subject to hysterical and even cataleptic attacks, and of a quarrelsome and petulant nature, it was said of her by her father, "If Mary Magdalene had seven devils, our Mary has ten." She received a very meager common school education, regular attendance often being prohibited by her sickness. She joined the Congregational (Trinitarian) Church at the age of seventeen (Mrs. Eddy herself claims at the age of twelve), though denying the doctrine of Calvinistic predestination. In 1843 she married George Washington Glover, by whom she had one son (born after his father's death). This son she sent away when he was four years of age, not to meet him again for thirty years. In 1853 she married Daniel Patterson, became separated from him in 1866, and divorced him in 1873. In 1877 she married Asa G. Eddy, who died in 1882 of heart disease, but according to Mrs. Eddy of "arsenic" or "mesmeric poison mentally administered." In the meanwhile, before her last marriage, her life for many years had been one of poverty, sickness, and trouble. Friends and relations with whom she sought refuge were repeatedly forced to send her away because of the discord and trouble which she caused in their families, so that in the course of a few years she had had nine dwelling places, being charged at the last place with attempting to set the house on fire.

The age and the locality in which Mrs. Eddy passed her young womanhood were characterized by a religious unrest which gave rise to many cults. New England Transcendentalism, the Shakers, various seers and healers who gathered about themselves communities of followers, Joseph Smith and his product Mormonism, Mesmerism, the spirit rappings of the Fox sisters—these are a few examples of the riot of individualism in religion, all of which could hardly have passed unnoticed by one of Mrs. Eddy's temperament and character, situated as she was in the very midst of the excitement which they occasioned. In 1862 Mrs. Eddy (Mrs. Patterson) applied for treatment for her ills to Dr. P. P. Quimby, who at one time had been a follower of Charles Poyen, a French Mesmerist, but who had at this time adopted a "mental treatment" of healing, discarding all medicines, and declaring "Truth" to be the healer. Declaring herself cured after three weeks' treatment, she began to study Quimby's methods and ideas, and from 1864 to 1870 she taught the "Quimby science of healing" from a manuscript said to have been written by him, although later she absolutely denied that her "science" was in any way derived from or dependent on that of Quimby's. She herself places the "discovery" of her "science" in 1864 in the first edition of "Science and Health," and in 1866 (after Quimby's death) in later editions. This "discovery" in 1866 she laid to a wonderful recovery from the effects of an injury caused by an accident, "an injury neither medicine nor surgery could reach, which was the falling apple that led me to the discovery how to be well myself and how to make others so. . . . I could only assure him [the physician] that the Divine Spirit had wrought a miracle which later I found to be in perfect scientific record with divine law" (that is, natural and not really miraculous). Doctor Cushing, who attended her for this injury, in an affidavit made in 1907, absolutely denied that there took place any wonderful or immediate cure at this time. From 1864 to 1870, while busy teaching "Quimby's Science," Mrs. Eddy (Patterson) was also preparing her manuscript for which she tried to find a publisher in 1870. In 1875 the first edition of "Science and Health" appeared, meeting with a very poor reception on the part of the public. Nevertheless, through her students which she had gathered around her, she fanned the smouldering embers of the movement and succeeded in issuing a second edition in 1877; and thereafter edition followed edition in quick succession, so that to-day nearly five hundred have been issued, the number of the edition no longer being indicated, the only identification now being the year of publication. In 1884 the "Key to the Scriptures" was added.

Although apparently not intending at first to found a church, Mrs. Eddy gathered about her, in 1875, eight students under the title of "Christian Scientists," and in 1876 these formed the "Christian Scientists' Association." Trouble was brewing, however, and having previously "excommunicated" Richard Kennedy, one of her younger students who had helped her financially, she also ejected Daniel Spofford, whom she brought to trial at Salem (fitting place!) on the charge of witchcraft in 1878. Acquitted, he in turn accused Mr. and Mrs. Eddy and one of her students of conspiracy to murder him (Spofford), but the case was nolle prossed, Mr. Eddy paying the costs. In 1879 Mrs. Eddy founded, under a state charter, her first church organization, "The Church of Christ, Scientist," in Boston, with 26 charter members. Mrs. Eddy became "pastor" in 1881, built the original "Mother Church" in Boston in 1894-5, and in 1906 the "Annex" with a seating capacity of 5000 was dedicated in the presence of 40,000 (so it is claimed) Christian Scientists. The "Mother Church" and "Annex" are said to represent an investment of about $2,000,000. In 1895 when the Bible and "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures" were "ordained" as the pastor of the church, Mrs. Eddy became Pastor Emeritus, which position she held until her death, 3 December, 1910.

Previous to her death dissension had been rampant in the church, owing to Mrs. Eddy's efforts to retain in her own hands supreme control not only of the Mother Church, but also of all the branches. Since her death there has been almost continuous contention among the various authorities in control; the Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees of the Publication Society. Since 1919, particularly, lawsuits have been resorted to and the entire organization may be said to be in a precarious condition in regard to the question as to where the authority in the church really rests.

STATISTICS.—Because of the vast number of editions which "Science and Health" has reached, because of the, at times, widespread interest, discussion, and controversy due to the very peculiar doctrines of Christian Science, and because of the centralized and, formerly at least, highly efficient organization, and its reputedly enormous wealth, the impression has rather generally prevailed that Christian Science boasts a vast number of followers. Actually it ranks in membership about fiftieth in the list of the denominations existing in the United States at the present time (1922). In the United States census of 1890 the Church of Christ, Scientist, reported 221 churches and 8724 members, an average of 40 members to each church. In the United States religious report for 1906 they reported 638 organizations, Nevada and New Mexico alone being without an organization. Nearly one-half of the members were in the north central group of States, Illinois having the largest number with 54. There were 85,717 members, less than 120 to each organization; 28 per cent of the members were males, 72 per cent females. There were 253 church edifices, 551 Sunday schools, 3155 teachers, and 16,116 pupils. The Readers numbered 1276. The value of the church property was $3,806,441. In computing the membership, however, it must be remembered that there is much duplication in the church records, since many members belong both to a branch church and to the Mother Church. Thus in 1906 nearly one-half the membership (41,309) belonged to the latter, so that, deducting for this duplication, the real net membership in all the organizations was probably somewhere between fifty and sixty thousand.

Since 1906 Christian Scientists have refused to make public their membership statistics in accordance with the following article which Mrs. Eddy inserted in the "Manual": "Christian Scientists shall not report for publication the number of the members of the Mother Church, nor that of the branch churches. According to Scripture they shall turn away from personality and numbering the people." Probably a decrease in the previous rapid growth caused this order, but whatever its reason since then no statistics have been published and the Christian Scientists were not enumerated in the government religious report for 1916. However, a fairly accurate estimate based on the list of their churches and societies in the world as published in the "Christian Science Journal" has been made by a recent writer (see bibliog., Snowden). In 1919 there were 1702 organizations in the world, 1504 (840 churches and 664 societies) in the United States (a total of 1589 in 1922), and 198 (122 churches and 76 societies) in foreign countries. The estimate of total membership on this basis may be placed at about 115,000 in 1922, but deductions for duplication make it probable that the total membership in the world is under 100,000. Outside the United States the sect is located in England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Canada, Mexico, Argentina, Australia, China, and the Transvaal. The apparent discrepancy between the small number of members and the vast number of copies of "Science and Health" issued (there have appeared as many as nine editions in one year) is explained by the fact that each new edition becomes the standard and authentic one for use by the members, who accordingly are supposed to discard the "old" and buy a "new" edition, even though the latter differed at times from the previous edition merely by the addition of one or two lines.

CURRICIUM.—There is no clear and precise statement of philosophy and theology in "Science and Health," the textbook of Christian Science, and a criticism of its doctrines and tendencies is rendered doubly difficult by the confusion of thought, "the quasiphilosophical language of the book, the abuse of terms, the employment of ambiguous words at crucial points, the character of the exegesis, the broken-backed paradoxes, the astonishing language, the egotism," and the contradictions which abound on nearly every page. Tested by Catholic doctrine, however, sufficient statements can be gleaned from it to prove that it is the ne plus ultra of heresy and error. We shall first subject its doctrine to a parallel comparison with the statements contained in the Apostles' Creed: I believe. Faith, or intellectual acceptance of revealed truth on the authority of God revealing it, is not admitted by Mrs. Eddy according to her question and answer: "Have Christian Scientists any religious creed? They have not, if we accept the term as doctrinal beliefs." She does, however, speak of being fitted by God "for the reception of a final revelation of the absolute divine Principle of scientific being and healing." In God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth. Mrs. Eddy teaches a form of Pantheism, in which she identifies a non-personal God with man. Thus she says: "God is all in all, but all things are not God. . . . He is an infinite Man and we are men by virtue of our derivation and conception from Him." "God is Principle and not person, Mind, and not matter. . . . God, which (sic) is the perfect Mind or Principle, including the perfect idea, is all that is real or eternal." "Like the ray of light that cometh from the sun, man is the outcome of God." "All is Mind, and Mind is God." "God, without the image and likeness [man] of Himself, would be a nonentity or Mind unexpressed." The Trinity she misunderstands and rejects. "Who," she says, "can conceive either of three persons as one person or of three infinities in one infinity?" And again, the Trinity she says, "is suggestive of polytheism." As for the Creation, it "consists of the unfolding of spiritual ideas and their identities, which are embraced in the infinite Mind and forever reflected." Matter according to Mrs. Eddy is error, mortal mind, and the 2nd chapter of Genesis, she tells us, "contains a statement of this material view of God and the universe," which "is a lie." Mortal mind, matter, she explains originated from a mist which went up from the earth.

And in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord. Mrs. Eddy tells us that "there is a dual personality in Christ, the unseen and the seen, the spiritual and material, the Christ and Jesus." "Christ is eternal, Jesus is mortal," while she states in another passage that Christ is "Truth," "the divine manifestation of God, which comes to destroy incarnate error," and "Jesus is the highest human corporeal concept of the divine idea." Again she tells us, "Christ is the Holy Ghost, the Comforter." The chief error which Mrs. Eddy resurrects in her treatment of our Lord is Nestorianism (holding two persons in Christ) against the Catholic teaching that there is only one person (the Divine) in Christ. At the same time she goes further and denies His divinity, and his position in the Trinity since she admits no such doctrine. Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary. Mrs. Eddy admits the Virgin birth of our Lord, but merely because she blasphemously denies its miraculous character, considering "His birth what everyone's should be," and "explaining" it by saying that in the birth of Jesus "the Science of being overshadowed the sense of the Virgin mother, with a full recognition that Spirit is the basis of being." She taught further that any woman with "sufficient science" can conceive a child through mental generation, and in fact at least one of her disciples claimed to have thus conceived, ineptly styling it an "immaculate conception" not understanding the signification of this term, but intending to convey the idea that her child was an instance of genesis without physical generation. Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died, and was buried. . . . He shall come to judge the living and the dead. It must be remembered that Christian Science holds that pain, suffering and sin are "mortal mind," error, unreality, a "delusion," "nothing." "The only reality of sin . . . is the awful fact that unrealities seem real to human belief until God strips off their disguises." "In Christian Science the fact is made obvious, that the sinner and the sin are alike nothingness." "God never made man capable of sin. . . . Man is incapable of sin. . . . For he derives his essence from God, and does not possess a single or undervived power." Hence according to this teaching Christ could not and did not suffer; He could not and did not atone for our sins. Yet inconsistently as ever, Mrs. Eddy in other passages declares that "the atonement of Christ reconciles man to God, not God to man," for "to remit the penalty due to sin [which she claims does not exist] would be for Truth to pardon error"; and "Sin is not forgiven; we cannot escape its penalty. . . . Suffering [which is unreality] for sin is all that destroys it." Whichever passages we take as her real interpretation we find that she has rejected the central doctrines of Christianity. Nor did Jesus die for death, too, is unreal and non-existent: "When you waken yourself out of the belief that all must die, you can then exercise Jesus' spiritual power to reproduce the presence of those who have thought they have died—but not otherwise." However, within the tomb, Mrs. Eddy says, our Savior solves the problem of being and through this solution He later appears to His disciples: "The lonely precincts of the tomb gave Jesus a refuge from His foes, a place in which to solve the great problem of being. His three days' work in the sepulchre set the seal of eternity on time. . . . He met and mastered on the basis of Christian Science, the power of mind over matter, all the claims of medicine, surgery, and hygiene." Apparently she intends to teach in this passage that Jesus was alive in the tomb; incidentally she denies His omniscience for He had to seek a refuge in which to solve the problem of being! The Resurrection, then, did not take place since Jesus did not really die, and the Ascension Mrs. Eddy explains away by teaching that He merely rose above the material senses of His disciples, as her own disciples will be able to do when they conquer "mortal mind." "In His final demonstration, called the Ascension, He rose above the physical knowledge of His disciples, and the material senses saw Him no more." The Last Judgment Mrs. Eddy relegates also to the realm of unreality by teaching that the next world is merely a state in which sense knowledge, pleasure and pain will have disappeared and there will be no personality or existence apart from God. This denial of the Last Judgment is merely another aspect of her Pantheism (although she strenuously denied that her system was Pantheistic).

I believe in the Holy Ghost. As stated above Mrs. Eddy denies the Trinity and hence the divinity of the third Person of the Blessed Trinity. In one place she identifies the Holy Ghost with "divine Science" (i. e., Christian Science!) She says, "In words of St. John: 'He shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever.' This Comforter I understand to be divine Science." Yet in another passage we are told that Christ is the Holy Ghost! "Jesus demonstrated Christ; he proved that Christ is the divine idea of God—the Holy Ghost, or Comforter, revealing the divine Principle, Love, and leading into all truth."

As for the Holy Catholic Church Mrs. Eddy's ideas on this point are clear from the unchristian and uncatholic church which she took the trouble to found. The Communion of Saints is rejected, too, whether in this world or in the next since the only reality is God. Prayer is useless, for Mrs. Eddy says, "Prayer is unnecessary, as the All has already decreed what is good for us," and, "a mere request that God will heal the sick has no power to gain more of the divine presence than is always at hand." Yet we are told that Christian Scientists heal sickness through prayer, a prayer however of "affirmation," for "the prayer that heals the sick is an absolute understanding of God." What Mrs. Eddy taught on the forgiveness of sins is clear from her treatment of Christ and the Atonement, while the resurrection of the body and the eschatological doctrine of life everlasting have also been touched upon in the same connection.

The sacraments naturally are rejected by Mrs. Eddy but a word is necessary on her treatment of marriage to which she devotes a chapter of "Science and Health." Marriage, because its very nature would seem to give the lie to her denials of matter, Mrs. Eddy publicly characterized as "synonymous with legalized lust" ("C. S. Journal," July, 1906). Inferentially she declares in "Miscellaneous Writings" that there will come a time when marriage will be prohibited in Christian Science. "Until Time matures human growth, marriage and progeny will continue unprohibited in Christian Science. We look to future generations for ability to comply with absolute Science when marriage shall be found to be man's oneness with God. To abolish marriage at this period and maintain morality and generation would put ingenuity to ludicrous shifts [it certainly would] yet this is possible in Science, though to-day it is problematic." In "Science and Health" she states, "Proportionally as human generation ceases, the unbroken links of eternal harmonious being will be discerned, and man not of the earth earthly, but co-existent with God, will appear."

It is hardly necessary to dwell at length on the immoral tendencies apparent throughout the teachings of Christian Science, apart from their evident denial of all Catholic dogma. Freedom of the will is denied for man is but a reflection of God. Sin furthermore is unreality, and hence there can, according to Mrs. Eddy, be no such thing as immorality and therefore there is no means afforded against the onslaughts of temptation. Finally, if not directly, at least indirectly, the evils of birth control are inculcated in her teaching on marriage when she teaches that "a wife need not esteem the privilege of becoming a mother," and that children are "errors."

As for the cures which Christian Science purports to perform, a lengthy discussion is out of place here. That some cures are performed is unquestionable, but they must be attributed to "faith healing," or suggestion, despite the denials of Mrs. Eddy that such factors enter in. Some, too, may be providential cures permitted by God to those who approach Him in good faith, even though they be in error. Officially, however, the fundamental point on which Mrs. Eddy based her teaching on this question is that the miracles of Christ were mere natural phenomena within the control of anyone who rises above "mortal mind," and that

Christian Science places this power within the reach of its adherents. (For discussion of the Catholic doctrine on miracles, etc., see C. E. articles: MIRACLES; LOURDES. See also especially, Bellwald, "Christian Science and the Catholic Faith," in which this point is treated in extenso.)

A brief statement of Mrs. Eddy's exalted claims to divine guidance in her life-work will suffice to indicate, when compared with the information adduced in this article, the utterly misguided efforts of that woman whom, all things considered, it is difficult not to brand as an imposter. As related above she claims divine revelation in her "discovery" of Christian Science. Repeating this statement she says, "In the year 1866 I discovered the Christ Science or divine laws of Life and named it Christian Science. . . . For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." She also informs us that, "No person can take the place of the Virgin Mary. No person can compass or fulfil the individual mission of Jesus of Nazareth. No person can take the place of the author of 'Science and Health,' the discoverer and founder of Christian Science." Her book she placed on a par with, even above, the Holy Bible and she did not refuse to be identified with the Woman of the Apocalypse and so high was she raised in the estimation of her followers that when she "died" many denied her death, while her resurrection was for some time hourly expected. Truly her ego had impressed itself on her works and her followers, so that not inaptly did she place on the flyleaf of "Science and Health" the peculiar, yet viewed in this light, the significant inscription:

"I,I,I,I myself, I
The inside and outside, the what and the why,
The when and the where, the low and the high,
All I,I,I,I myself, I."

Revelation does not come to such as Mrs. Eddy, nor is it proved by her works. The entire criticism of Christian Science may be summed up in the statement that it is neither Christian nor scientific.

Chur (anciently CURIA RHÆTORUM, Ital. COIRA, Fr. COIRE, in the local Romance language CUERA), DIOCESE OF (CURIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-743b), in Switzerland, directly subject to the Holy See. The see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Georges Schmid de Gruneeck, b. at Surrhein 1851, ordained 1875, appointed 7 May, 1908, acted as administrator apostolic of Lausanne from 3 September to 6 December, 1915, named assistant at the pontifical throne, 9 July, 1921. The most important events of this diocese in recent years were, the burning of the famous boys' college at Schwyz, 3 April, 1910, which was rebuilt during the four years following, and the celebration in 1922 of the centenary of the death of Saint Fidelis, O.M.C., martyr at Sigmaringa. Twenty-five new churches have been erected in the diocese since 1908, and ten great meetings of Catholics from the seven different cantons of the diocese, have been held. Several prominent clergy have died; Rev. Ferdinand Math, D.D., d. 17 March, 1909; Rev. Christian Tuor, Dean, d. 1912; Rev. Martinus Marty, parish priest of Schwyz, brother of Bishop Marty of St. Cloud, d. 1 September, 1916; Dr. Caspar Decurtius, professor at the University of Fribourg, and a great social scholar, d. June, 1916; Rev. Gaudenz Willi, and Rev. Hieronymus Lovetz, D.D., provosts of the cathedral, d. 19 November, 1920, and 14 September, 1921. During the World War the clergy and laity assisted the sick and wounded of all nations, in every way possible; the bishop visited them in their homes in different parts of the diocese, particularly in Davos, Canton of Grisons, where large numbers were suffering from phthisis.

The Catholic population of this diocese numbers about 300,000, of whom 270,000 speak German, 22,000 Romansch, the total Romance language, and from 7,000 to 8,000 Italian. The remainder of the population, 400,000, are Protestants. By 1922 statistics the diocese comprises 220 parishes, 542 churches, 402 secular and 274 regular clergy, 3 abbeys for men, 7 convents for men and 19 for women, 42 lay brothers, 217 religious women, 1 seminary, 69 seminarians with 6 professors. The various institutions include 8 secondary schools for boys with 108 teachers and 2,800 pupils, 6 secondary schools for girls with 36 teachers and 1,110 pupils, 1 normal school with 6 teachers and 50 students, 310 elementary schools with 332 teachers and from 12,000 to 15,000 pupils, 1 industrial school with 4 teachers and attendance of 70, 1 apostolic school, 5 homes, 22 asylums or refuges, 33 hospitals, and 2 day nurseries. All the public institutions permit the priests to minister in them, and four or five of the Catholic schools are aided by the Government. Eight societies are formed among the clergy, and about twenty, many of them inter-diocesan, among the laity. Twenty-seven Catholic periodicals are published here.

Church Collections.—Admission to services in the church must be entirely gratuitous, all customs to the contrary being now reprobated.

Church Unity Octave.—The Church Unity Octave, the observance of which was by Papal Brief of His Holiness Pope Benedict XV extended to the Universal Church and enriched with indulgences on 25 February, 1916, had its inception under the Rev. Paul James Francis, S. A., when he was a "Pro-Roman" Anglican of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, in 1908. At that time it was Father Paul's custom to recognize the authority of the Chair of Peter by forwarding Peter's Pence to the Apostolic See. The first practical result of the observance of the Church Unity Octave was the submission and corporate reception of seventeen members of the Society of the Atonement, of which Father Paul was the founder and superior, into the Catholic Church on 30 October, 1909. On this date, Father Paul and sixteen of his followers were received in the convent chapel at Graymoor, Garrison, N. Y., by Monsignor Conroy, Auxiliary Bishop of Ogdensburg, acting for His Eminence Cardinal Farley, Archbishop of New York.

In December, 1909, the Octave received the sanction and blessing of Pope Pius X. This was followed by that of their Eminences, Cardinals Farley, O'Connell, Gibbons, and Falconio. Still later Cardinal Bourne of Westminster. Cardinal Logue of Armagh, the Cardinal Archbishop of Quebec and His Grace the Archbishop of Montreal gave their approval to the Octave. Meantime many archbishops and bishops of the United States, Canada, and England gave the Octave their endorsement and support. Finally, His Holiness Pope Benedict XV, by the above mentioned Brief, extended its observance to the Universal Church, enriching it with indulgences. At the Annual Conference of the American Hierarchy in Washington, D. C., 22 September, 1921, Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia, presented a resolution to the hierarchy providing that "the Unity Octave be held throughout all the dioceses of the United States." "It was unanimously adopted by the Hierarchy," Cardinal Dougherty informed the Central Office of the Church Unity Octave, Graymoor, Garrison, N. Y., the day following.

The Observance of the Octave consists in the daily recitation of the Antiphon: "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, in Me and I in Thee; that they also may be one in Us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me (St. John, xvii, 21) V. I say unto thee, that thou art Peter; R. And upon this Rock I will build My Church"; followed by the Prayer: O Lord Jesus Christ Who saidst unto Thine Apostles, etc., during the eight days of the Octave from St. Peter's Chair at Rome, 18 January to the Conversion of St. Paul, 25 January. A plenary indulgence has been granted on the first or last day of the Octave under the usual conditions.

Cienfuegos, DIOCESE OF (CENTUMFOCENSIS; cf. C. E., III-770c), dependent on Havana in Central Cuba. The inhabitants of the diocese number 650,000, of whom 600,000 are Cubans, both whites and negroes; the remainder are emigrants, mostly from Spain, and nearly all are nominal Catholics, excepting small colonies of Chinese, Jamaicans, and Haitians (among whom are many Catholics). In reality the number of men who comply with their religious duties is very much less, as indifferentism reigns. Masons are numerous, and Protestants supplied with abundant money from the United States are working to de-christianize Cuba with but small success. The Catholics have improved very much in recent years and work with enthusiasm in many parishes.

There are 35 parishes, 16 non-parochial churches, 7 parishes are served by religious communities: Franciscans (2), Carmelites (1), Dominicans (2), Capuchins (1), and Passionists (1), 34 secular and 54 regular priests, 4 seminarians at Havana and 2 at the Latin-American College in Rome.

The colleges and religious establishments in Cienfuegos are: Montserrat College, 25 Jesuits, 400 students; French College, 16 Marists, 350 students; Bartolome las Casas College, 7 Dominicans, 100 students. For girls: College of the Apostolate of Sacred Heart, 13 religious and 100 students, College of the Incarnate Word, 6 religious, 80 students; College of the Most Holy Rosary, 7 Dominican Sisters, 60 students. Little Sisters of the Poor (15 religious) care for 100 aged of both sexes in an asylum; Servants of Mary are engaged in caring for the sick in their homes (14 religious). There is an association of Children of Mary directed by Jesuits with 600 members; also in charge of the same Fathers an association of young men, "Anunciata," with 100 members, and an association of workers with 80 members. In the Jesuit College there are night classes for workers, also in the Dominican College, where a course in chemistry relating to the sugar industry is given. A council of Knights of Columbus with 43 members is established in the city.

In Santa Clara, the capital of the province, there are the following establishments: College of San Pablo de La Cruz, 10 Passionists with 100 students. For girls: Teresian College, 8 religious, 70 students; College directed by 6 Sisters of the Love of God with 58 students; in Trinidad a Dominican College for boys with 3 religious and 35 students; College of the Holy Rosary for girls with 8 Dominican Sisters and 63 students; in Sancti Spiritus the College of the Nativity in charge of 13 Brothers of Christian Doctrine with 200 students; College of the Apostolate of Sacred Heart with 11 religious and 90 girl students; also an asylum for the aged with 14 Little Sisters of the Poor and 60 aged; in Placetas a College of San Antonio, with 4 Franciscans and 108 students; in Caibarien, College of the Sacred Heart, 7 Marists and 170 students, College of the Apostolate of Sacred Heart with 9 religious and 82 students; in Remedios: College of the Love of God with 6 religious and 82 students. In Sagua la Grande: College of the Sacred Heart directed by Jesuits taught by 9 Brothers of Christian Doctrine with 170 pupils, and night classes given by Jesuit Fathers; College of the Apostolate of the Sacred Heart with 14 religious and 140 students; home for aged with 14 religious and 85 aged; a sanatorium for the Spanish colony is in charge of the Daughters of Calvary with 10 religious and 80 patients. In Aguada de Psajeros there is a free college for girls supported by the bishop, with 3 teachers and 60 girls. In all the churches there are catechism classes in charge of Catholic ladies. There are many associations for men and women in each parish. In all the parishes a Sunday review called "Cultura" is distributed gratis.

The diocese is administered by an Apostolic administrator, Rt. Rev. Valentin Zubizarreta, D. C., bishop of Camagüey. The first bishop of Cienfuegos was Aurelio Torres y Sanz, D. C., born in Havana 3 January, 1861, elected to Cienfuegos 9 April, 1904, transferred 19 January, 1916, as titular Bishop of Argilas when he had renounced his see on account of infirmity, died in 1920.

The native clergy of the diocese are few in number and have not been prominent in the recent political struggles. In the civil element, however, are the famous "Villas," who meant so much in the War of Independence and in politics following the founding of the republic. The second president of Cuba, José Miguel Gómez, who died the past year in New York, was a native of Sancti Spiritus. Near Cienfuegos, in the parish of Cruces, was fought the famous battle of "Mal Tiempo," when the revolutionary forces were in command of General Maximo Gomez y Maceo, most valorous of all the Cubans who fought for independence.

Cilicia of the Armenians, PATRIARCHATE OF (CILICIÆ ARMENORUM).—In 1830 the Armenians, who received the Faith from the apostles, obtained their civil emancipation by the erection of a primatial see at Constantinople, the titular of which was recognized by an imperial berat of the chiefs of the Armenian Catholic colony in Turkey. The two sees, that of the Patriarchate of Cilicia, and the primatial see of Constantinople, were reunited by Pius IX in 1867, to be governed by the Patriarch of Cilicia who resides at Constantinople, the patriarchal archdiocese. The present (1922) patriarch is His Excellency Mgr. Paul Terzian, born in Kiutahia, Asiatic Turkey, 1855, studied at Propaganda College, was appointed Bishop of Adana, 8 April, 1892, and promoted to the patriarchate 23 April, 1910, taking the name of Paul Peter XIII. His appointment was confirmed in special form by Pius X, who also conferred the pallium on him in solemn audience, 26 April, 1911, and publicly confirmed by the consistory, 27 November following. The patriarch's chief assistants are, Mgr. Nasilian, Bishop of Trebizond; a patriarchal vicar in Constantinople, Mgr. Rokosian, titular Archbishop of Achrida; a procurator in Rome, Mgr. Kojunian, titular Bishop of Chalcedon; the administrator apostolic of the Armenians in Russia, Rev. Serge Abraamian; and the vicar general for the Armenians of Tiflis, Rev. Denis Kalalozoff.

In 1920 Mgr. Terzian went to Rome, to one of the conferences organized by the new oriental institute, where he spoke on the origin and development of the Patriarchate of Cilicia for the Armenians. He later went to Paris and London to defend the interests of his people in the peace negotiations. In 1920 Cilicia comprised 600,000 Mahomedans, 150,000 Greek schismatics, the same number of Armenian schismatics, 16,000 Armenian Catholics, 85 priests, 13 parishes, 13 churches and chapels, and 8 schools with 300 children.

Cimbebasia, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (CIMBEASIENSIS; cf. C. E., II-773a), is bounded on the North by the degree of latitude determined by the lower course of the Kunene River and the Okawanga River; on the East by the 22nd degree of longitude east of Greenwich; on the South by the 23rd degree of south latitude in such manner that the border of the civil districts of Windbroek, Gobabis, Kaviibib, and Swakopmund constitute also the border of the ecclesiastical territory; on the west by the Atlantic Ocean. As a result of the war this region which was formerly a German colony, is now under the control of the Union of South Africa. The prefecture was erected by a decree of Propaganda, 1 August, 1892, under the name of Lower Cimbebasia which was changed to Cimbebasia by a decree of 10 January, 1921. The Oblates of Mary Immaculate have charge of the mission under the Prefect Apostolic, who resides at Windbroek, the principal station. The other mission stations are: Little Windbroek, Doebera, Swakopmund, Usakos, Aminuis, Epukiov, Golabis, Omaruru, Okambahe, Grootfontein, Tsumeb, Kokasib, Andara, Njangana. In January, 1921, the former Prefect Apostolic, Rt. Rev. Eugene Klæyle, resigned, and the present prefect apostolic, Rt. Rev. Joseph Gotthardt, was appointed. The prefecture celebrated its silver jubilee on 8 December, 1921. Practically all eligible males fought in the army during the World War. The clergy and religious devoted themselves to the relief of suffering and to the spiritual welfare of the soldiers.

Of the Catholic population of 3,144, about 800 are Europeans. A large percentage of the former German population returned to their own country in 1919, and many more emigrated elsewhere. There are 22 priests, 20 lay brothers, 17 Benedictine Nuns, and 20 Franciscan Sisters who are leaving for Europe; 6 parishes and 18 churches; 15 missions and 15 stations; 6 convents for men and 6 for women; 1 high school for European girls with 6 teachers and 125 pupils; 5 primary schools for natives with 15 teachers and 380 pupils; 2 industrial schools with 2 teachers and 10 pupils; 1 missionary work for the conversion of infidels; 2 orphanages with 21 children; 5 asylums; 1 day nursery. The government does not contribute to the support of the Catholic institutions, but admits the ministry of priests in all the public schools and asylums. The laity have 2 religious associations: Marian Sodality, and the Sodality of the Infant Jesus. (For Upper Cimbebasia, see CUBANGO IN ANGOLA, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF.)

Cincinnati, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CINCINNATIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-773b), Ohio, is under the direction of Archbishop Henry Moeller, D.D., who succeeded to the archiepiscopal see upon the death of Archbishop Elder, 31 October, 1904. One of the most notable events of this diocese within recent years was the breaking of ground early in 1921 for the erection of a new Mount St. Mary's Seminary, which is expected to be completed in 1922, the centenary of the diocese. The recent organizing of a Bureau of Catholic Charities, and the Fenwick Club for young men has also been of importance in the work of the diocese.

In 1908 the archdiocese lost a prominent clergyman by the death of Rt. Rev. John Mackay, rector of Mount St. Mary's Seminary of the West for the last three years of his life, and in 1920 the death of the vicar general of the Archdiocese, Rt. Rev. John B. Murray, brought another loss. During the World War the archdiocese furnished 13 chaplains for work at home and overseas, and the laity responded willingly to all calls made upon them.

At the present time (1922) the archdiocese comprises an area of 12,043 sq. miles and includes: 188 parishes, 219 churches, 31 missions and 2 stations, 2 monasteries for men, 262 secular priests and 147 regulars, 2 seminaries with 245 seminarians, 5 colleges for men with an attendance of 2,368, 2 colleges for women, 15 academies, 1 for boys and 14 for girls, 124 elementary schools with attendance of 34,683, 4 industrial schools taught by brothers with attendance of 360.

Among the various institutions of the diocese are: 1 home for the aged with 40 inmates, 3 homes for working girls with 137 inmates, 1 home for young men with 160 inmates, 4 orphan asylums with 812 children, 1 infant asylum with 60 infants, 8 hospitals with a yearly record of 16,271 inmates, 3 refugees for boys with 318 boys, 2 houses of Good Shepherd with 203 girls, and 2 day nurseries.

All the public institutions allow the priests of the diocese to minister in them whenever it is requested, but the Catholic schools and institutions do not receive any aid from the government. The various organizations of the diocese include, among the clergy, the Clergy Relief Union, among the laity, the National Catholic Welfare Association, made up of men and women. The "Catholic Telegraph" is the diocesan organ.

Cistercians in the British Isles (cf. C. E., XVI-25c).—The full and complete history of monasticism and its ancient abodes in these islands is still unwritten. In many cases there is a great divergence of opinion among writers on various aspects and incidents touching the monasteries, and there is a lamentable dearth of chartularies and records, due no doubt to the convulsions, disturbances, and vandalism attending their suppression. The information available is often obtained only after extensive research among many widely separated sources.

ENGLAND.—Various computations of Cistercian monasteries in England at the time of the suppression are found in different authorities, some giving the number at 75, others at 66. There were, besides, 26 convents of Cistercian Nuns. By the act suppressing the lesser monasteries, which numbered 376 in all, about half or two-thirds of the Cistercian houses were dissolved, the yearly income of these not being above £200 according to the value of money at that time. Between 1538 and 1540 the remaining Cistercian houses fell among the 645 greater monasteries, all victims of Henry VIII's rapacity and greed. The calumnies heaped upon these monasteries in the past are now almost effaced by the ever-growing light of truth. The many beautiful monastic ruins, to be found in almost every English shire to-day, testify to the existence of upwards of 1000 monasteries and religious houses, in the greater number of which, at the time of the suppression, even on the testimony of Henry VIII's own visitors, "religion was right well kept and observed." The seed of religious life had therefore not been planted in uncongenial soil.

The first Cistercian foundation in England was made in 1129 at Waverley, Surrey. This was the 36th foundation from the parent Cîteaux. The founder was William Gifford, Bishop of Winchester. Pope Eugene III in 1147 granted the Waverley monks exemption from tithes for land and cattle. A similar privilege was granted to various Cistercian houses by different popes. Tintern Abbey, in Monmouthshire, was founded in 1131 by Walter de Clare. In 1132 Rievaulx Abbey was founded in Yorkshire. Among the many privileges granted by the popes to the monks of this monastery was that granted by Alexander III of celebrating the Divine Office, even during a general interdict. Garendon Abbey in Leicestershire marked a new growth in 1133, testifying to the rapid success of Waverley, which could in four years give enough monks to people this monastery. Fountains Abbey became Cistercian in 1135, and was in the course of time the mother of many daughter-houses. Ford Abbey in Devonshire dates from 1136, and in the same year arose Warden Abbey in Bedfordshire, one of the most influential of the Cistercian houses. Thame Abbey in Oxfordshire and Bordesley Abbey in Worcestershire are chronicled for the year 1137. The Empress Maud, daughter of Henry I and mother of Henry II, was the foundress of Bordesley. In 1139 arose: Newminster in Northumberland, which owed its origin to the generosity of Ranulf, Baron of Merley; Dirkested Abbey in Lincolnshire, which was raised in fulfilment of a vow made by Baron Hugh de Breton and was the mother of the remarkable monastery of Hovedoa in Norway; Louth Park Abbey, also in Lincolnshire, founded by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln; and Kingswood in Gloucestershire, founded by William de Berkeley. Another foundation was made in Lincolnshire in 1143 at Revesby, through the instrumentality of William, Earl of Lincoln. Pipewell Monastery in Northamptonshire was founded in 1143, its monks dispersed after 150 years, and later re-established. Woburn Abbey in Bedfordshire dates from 1145 and was descended from Fountains. Boxley Abbey in Kent, founded 1146, was the 47th filiation of Clairvaux.

Dorl Abbey in Herefordshire was the only daughter-house in England of Morimund, one of the first four Cistercian houses. It was founded by Robert, Earl of Ferrars, in 1147, a year very remarkable in Cistercian history as the date of foundation of 21 Cistercian houses in England and Wales, and of the incorporation of the Order of Savigny with that of Cîteaux. In 1147 arose: Kirkstall Abbey in Yorkshire, sprung from Fountains, an ex-voto offering made by Robert de Lacey, the second abbot Radulph Haggith being a man of conspicuous sanctity, and some of the lands of which were later confiscated by King John; Vaudey Abbey in Lincolnshire, founded by William, Earl of Albemarle; Bitesden Abbey in Buckinghamshire, sprung from Garendon; Bruerne Abbey in Oxfordshire; Roche Abbey in Yorkshire; Saltrey Abbey in Huntingdonshire, which owed its origin to Simon, Earl of Northampton, and obtained special privileges through Judith, Countess of Huntingdon and niece of William the Conqueror; Furness Abbey in Lancashire, which began its career under the Order of Savigny in 1127 and became Cistercian in 1147; Quarr Abbey in the Isle of Wight, which was of Savignian birth and embraced the rule of Cîteaux in 1147, as did also Cumbermere Abbey in Cheshire, Calder Abbey in Cumberland, Rushen Abbey in the Isle of Man; Swineshead Abbey in Lincolnshire, Stratford-Langton in Essex, Bildwas in Shropshire, Buckfast in Devonshire, Byland in Yorkshire, and Coggeshale in Essex. Sawley Abbey in Yorkshire was founded in 1148, and in the same year abbeys were founded at Rufford in Nottinghamshire and at Mereval in Warwickshire. The year 1150 was marked by the foundation of Sibton in Norfolk, Jervall in Yorkshire, and Combe in Warwickshire. Four foundations were made in the year 1151: Meaux in Yorkshire, Stanley in Wiltshire, Flexley in Gloucestershire, and Holm-Cultram in Cumberland. The last is sometimes assigned to the Kingdom of Scotland, Henry, son of King David of Scotland, being claimed as founder; and again King Henry II of England is claimed as founder. Meaux was founded by William, Earl of Albemarle, whose vow to visit the Holy Land was commuted by Eugene III into that of erecting a monastery. Tiltey Abbey in Essex and Stonely in Warwickshire are assigned to the years 1153 and 1154 respectively. Dieulacres in Cheshire followed in 1158.

After so rapid and extensive a growth of the Cistercian Order in England (46 foundations in 25 years) there was some slight cessation, for not until 1172 were the next foundations made. These were at Bindon in Dorsetshire and Whalley Abbey in Cheshire. The Abbey of Roberts Bridge in Sussex was founded in 1176. Its abbot and the Abbot of Boxley were sent to seek King Richard I, when he was imprisoned in Germany on his return from the Holy Land. Crokesden Abbey in Staffordshire was founded in 1178. The Abbey of Clive in Somersetshire, founded in 1198, is sometimes claimed as Benedictine, but on the authority of most chronicles seems to have been Cistercian. In 1201 Dunkeswell Abbey in Devonshire was founded. Tanner wrongly assigns it to the Premonstratensians. Beaulieu Abbey in the New Forest, Hampshire, was founded from Cîteaux by King John in 1204, in satisfaction for his ill-treatment of some Cistercian abbots, "with whom he was offended and whom he caused to be trodden under his horses." Mendham Abbey in Buckinghamshire, Hilton in Staffordshire, Grace-Dieu in Monmouthshire, and Nelles in Hampshire arose respectively in 1212, 1219, 1226, and 1239. Hayles Abbey in Gloucestershire dates from 1246, and Newhau Abbey in Devonshire arose in the following year. Vale-Royal Abbey, formerly Dernhall, in Cheshire, has a remarkable history. Edward, Prince of Wales, son of Henry III, being in danger of shipwreck during his return from the Holy Land, vowed in case he and his came safe to land to erect a monastery and endow the same for 100 Cistercian monks. The monastery was in due course erected at Dernhall, but afterwards, when Edward became king, that place was abandoned and a new monastery built at Vale-Royal, the first stone of the new foundation being laid by the king himself. A relic of the true Cross, brought by the king from Palestine, was given to the monastery. So great were the benefactions of the king and queen that after their demise the monks used a special Collect for their welfare, not only at all the Masses, but also at all the canonical hours. The solemn consecration of this house was made by the Patriarch of Jerusalem, at which a sentence of greater excommunication was pronounced against anyone who should enter the monastery "any other ways than by the gate of the same." Edward paid in all for the erection of this monastery £32,000 in the money value of that time. Henry III requested all the religious houses of England to furnish Vale-Royal with books. The date of foundation was 1274. The Countess of Devonshire founded Buckland Abbey in Devonshire in 1278. Rewley Abbey in Oxfordshire followed in 1281. In 1350 the Abbey of Our Lady of Graces was founded near the Tower of London by Edward III. This was the 708th foundation in the annals of the whole order, after which, until the close of the eighteenth century, there seems to have been no new foundation made in England, though there were many in other countries.

Nevertheless, the religious institutions already established, so many in number, so various in character, continued their good work until the upheaval of the sixteenth century, when between the years 1535 and 1540 Henry VIII overthrew the whole religious and monastic life of England. It is reckoned that 8000 religious of all orders, men and women, not to speak of the dependents of the monasteries, were thus expelled from their cloisters. Leaving aside the religious and spiritual loss to England by the suppression of the monasteries, the loss from a merely humane and economic point of view was very great, for they exercised great hospitality towards the poor, received the sick, nursing and curing them, and taught poor children, being also centers of art, science, and literature.

Not until 1794 do we again hear of the Cistercians as a community in England, when through the generosity of Thomas Weld of Lulworth a small body of monks from the monastery of La Val-Sainte, intended for Canada, found it possible to establish themselves at Lulworth in Dorsetshire. For twenty-one years they remained in this new settlement, but owing to certain restrictions put upon them by the government, which they found it impossible to accept, they left England and returned to Melleray in Brittany, where they succeeded in finally establishing themselves. From this French monastery the present Mt. Melleray in Ireland was established, and from it in 1835 a filiation was made at Mt. St. Bernard's, Coalville, in Leicestershire, which continues to the present day the monastic life according to the rule of Cîteaux. Mr. Ambrose Philipps de Lisle was the generous donor who thus helped to revive the Cistercian Order in England. He was descended from the de Lisles, who were formerly such charitable beneficiaries to the ancient Abbey of Garendon. To him as well as to the Earl of Shrewsbury the monks are indebted for their present abbey, of which Augustus Welby Pugin, Esq., was the architect. In 1849 Rt. Rev. Bernard Palmer received the abbatial blessing and was the first mitred abbot in England since the Reformation.

At the time of the suppression there were 26 houses of Cistercian Nuns in England. Eleven of these were situated in Yorkshire, viz., Sinningthwaite, Eshalt, Hampole, Swine, Hoton, Basedale, Nunappleton, Kildeholm, Wickham, Elreton, and Kirklees. Lincolnshire had six, viz.: Greenfield, Legburn, Nuncoton, Goykwell, Hevening, Stixwold. Others were at Cokehill and Whiston in Worcestershire, at Grace-Dieu in Leicestershire, at Brewood, Salop, at Marham, Norfolkshire, at Pinley, Warwickshire, at Sewardesley, Northamptonshire, at Wintney, Hampshire, and at Tarent in Dorsetshire. All these convents and their inmates shared the same fate as the monks. Yet for the last 120 years England has not been without its convents of Cistercian nuns, for there is at Stapehill in Dorsetshire a Cistercian convent whose early history is of interest. The original community belonged to the Royal Abbey of St. Antoine in Paris. During the troubles in France in 1793 the convent was suppressed and the nuns imprisoned. After months of imprisonment they were released in 1794, and feeling they could not promise themselves security on French soil they retired to Switzerland, which had a short time previously given shelter to the exiled monks of La Trappe, at whose head was Dom Augustine Lestrange. Both monks and nuns, however, were forced to flee before the French army which was beginning to invade Switzerland. Accordingly they moved into Austria, and on their journeys met with much hospitality in Austrian monasteries and convents. Through the influence of Princess Louise de Condé, who had become a Cistercian nun, the then Tsar of Russia, Paul I, offered them a home within his territory, and thither they went, Dom Augustine still courageously leading his monks and Madame de Chabannes, in religion Sister Mary Augustine, at the head of her party of nuns. But owing to the Tsar's alliance with the French, whose Constituent Assembly had so recently suppressed religious houses, they did not long have Russian protection. After many arduous and laborious journeys through Russia, Poland, and Prussia they were able to take ship for London, where they arrived in 1801. There they were received with hospitality and remained a short time, Mr. Weld and others being their generous hosts. In 1802 Lord Arundel offered them a residence at Stapehill, which they gladly accepted.

Since then the nuns have led tranquil lives of contemplation and penance in their secluded house in East Dorsetshire. There is at present a flourishing community of 42 members.

IRELAND.—The early religious history of Ireland is, very largely, the history of Irish monasticism, for the early Irish Church was, in great part, a monastic church. It is not clear that any other nation, in so short a time after its conversion, exhibited so remarkable a picture of monastic life, whether in its eremitical or cenobitical aspect, as the Irish nation. In the course of time Irish monasticism became a distinct and well-defined system, with rather austere tendencies, and exercised a very great influence, both in the sanctification of the Irish people at home and in the conversion of heathen nations abroad. Its great number of saintly men and women, so thorough a novitiate in religion and sanctity were none too great, in view of the subsequent trials and persecutions for the faith, to which the nation was subjected for over ten centuries. The Danish wars were not mere expeditions of plunder, they were wars of religious persecution as well. Their pagan fury spared neither church nor cloister, and monastic seats of learning were plundered and destroyed. The loss of faith in England, through the so-called Reformation in the sixteenth century, was followed by a methodic and calculated effort to rob the Irish nation of that same gift. "But neither English persecutor nor Danish invader could disturb the constancy, nor shake the hearts, nor unsettle the faith of the Irish." And this faith they carried abroad, seeking the conversion of other nations. Sts. Columbanus, Kilian, Virgilius, and Gall were men of heroic sanctity, apostles of the Gospel, benefactors to Europe, and the glory of Ireland. According to a Belgian writer of the seventeenth century 46 Irish saints were propagators of the Gospel in Belgium alone. Reputed for four centuries as the Island of Scholars, as well of Saints, foreign students went to Ireland as to "a literary emporium." But persecutions and ravages of war robbed the nation of her ancient glory, and this St. Malachy endeavored in some degree to restore when he sought the co-operation of St. Bernard in establishing the Cistercians in Ireland.

On a journey to Rome St. Malachy left some companions at Cîteaux to be instructed in its rules and discipline. When sufficiently trained they were commissioned to return to Ireland under the leadership of St. Christian, afterwards Bishop of Lismore. With St. Malachy and under his guidance they founded the first Cistercian monastery at Mellifont, Co. Louth, in 1142. The generous founder of Mellifont, after St. Malachy, was Donough O'Carroll, Prince of Uriel. The first abbot was St. Christian. In the course of time there were eight foundations made from this abbey. Bective Abbey, Co. Meath, on the banks of the Boyne, not far from the town of Trim, was founded by O'Melaphlin, King of Meath, probably in 1147. In that same year St. Mary's Abbey, Dublin, of Savignian origin and supposed to have been founded by the Danes about 948, embraced the rule of the Cistercians. Boyle Abbey, Co. Roscommon, taking its name from the River Boyle, was originally founded at Grelacdinach and transferred to Boyle in 1161. Peter O'Morra was the first abbot, and later became Bishop of Clonfert. Nenay Abbey, Co. Limerick, was founded in 1148 by Turlogh O'Brien, King of Thomond. Cistercian historians state that the abbot and forty monks were put to death by the satellites of Elizabeth. Battinglass Abbey, Co. Wicklow, owes its origin to Dermont McMurrough,

King of Leinster, in either 1148 or 1151. In 1185 the abbot, Albinus Malloy, was made Bishop of Ferns. Shrute Abbey, Co. Langford, was founded about 1150 by the family of O'Ferrall. Inislough Abbey, Co. Tipperary, founded in 1151, is attributed to Donald O'Brien, King of Limerick. It seems, however, that the original foundation was on the banks of the Suir, whence it was called de Surio, and in 1185, in Donald's time, transferred to Inislough. Abbot Congan of this monastery is supposed to have supplied St. Bernard with the matter for his famous "Life of St. Malachy."

Newry Abbey, Co. Down, was founded, according to some in 1144, according to others in 1153. Both St. Malachy and Murtoth McLochlain, King of All Ireland, are claimed as founders. Abbot Finn was Bishop of Kildare. Odorney or Kyrie Eleison Abbey, Co. Kerry, was founded in 1154 by the Fitzmaurice family. Here St. Christian, the first Cistercian abbot in Ireland, died in 1186. In 1288 Abbot Nicholas became Bishop of Ardfert. Fermoy Abbey, Co. Cork, was founded supposedly by the Roche family, who seem, however, to have been benefactors rather than founders. Patricius, the prior, became Bishop of Cloyne in 1226. Maure Abbey, Co. Cork, was founded in 1172 by Dermot McCormac McCarthy, King of Desmond. Astrath or Assaroe Abbey, Co. Donegal, dates from 1178. Roderick O'Cananan, Lord of Tyrconnel, and Flaherty, Lord of Kinel-Connell, are claimed as founders. Holy Cross Abbey, Co. Tipperary, was founded in 1180 by Donald Mor O'Brien, King of Limerick. The abbot of this house was styled Earl of Holy Cross, and acted as vicar general of the Cistercian Order in Ireland. Considerable remains of this abbey are still to be seen, and the architecture is said to have been remarkably fine. The abbey takes its name from the relic of the true Cross, formerly preserved with great veneration there, but now in the Ursuline convent at Blackrock, Cork. Holy Cross enjoyed great pre-eminence among the Cistercian houses.

Middleton Abbey, Co. Cork, had as founders in 1180 either the Fitzgerald or the Barry family. Jerpoint Abbey, Co. Kilkenny, was founded in 1180 by Donald O'Donoghue, King of Ossory. Felix O'Dulany was the first abbot, afterwards Bishop of Ossory, a man famous for sanctity, at whose tomb it is related many miracles took place. The early foundation of St. Canice's Cathedral is attributed to him. Dunbrody Abbey, Co. Wexford, was founded in 1182 by Hervey de Montemarisco, marshal of King Henry II and seneschal of Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke. Strongbow was a great benefactor to this monastery, which was one of the largest in Ireland, the church being nearly 200 feet in length. Leix Abbey, Queen's Co., was founded in 1184 by Corchegeer O'More. Kilcooly Abbey, Co. Tipperary, was founded in the same year by Donald O'Brien, King of Thomond. Glandy Abbey, supposed to have been in Co. Cork, was founded probably in 1185. Little is known about it. Iniscourcy Abbey on Juch Island, Strangford, Lough, was founded by John de Courcy in 1187. It seems to have been formerly either Benedictine or Savignian. Monasterevan, Co. Kildare, owes its origin to Dermot O'Dempsey, Prince of Offaly, in 1189. The first abbot became Bishop of Leighlin. Knockmoy Abbey, Co. Galway, was founded by Cathal Crovderg, King of Connaught, in 1190. He afterwards became a Cistercian monk. In 1290 Abbot Laurence became Bishop of Kilmacdaugh. Leigh or Gray Abbey, on the shore of Strangford Lough, was founded in 1193 by Africa, daughter of the King of the Isle of Man. The ruins indicate the abbey's former beauty and magnificence. Corcomroe Abbey, Co. Clare, founded in 1194, is attributed to Donald Mor O'Brien, King of Limerick. A great monument shows that Donough O'Brien, King of Thomond, was buried here 1267. John, Abbot of Corcomroe, became Bishop of Kilmacduagh in 1418. Kilshare, Co. Clare, was founded in 1198 by the same Donald Mor. It seems to have been annexed to Concomroe. Abbot Florence O'Tigernach became Bishop of Kilfenora in 1273.

Comber Abbey, Strangford Lough, is attributed to Brian O'Neill for the year 1200. Its site was supposed to be that of a former monastery founded by St. Patrick. Tintern Abbey, Co. Wexford, was erected in fulfilment of a vow made by William, Earl of Pembroke, while in peril at sea. Its foundation dates from 1200. Being a daughter-house of Tintern in Monmouthshire, it is called Tintern Minor. Glengrah Abbey, Co. Cork, or The Vale of Charity, as it was called, is supposed to date from 1200. Much uncertainty exists about this monastery. Some writers say it was in Ulster, others in Westmeath, others again in King's Co., and others in Cork. Kilbeggan Abbey, Co. Westmeath, was founded by the Dalton family 1200. Abbot William became Bishop of Clonmacnoise in 1298. Graigue-managh Abbey, Co. Kilkenny, was founded in 1204 from Stanley Monastery, England. It is related that twelve monks with the prior (the abbot had just died) were slain, because they would not take off their ecclesiastical vestments and yield obedience to Elizabeth. Woney Abbey, Co. Limerick, founded 1206 by the Butler family, was formerly Savignian. Abbeylaragh or Granard, Co. Longford, was founded in 1214 by Richard Tuile, Baron Palatine of Moyashel. In 1315 Edward Bruce burned the town and despoiled the abbey. In this place a monastery had already been founded by St. Patrick. The first abbot whom St. Patrick appointed was St. Guasacht, son of Milcho, who is called a saint, St. Patrick's old master. In 1398 Abbot Peter became Bishop of Clonmacnoise, and in 1541 Richard, the last abbot, was raised to the see of Ardagh. Moycoseane, Co. Derry, was founded in 1218. John, third abbot, became Bishop of Derry in 1401. Tracton Abbey, Co. Cork, was erected in 1225 by the MacCarthy family. There was a relic of the true Cross here, which was venerated by great crowds on Holy Thursday. Hore Abbey, Co. Tipperary, formerly Benedictine, became Cistercian in 1272 at the instance of MacCarvill, Archbishop of Cashel. There were also monasteries at: Monkstown, Co. Dublin; Athlone, Co. Roscommon; Helfothur, Co. Donegal; Juchrie, Co. Cork; Abbeyfeale, Co. Limerick; and at Kilkenny; but very little is known about them. Two Cistercian convents of nuns are known to have existed, one at Derry, founded by Turlogh O'Neill in 1218, the other at Down.

In some of the monasteries the odious practice of exclusion from profession on grounds of nationality was carried on, as we learn from the condemnation of the practice by the general chapter of 1323, which issued a warning to all abbots, especially those of Ireland, to remove all walls of separation and to admit indifferently all persons, no matter of what nation. The evil practice here condemned seems to have originated with houses of English monks in Ireland, as we gather from the complaint of the Irish chiefs in their letter to John XXII. In 1638 the Irish Cistercians established a congregation known as that of Sts. Bernard and Malachy in connection with the new observance founded by de Vargas. Among the Cistercian abbots those of Mellifont, St. Mary's in Dublin, Baltinglass, Tintern, Graigue-managh, Tracton, Dunbrody, Nenay, Woney, Monasterevan, and Bective had seats in parliament.

At the time of the suppression of the monasteries there were in Ireland 42 Cistercian monasteries and 2 convents. Henry VIII did what he could to overthrow religious houses in Ireland, and up to 1541, 78 religious houses had been surrendered, but outside the pale the monasteries seem to have continued until the defeat of the Irish princes at the opening of the seventeenth century. Although the monks were often driven from their monasteries they appear to have returned whenever a lull in the persecution permitted. Thus we read of Holy Cross "that the monks continued for a considerable time after the monastery was legally dissolved, if not to dwell in the abbey, at least to remain in the neighborhood, hoping against hope that better times would come." As late as 1700 Bernard Lahy is chronicled as holding at least the name, if not the office, of abbot. The last of the monks of this abbey died in 1752, having his cell amidst the abbey ruins.

From the early part of the eighteenth century the Cistercian order in Ireland seems to have ceased to exist. Its revival dates from the foundation of Mt. Melleray Abbey, Cappoquin, Co. Waterford, in 1832. The foreign religious of the Cistercian Abbey of Melleray in France were forced to separate from their brethren, through the hostility of the French authorities, and the predominance of the Irish section in that community gave good hopes of a successful foundation in their native land, which alone at that time seemed to present a congenial soil and welcome atmosphere for such a purpose. Principally through the instrumentality of Dom Vincent Ryan, then prior of Melleray, this work was immediately undertaken, and in company with another religious Brother Malachy set out for Ireland to begin his task. After many labors and hardships these zealous pioneers found a holding in Rathmore, Co. Kerry, through the influence of Rev. Mother Kelly of the Presentation Convent in Killarney and her nephew. Later on the Irish members of the French community arrived, and once again regular Cistercian life began in Ireland. Subsequently, in 1832, through Sir Richard Keane, who held extensive property in the Cappoquin district, Dom Vincent succeeded in obtaining possession of the present holding, which he called Mt. Melleray, from the mother-house in France. By the labors of the monks it was transferred from a rough barren mountain to a fertile and delightful region.

Since Dom Vincent's time up to now Cistercian life has continued in this place, even as of old in Boyle and Mellifont. There is a flourishing community numbering about 70, almost equally divided between choir religious and lay brethren. Of the choir religious between 20 and 30 are in Holy Orders. The present abbot, Dom Maurus O'Phelan, was blessed in the abbey church by Most Rev. Dr. Sheehan, 15 August, 1908. He continues the good work of his predecessors in the erection of new buildings, the enlargement and ornamentation of portions of the original edifice, and the furthering of virtue and learning among the brethren. A notable feature of Mt. Melleray is the up-to-date school which provides the youth of Ireland, to the number of about 200, with a thorough and excellent education. The greater number of the students are aspirants to the priesthood. A large number of students are prepared as well for civil and commercial posts, while special attention is devoted to agriculture. Mt. Melleray counts three filiations:

Mt. St. Bernard's, Leicester, England, founded 1135, of which the present superior is Very Rev. Louis Carcw; New Melleray, Dubuque, Iowa, U. S. A., founded 1848, of which the present superior is Very Rev. Bruno Ryan; and Mt. St. Joseph's, Roscrea, Co. Tipperary, founded in 1878. The personnel of the latter community is approximately the same as at Mt. Melleray. The present abbot is Dom Justin MacCarthy, who received the abbatial benediction in October, 1911. There is also an efficient school attached to the monastery. Both at Mt. Melleray and Roscrea are large guest houses, much frequented by clerics and lay gentlemen, where retreats may be made.

Citation (cf. C. E., III-791d).—All citations in ecclesiastical suits are now peremptory, and need not be renewed, unless when the judge wishes to overcome the contumacy of the person involved by threatening spiritual penalties. They are made by means of a summons (the Code does not mention verbal citations) signed by a judge or his auditor and notary, and containing in general terms, at least, the reason of the lawsuit, the plaintiff's and the defendant's name, and the time and place of appearance. The summons is delivered to the defendant at his home with any member of his family or a servant if he accepts it and promises to deliver it as soon as possible. If, however, he refuses or it is otherwise difficult for the cursor to reach the defendant, the judge makes an order authorizing the sending of the summons by registered mail with request for a receipt or by whatever is considered the safest way in different localities. If even then the defendant cannot be found the citation is made by edict or publication, the summons being posted at the entrance to the court for a reasonable time and also published in a newspaper; in case of necessity either method would suffice.

Citta della Pieve, DIOCESE OF (CIVITATIS PLEBIS; cf. C. E., III-793a), in the province of Perugia, Central Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Domenico Fanucchi, appointed to this see 2 September, 1907, died after two years of zealous service, 23 July, 1910. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Angelucci, b. in Genazzano, 1868, appointed 29 August, 1910.

During the World War the clergy and laity of the diocese showed great zeal in all civil and charitable works at home, and about one-fifth of the total number served in various branches in the field, many of them winning great honors. Present (1922) statistics credit this diocese with 33 parishes, 90 churches, 2 monasteries for women, 2 convents for women, 55 secular clergy, 74 Sisters, 1 seminary, 6 seminarians, 1 secondary school for girls with 6 teachers and 50 pupils, 1 elementary school with 2 teachers and 90 pupils, 1 industrial school for girls with 2 teachers (Sisters) and 100 pupils, and 1 infant asylum. All the civil hospitals permit the ministry of priests. A mutual aid society is formed among the clergy, and an official diocesan bulletin is published.

Citta di Castello, DIOCESE OF (CIVITATIS CASTELLI or TIFERNATENSIS; cf. C. E., III-793b), in the province of Perugia, Central Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. This see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Carlo Liviero, born in Vicenza, 1866, studied at the Seminary of Padua, incorporated into the diocese of Citta di Castello as a diocesan missionary, served as archpriest of Agna, and was appointed bishop 8 January, 1910. The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 50,250 Catholics, 156 parishes, 162 secular and 10 regular clergy, 40 seminarians, 4 Brothers, 105 Sisters, and 200 churches or chapels.

Ciudad Real, DIOCESE OF (ECCLESIA CLUNIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-793c), Bishopric-Priorate of the Military Orders of Spain, directly subject to the Holy See. It is perpetually united to the titular see of Dora and to the territory of the province of Ciudad Real, where the bishop resides. The see is at present (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Francisco Xavier Irastorza y Loinaz, born in San Sebastiano, Spain, 1875, studied in the seminaries of Larressore and Louvain, served as secretary to the Bishop of Ciudad Real in 1905, chancellor of the cathedral, then archpriest, vicar general and protonotary apostolic, named Prior of the Spanish Military Orders and prelate of Ciudad Real by the king 28 March, 1914, appointed by the Pope 11 July following, and made an armed knight by the king 23 January, 1915. The diocese comprises a territory of about 12,254 sq. miles and a Catholic population of 383,988. By 1920 statistics it counts 127 parishes, 11 archpriests, 367 priests, 179 chapels, and 13 convents with 151 religious and 440 Sisters.

Ciudad Rodrigo, DIOCESE OF (CIVITATENSIS; cf. C. E., III-793d), comprising almost all of the province of Salamanca, Spain, is suffragan of Valladolid. This diocese, erected anew in 1175, was governed by a vicar capitular in 1835. Suppressed by the Concordat and united to Salamanca, it has since 15 February, 1884, been governed by an administrator apostolic. At present (1922) he is Rt. Rev. Manuel Maria Vidal y Bouillon, titular Bishop of Birta, named a prelate of the Holy See, 8 October, 1904, and appointed 25 February, 1915. This diocese covers an area of 182 sq. miles, and comprises a Catholic population of 120,130; 106 parishes divided among 12 archpriests and 172 priests, 17 chapels and 11 convents with 35 religious, and 122 Sisters.

Civita Castellana, Orte and Gallese, DIOCESE OF (CIVITATIS CASTELLANÆ, HORTAN ET GALLESENENSIS; cf. C. E., III-798b), in the province of Rome, Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. The two sees of Civita Castellana (with which Gallese is incorporated) and Orte were united 5 October, 1917. Rt. Rev. Giacomo Ghezzi, O.F.M., born in Castelmadrada, 1842, ordained 1865, custodian of the Holy Land, appointed to this see 29 November, 1895, died 26 January, 1920. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Goffredo Zaccherini, born in Imola, 1871, served as vicar general of Subiaco, and was appointed 8 March, 1920. These united dioceses comprise 40,200 Catholics, 20 parishes, 105 secular and 27 regular clergy, 36 seminarians, and 202 churches.

Civitavecchia and Corneto, DIOCESE OF (CEN- TUMCELLARUM ET CORNETANENSIS; cf. C. E., III-798c), in the province of Rome, Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. In ancient times, when Corneto (Corneto-Tarquinia) was under pontifical government, a prison was established here for priests, guilty of crimes against the holiness of their state. Different popes accorded indulgences to the prisoners and on 18 and 21 July, 1759, Clement VIII confirmed these indulgences and added new ones, ordering that they should be put into table form and hung in the prison corridors. They are both plenary and partial indulgences, applicable to the Souls in Purgatory. The united sees of Civitavecchia and Corneto are now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Luca Piergiorganni, born in Novelara, 1876, archdeacon of the Chapter of Pesaro, appointed 10 November, 1917, to succeed Rt. Rev. Pacifico Fiorani who filled this see from 1911 until his transfer to Osimo, 12 May, 1917.

According to 1920 statistics Corneto counts a Catholic population of 11,000; 6 parishes, 15 secular and 8 regular clergy, 7 Brothers, 50 Sisters, and 34 churches or chapels. Civitavecchia is credited with 27,000 Catholics; 6 parishes, 27 secular and 17 regular clergy, 14 seminarians, 14 Brothers, 30 Sisters, and 14 churches or chapels.

Clandestinity (cf. C. E., IV-1).—Many important modifications regarding clandestine marriages were made by the decree "Ne Temere" (1907), which was binding on Catholics throughout the world, though later a dispensation was granted in Germany and in Hungary. Some further changes have been made since then by the Code. Only those marriages are now valid which are contracted before the parish priest—or a pastor who in canon law is regarded as a parish priest—or the local ordinary of the place of contract (Ne Temere had "of the parties contracting"), who may act only from the day of taking formal possession of or being canonically installed in their office, or if there is no installation from the day they begin to exercise their office, or by a priest delegated by one of them and at least two witnesses. The parish priest or ordinary required for validity must not have been by a particular decree excommunicated or interdicted, or suspended from office or declared to be such—other censures apparently would not effect validity—they can validly assist at all marriages, even of persons not subject to them, within their own territory; their presence, however, must not have been obtained by force or grave fear, and they must both ask and receive the consents of the parties contracting—under the Tridentine regime it did not matter whether or not the priest's presence was free. While the pastor or ordinary may delegate another priest to assist at a marriage within their territory, the permission given must be expressed to a specified priest, for a particular marriage, thus excluding all kinds of general permissions, except to priests appointed as parochial assistants (vicarii cooperatores) and then only for the parish to which they are attached. This permission should not be granted until the freedom of the parties to marry has been duly established. While the priest or ordinary of the place of contract might validly assist at any marriage within his territory, he cannot do so lawfully unless at least one of the parties has a domicile, quasi-domicile or has resided in that territory for a month—or less in case of a vagus—or unless he has been authorized by the parish priest or ordinary of one of the parties, but in the case of vagi having no actual residence or where a grave reason excuses one from asking the permission, the priest of the place of contract can assist lawfully. It may be noted that the question of domicile now affects only the liceity, not the validity, of a marriage.

The bride's parish priest is the proper priest to assist at a marriage but for a just cause the bridegroom's or another priest may be chosen. If the parties belong to different Catholic Rites, the man's parish priest has first claim, unless there is a law to the contrary—such a law exists in the United States when one of the parties belongs to the Greco-Ruthenian Rite. If it is not morally possible for the parties to go before the parish priest, the ordinary, or a delegated priest as mentioned above, or for one of these to come to the parties, the latter can contract a valid and lawful marriage merely before two witnesses; (a) if there is danger (Ne Temere said "imminent danger") of death; no special reason is mentioned as necessary; formerly the marriage was allowed only to set consciences right or to legitimize offspring; and also (b) if there is no danger of death, but it is prudently judged—certainly is not needed—that the impossibility of having the proper assistant priest will last for a month (Ne Temere required this condition actually to have existed for a month). If any priest could be obtained in either of the cases just mentioned this should be done, though a neglect to do so would not affect the validity of the marriage.

These regulations bind (1) all Catholics of Latin Rite, Catholic here means all those who have been baptized in the Catholic Church, and all converts to Catholicism from heresy or schism, even if they fell away later, but it does not include the children of non-Catholic parents who may have been baptized in the Catholic Church, but have always been brought up outside of the Church; (2) all such Catholics marrying non-Catholics even where a dispensation has been obtained on account of difference in religion—under the Tridentine regime on the contrary the exemption of one party was communicated to the other; (3) all other Catholics who marry a Latin Catholic. In conclusion it may be well to add that all these restrictions do not apply to other Christian or non-Christian marriages.

Cleric (cf. C. E., IV-49).—Clerics should not, merely go frequently to confession but should make an examination of conscience, a meditation, a visit to the Blessed Sacrament, and recite the Rosary daily. In view of their mission they must not volunteer for military service, unless when this is done with the permission of their ordinary, in countries where the service is imposed on clerics, in order to finish their period of service the sooner; nor may they take any part in internal wars or public disturbances. A cleric in minor orders who volunteers for military service, except when he is duly authorized by the law or his ordinary, loses his clerical status thereby, he is dropped from the ranks of the clergy, also, if on his own authority he abandons the clerical dress and tonsure without just cause and after being warned by his ordinary remains recalcitrant for a month. Clerics even if not bound by the law of residence must not absent themselves from this diocese for a notable time without leave of the ordinary. They are forbidden when they assist at funerals to help to carry the body of any lay person whatsoever; they must assist at the customary processions of their churches, and are obliged to aid their parish priest in teaching catechism; they must not publish works on secular subjects or write for newspapers or periodicals, or edit them without the ordinary's consent. If a cleric is made trustee of property for pious purposes he must notify his ordinary and give him details of the property and its obligations. It is absolutely forbidden to compel any one to become a cleric and those who are guilty of such an offense incur thereby unreserved excommunication.

Clerics must not act as sureties or pledge property without their ordinary's consent. They must refrain entirely from whatever is unbecoming the clerical state, from exercising certain indecorous arts, from gambling, carrying arms without necessity, hunting, especially if it is noisy, entering drinking-houses and other such places, except in case of necessity or for a just cause approved by the local ordinary. They should avoid certain other things which are foreign to the clerical state: thus, they are not to practice medicine or surgery without permission of the Holy See, nor may they act as notaries or scriveners, except in ecclesiastical proceedings, or accept a public office which entails lay jurisdiction or administration; they must not engage in secular business or accept lay positions in which they should have to render a public accounting, unless the ordinary authorizes them; neither may they act as advocates or procurators in civil courts, unless in protection of their own or their church's interests, nor may they take part in secular criminal trials even by giving evidence, except in case of necessity, if the defendant would be liable to severe personal punishment. They must not seek or accept legislative rank, such as that of senator or deputy, without leave of the Holy See in places where a pontifical prohibition is in force, or in other places unless they have received the permission both of their own ordinary and of the ordinary of the place where the election is to be held. Finally, they are forbidden to be present at dances, pageants, and shows, where their presence would be unbecoming or would cause scandal, especially if they are held in public theaters.

Clermont (CLERMONT-FERRAND), DIOCESE OF (CLERMONTENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-53d), comprising the department of Puy-de-Dôme, France, suffragan of Bourges. Rt. Rev. Pierre-Marie Belmont, born in Lyons 1838, was appointed to this see 19 January, 1893, and filled it until his death, 19 March, 1921. He was succeeded by his auxiliary, the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Francisque Marnas, born in Lyons 1859, served as vicar general of Osaka, Japan, made an honorary chamberlain 1907, prothontary apostolic 1916, appointed titular Bishop of Sura and coadjutor, with right of succession, at Clermont, 10 March, 1919. Since 1894 the titular of this see has had the privilege of wearing the pallium. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 525,916 Catholics, of whom 65,386 are in Clermont-Ferrand proper, 5 first class parishes, 447 succursal parishes, and 175 vicariates formerly supported by the state.

Cleveland, DIOCESE OF (CLEVELANDENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-55a), comprises 8034 sq. miles in the State of Ohio, U. S. A., and is suffragan of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati. Almost a year after the death of Bishop Horstmann, 13 May, 1908, Mgr. John Patrick Farrelly, spiritual director of the American College in Rome, was consecrated his successor by Cardinal Gotti in the chapel of that college, on 1 May, 1909. His diocese was divided along the west line of Erie, Huron, and Richmond counties, separating sixteen counties to create the Diocese of Toledo, 15 April, 1910. The services of Rt. Rev. Joseph Mary Koudelka, who had been made auxiliary bishop for the Slavs in 1908, were transferred to the see of Milwaukee in 1911, and two years later he was named second bishop of Superior on 6 August, 1913.

Bishop Farrelly followed a deliberate rather than strenuous policy, and the benefit of his cautious statesmanship was felt only gradually. His influence, nevertheless, was progressive and profound. His artistic taste had something to do with the fact that the best architecture of the diocese, in churches, schools, and hospitals, belongs to his eleven years. His special pride was the Cathedral Latin School which he built himself in 1913, and which now accommodates 750 students. He made a larger use of native priests in bilingual congregations, reorganized the charities of the diocese under a clerical director, and availed himself of efficient lay co-operation in caring for dependents.

He relieved the Sisters of the odious task of begging alms for their charitable projects, and by the appointment of a superintendent for the primary schools aided them in bringing order into texts, curriculum and methods of instruction. Bishop Farrelly died at the age of sixty-five in Knoxville, Tennessee, on 12 February, 1921. He was succeeded on 16 June of the same year by Rt. Rev. Joseph Schrembs, transferred from Toledo, where he had served as first bishop of the new see from 11 August, 1911. Born in Ratisbon, Germany, in 1866, he studied under the Sulpicians in Montreal, was ordained in 1888 and incorporated into the diocese of Grand Rapids as rector of St. Mary's Church. After being named a prelate of the Holy See 25 January, 1906, he was appointed titular Bishop of Sophene and auxiliary at Grand Rapids 8 January, 1911.

In a polyglot population of half a million, drawn from sixteen different nationalities, the diocese has 329 secular priests, and 98 regulars with 50 lay brothers, besides 25 Brothers of Mary. The Sisters, distributed through 20 communities, count 1690 members. Of the 205 residential parishes, 147 have their own schools and teach the elementary branches to 56,349 pupils. The diocese has a seminary at Cleveland which, though now exclusively theological, has, by its nearness to the higher schools, drawn candidates with a steady increase. Of all the secular priests now in the diocese, two-fifths were ordained from the diocese under the administration of Bishop Farrelly. There are now 100 students for the priesthood, 58 in theology at Cleveland and most of the rest in philosophy at St. Bernard's, Rochester, New York. Twenty academies and high schools give secondary education to 1513 boys and 2959 girls. In addition there are 2 colleges for boys. For the service of the sick there are 8 hospitals with a total of 1300 beds; for dependents there are 7 asylums and 4 homes; for other charitable charges there are 3 refuges, 1 settlement house and 1 day nursery. In recent years the diocese lost three prominent members of its clergy by the deaths of Msgr. Houck, chancellor of the diocese for thirty-five years; Father Boff, seven times administrator of the diocese; and Father Moes, rector of the seminary for a number of years.

Clifton, DIOCESE OF (CLIFTONIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-58c), England, was left vacant for a long time upon the death of Bishop Burgess, second bishop of the diocese, owing to a controversy which was going on over the fate of the seminary of Prior Park, the crux of the infant diocese. During this period the administration of the diocese was given provisionally to Archbishop Errington, coadjutor to Cardinal Wiseman. After the closing of Prior Park in 1856 a new bishop was appointed in 1857, and the work of the diocese proceeded as usual. Prior Park was re-opened in 1867, but was finally closed in 1904 and is now the property of the Irish Christian Brothers, who use it for an industrial school. The present Bishop of Clifton, Rt. Rev. George Ambrose Burton, was consecrated 1 May, 1902. At the present time (1921) the diocese includes 42 parishes, 52 churches, 20 missionary stations, 1 abbey for men, 5 convents for men and 37 for women, 49 secular priests and 84 regulars; these latter include the Benedictines, Carmelites, Dominicans, Jesuits, and Franciscans. The Franciscans include both Observants and Conventuals.

There are 20 high schools, 35 elementary schools, 3 industrial schools, 10 homes, 1 reformatory school, and 13 hospitals. All the public institutions permit the ministry of Catholic priests and 20 of the elementary and 1 secondary school are aided by the government. The St. Vincent de Paul Society is organized among the laity.

Clogher, DIOCESE OF (CLOGHERIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-59d), in Ireland, suffragan of Armagh. This diocese includes almost all of Fermanagh, a large portion of Tyrone, and portions of Donegal, Louth and Cavan. The present incumbent is Rt. Rev. Patrick McKenna, born in Cerrigal, Truagh, 1868, professor of theology at Maynooth College, appointed 1 June, 1909, to succeed Rt. Rev. Richard Owens (d. 5 March, 1909). Various religious orders are established in this diocese, including the Passionist Fathers, Christian Brothers, Presentation Brothers, Brothers of St. Patrick, Brothers of the Christian Schools, Sisters of St. Louis and Sisters of Mercy. According to the latest census, collected in 1911, the total population of this territory numbers 151,730, and of this number 98,690 are Catholic. The 1922 statistics credit the diocese with 40 parishes, 38 parish priests, 3 administrators, 60 curates and other priests, 8 clergy in colleges, 87 churches, 4 colleges, 8 convents, 1 School of the Christian Brothers, 1 Presentation Monastery, 1 Patrician Monastery, and a diocesan seminary, besides a number of charitable institutions.

Cloister (cf. C. E., IV-60).—No one, whether male or female, old or young, except those mentioned below, may enter the enclosure of nuns having solemn vows, without leave of the Holy See; if they do, they and those admitting or introducing them incur excommunication reserved simply to the Holy See; clerics in addition are to be suspended temporarily by the ordinary. Children below the age of puberty, however, are exempt from all censures under the Code régime. Those who may go within the enclosure are (a) local ordinary or regular superior when engaged in visitation or other visitors delegated by them to inspect; they should, however, be accompanied by one or more clerics or religious men of mature age; (b) confessor, for the purpose of administering the sacraments to the sick or of assisting the dying; (c) reigning sovereigns, their wives and suite; also cardinals; (d) finally, mother superiors should get at least habitual approbation from the local ordinary to allow physicians, surgeons, and workmen to enter when they are needed; in case of urgency, the ordinary's approbation may be presumed. No professed nun may go outside the enclosure, even for a short time, without a special indult of the Holy See, except in imminent danger of death or other very grave evil, recognized in writing as such by the local ordinary if time permits. The local ordinary is to see that the regulations concerning the enclosure are observed, even in the case of convents under the direction of regulars, and may punish all delinquents even if they are regulars; the regular superior may, too, punish the nuns and his own subjects if the regulations are violated.

The enclosure should be observed in all houses belonging to religious congregations, whether pontifical or diocesan; no person of the other sex be admitted, except those mentioned above, or others when the superior sees a just and reasonable cause for so doing. The extent of the enclosure is not fixed by the Code. If there are boarding students in the houses of these congregations or of an institute of male regulars, at least a part of the building should, if possible, be marked off as enclosed. Plans outside of the enclosure reserved for extern or intern pupils, or for works proper to the institute, must not be entered by persons of the other sex, except for a just cause and with the superior's permission. The bishop in particular cases and for grave reasons may enforce the observance of this enclosure by censures, except in the case of exempt regular clerics. Except when lawfully engaged in seeking alms, superiors may not allow their subjects to dwell outside their own houses, unless for a just grave reason and for as short a time as possible and in accordance with their rule; if the absence exceeds six months the leave of the Holy See is required, except when the religious is pursuing a course of studies.

Clonfert, DIOCESE OF (CLONFERTENSIS, Irish CLAUIN-FEARTA BRENAINN; cf. C. E., IV-64d), in the province of Tuam, Ireland, suffragan of Tuam. This diocese includes portions of Galway, Roscommon, and King's County, and is at present (1922) under the administration of Rt. Rev. Thomas O'Doherty, consecrated 14 September, 1919, to succeed Most Rev. Thomas P. Gilmartin, who filled this see from 1910 until his promotion to the Archdiocese of Tuam, 9 July, 1918.

During the World War four priests of this diocese served as military chaplains, one of whom remained with the army and another, having lost a limb, is serving as a professor of theology in Manly College, Australia. Large members of the laity, well over a thousand, joined the fighting forces, and many of them were killed. By present statistics the diocese numbers a Catholic population of 40,000, all Irish, 24 parishes, 46 churches, 1 monastery for men and 1 for women, 50 secular priests, 5 convents of the Sisters of Mercy, 1 seminary, 80 seminarians, 2 high schools, taught by the Sisters, with 60 girl students, 2 technical schools with 6 teachers and 70 pupils, 85 elementary schools with 170 teachers and 6,800 pupils, 2 industrial schools, under the Sisters, with 60 pupils, 1 home for aged and infirm with 450 inmates, and 1 asylum for Galway and Roscommon Counties with 1,400 inmates. The technical and industrial schools receive financial aid from the government. The Pia Unio Cleri and the Father Matthew Union are established among the clergy, and the Sacred Heart and Holy Family Sodalties, and temperance societies among the laity.

Cloyne, DIOCESE OF (CLOYNENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-72c), comprising a large portion of County Cork, Ireland, is suffragan of Cashel. This see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Robert Brown, born in Charleville, 1844, appointed 26 June, 1894. On 24 August, 1919, the new Cathedral of St. Colman was consecrated by Cardinal Logue in the presence of 70,000 people, and a set of chimes with forty bells was afterwards installed. The Presentation, de la Salle, Patrician and Irish Christian Brothers are established in this diocese, as well as the Presentation nuns, Sisters of Mercy, Loreto Sisters, Sisters of Charity, Sisters of the Little Company of Mary, Bon Secours Sisters, and Poor Servants of the Mother of God. According to the 1911 census the Catholic population of the diocese counts 128,488, non-Catholics 9,426. In 1920 there were 44 parish priests, 3 administrators, 78 curates, 7 chaplains, 5 priests at St. Colman's College, 47 parishes, 103 parochial and district churches, 19 convents with 410 members in the communities, and 8 schools conducted by Christian Brothers, besides orphanages, industrial schools and homes.

Cochabamba, DIOCESE OF (COCHABAMBENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-75c), in Bolivia, South America, suffragan of La Plata. After the death of Rt. Rev.

Jacinto Anaya, appointed 18 August, 1897, d. 17 December, 1915, this see was vacant for a year before the appointment of the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Luigi Francesco Pierini, b. at Bagnaia 1871, appointed 20 February, 1918. In 1914 this diocese was solemnly united with the Eucharistic Congress of Lourdes, and the people took part in the devotions with great fervor. During recent years it lost a prominent member by the death of Dr. Mariano Baptista, ex-President of the Republic, founder of the Catholic Union, and zealous defender of the Catholic institutions.

By latest (1922) statistics the population of the diocese numbers 550,000, made up of Spanish-Americans and half-breeds, about 60% of the total population being Indians, 30% half-breeds, and 10% whites. There are 53 parishes, 74 churches, 100 public chapels, 1 mission, 3 monasteries of women, 4 convents of men, 129 secular and 32 regular clergy, 6 Brothers, 95 Sisters, 1 seminary, 22 seminarians, 2 colleges for boys with 6 teachers and 240 students, 1 college of women with 9 teachers and 340 students, 1 asylum and 1 hospital. All the state colleges and charitable institutions permit the priests to minister in them, and the seminary, one college and the orphanage receive state aid. The Apostolic Union is organized among the clergy, and a Catholic Center, and the Knights of the Sacred Heart among the laity. Two periodicals, "Bolivia Eclesiastico" and "Informacion Catolica," are published.

Cochin, DENYS-MARIE-PIERRE-AUGUSTIN, Baron, statesman and author, b. at Paris on 1 September, 1851; d. there on 24 March, 1922. He was the son of Pierre-Susana-Augustin Cochin, member of the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, and Adelinc, daughter of Count Benoist d'Azy. He belonged to one of the oldest known Paris families, one of his ancestors having been an alderman there in the days of St. Louis, King of France, while another held a similar position under Francis II in 1562. His father was elected Préfet of the Seine-et-Oise in 1871. Denys Cochin was studying at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, with Brunetière, Becquerel, and Paul Bourget, when the war of 1870 broke out. He fought with the Eighth Lancers, taking part in Bourbaki's campaign, being twice wounded, and receiving the médaille militaire for bravery. On being mustered out of the army he continued his studies, graduating in law and science. He then entered the diplomatic service and for a time was an attaché at the Embassy in London, but soon he returned to his scientific studies and for several years carried out research work under Pasteur. In 1878 he engaged in politics, and was elected to the municipal council of Paris. True to the religious spirit of his family he protested vigorously against the secularization of the schools and hospitals, particularly against the violation of the religious provisions in the charter of the Hôpital Cochin which was established in the eighteenth century by his great-uncle, Abbé Jacques-Denys Cochin. At a later period he was elected to the French Chamber, where, distinguished by his powers of oratory, he vigorously opposed the anti-Catholic policy of Combes and Waldeck-Rousseau. When, after the separation, the Government expelled the Archbishop of Paris from his palace, Denys Cochin placed his magnificent residence in the rue de Babylone at the disposal of Cardinal Richard. M. Cochin was a recognized authority on Near-Eastern questions, and was an ardent pleader on behalf of the Armenians and Greeks. In 1914, when the French Government withdrew from Paris to Bordeaux, he remained behind to direct the mobilization of the chemical industries in the capital. He was an active promoter of the Union Sacrée during the war, being the official representative of the Catholics, and he played no small part in bringing about the reconciliation of France and the Holy See. In 1911 he was elected to the French Academy. Among his writings may be mentioned "L'Evolution et la Vie" (1885) and "Le Monde extérieur" (1895), crowned by the academy, "Contre les Barbares" (1899), "L'Esprit nouveau" (1900), and "Ententes et ruptures" (1905). With his brother Henri-Denys (b. 1854 at Paris), who is a distinguished lawyer, politician, and authority on Italian poetry and art, he published several of the works of his father (b. at Paris 1823; d. at Versailles 1872), whose "Abolition de l'esclavage" (1861) was crowned by the academy.

Cochin, DIOCESE OF (COCINENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-76c), in India, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Goa. It is at present (1921) under the administration of Rt. Rev. José Bento Martin Ribeiro, b. at Laurical do Campas, Portugal, 22 August, 1859, professor at the College of Missions, Portugal, appointed bishop 28 February, 1909, consecrated 15 August of the same year. He succeeded Rt. Rev. Matheus d'Oliveira Xavier, who was promoted to the archdiocese of Goa.

At present time (1921) the population of this diocese is approximately 450,000, of whom 108,700 are Catholics, and the yearly conversions average about 300. The religious communities established are: the Society of Jesus with 10 priests and 3 brothers, the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary with a novitiate for Indian nuns with 9 religious and 17 novices, Canossian Sisters with 20 religious. There are: 42 parishes, 77 churches and chapels, 63 secular clergy, 62 of whom are natives, 11 regulars (10 Jesuits and 1 Carmelite), a preparatory seminary conducted by the Jesuits at Alleppy with 26 students, besides 14 seminarians from this diocese who are studying in higher seminaries in other parts of India, 2 high schools for boys with 1,780 pupils, 2 for girls under the Canossian Sisters with 438 pupils, 10 Anglo-vernacular parochial schools with 1,156 pupils, 86 vernacular parochial schools with 7,065 pupils.

The charitable institutions comprise: 2 orphanages for girls with 124 orphans, 1 for boys with 15 orphans, 2 industrial schools for girls with 88 pupils, 2 catechumenates and a printing office. There are 66 different confraternities established throughout the diocese, 3 congregations of the Third Order of St. Francis, 1 Association of Holy Family, 2 conferences of St. Vincent de Paul, 2 societies for the relief of the souls in purgatory, 15 sodalities of the children of Mary, 1 Misericordia Confraternity. The Apostleship of Prayer and the Association of Christian Doctrine are established in all the parishes and the confraternity of Mount Carmel in almost all of them.

Cochin China, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (COCINCINÆ ORIENTALIS; cf. C. E., VII-777d), one of the three ecclesiastical divisions of the French possession of this name in Indo-China. By a decree of 1 July, 1907, the most northerly province of this vicariate, the region of Phan-thiet, was united to the vicariate apostolic of Western Cochin China because of the difficulty the bishop had in visiting it. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Damien Grangeon, of the Foreign Missions of Paris, b. in Gelles, France, 1857, ordained 1883, appointed 21 March, 1902, titular Bishop of Utina. He was assisted by Rt. Rev. Constante-Philomène Yeanningros, his coadjutor, titular Bishop of Havara from 1912 until his death, 21 March, 1921.

During the World War 18 missionaries were mobilized from the vicariate, some of whom returned to France, others remaining here; two were decorated with the croix de guerre, and many won other citations. The (1922) statistics credit this territory with a total population of 2,800,000, of whom 68,880 are Catholics (Annamites and Bahnar natives). The vicariate comprises 56 parishes, 489 churches, 518 missions, 121 secular priests, 3 brothers, 8 European and 260 native sisters, 2 seminaries, 132 seminarians, 82 elementary schools with 1,480 pupils, 2 schools of catechists with 169 pupils, 168 catechists in employment, 1 hospital, and 2 printing presses. A monthly bulletin is published.

Cochin China, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (COCINCINNÆ SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., VII-777d), comprising part of the district of this name in Indo-China. It is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Eugene-Marie-Joseph Allys, b. in Paimpont, France, 1852, ordained 1875, appointed titular Bishop of Phacusa and vicar apostolic, 30 January, 1908. In recognition of his work in this mission, Bishop Allys was decorated Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, 5 February, 1921, and on 16 April of the same year the Emperor of Annam conferred on him the decoration of Kim-Khanh hors classe in acknowledgment of the work the bishop had been doing in the kingdom of Annam for over forty years. This honor was likewise recently conferred on Marshal Joffre. Among the religious orders represented in this territory are: Brothers of the Christian Schools, with 10 European and 18 native members; Sisters of St. Paul with 15 members, conducting schools, hospitals and orphanages; and Carmelites with 11 members. Besides these must be counted 419 native women who live under a common rule, but up to the present time have not taken any vows. They teach in the parochial schools, baptize dying children, and take part in other good works; these women are of great assistance in the mission.

The statistics published for this vicariate (1920-21) credit it with a Catholic population of 66,829; 26 quasi-parishes for Europeans and 48 for natives, 306 mission stations, 36 missionaries and 79 native priests, an upper seminary with 34 students, a lower seminary with 78 students, 42 schools for boys with 2,080 pupils, 37 schools for girls with 1,683 pupils, 4 orphanages with 144 boys and 149 girls, and 2 hospitals, one of which cares of lepers. The following statistics show the spiritual progress of the mission: Baptisms of children of Christian parents, 1,850; of pagan children, 1,735; of catechumens, 1,447; annual confessions, 39,269; annual communions, 38,342; communions of devotion, 464,925; confirmations, 2,478; viaticums, 708; extreme unctions, 757.

Cochin China, WESTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (COCINCINNÆ OCCIDENTALIS; cf. C. E., VII-777c), one of the ecclesiastical divisions of Cochin China in Indo-China. Entrusted to the Foreign Missions of Paris, it is at present (1922) under the administration of Rt. Rev. Victor-Charles Juinton, b. in Carelles 1866, ordained 1899, appointed titular Bishop of Laranda and coadjutor to the vicar 12 December, 1912, succeeding as vicar apostolic upon the death of Rt. Rev. Lucien-Emile Mossard, 12 February, 1920.

During the World War two of the missionaries and about ten Catholic laymen of the vicariate died on the battlefield. In 1911 a new residence for the bishop was constructed at Saigon, and in 1913, on 16 April, the five hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the seminary was celebrated. This mission lost one of its greatest benefactors through the recent death of Madame Lâphab Dab.

By latest statistics (1921) this territory counts a Catholic population of 78,672, comprising about 6,000 French, 71,172 Annamites, 800 Indians, and 709 Chinese. These Catholics are divided among 72 parishes and 162 missions, served through 234 churches, 1 monastery of women, 1 convent of men, 5 of women, 129 secular priests, of whom 92 are natives, 37 catechists, 41 Brothers of the Christian Schools, 442 Sisters, 2 seminaries, 117 seminarians, 2 secondary schools of boys with 55 teachers and 1,409 pupils, 7 secondary schools for girls with 28 teachers and 346 pupils, 1 normal school with 2 teachers and 20 pupils, 199 elementary schools with 219 teachers and 10,003 pupils, and 1 industrial school with 1 teacher and 19 pupils. Among the charitable institutions established are: 1 home for the aged with 49 old men, 12 hospitals in which 15,341 cases were treated (1920-21), and 24 nurseries caring for 4,486 baptized children. The priests are allowed to minister in all the government hospitals, and the children in the schools attend catechism classes in their parishes. A society of apostolic works is organized among the clergy, and mutual aid societies are established in almost all the parishes for the laity. The religious orders represented in this territory include: Christian Brothers, Carmelite Sisters, Sisters of St. Paul, and Native Sisters. A press for the printing of religious literature has been founded, and a "Semaine Religieuse" is published in Annamite.

The progress which is being made in this mission is best shown by the following statistics which were published for the year (1920-21): Baptisms of adults, 1,244 (714 dying); baptisms of children of Christian parents, 2,781; baptisms of pagan children, 4,487; confirmations, 2,087; annual confessions, 42,784; confessions repeated, 300,936; Easter communions, 42,260; communions of devotion, 701,769; extreme unctions, 1,242; ordinations, 2 deacons, 2 priests, 1 subdeacon, 5 exorcists, 5 lectors and 5 porters.

Code of Canon Law (cf. C. E., IX-56d).—For many centuries a multitude of ecclesiastical laws had been enacted, not a few of which had in the course of time been abrogated or had fallen into desuetude, while others had become either difficult to enforce or less useful for the common good. These laws, moreover, were to be found only in incomplete scattered compilations, so that many of them were unknown even to the learned. Pius X, realizing how helpful it would be for the restoration and permanency of Church discipline to end this inconvenience, decided in March, 1904, to codify the ecclesiastical laws, abolishing obsolete decrees, adapting others to the needs of the age, and enacting new ones where expedient. The archbishops of the entire world were directed to confer with their suffragans and the other ordinaries who are obliged to assist at provincial synods and to inform the Holy See what modifications and corrections of the laws they deemed especially necessary. The work was carried out under the direction of Cardinal Gasparri, and a commission of cardinals was appointed to examine, modify, and correct the proposed canons. The five original members of the commission were Cardinals Ferrata, Gennari, Cavicchioni, Vives y Tuto, and Cavagnis, with Cardinal Gasparri as ponens; these five scholars having died during the course of the undertaking their work was continued by Cardinals Vincenzo Vannutelli, de Lai, Martinelli, Pompili, Bisleti, Van Rossum, Giustini and Lega. A copy of the Code as completed and corrected was sent before its promulgation to all the bishops and to those superiors of religious orders who are legitimately invited to oecumenical councils, in order that they might freely express their views in regard to the canons. After the death of Pius X the completed work was ratified, approved, and sanctioned by His Holiness Pope Benedict XV, as announced by his Bull "Providentissima Mater Ecclesia" (27 May, 1917), which decreed that the prescriptions of the Code should have the force of law from Pentecost, 19 May, 1918. The work, which was published by the Vatican Press, opens with the Bull of promulgation, "Providentissima Mater Ecclesia," followed by the Profession of Faith of Pius V, with the addition of Pius IX. Then begins the Code proper, comprising 2,414 canons, occupying 456 octavo pages; the canons are followed by reprints of eight papal constitutions dealing with Church government during a vacancy and with papal elections, examinations for vacant parishes, solicitation, and marriages in the Indies, Brazil, and Ethiopia, and by a short general index, since supplemented by a detailed alphabetical index filling sixty-three octavo pages. This second index, published as an appendix to the "Acta Apostolicæ Sedis," IX, part 2, is preceded by a list of corrigenda and addenda signed by Cardinal Gasparri, 17 October, 1917, and by a Motu Proprio of Benedict XV, dated 15 September, 1917, appointing a commission for the exclusive authoritative interpretation of the canons of the Code and for the compilation and addition of any provisions that in the course of time might be found necessary. In 1918 a new edition was published with a preface giving a summary account of earlier canonical collections and a history of the compilation of the new Code. Each page of the text of the canons is provided with footnotes indicating the sources from which the different canons were derived; the notes, like the analytical index and the preface, are the work of His Eminence Cardinal Gasparri.

The Code is divided into five books. The first book (can. 1-86) deals with certain general regulations, the relation of the Code to the Oriental Church, to concordats, to the liturgy, to custom, to statutory law, and to privileges. The second book (can. 87-725) treats of persons: clerics, religious, and laics; the third book (can. 726-1551) of things: sacraments, sacred places, and times, Divine service, teaching authority of the Church, benefices and church property; the fourth book (can. 1552-2195) with ecclesiastical procedure: trials, beatifications and canonizations, special proceedings against clerics; and the fifth book (can. 2195-2414) with crimes, punishments, and special offenses.

Among the commentaries or treatises on the new legislation are: Blat, "Commentarium textus" (Rome, 1919-); Leitner, "Handb. des kath. Kirchenrechts" (1919); Maroto, "Institutiones juris Canon" (Madrid, 1921); Noval, "Commentarium Codicis: de Processibus" (Turin, 1920); Cappello, "Tractatus canonico-moralis de sacramentis" (Turin, 1921); Sole, "De delictis et pœnis" (Rome, 1920); Vermeersch-Creusen, "Epitome juris canonici" (Malines, 1921); and in English, Augustine "Commentary" (in 6 vols., 1918-); Ayrinhac "Marriage Legislation" (1919), and "Penal Legislation" (1920); Petrovits, "On Matrimony" (1921); Papi, "Religious Profession."

Coimbatore, DIOCESE OF (COIMBATURENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-95a), in the district of the same name in Madras, British India, suffragan of Pondicherry. This diocese, which counts a Catholic population of 43,792 out of a total population of 2,796,000, is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris. The present (1922) bishop is Rt. Rev. Augustin Roy, born in the diocese of Poitiers 1863, ordained 1888, appointed 12 February, 1904. The Brothers of St. Patrick, Indian Brothers of the Sacred Heart, Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, Sisters of St. Joseph of Tarbes and Indian Nuns of the Presentation Order are established here. By latest statistics this mission is served by 31 European priests, of whom 4 are in France, and 23 Indian priests, 1 seminary, 126 churches and chapels, 74 elementary schools and an orphanage and industrial school.

Coimbra, DIOCESE OF (CONIMBRIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-95b), in the province of Beira, Portugal, suffragan of Braga. This see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Manuel-Aloys Coelho da Silva, born in Bustelo, Portugal, 1859, appointed 31 October, 1914, to succeed Rt. Rev. Manuel Corrêa, died 19 November, 1913. The bishop of this see bears the title of Count of Arganil. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Antonio Antunes, appointed titular Bishop of Rhittymna 12 September, 1919. The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 539,836 Catholics, divided among 319 parishes.

Coira, DIOCESE OF. See CHUR.

Coira, DIOCESE OF. See CHUR.

Colima, DIOCESE OF (COLIMENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-100c), comprising the state of the same name and part of the State of Jalisco, in Mexico, suffragan of Guadalajara. This diocese covers an area of 3,386 sq. miles, and in 1920 counted a population of 72,500 divided among 31 parishes and vicariates. The present incumbent is Rt. Rev. José Amador Velasco, born in this diocese 1856, served as vicar general of the diocese, appointed 17 July, 1902.

Collation (cf. C. E., II-475).—Benefices may be granted by cardinals in their own titles or deaconries, but not by vicar-generals. Besides all consistorial benefices and all dignities of cathedral or collegiate churches, the following are reserved to the Holy See (even during a vacancy): (a) all benefices rendered vacant by the death, promotion, renunciation or transfer of cardinals, papal legates, higher officials of the Sacred Congregations, tribunals, and offices of the Roman Curia, and of those who are members, even honorary, of the papal family at the time of vacating the benefice; (b) which, though founded outside of the Roman Curia, have become vacant by the death of the beneficiary in Rome; (c) which have been invalidly conferred owing to simony; (d) benefices which the pope has taken under control when he has personally or by proxy declared the election void or forbidden the electors to hold it, or accepted the renunciation, or promoted or transferred the beneficiary or deprived him of the benefice, or given the benefice in commendam. If an ordinary fails to grant a benefice within six months after learning of the vacancy—except when he judges it prudent under special circumstances not to fill a parochial benefice—the right of collation devolves on the Holy See.

No one can grant a benefice to himself; all benefices must be granted for the lifetime of the holder, unless the terms of the foundation, or immemorial custom, or a special indult provides otherwise. Clerics or laymen knowingly presenting or nominating an unworthy person lose by the very fact the right of nomination or presentation for that time, and under analogous circumstances a college loses temporarily its right of electing; those guilty of simony in connection with the granting of benefices, lose in consequence thereof their right of election, presentation, or nomination, and incur excommunication and, if they are clerics, suspension. Anyone who assumes an ecclesiastical benefice, office, or dignity on his own authority, or who takes possession of or administers a benefice or office before he receives the necessary letters and show them to the proper authorities, incurs canonical disability and is to be punished suitably by the ordinary; moreover, he must give up the benefice, office, or dignity; any chapter or body admitting such individuals before they exhibit their letters is by the very fact deprived of the right of election, nomination, or presentation, during the pleasure of the Holy See; finally, anyone accepting an office, benefice, or dignity not legally vacant and allowing himself to be inducted becomes by that fact incapable of acquiring it later and should be suitably punished.

Colle di Val d'Elsa (COLLIS HETRUSCUS), DIOCESE OF (COLLENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-107a), in the province of Siena, Tuscany, suffragan of Florence. Rt. Rev. Massimiliano Novelli, appointed to this see 22 June, 1903, retired in 1921 and was succeeded by the present incumbent. Rt. Rev. Andrea Giovanni Masera, transferred to this see 13 June, 1921. Born in the diocese of Turin, 1867, he served as vicar general and chancellor of Fossano and Chaplain to Princess Clotilda, was appointed Bishop of Biella 19 August, 1906, transferred to the titular see of Himeria 2 December, 1912, and made auxiliary at Sabina, 27 June, 1914, where he served until his transfer. From February to October, 1921, he acted as administrator of the diocese of Leghorn. In 1920 this diocese counted a Catholic population of 50,200, 72 parishes, 605 secular and 20 regular priests, 35 seminarians, 14 Brothers, 10 Sisters, and 117 churches or chapels.

College (cf. C. E., IV-111).—Unless otherwise provided by common law or the statutes, the decision of a collegiate body is given by a majority vote; if two scrutines fail to give a majority, a plurality suffices in the third voting; but if the voting is then equal, the president has a deciding vote, or in case of elections if he does not wish to exercise it the candidate who is senior in orders, or by first profession, or age, is to be considered elected. Decisions of collegiate moral persons which affect the members as individuals require the approval of all. Colleges like other moral personalities are by nature perpetual; they become extinct, however, if they are suppressed by lawful authority or if they have been one hundred years out of existence.

Cologne, ARCHDIOCESE OF (COLONIENSIS; cf. C. E., 117d), in Germany. This see was filled by His Eminence Anthony Cardinal Fischer, from 6 November, 1902, until his death, 30 July, 1912, when he was succeeded by His Eminence Cardinal von Hartmann, appointed 12 December, 1912, d. 11 November, 1919. (See HARTMANN.) The present incumbent, His Eminence Charles Cardinal Schulte, was appointed his successor. Born in Valbert, 14 September, 1871, he studied at Essen and was a pupil of Doctor, later Cardinal, Fischer, ordained 22 March, 1895, appointed Bishop of Paderborn 30 November, 1909, vicar Apostolic of Anhalt 12 November, 1910, promoted 8 March, 1920, named president of the Union of German Clergy for the Missions 3 December, 1920, and created Cardinal-priest 7 March, 1921. He is assisted by two auxiliaries, Rt. Rev. Franz Rodolph Bornewasser, titular Bishop of Bida, appointed 23 April, 1921, and Rt. Rev. Peter Joseph Lausberg, titular Bishop of Thyatira, appointed 1 May, 1914.

During the World War the city of Cologne suffered severely from aero attacks, and since December, 1918, it has been the headquarters of the British army of occupation. By the incorporation of neighboring towns and villages (the largest of which is Mulheim) the limits of the city have been greatly extended in recent years, and it now covers a territory of 19,726 hectares, and includes a population of 663,935, of whom 533,680 are Catholics. The metropolitan chapter includes a provost and dean, 10 numery and 4 honorary canons, and 10 assistant priests; the enlarged city counts 64 parishes and many churches, chapels and convents of religious orders. By a Letter of His Holiness, Benedict XV, 29 June, 1921, Cardinal Schulte was authorized to found, in Cologne, an Institute of Catholic Philosophy. The same year, the newly erected diocese of Eupen-Malmedy (see Liège) took from the archdiocese 42 parishes, 61,000 Catholics, and 65 diocesan priests.

A most important portion of the archdiocese is the Prussian administrative district of Aachen (Aix-la-Chapelle), which was a diocese for a short period under the reign of Napoleon I, but was suppressed in 1821. However, in consideration of the great desire of the people of the district to have it erected into a diocese the archbishop ordered his auxiliary, Bishop Bornewasser, to reside here, 29 May, 1921. He is Provost of the collegiate chapter, founded by Charlemagne in 804, which consists of six numery and four honorary canons.

According to the latest (1922) statistics the Archdiocese of Cologne comprises 52 deaneries, divided into 1,003 parishes, of which 7 were newly erected in 1921. The secular priests number 2,254, of whom 1,872 are working in parishes, 37 in diocesan administration, 40 in diocesan institutes, 16 as professors of Catholic theology, in the University of Bonn, 17 as officers of ecclesiastical organizations, 12 as prison chaplains, 4 as reformatory chaplains, and 201 as instructors in high schools; the regular clergy number 450. The various educational institutions include: the archiepiscopal seminary, where ecclesiastical candidates receive their final training, which counted 132 students in 1921; 2 theological colleges in Bonn with 578 students, 3 colleges in Neuss, Munstereifel and Rheinbach with 225 students, the greater number of whom plan to enter the priesthood, 104 high schools for boys, 69 for girls, 6 intermediate schools, 10 training schools for teachers and 12 sectors of small secondary schools.

Colombia (cf. C. E., IV-121d).—The area of the republic is estimated at about 440,846 sq. miles. According to the census of 1918 the population included 2,745,748 males, 2,941,307 females exclusive of 160,436 Indians, a total of 5,847,491. The capital, Bogota, has 143,994 inhabitants; the chief commercial towns are Barranquilla (66,107), Manizales (39,643), Cartagena (51,382), Medellin (79,146), Cali (45,524), Bucaramanga (25,919).

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Agriculture.—Coffee is the principal export of Colombia, the production having doubled since 1906. In 1918 it was 1,102,677 sacks; the estimate for 1919 was 1,300,000 sacks. About 67 per cent of the coffee exported from Colombia goes to the United States. The cotton area in 1918 was 24,000 acres; production, 2,750,000 pounds. The value of the tobacco exported in 1918 was $1,004,692. The cultivation of rice on a large scale was first attempted in 1918-19.

Manufacturing.—The Panama hat industry is making great strides; some 86 per cent of the hats manufactured are sent to the United States. The total number of factories in Colombia in 1915 was 121, in which $12,406,000 was invested. The principal manufacturing centers are Bogota, Medellin, Barranquilla, and Cartagena. The petroleum industry has become of great prospective importance.

Commerce.—Colombia's foreign trade for 1918 included imports valued at $22,034,004 (Colombian dollars); exports, $37,728,559. In 1918 56.72% of the imports were from Great Britain; of the exports, 82.5% ($31,134,000) went to that country. The United States received 92% of all the exports in 1916, and furnished 56% of the imports. At Cartagena in 1918 there entered 263 vessels of 428,625 tons; of these 110 of 320,971 tons were American, and 26 of 66,242 tons were British. In 1920 there were 15 lines of railway (10 national and 5 British companies), with a total mileage of 891 miles. The roads of Colombia are generally simple mule tracks, but are being improved for the use of automobiles. Much of the inland traffic is by river; the work of canalizing the lower and upper Magdalena is being carried on. This river is navigable for 900 miles, steamers ascending as far as La Dorada, 592 miles from Barranquilla. In July, 1920, there were 13,640 miles of government telegraph lines. At the end of 1920 the consolidated debt amounted to $2,848,260, and the floating debt to $10,840,654. The budget estimates for the same year were: revenue, $23,855,253; expenditures, $27,792,581. The main sources of revenue, were the customs and next, the salt tax. The leading items of expenditure were for the Department of the Interior and the national debt service. The following items were allowed in January, 1919:

Public instruction	$660,662
Charitable institutions	149,500
Hospital of San Juan de Dios	269,592
Various ecclesiastical foundations	854,048
Non-religious foundations	436,680

The redemption of paper currency and the restoration of metallic money has been undertaken by the Government. A special law has fixed the rate of exchange between the paper and gold at 10,000 per cent, making the value of the paper pesos equal to one cent gold. The monetary unit is a gold dollar equal to one-fifth of a pound sterling or $0.97 United States money. The first gold was coined in 1913 and in 1916 a law allowed the Government to coin gold pieces in the mints of Bogota and Medellin free of charge. The silver coins minted before 1911 ceased to be legal tender on 1 May, 1918.

EDUCATION.—According to law, attendance in the public school is gratuitous, but not compulsory. The school system is under the supervision of the Minister of Public Instruction and the national Government furnishes the textbooks, supplies, and appliances, while the departments and municipalities furnish the buildings and pay the teachers. Education is divided into primary, secondary, professional, artistic, and industrial. In 1919 there were 5,236 primary schools with 32,696 pupils, 75 secondary schools with 6,716 pupils, 24 professional schools with 2,317 pupils, and 24 art and trade schools with 1,203 pupils. In 1920 there were altogether 4,422 public and private elementary schools with 333,658 pupils; also 27 normal schools with 1,359 pupils. The universities of Medellin, Cartagena, Popayan and Pasto had an attendance of 2,488 in 1917. In 1919 the State spent 1,096,810 pesos. A university for women has been opened. In 1918 the pupils in the public schools of the municipality of Medellin included 17.1% of the population, which, compared with 19.65% in the United States, speaks very favorably for primary education in this progressive district of Colombia. In 1918, 7.31% throughout the Department of Antioquia were attending school, as compared with an average of only 3% for the rest of the country outside the Departments of Caldas and El Valle.

GOVERNMENT.—At present there are 14 departments, 2 "intendencias," and 7 commissaries. The legislative power rests with a Congress of two Houses, called the Senate and House of Representatives. The Senate contains 34 senators elected for 4 years indirectly by electors chosen for the purpose. The House of Representatives consists of 92 members elected by the people in 17 electoral circumscriptions (one for every 50,000 of population). Senators are elected for 4 years, one for every 120,000 inhabitants; representatives for 2 years. The President is elected by direct vote of the people for a term of 4 years and has two substitutes (designados), a first and second, elected annually by Congress to succeed the President respectively, in case of his absence, death, or inability to serve. There is no vice-president. Appointed by the President and freely removable by him are the Ministers of War, Finance, Foreign Affairs, Public Instruction, Treasury, Agriculture, and Commerce and Public Works. The Supreme Court judges (9) are elected for five years, four by the Senate, five by the House. General Pedro Nel Aspinosa was elected President in February, 1922. The Presidents since 1910 have been Señor Carlos E. Restrepo (1910-1914), Don José Vicente Concha (1914-18), and Señor Marco Fidel Suarez (1918-22).

ARMY AND NAVY.—There is compulsory military service for a year and a half or a year. The permanent army of Colombia consists of about 6,000 men. The President is, however, authorized to increase this number to 20,000 men in case of public necessity. The total war strength of the armed force, including trained reserves, is estimated at 120,000.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—In March, 1908, the prefectures apostolic of Piani di S. Martino and Intendencia Oriental were united and erected into a vicariate. On 28 April, 1908, the prefecture apostolic of Chaco was erected, and entrusted to the care of the Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. The vicariate apostolic of Casanare was divided in 1915, and the Prefecture of Arauca formed from that part of its northern territory west of the Casanare River. In the same year the Diocese of Antioquia was dismembered, the southern portion being erected into the Diocese of Jerico. In 1917 the latter was reunited aeque principaliter to Antioquia and the Diocese of Santa Rosa de Osos erected from territory in the northeastern part of Antioquia. The mission of Uraba became a prefecture in June, 1917, and was put in charge of the Discalced Carmelites. For Catholic statistics see articles on subjects mentioned above; BOGOTA, ARCHDIOCESE OF; CARTAGENA, ARCHDIOCESE OF; MEDELLIN, ARCHDIOCESE OF; POPAYAN, ARCHDIOCESE OF; and their suffragans.

On August, 1920, the Republic of Colombia by legal enactment was solemnly consecrated to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, the first nation to give this public testimony of faith. The ceremony took place in the National Temple, Bogota, in presence of the President, members of his cabinet, the Auxiliary Bishop of Bogota, the auditor of the Apostolic Nunciature and many other important ecclesiastical and civil personages. Colombia has an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary accredited to the Holy See.

RECENT HISTORY.—In 1903 Colombia rejected the Hay-Herrán treaty, a convention made between the United States and Colombia, for the construction of a ship canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The French Company, which in 1894 succeeded the French Panama Company, formed in 1881, offered to sell all its property and rights to the United States for $40,000,000. The rejection of this treaty in 1903 was immediately followed by the secession of Panama, which on 3 November, 1903, proclaimed its independence and imprisoned all the Colombian army and navy officials in the principal city. The new provisional government of Panama immediately opened negotiations with the United States. In 1909 there was an attempt to negotiate a treaty between Colombia, the United States and Panama, exonerating the United States and Panama from any charge of injustice to Colombia. This Colombia rejected also, claiming that she had isthmian rights in Panama and demanding the payment of $20,000,000 from the United States for Colombia's rights in the Panama railway. Finally, on 6 April, 1914, Colombia signed a treaty with the United States at Bogota, agreeing to recognize the independence of Panama and receiving in return $25,000,000 and certain rights in the Panama Canal Zone. This treaty, after a long delay, was ratified by the United States Senate on 20 April, 1921.

A new fiscal code was published on 4 March, 1913, and a penal colony was established in Magdalena. In 1915 a gold basis was adopted in place of the silver standard which had been used for twenty-one years. During the war the falling off of customs receipts wrought great havoc with the nation's finances, and the President with the extraordinary powers voted him doubled the duty of stamped paper, doubled the stamp tax, decreed coinage of 9,000,000 pesos in silver, reduced the salaries of the officials of the country, and taxed the imports of gold and valuable wood.

Colombo, ARCHDIOCESE OF (COLUMBENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-124b), comprises two of the nine ecclesiastical provinces of the Island of Ceylon, and is entrusted to the Oblates of Mary Immaculate. It has as its suffragans the dioceses of Galle, Jaffna, Kandy and Trincomalee. Since 1905 this see has been filled by Most Rev. Antoine Coudert, born in Manglieu, France, 1861, ordained 1886, appointed titular Bishop of Balanæa and coadjutor to the Archbishop of Colombo 28 June, 1898, succeeding to the see 17 June, 1905. A number of religious orders are established in the diocese: the Oblates of Mary Immaculate (104 priests and 8 lay brothers), Brothers of the Christian Schools (22), Marist Brothers, Indian Franciscan Brothers (40), Sisters of the Good Shepherd (51), Sisters of the Holy Family (30), Little Sisters of the Poor (16), Franciscan Nuns, Missionaries of Mary (90), Ceylonese Nuns of St. Francis Xavier under the direction of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd (144), and Sisters of the Immaculate Conception (155). Various educational and charitable institutions are conducted by these orders: 1 seminary, 23 English schools for boys with an attendance of 5,481, 17 for girls with an attendance of 2,576; 231 vernacular schools for boys, total registration 20,507; 228 vernacular schools for girls, total registration 17,804; 6 orphanages for girls caring for 449 children, an industrial school for girls with 212 pupils, 1 home for the aged with 200 inmates, and a government hospital, entrusted to the Franciscan Nuns, Missionaries of Mary. A Catholic press is established which publishes two semi-weekly newspapers, "Nanarantha Pradigaya" in Sinhalese, and the "Ceylon Catholic Messenger" in English, and a monthly magazine called the "Messenger of the Sacred Heart for Ceylon," besides other religious literature in English and Sinhalese. The diocese comprises 340 churches and chapels, 62 head-stations, and 300 sub-stations.

Colorado (cf. C. E., IV-129a).—The area of the State of Colorado is 103,948 sq. miles.

POPULATION.—By the census of 1920 the population was 939,376. Denver, the state capital and largest city, had a population of 256,369. According to the statistics of 1919 the suicide death rate for the state was 14.2 per 100,000 population, which is a large decrease compared with 18.8 in 1915.

RESOURCES.—In 1920 gold to the value of $10,249,300 and 5,966 ounces of silver were mined. The coal output for 1918 was 10,484,237 tons bituminous and 12,483,336 tons anthracite. The average wheat yield (1919) was about fourteen bushels to the acre. The value of output of agriculture, dairy and poultry for 1919 was $193,761,245; fruit, $16,978,412. In 1920 the irrigated acreage was 3,348,385, yielding a total crop value of $486,000,000. The estimated value of the manufactures, outside of smelting, for 1919 was $275,391,000. The railway mileage in 1920 was 5,610.

EDUCATION.—In 1918 the State University at Boulder had 1,953 students and 219 professors and instructors. A second normal school has recently been opened at Gunnison. School district ownership is over $16,000,000. The total number of pupils enrolled in 1918 was 200,763. The teachers numbered 7,219 and the schoolhouses 3,089. The expenditure for that year was $9,733,763.

The state laws affecting private and parochial schools are as follows: No child of school age who has not completed the eighth grade shall be permitted to attend any school where the common branches are not taught in the English language; no appropriation shall be made for educational purposes to any person or institution not under the absolute control of the state, nor to any denominational or sectarian institution or association. (IV, 34); lots with the buildings thereon, if said buildings are used exclusively for schools, shall be exempt from taxation (X-5). All teachers in public and private schools must take oath of allegiance; compulsory school law requires that children attending private schools shall receive such instruction as will be an equivalent to that given in the public schools. For Catholic school statistics see DENVER, DIOCESE OF.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—Colorado's recent legislation has displayed the same modern tendency as other state legislation, as in the creation of a public service commission, of a Mothers' Pension Act (1912), a Bill providing the recall of all elective officers, including judges, a pure-seed law (1919), a minimum wage commission, a workmen's compensation law (1915), and a statute providing for the investigation and control of smelters. The school-fund-farm-loan law, whereby moneys derived from school funds can be drawn upon for loans to farmers, was upheld as constitutional.

RECENT HISTORY.—The Colorado mine strike of 1914 will always be remembered for the extreme bitterness displayed by the strikers. They demanded an eight-hour day, a ten per cent advance in wages, the abolition of the guard system and the recognition of unions. The arrival of the militia smoothed matters until it was suspected that in its makeup many of the mining companies' own men were included. There were pitched battles and the Federal troops were called to the scene. After ineffective attempts at mediation President Wilson appointed a commission, which submitted a three-year truce. This the operators rejected and the miners accepted. In December the strikers went back to work without gaining their points.

Prohibition under the state constitution became effective on 1 January, 1916. Three boards of great importance have been recently organized—the Tax Commission, State Public Utilities Commission, and Industrial Commission. Each is composed of three members appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate for six years. The State Board of Correction, consisting of three members, was created in 1915 to control the penitentiary, reformatory and insane asylum. Colorado ratified the Federal suffrage amendment 12 December, 1919, and the prohibition amendment 15 January, 1919.

During the European War Colorado contributed 34,393 soldiers, or 92% of the United States Army. The Colorado members of the National Guard joined the 40th Division at Camp Kearney, California. The summary of casualties of Colorado members of the expeditionary forces is as follows: deceased, 34 officers, 533 men; prisoners, 2 officers, 15 men; wounded, 87 officers, 1,088 men.

Columbus, DIOCESE OF (COLUMBENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-149c), comprises 13,685 sq. miles of the State of Ohio, U. S. A. It is at present (1922) under the administration of Rt. Rev. James J. Hartley, b. in Columbus, 1853, ordained 1882, appointed 23 December, 1903. On 3 March, 1918, the golden jubilee of the diocese was celebrated. During the World War it gave 6 priests and 6,262 laymen to the service.

By present statistics there is a Catholic population of 109,024 in this territory, comprising 75,843 Americans, 13,212 Italians, 6,719 Poles, 7,026 Slovaks, 1,864 Syrians, 574 Lithuanians, and 3,354 Ruthenians of the Greek Rite. These are served through 101 parishes, 152 churches, 37 missions, 45 mission stations, 2 monasteries for men, 144 secular and 37 regular clergy, 5 lay brothers, 841 sisters, 1 seminary, 170 seminarians, 1 college for men with 14 professors and 375 students, 2 colleges for women with 20 teachers, 27 high schools with 67 teachers, 254 boys and 286 girls; 3 academies with 32 teachers, 480 boys and 403 girls; 1 normal school with 4 teachers and 30 students; 61 elementary schools with 427 teachers and 15,919 pupils. The various charitable works include the Home and Foreign Mission Society, 4 homes with 537 inmates, 6 hospitals, and 2 settlement houses. The Eucharistic League and a society for infirm priests are organized among the clergy, and three periodicals, the "Catholic Columbia," "Josephum Weekly" and "Ohio Waisenfreund," are published here.

Comacchio, DIOCESE OF (COMACLENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-151a), in the province of Ferrara, Italy. This see was formerly suffragan of Ravenna, but by a Decree of 7 January, 1909, it was made directly subject to the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Alfonso Archi, appointed to the see 28 September, 1902, was transferred to Como 8 September, 1905, and the see was left vacant for a long period. In 1909, however, His Eminence Cardinal Boschi, Archbishop of Ferrara, was named Bishop of Comacchio also, and administered the diocese until his resignation in 1919. The following year Comacchio was again given a bishop of its own in the person of Rt. Rev. Gherardo Sante Menegazzi, F.M.Cap., born in Rovereto di Goa, Italy, 1866, appointed 16 December, 1920. This diocese comprises a Catholic population of 40,909, 14 parishes, 36 secular and 5 regular clergy, 14 seminarians, 14 Sisters, and 14 churches or chapels.

Comayagua, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See TEGUCIGALPA.

Communion of Children (cf. C. E., IV-170).—In danger of death young children ought to receive Holy Communion if they know how to distinguish Christ's Body from ordinary bread and adore It reverently. If there is no danger of death they should have a certain knowledge of the mysteries of Faith that are to be believed as a necessary means to salvation, and be prepared to receive with such devotion as might be expected of children of their age. The Code says that the confessor and the parents or guardians are to decide if the child is sufficiently advanced and prepared to receive its first communion; but it also requires the parish priest to exercise vigilance lest the child should go too soon or should refrain too long from communion when sufficiently prepared.

Codex jur. can., 834; cf. Irish Ecl. Rev., XVII (1921), 609-11, for a case where the confessor and parish priest disagree.

Communion of the Sick (cf. C. E., IV-174).—Persons who have been confined to bed by illness for a month and who have no sure hope of a speedy recovery may on the advice of their confessors receive Holy Communion once or twice a week after taking medicine or some liquid food (modifying C. E., VI-279d).

Codex jur. can., 858-66.

Communism (cf. C. E., IV-179b).—There has been no increase in the number of communistic societies in the last decade. In fact, the few that were in existence ten years ago have either declined or disappeared. The name "Communism," however, has been frequently on men's lips since the year 1918. It has been applied by both friend and foe to the Bolshevik régime in Russia. (See Bolshevism.) In this connection it has about the same meaning as Socialism. This usage indicates a return to Marx and Engels; for the document in which they first set forth their system was called "The Communist Manifesto."

Como, DIOCESE OF (COMENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-183c), in Lombardy, Northern Italy, suffragan of Milan. This diocese is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Alfonso Archi, b. at Faenza, 1864, appointed titular Bishop of Gaza, 19 June, 1901, transferred to Comacchio, 29 September, 1902, to Como, 8 September, 1905, and appointed an assistant at the pontifical throne, 11 March, 1912.

During the World War the clergy and laity of this diocese distinguished themselves in the patriotic and charitable works at home, as well as in active service in the field. On 15 August, 1919, the papal delegate, Cardinal Ferrari, solemnly crowned the statue of Nostra Signora del Sacra Cuore di Gesù, in the church of Santa Giorgia in Borgo Nico.

By latest statistics (1922), this diocese comprises a Catholic population of 377,873; 337 parishes, 1,000 churches, 1 monastery of women, 9 convents of men, 530 secular and 45 regular clergy, 23 brothers, about 600 sisters, 2 seminaries, 200 seminarians, 2 secondary schools for boys, 7 for girls, 7 elementary schools, 23 homes, 63 asylums, 12 hospitals, and 1 day nursery. About 10 of the public institutions permit the priests to minister in them, and 2 of the schools are assisted by the government. Besides the Propagation of the Faith, and various other missionary works, 2 societies are formed among the clergy, and about 250 among the laity of different parishes. Six Catholic periodicals are published here.

Compostela (or SANTIAGO DE GALICIA), ARCHDIOCESE OF (COMPOSTELLANENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-187d), in the province of Galicia, Spain. The archbishop of this ancient see bears the title of major chaplain of his majesty, judge ordinary of the royal chapel, house and court, and major notary of Leon. At present (1922) the see is filled by His Eminence Cardinal Martin de Herrera y de la Iglesia, born in Aldeadavila de la Ribera, Spain, in 1835, appointed Archbishop of Santiago de Cuba, 5 July, 1875, transferred 14 February, 1889, Senator and member of the Royal Council, created cardinal 19 April, 1897. He is assisted by an auxiliary, at present Rt. Rev. Ramir Fernandez y Valbuena, appointed 7 July, 1911, titular Bishop of Scillium. This archdiocese which covers an area of 5,341 sq. miles and comprises a Catholic population of 900,000, is credited by the 1920 statistics with 1,137 parishes, 980 priests, 1,137 churches, 837 chapels, 14 convents with 212 religious, and 664 Sisters.

Compromise (cf. C. E., IV-189).—Compromise by option is the only kind mentioned in the Code. If the person chosen to settle the controversy is to decide by the principles of the law he is known as an arbiter, if by the principles of equity, he is an arbitrator. Only those suits that may be settled by transaction (q.v.) may be compromised. Laymen or those who have been judicially declared excommunicated or infamous cannot act validly as arbiters; religious must not accept the office without leave of their superiors. At an election by compromise the person delegated to vote in the name of all cannot declare himself elected; and if several have been so delegated none of them can of his own accord procure his own election by voting with the other delegates wishing to elect him. If the election is in connection with a clerical college the delegates must be priests, otherwise the election would be invalid.

Concepción, DIOCESE OF (SANCTISSIMÆ CONCEPCIONIS; cf. C. E., IV-190b), in Chile. South America, suffragan of Santiago de Chile, Rt. Rev. Luis Enrique Izquierdo y Vargas, appointed to this see 26 January, 1906, died 7 August, 1917, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Gilbert Fuenzalida y Guzman, born in Talca, 1868, he made his studies at the seminaries of Talca, Santiago and the Latin-American College at Rome, served as rector of the seminary of Talca, and then of Santiago, member of the council of public instruction, dean of the faculty of theology of the state in 1905, and was appointed 20 February, 1918. In 1920 a new parish was erected in the diocese, under the title of Our Lady of Mercy, and entrusted to the Mercedarians, and the following year a new church of St. Joseph was entrusted to the Capuchins.

The religious communities of men established in the diocese include: Franciscans (12 convents, 73 religious); Dominicans (3 convents, 12 religious); Mercedarians (3 convents, 28 religious); Augustinians (1 convent, 5 religious); Capuchins (3 convents, 25 religious); Jesuits (2 residences, 15 religious); Clerks Regular of the Pious Schools (1 college, 11 religious); Salesians (1 house, 20 religious); Redemptorists (2 residences, 22 religious); Missionaries of the Immaculate Heart of Mary (2 residences, 17 religious); Discalced Trinitarians (1 residence, 19 religious); Discalced Carmelites (1 residence, 11 religious); Fathers of Picpus (8 religious), and Brothers of the Christian Schools (2 colleges, 18 Brothers). Eighteen congregations of religious women are established here; the Discalced Trinitarians, Conceptionists, Religious of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of Providence, Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, Sisters of the Good Shepherd of Angers, Little Sisters of the Poor, Sacramentines, Hospital Sisters of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of Providence of Corene (Grenoble), Mercedarians, Servants of Jesus, Sisters of the House of Mary, Sisters of St. Joseph, Protectors of Childhood, Sisters of the Infant Jesus of Aurillac, Franciscan Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, and Sisters of the Holy Cross. These congregations have in all 56 houses and 599 religious. By the latest census (1907) the total population of this territory, which comprises 45,000 sq. miles, numbered 1,113,000, of whom all were Catholic except a few thousand Araucan infidels and a small number who have strayed from the Faith. By 1920 statistics the diocese is credited with 68 parishes, 6 sub-parishes, 3 seminaries, and 122 secular priests. Numerous charitable institutions and societies are established.

Conclave (cf. C. E., IV-192).—Papal elections are held in accordance with the Constitution "Vacante Sede Apostolica" of Pius X, dated 25 December, 1904. At the first of the general preparatory meetings which are to take place from the day of the pope's death till the day when the cardinals enter the conclave, the "Commissum Nobis" of Pius X abolishing the Veto and the "Prædecessores Nostri" of Leo XIII, with the annexed instructions concerning elections, are to be read and the cardinals present must swear to observe them and the prescriptions of the "Vacante Sede Apostolica," and also if they are elected never to cease vindicating the rights of the pope, especially the civil power of the Holy See; furthermore, they must swear that they and their assistants will observe secrecy, even after the election, as to all that takes place in the conclave, unless in as far as they are expressly dispensed by the pope. Inspiration, compromise, and balloting are the only three methods of election now recognized as valid, accession having been abolished. Neither the violation of the enclosure nor the crime of simony now invalidates an election, a provision adopted to eliminate any occasion for disputing the validity of the proceedings. As the interval of ten days between the death of the pope and the beginning of the conclave proved to be insufficient to enable cardinals from distant countries like Brazil, Canada, and the United States to reach Rome in time for the election, Pius XI meeting the wishes of the cardinals at the recent conclave, has modified certain prescriptions laid down in the "Vacante Sede." The interval of ten days has been extended to fifteen full days; cardinals are empowered to add two or three days more, but they must enter the conclave and proceed at once to the election after the eighteenth day at the latest. The prescription for the three more solemn final funeral Masses is to be observed; but the cardinals at their first meeting are to fix the days on which the six other Masses are to be celebrated. The cardinals, moreover, though they may have two assistants, can bring only one into the conclave, and he must be a layman—but this is not to modify the provisions already made for cardinals who are ill. Furthermore, the cardinals may celebrate Mass during the conclave but if for any reason anyone does not do so he is to hear Mass and receive Holy Communion in a designated chapel. Finally the Motu proprio in which these changes are made is to be read at the first general meeting of the cardinals after the death of the pope.

The clerics present at the conclave of 1922 in attendance on the cardinals from dioceses outside of Italy were granted the privilege of a private oratory, provided it was first visited and approved by the ordinary. It was formerly customary to bestow life pensions on the clerics attendant on the cardinals from Italian sees, but owing to the poverty of the Holy See to-day, this practice was discontinued; however, each of those who had been present received a donation of 300 lire.

Concordat (cf. C. E., IV-196).—The canons of the Code in no way abrogate or modify the concordats already existing between various nations and the Apostolic See. On 24 June, 1914, Servia, desiring to be free from the religious protectorate of Austria, arranged a concordat with the Holy See, which was after approved by the Skupstchina and ratification by King Peter was published on 18 September, 1914, and ratified by Benedict XV on 20 March, 1915. Codez jur. can., 3; for text of Servian Concordat cf. Rome, XV, and Annuaire pontifical (1916), 69.

Concordia, DIOCESE OF (CONCORDIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-206d), in the province of Venice, Northern Italy, suffragan of Venice. This see was filled by Rt. Rev. Francesco Isola from 22 June, 1896, until his transfer to the titular see of Adrianople, 14 February, 1919. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Luigi Paulini, born in Formigosa, 1862, made a prelate of the Holy See 11 September, 1911, appointed 10 March, 1919. The episcopal residence is at Portogruaro; the chancellors of the cathedral are ipso facto, prothonotaries apostolic supernumerary. The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with 302,481 Catholics; 131 parishes, 255 secular and 2 regular clergy, 112 Sisters, 142 seminarians, and 287 churches or chapels.

Concordia, DIOCESE OF (CONCORDIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-206d), comprises an area of 26,685 sq. miles in the State of Kansas, and a Catholic population of 35,179. Since the death of the last bishop, Rt. Rev. John Francis Cunningham, D.D., who was consecrated 21 September, 1898, and died 23 June, 1919, the see has been vacant and the progress of the diocese retarded on this account. The present records (1921) show the following statistics: churches with resident priests, 59; missions, 36; stations, 10; secular priests, 60, regulars, 34; ecclesiastical students, 5; 1 college for boys with 95 students; 1 academy with 110 students; 33 parochial schools with 4,713 students; 3 hospitals, and 1 orphan asylum. The various religious orders represented in the diocese are the Capuchin Fathers; the Oblate Fathers; the Sisters of St. Joseph, and Sisters of St. Agnes.

Concubinage (cf. C. E., IV-207).—Persons who live in public concubinage are to be excluded from all legal ecclesiastical acts until they give proof of real repentance; if the culprit has received minor orders he should be punished by dismissal from the clerical state if necessary; if he has received major orders, and disregards the ordinary's warning he is to be forced by suspension and privation to end the association and repair the scandal. Clerics are presumed to be concubinaires, if they are contumacious when they have been forbidden by the local ordinary on account of the moral danger or scandal to retain in their service, or associate with, any woman. The manner of dealing with such cases is as follows: If the cleric after being duly warned neither obeys nor replies, when he could do so, he is to be suspended a divinis by his ordinary, and is to be deprived immediately of his parish, should he have one; if he holds only a benefice without cure of souls and does not amend within two months after his suspension he is to lose half of his revenue, three months later he loses the remainder, and three months later is to be deprived of the benefice. If, however, the accused has excused himself to the ordinary, his answer is to be sent to two examiners; if the ordinary after consulting them judges the alleged excuse insufficient, he must at once notify the cleric and command him formally to obey within a short specified time. If the disobedient culprit is a removable parish priest he may be coerced at once as stated above; where, however, the culprit hold a permanent benefice and gives new reasons instead of obeying, the ordinary should submit them to examination as before; if the excuses are then deemed insufficient the ordinary is to command obedience within a fitting time, and if the culprit remains recalcitrant, he is to be dealt with as above.

Codez jur. can., 2,176-81.

Concursus (cf. C. E., IV-208).—In places where appointments to parishes are made by concursus, this practice is to be continued until the Holy See decrees otherwise.

Conferences, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., IV-213).—Ecclesiastical conferences have now been made obligatory and are to be held in the episcopal city and each vicariate forane frequently. They are to be attended by all secular priests, regulars, even exempt, having care of souls, and other religious who hold diocesan faculties for hearing confessions if they have no conferences in their own houses. Those who are obliged to attend but are unable to do so must send written solutions of the questions under discussion, unless they have been expressly exempted by the local ordinary. Similar conferences are to be held in clerical religious houses, and are to be attended by all the professed who are engaged in or have completed their theological studies, excepting those who are exempted by the constitutions.

Codez jur. can., 121, 591.

Confirmation (cf. C. E., IV-215).—Even without special delegation Confirmation may be administered by cardinals and also by abbots or prelates nullius, vicars and prefects Apostolic, who can act validly, however, only within their own territory and while holding office. Priests of the Latin Rite, who administer the sacrament by special indult, can validly confirm only persons of the Latin Rite, unless their indult expressly asserts otherwise. Eastern priests enjoying the faculty or privilege of confirming children of their Rite at baptism are forbidden to confirm children of the Latin Rite; if they did confirm their act would be valid, though sinful. They may administer confirmation with baptism to their own people everywhere except in Bulgaria, Albania, Cyprus, Italy, and the adjacent islands, the Maronite districts of Mount Lebanon and the Ruthenian districts in the United States. Private baptism and confirmation in other Rites may be given anywhere without special leave but solemn baptism requires at least the presumed leave of the ordinary if the priests wish to act outside of their own districts. A bishop, or priest having a local Apostolic privilege, can licitly confirm externs in his territory, unless their own ordinary has expressly forbidden it; the bishop, moreover, may confirm his own subjects outside of his diocese privately, without using his pastoral staff or mitre; but he would require at least the reasonably presumed permission of the local ordinary to confirm others; hitherto no one might be confirmed without the permission of the local bishop. A bishop is obliged to administer the sacrament to his subjects who lawfully and reasonably ask for it, especially during the diocesan visitation, and a similar duty is incumbent on a specially privileged priest; ordinaries must see that their subjects have an opportunity at least every five years of being confirmed—formerly every eight or ten years was often deemed sufficient; if an ordinary is guilty of grave negligence in this matter now, the metropolitan is to inform the Holy See.

When a subject has attained the use of reason he should be instructed to receive confirmation; he must not neglect to receive it, even though it is not a necessary means of salvation, and his parish priest should see that he receives the sacrament in due time. Where several are to be confirmed all must be present at the first imposition or extension of hands, and none may depart until the rite has been completed. The sacrament may be administered at any time, but preferably in Pentecost week. Though it should be given in a church, any other suitable place may be selected for a reasonable cause; moreover, as far as the bishop's right to administer confirmation is concerned there are no exempt localities in his diocese. The chrism for confirming should be consecrated by a bishop—the Code neither affirms nor denies that a priest would be delegated by the pope for this function.

If possible there should be a sponsor at confirmation; unless the minister believes there is a reasonable excuse, each sponsor should stand for only one or two subjects. To act validly as sponsor, a person (a) must be confirmed, have attained the use of reason, and intend to assume the obligation; (b) must not belong to a heretical or schismatic sect or be excommunicated by condemnatory or declaratory sentence, or have incurred infamy of law, or be incapable of legal acts, or be a deposed or degraded cleric; (c) must not be the father, mother, or spouse of the subject; (d) must be chosen by the subject, parents, guardians, or if there are none or if they refuse, by the minister or parish priest; (e) must personally or by proxy, touch the subject physically at the act of confirmation. To act licitly as sponsor, one (a) should be other than the baptismal sponsor, unless the minister decides there is a reasonable excuse, or unless the confirmation takes place lawfully immediately after baptism; (b) should be of the same sex as the subject, except for a just cause; (c) should possess the qualifications required for acting licitly as a baptismal sponsor. Spiritual relationship arises only between the sponsor and the subject, and is no longer an impediment to matrimony.

The parish priest is to record in a special book the names of the minister, recipients, parents and sponsor, and also the date and place of confirmation; he should record the fact also in the baptismal register. If he was not present at the ceremony the minister must personally or by proxy notify him as soon as possible that the sacrament has been conferred. To establish the fact of confirmation, if no one's interests are endangered, the testimony of one unexceptionable witness, or the oath of the recipient, unless he was confirmed as an infant, suffices.

Codez jur. can., 780-800; O'DONNELL in Irish Eccl. Rec., XI (1918): 206-16.

Confraternity (cf. C. E., IV-223).—Members of confraternities may not assist as such in sacred functions unless wearing their habit or insignia: Women can be enrolled as members, but only for the purpose of gaining the indulgence and spiritual favors granted to the associates. Local ordinaries are to see the confraternities of the Blessed Sacrament and of Christian Doctrine are erected in every parish; on being legitimately erected they are thereby aggregated to the corresponding arch-confraternities in Rome erected by the cardinal vicar. Religious can and should communicate to confraternities erected by them the spiritual favors which are expressly mentioned as communicable in the faculties received from the Holy See; but confraternities erected by religious may not assume a habit or insignia to be worn at public processions or other sacred functions without special leave of the ordinary. No confraternity may change or abandon its habit or insignia without the local ordinary's consent. Confraternities must be present with their insignia and their own standards at the usual processions unless they have been excused by the ordinary. See ASSOCIATIONS, PIOUS.

Codez jur. can., 701-25.

Congo, BELGIAN (cf. C. E., IV-228b).—The area is estimated at 909,654 square miles, with a population of Bantu origin officially estimated at eleven millions. The European population in January, 1920, numbered 6,971. Of these 3,588 were Belgians, 818 English, 239 Americans, 657 Portuguese, 298 Italians, 53 Russians, 87 Swedish, 153 French, 183 Dutch, 75 Swiss, 308 Greeks, 22 Luxemburgers, 21 Danish, 14 Norwegians, and 11 Spaniards.

EDUCATION.—So far comparatively little has been done for native education. The first schools founded by the state were charity schools in which orphans, children abandoned by their parents, and the children freed by the dispersal of slave convoys were cared for. These schools were situated at Boma and New Antwerp and their management was entrusted to Catholic priests, who prepared the pupils for the military or civil service of the colony. For other natives there are professional schools attached to the workshops which the State possesses at Boma, Leopoldville, and Stanleyville. These are open to youths from twelve to twenty years of age, who have the consent of their parents and have been recommended by their chiefs to the commissioner of their district. In addition there are primary schools taught by members of religious orders and a school for the sons of chiefs, which was opened at Stanleyville in 1913. Some of the mission schools are organized like state schools and are under the general control of the Governor General; some have obtained additional grants of land and are under partial control; others are completely free. The first two must follow the general program arranged by the heads of the missions, in consultation with the Governor General. The only scientific establishments of importance are the medical laboratory at Leopoldville and the botanic gardens of Bala. In 1920 the Government grant to the missionaries for education amounted to 887,100 francs, while the total expenditure on education was 1,297,880 francs.

Economic Status.—The gold mines in 1919 employed some 8,000 natives, the output being 3,356 kilos. The copper mines produced 22,130 tons of copper. The exportation of diamonds in 1919 amounted to 215,532 carats. The chief exports in 1919 were: Palm nuts, 34,350,030 kilograms; rubber, 3,797,440 gr.; palm oil, 6,404,510 kilograms; copper, ore, and crude, 23,028,000 kilograms. Of the special imports in 1918, the value of 28,712,502 francs came from Great Britain; 1,224,856 francs from France; 2,056,017 francs from Angola; 1,824,238 francs from the United States. The rubber industry was revived in 1915, and the following year 2,232 tons of rubber were exported.

COMMUNICATIONS.—The Congo is navigable for nearly 100 miles above its mouth, as far as Matadi, and again above the Stanley Pool for a distance of 1,600 miles. The railway mileage on 1 January, 1920, was 1,250, the longest lines being those from Bukama by way of Elizabethville to the frontier of Rhodesia (456 miles), the Kindu-Kongolo line (327 miles) and the Matadi-Leopoldville line (248 miles). Within the Congo system are included two sections of the Cape-to-Cairo Railway. The telegraph mileage is 2,065.

GOVERNMENT.—As a result of the international situation created by the charges of misgovernment against the Congo Free State, the Belgian Congo was annexed by Belgium in 1908, the annexation becoming more effective November 15 of that year. The government of the country is now carried on according to the Constitution finally approved by King Leopold on 18 October, 1908, modified to some extent by subsequent Acts of the Belgian Parliament, of which the more important are those of 29 March, 1911, 5 March, 1912, and 9 December, 1912.

By these enactments, Congo is placed under the legislative control of the King of the Belgians, but he must act on the advice of the Colonial Minister, who is responsible to Parliament. His legislative power he exercises by decree, and his executive power by regulations, subject, however, to any laws passed by the Belgian Parliament. The King is aided by a Colonial Council of fourteen members, eight of whom are nominated by the King, three by the Senate, and three by the Chamber. Parliament retains the control of the Colonial Budget. In addition to the Colonial Council there are two other bodies of a consultative character at Brussels, the Conseil supérieur du Congo, which created in 1899, and acts as a court of appeal, and the Commission des terres, which was created in 1910, and consists of five members, government officials, who examine all questions relative to the concession or sale of land.

By a royal decree in 1912, the territorial divisions of the colony were reorganized, the number of districts being increased from twelve to twenty-two. Each district is administered by a commissioner who is in charge of the military and police. The twenty-two districts are: Lower Congo, Middle Congo, Kwango, Sankuru, Kassai, Lake Leopold II, Equator, Lulunga, Baigala, Ubangi, Lower Uele, Upper Uele, Ituri, Stanleyville, Aruwimi, Lova, Kivu, Maniema, Lomami, Tanganika-Moero, Lulua, and Upper Lualaba. By a royal decree of 1914, the last four districts form the Province of Katanga; the first five districts form the Province of Congo-Kassai, the next five form the Province of Equator, and the remaining eight districts form the Eastern Province, with Stanleyville as its capital. Each of the provinces is administered by a vice-governor general, to whom is entrusted the care of its internal affairs. The governor general has full executive authority in the colony, except in so far as he is restrained by laws and royal decrees.

JUDICIAL POWER.—For the administration of civil and criminal cases there are seven Courts of First Instance, each with a judge, procureur d'Etat to represent the people, and a greffier; there are two courts of appeal composed of a president, two judges, a procureur général and a greffier. Under the new regime (1913) the territorial administrator sits as a police court with power over minor offences. From this an appeal can be made to the Court of Public Prosecutor, which deals with all offenses by natives and consists of a judge, the royal prosecutor, and a registrar. A crime committed by a native is judged by the chief of the place where it is committed. An appeal can be made to the court of a superior chief, and to a European court only when the defendant is aggrieved and demands that the case be heard anew. In civil matters natives may always have recourse to European courts. Despite the defendant's reluctance the chief's judgment holds between non-matriculated natives. There are also military courts (conseil de guerre, conseil de guerre d'appel). At the head of this administration of justice is the conseil supérieur de Bruxelles, which constitutes the cour de cassation.

DEFENSE.—The colony possesses a force of native troops amounting to about 16,000 men, all infantry, organized into thirty companies and recruited by voluntary enlistment. The officers and non-commissioned officers (365) are Europeans, for the most part Belgians, and are enlisted for seven years. The territorial force numbers about 6,000 men.

RECENT CHANGES.—In the Franco-German Convention of 1911, Germany promised not to oppose the establishment of a French protectorate over Morocco, and France agreed to maintain the open door in Morocco and to cede two strips of the French Congo to Germany. In 1918, however, the districts of Ruanda and Urundi, together with the territory around Lake Kivu (formerly in German East Africa) were ceded to Belgium as mandatories of the League of Nations. The total area is about 19,000 square miles. In order to obtain a practicable railway route to join the Tanganyika Territory to Uganda, the British acquired by transfer the eastern strip of the Province of Ruanda and a small part of Urundi.

MISSIONS.—Non-Catholic.—The Episcopalian Methodists of the Northern States of America recently came from Rhodesia into this region where in the past two years the Pentecostal Mission and the Heart of Africa Mission have also opened stations. The African Mission, finding itself cramped in British East Africa, also moved into the Congo. In 1918 some members of the Brethren persuasion from America began the Ubangi-Shari Mission. In all there are fifteen Protestant societies with a staff of 400 missionaries in seventy-eight stations; five are British, one is Swedish, and the rest are American.

Catholic.—Ecclesiastically Belgian Congo is divided into five vicariates apostolic: Leopoldville, New Antwerp, Upper Kassai, Stanley Falls and Upper Congo; and seven prefectures apostolic: Katanga, Northern Katanga, Matadi, Belgian Ubangi, Western Uele, Eastern Uele, and Kwango. For statistics see articles under these titles.

Congo, LOWER OR PORTUGUESE, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See LOANGO.

Congo, UPPER, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CONG. SUPERIORIS), erected 10 December, 1895 (see C. E., XVI-82). This vicariate, entrusted to the White Fathers, is under the direction of its first vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Victor Roelens, titular Bishop of Girba, appointed 30 March, 1895. He resides at Beaudoinville and is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Auguste-Leopold Huys, titular Bishop of Rusicade, appointed 24 March, 1909. By the 1918 census the total population of this territory was 300,000, of whom 16,012 were Catholic and 5,419 catechumens. The vicariate comprises (1920), 11 principal stations, 27 chapel-schools, 52 missionaries, 1 upper seminary with 2 students, 1 lower seminary with 12 students, 8 Brothers, 19 White Sisters of Our Lady of Africa, 161 native catechists who are charged with 79 schools with a total attendance of 8,211 boys and 5,826 girls, thus carrying on the work of evangelizing 300 pagan villages; 14 orphanages with 540 children, 7 hospitals, 22 dispensaries, and 1 refuge for widows. In 1918 there were 2,590 baptisms of adults in this vicariate besides 3,514 at the hour of death.

Congregationalism (cf. C. E., IV-239c).—A movement toward organic union among the congregations, and toward union with other churches; a loss of members in various localities, of ministers quite generally, and an intensive attempt to stay the adverse tide mark this sect during recent years. The triennial national council of 1913 (the last of the triennial councils, the body now meeting biennially) marked the definite recognition of the Congregational Churches as an organized religious body with specific purposes which are set forth in what may be called a Congregational platform, including a preamble, and statements of faith, probity and wider fellowship.

Along the line of union or co-operation with other sects the Congregationalists have been prominent workers. In April, 1911, as a result of preliminary work in preparation for the World Conference on Faith and Order, an agreement was entered into with the Church of the Disciples whereby consolidation of local churches of the two sects is allowed where deemed advisable. Several instances have been reported where such consolidation has taken place.

In Canada a movement has for some ten or fifteen years been under way having for its object the union of the Congregationalists, Methodists, and Presbyterians. In 1916 progress was reported, but final negotiations were deferred until the end of the war and since then complete arrangements have not been made. The Baptists were to have been included in the union but finally withdrew from the movement. As the Northern Baptist Convention of the United States in 1919 said, "There is no centralized body which could deliver the Baptist churches to any merger. If Baptist churches do not have unity among themselves they obviously cannot have organic unity with other denominations."

There has been also a movement toward union or rapprochement with the Protestant Episcopal Church. In 1918 the latter church reported unfavorably on a proposal by the Congregational and various other churches, suggesting joint ordination, as a war measure, of chaplains for the army and navy. In October, 1919, the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church drew up a tentative concordant with the Congregational Church whereby ministers of the latter might under certain conditions, receive ordination in the Episcopal Church and yet continue to minister in their own churches. Already in 1915, during the General Council of the Congregational Churches held in New Haven, a number of the pulpits of the Protestant Episcopal Church in that city were, with the express approval of the bishop of the diocese, open to members of the Congregational Council.

In Massachusetts at a meeting of the Massachusetts General Convention of Congregational ministers a Unitarian minister urged that the Congregational and Unitarian churches be reunited, the name Unitarian to be dropped and the Congregationalists to relinquish their doctrinal and creedal statements. The proposal was welcomed by the Rev. Samuel Bushnell on the part of the Congregationalists, but it led to no actual results.

The Congregational Church also co-operated in the Pan-Protestant Panama conference of 1916, and is a member of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and after the Episcopalians, has been especially prominent in the preparation for the World Conference on Faith and Order.

There were about 2,000,000 Congregationalists in the world in 1922. In the United States there were 6,019 churches, 5,772 ministers, and 819,225 members. In 1920 there were in Great Britain 492,968 members, 13,000 in Canada, 18,000 in Japan, 21,000 in Australia, and 20,000 in South Africa. The number of ministers in the United States has decreased considerably since 1907 and in the General Council in 1917 the president of the Chicago seminary characterized the situation as the most critical since the Civil War. There was also a falling in membership in Great Britain. In Macedonia, in January, 1922, according to press despatches, the Congregational Church lost control of the twenty-five Protestant missionary churches which it had founded and maintained there. This loss is due to alleged leanings toward Unitarianism, and according to reports the Methodists have taken charge of these churches.

To rouse greater interest in Congregationalism and its works the "tercentenary plan" (Plymouth, 1620-1920) was devised, the aim being to seek new members, to add to the ministerial force, and especially to raise a fund of $50,000,000 principally for missions. Late reports indicate satisfactory progress in raising this fund.

The widespread movement of Congregationalism toward internal organic union, and toward union or at least co-operation with other sects, would seem to lead to the logical conclusion that in the future this sect should gradually lose its corporate identity and merge with some other sect, for hitherto its distinctive tenet (and theoretically it still retains it) has been that each congregation is a complete organization, independent of all others; by practically abandoning this tenet the sect seems to lose its raison d'être.

Congresses, CATHOLIC (cf. C. E., IV-242a).—The first International Eucharistic Congress held since the beginning of the World War, and the twenty-seventh of the series, opened in Rome on Ascension Thursday, 25 May, 1922, and continued in session until 29 May, when the Holy Father, Pius XI, carried the Blessed Sacrament in solemn procession from the Sistine Chapel to the Vatican Basilica. The Pope presided at the general opening meeting on 24 May, and responded to the addresses of Cardinal Vincenzo Vannutelli, honorary president of the Congress. The general theme developed at the Congress was "The Peaceful Kingship of Our Lord Jesus Christ through the Eucharist." Addresses were delivered each day in Italian, the official language of the gathering, and in English, French, Spanish, and German. On the closing day solemn ceremonies were held in every diocese of the Catholic world in spiritual conjunction with those in Rome. The twenty-six preceding Congresses were held as follows: Lille, 1881; Avignon, September, 1882; Liège, June, 1883; Frébourg, September, 1885; Toulouse, June, 1886; Paris, July, 1888; Jerusalem, May, 1893; Reims, July, 1894; Paray-le-Monial, September, 1897; Brussels, July, 1898; Lourdes, August, 1907; Angers, September, 1900; Namur, September, 1902; Angoulême, July, 1904; Rome, June, 1905; Tournai, August, 1906; Metz, August, 1907; London, September, 1908; Cologne, August, 1909; Montreal, September, 1910; Madrid, June, 1911; Vienna, September, 1912; Malta, April, 1913; Lourdes, 1914. The Marian Congress, held in India 13-16 January, 1921, was attended by a papal delegate, 24 bishops, and 12,000 of the laity. At Paris, 4-11 December, 1921, the first International Democratic Congress, organized by Marc Sangnier, had for its purpose the promotion of international peace and was notable for the attendance of delegates from all the recently warring nations, who manifested the most harmonious and fraternal relations with each other. The Catholic Bible Congress, in which the leading biblical scholars took part, held its sessions at Cambridge, England, 16-19 July, 1921.

Connecticut (cf. C. E., IV-253c).—According to the federal census of 1920 the population of the State of Connecticut was 1,380,631.

WEALTH AND RESOURCES.—Manufacturing had an early beginning in Connecticut. Iron products were manufactured in the eighteenth century; nails were made before 1716; and the cannon for the Continental troops made to block the channel of the Hudson River to British ships, was manufactured in Connecticut. Tinware was made in Berlin as early as 1770; Connecticut clocks were well known in the eighteenth century. In 1732 the London hatters complained of the competition of Connecticut hats in their trade. Brass works were in operation in Waterbury in 1749; paper mills at Norwich in 1768; in Hartford in 1776. In 1900 Connecticut led all the states in the manufacture of ammunition, bells, brass, and copper. According to the census of manufactures of 1919, there were in Connecticut 4,104 manufacturing establishments, with an aggregate capital amounting to $620,194,000, employing 25,112 salaried officials, and on the average of 226,264 wage earners. The cost of raw material used annually was $228,511,000, and the value of the output was $545,472,000.

The latest agricultural census shows a decrease in the number of farms from 26,815 in 1910, to 22,655 in 1920. Of the total land area of the state, 3,084,800 acres, 1,898,980 are in farms and of this, 701,086 acres are improved land. In 1920 the value of all farm property was $226,991,617; of live stock, $23,472,693. The crops in 1919 brought a total value of $44,492,385, of which $4,457,809 came from cereals, $13,711,567 from hay and forage, $7,218,194 from vegetables, and $15,189,551 from tobacco. The dairy products brought $14,923,971.

In 1919, Connecticut ranked forty-fourth of all the states in the Union in the total number of persons engaged in the mining and quarrying industries and in the average number of wage earners employed. The total value of products from all mines and quarries in 1919 was $1,649,003, 76.6% of which was derived from basalt or trap rock.

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES.—The libraries of Yale University contain about 1,000,000 volumes. In 1919 its property and funds amounted to twenty-five millions of dollars in value, and it expended in that year one and a half million dollars in its operations. Upwards of 400 Catholics are numbered among its students. The total enrollment in 1920 was 3,896, and the faculty numbered 569. The endowment amounts to $24,049,730. Especially notable was the recent bequest of John Sterling, a New York lawyer amounting from $16,000,000 to $20,000,000. A beautiful memorial quadrangle of dormitories, containing six campuses and covering an entire city square has recently been completed, one of the finest groups of buildings of this sort in the world, the gift of Mrs. Stephen Harkness, in memory of her son. Wesleyan University has about 426 students, and forty-eight professors and instructors. The Connecticut Agricultural College has an enrollment of 354 students. The public schools have a total enrolment of 243,880 pupils with 5,987 teachers. The total expenditure for the maintenance of these schools for the year 1919 was $11,280,097. For statistics of Catholic schools see HARTFORD, DIOCESE OF.

State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: attendance of children at a school other than a public school shall not be regarded as compliance with the laws of the state, unless the teachers or persons having control of such school shall keep a register of attendance in the form and manner prescribed by the state board of education for the public schools, which register shall at all times during school hours be open to the inspection of the secretary and agents of the state board of education; compulsory education law requires that children in private schools be taught same subjects as in public schools; state board may examine incorporated or endowed secondary schools, and shall approve them if course of studies and equipment are satisfactory. Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded in the public schools of state.

RECENT HISTORY.—The Constitution of 1918 was amended to permit an annual or biennial election of town selectmen, the use of voting machines, to allow the lieutenant-governor to exercise the authority of the governor in case of the death or disability of the latter, and to provide for the adjournment of the legislature, sine die, not later than the first Wednesday after the first Monday in June.

During the World War, Connecticut was given over to war work. Munition factories, metal working concerns in Hartford, New Haven, Bridgeport and Naugatuck Valley and textile manufactures brought an increase of population to the state. Connecticut was the first state in preparation for war, in the formation of its Home Guard and its Council of Defense, and was the first to have soldiers sent abroad.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—In 1913 the Sunday law was slightly relaxed to permit free concerts and athletic sports in public parks with the consent of the authorities, if no prizes were to be offered. The exemption of charitable bequests from a succession tax was repealed in 1917. In the same year a law was passed requiring the approval of the State Board of Charities before support for different religious and charitable causes could be solicited. Other legislative measures included the creation of a state Civil Service Commission, Workmen's Compensation Act, registration of voters, tax exemption of bonds of state, counties, and municipalities, a teachers' retirement Act, old age pension law, and child labor laws. In 1919 the governor was authorized to suspend the child labor law in cases of emergency. In 1921 the marriage law was changed to stop the bigamous marriages that were permitted through a loop-hole in the statute.

Prisons.—In 1911 all male prisoners under twenty-five years of age, sentenced to less than five years imprisonment were transferred from the state prison to the new reformatory at Cheshire.

CHURCH STATISTICS.—For Catholic statistics see HARTFORD, DIOCESE OF. The Congregationalists are the most numerous of the Protestant denominations, having according to the religious census of 1916 71,188 members. The same census disclosed 48,854 Protestant Episcopalians, 38,581 Methodists, and 26,243 Baptists and 3143 Presbyterians.

Consanguinity (cf. C. E., IV-284).—Consanguinity is a diriment impediment of marriage between persons related by blood in the direct line, and also between those who are related in a collateral line to the third degree inclusive. The impediment is multiplied only as often as the common stock is multiplied. Formerly it was multiplied when there was more than one line of descent from the common stock (e.g. two cousins whose grandparents were also cousins). The Congregation of the Sacraments grants dispensation from consanguinity; if it is in the third degree it is considered an impediment of minor rank from which the prosecretary of the Congregation can dispense. Formerly dispensaries were obtained through the Datary. Propaganda, of course, still deals with petitions in this matter forwarded by persons subject to its jurisdiction.

Codex jur. can., 1,076; ATRINEAC, Marriage Legislation, 164-70.

Consecration (cf. C. E., IV-280).—While the ordinary minister of consecration of a church is the diocesan bishop, a cardinal may consecrate the church or altar of his title or deaconate. The consecrator and those who asked for the consecration for themselves are bound to fast on the day before the ceremony. When a church or an altar is consecrated, the officiating bishop, even if he has no jurisdiction over the locality, is to grant an indulgence of one year to all those who visit the church or the altar on that day. At the same time another indulgence, to be gained on the same condition on each anniversary of the consecration, is to be published; this indulgence is for fifty, or a hundred, or two hundred days, according as it is granted by a bishop, an archbishop or a cardinal.

Regarding loss of consecration, under the Code a church loses its consecration only when it has been completely destroyed, or when the greater part of the walls have been demolished; of course the consecration or benediction disappears when the church is entirely unfitted for Divine worship and cannot be repaired and has been legitimately turned over to profane purposes by the local ordinary. A chalice or paten does not now lose its consecration on being regilt.

Constantine, DIOCESE OF (CONSTANTINIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-295a), in Algeria. The Catholic population is 121,000, made up of French, Italians, Spanish, and Maltese. Their spiritual needs are attended by 75 secular and 10 regular priests, assisted by 12 lay brothers. There are 18 parishes and 19 churches; 1 convent of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd; 1 seminary, recently built, with 30 seminarians; 1 college for boys with 4 teachers and 190 students; 2 high schools with 1,600 girl pupils; 3 elementary schools; 2 orphan asylums; 2 hospitals; 3 day nurseries. The Government contributes nothing toward support of the Catholic schools. The Jesuit Fathers have 2 missions and 2 stations established, and have under headway 5 missionary projects. For the clergy there is an association of reparation; and for the laity the Society of St. Vincent de Paul; the Third Order of St. Francis; Congregations of the Blessed Sacrament, and of St. John of the Cross. One Catholic weekly under episcopal auspices is published. Among the recently deceased is Rev. Ludovico Bozzo, who had charge of the Society of Saint Vincent de Paul and lived an exemplary life. The Government gave public acknowledgment of the meritorious work of the clergy during the World War.

Constantinople, PATRIARCHATE OF (CONSTANTINOPOLITANA; cf. C. E., IV-301c), in Turkey. The Patriarch of Constantinople resides in Rome, but the Catholics of the Latin Rite have a patriarchal vicar, who is also delegate apostolic for the Orientals, residing in the city of Constantinople. Until 1911 those Catholics of the Greek Rite who are united to Rome, were governed by an apostolic vicar, but in that year Pope Pius X gave a bishop to this community, Rt. Rev. Isias Papadopoulos, with ordinary jurisdiction over the Greek Catholics within the limits of the Vicariate Apostolic, including Constantinople, Thrace, Macedonia, and the Asiatic littoral of the Black Sea and of the Sea of Marmora. After the Balkan war, Macedonia was attached to the Archdiocese of Athens. Before the World War there were three parishes in Constantinople, one at Para, conducted by the secular clergy, one at Kadi-Keui (Chalcedonia), and the third in Koum-Kapou (Stamboul), conducted by the Assumptionist Fathers of the Greek Rite. The parish of Constantinople had missions at Malgara and Daudeli in Thrace with flourishing schools; that of Koum-Kapou had missions at Gallipoli (Thrace), and at Cesarea in Capadocia. During the war the Assumptionist Fathers being French, were forced to abandon their missions, except the parish of Kadi-Keui which they still hold, while the native clergy remained in possession of all the missions: Upon the establishment of the new Congregation for the Oriental Churches in 1917, the late Pope Benedict XV called Bishop Papadopoulos to Rome and appointed him Assessor of this Congregation, and in 1920 appointed the Rev. George Calavassy to succeed him. Born in Turkey, he made his studies in the Greek College in Rome, and was later given the direction of the Greek missions in Thrace, where he served until 1914, when he was sent to Rome by the Apostolic Delegate to plea the cause of the Greek missions. The Sacred Congregation of Propaganda later sent him to Belgium to seek funds for the necessary development of the missions, but upon the German invasion he was compelled to go back to Rome. Sent to the United States by the Holy See in behalf of the same missions he carried on a very successful campaign here, and upon his return to Rome in 1918 was appointed administrator of the Greek missions. On 13 July, 1920, he was elected bishop with ordinary jurisdiction over the Greek Catholics of the Vicariate of Constantinople and was consecrated titular Bishop of Theodoropolis in Rome. at the Greek Church of St. Athanasius on 15 August of the same year.

The organization of the Greek missions started by Bishop Papadopoulos and interrupted by the war in 1914, was resumed in 1918. Recent progress has proved the efficacy of native works in schismatical countries, if they are provided with sufficient means and with zealous missionaries. During the last three years the number of the Greek missionaries has been increased from eight to thirteen; the work has been provided with proper buildings for bishop's residence, presbytery, seminary, convent, and schools frequented by hundreds of Schismatic children to whom is given an entirely Catholic education. Conversions have averaged about one hundred a year and there is every reason to believe that this average is going to be much higher in the near future, if only this important work is provided with more schools and a greater number of Missionaries. Last year (1921) Bishop Calavassy founded a Congregation of Sisters of the Greek Rite, the first founded among the Greeks, and to whom he gave the name "Sisters of the Pam-macaristos." This new congregation is under the direction of an Ursuline nun, Rev. Mother Magdalen Photiades, of a prominent family of Athens, who was requested by Pope Benedict XV to embrace the Greek Rite and take up this work. The seminary founded in 1919 is directed by the secular clergy of Bishop Calavassy; the building has a capacity of thirty seminarians. The Melchites, or Arabic-speaking Syrians of the Greek Rite, have a church with a priest subject to the jurisdiction of the Greek Catholic Patriarch of Antioch. As the Syrians and Chaldean patriarchs have no jurisdiction whatever in Constantinople, the Chaldean and Syrian priests in this territory, as well as the very few faithful of those rites are subject to the jurisdiction of the Greek Catholic Bishop. There is no church of either rite in Constantinople. During recent years several of the prominent clergy of this diocese have died. Father Polycarp Anastasiades, one of the founders of the Greek Catholic community of Constantinople in 1861, the year of his conversion, and for over forty years director of this work, died in 1911, at the age of seventy-two; Father Sophronios Petrides, Assumptionist of the Greek Rite, editor of "Echos d'Orient," and contributor to the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, died in 1911; Father Silvain Barthassat, Assumptionist of the Greek Rite, Rector of the Oriental Seminary of Koum-Kapou, now closed, died in 1917; Father Maximos Malatakis, author of the confutation of the encyclical letter written by the Orthodox Patriarch of Constantinople in answer to Leo XIII's invitation to re-unite with Rome, died in 1910; Father Christophore Papadopoulos, Vicar General under Bishop Papadopoulos, died in 1920.

Bishop Calavassy counts about 1500 Greek Catholics (1922) under his jurisdiction, and has 1 secondary school for boys with 220 students, 1 for girls with 100 students, and 2 elementary schools with 100 pupils. Two associations are formed among the laity, "Unio Græcorum Catholicorum Constantinopolis" and the sodality of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Consultors, DIOCESAN (C. E., IV-323.—There must now be diocesan consultors in all dioceses, and likewise in all secular prelatures in which there are no cathedral chapters. The consultors have the same rights and duties as the cathedral chapter in the government of members of the diocese and at councils. They should number at least six, or four in dioceses where priests are few, and should live in or near the episcopal city. Before taking office they must swear to act faithfully and without favor. They are all appointed first by the bishop without consultation, but if during their three-year period of office one of them dies, the bishop is to consult the others concerning his substitute,—if this happen during an episcopal vacancy the vicar capitular with the consent of the other consultors appoints the substitute, who must be confirmed by the new bishop if he is to remain in office.

Codex jur. can., 423-28.

Consultors, PAROCHIAL.—The rules governing the appointment, number, duties and removal of parochial consultors are the same as those relating to synodal examiners. The two offices may be held by the same person, who cannot, however, act in both capacities in the same case.

Conventuals, ORDER OF FRIARS MINOR (cf. C. E., IV-344d).—A steady and solid growth of the order has set in since the eighties, so that there are almost 2000 members at present, with bright prospects of a more prosperous future. There are 20 provinces with about 200 convents. The instructions, both religious and educational, are imparted in the numerous colleges of the order, of which every province possesses, as a rule, one or more for the philosophical and theological formation of its clerics. There is one International College at Rome which supplies, to some extent, the lacuna caused by the suppression of the once famous St. Bonaventure College. Besides the assistance at choir and other spiritual practices, customary to religious, the members devote themselves to study, to giving missions, preaching, and hearing confessions. In some countries, as for instance in the United States, they have charge of numerous parishes, missions, and stations. They have also the honor to provide the penitentiaries in the Basilica of St. Peter, Rome, and in the Holy House of Loreto, and have besides 12 penitentiaries ad instar in the Basilica of Assisi, 3 in Padua, and 1 in Osimo. The order has also the right to have a Consultor of the Holy Office, who is ipso facto the dean of the consultors, and likewise a permanent Consultor on the Congregation of Sacred Rites. To its missions in Moldavia and the Orient the order added a house in Damascus in 1912. It also founded a convent in Spain, and increased its foundations in Denmark; its steady growth in the United States is evident from the fact that it has added 11 houses since 1910, of which the seminary at Rensselaer, N. Y., and the shrine at Carey, Ohio, are the most important. The order directs also the nuns of the "Giglio," founded in Assisi in 1702 with branches in the Orient. Aggregated to it, with the right of participation in its spiritual privileges, are numerous communities of nuns, of which nine are in the United States. Many thousands of secular tertiaries are under the direction of the order; over 5000 in the United States alone. A variety of institutions are in charge of the religious of the order, such as chaplaincies of prisons, orphanages, hospitals, homes for the aged, etc.

The order has produced many distinguished men in the various branches of learning. A few of the more recent literary authors are: Balthasar Lombardi (d. 1802), the famous commentator of Dante; Laurence Fusconi (d. 1814); Louis Pungileoni (d. 1844); Anthony Brandimarte (d. 1838), the librarian of Leo XII and hymnographer of the Congregation of Rites; William della Valle (d. 1805); Francis Villardi (d. 1833); Francis Detti (d. 1885); Alphonse Consoli (d. 1879). In a very special manner the order has cultivated the art of music, having produced more than 300 masters distinguished in this art. Those deceased since 1800 are: Louis Anthony Sabatini (d. 1809); Stanislaus Mattei (d. 1825), who had such eminent disciples as Morlacchi, Rossini, and Donizetti; Alexander Borroni (d. 1896); and Emil Norsa (d. 1919). Louis Palomes (d. 1906) and Conrad Eubel, still living, are important names in Franciscan historical studies. In the field of pedagogy one of the most celebrated educators of the past century was Gregory Girard of Fribourg, Switzerland (d. 1850), to whom his native city erected a public monument. Of painters of recent note Paschal Sarullo (d. 1892) is worthy of special mention. The early centuries, especially, produced many theologians and philosophers; in the nineteenth century died Andrew Sgambati (1805), Gregory Girard (1850) and Angelus Bigoni of Coriu (1860). Recent generals of the orders are: Dominic Reuter, of Trenton, N. J. (1904-10), who reintroduced the order in Spain and England; Victor Sottaz of Fribourg, Switzerland (1910-13); and Dominic Tavani of Apulia, at first vicar general (1913-19), and now minister general since 1919.

Contemporary history of the order may be gleaned from its periodicals of which, for this purpose, the main ones are the "Commentarium Ordinis Minorum Conventualium" (SS. XII Apostoli, Rome), and the "Miscellanea Francescana" (Sacro Convento, Assisi).

Conversano, DIOCESE OF (CONVERSANENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-346c), in the province of Bari, Southern Italy, suffragan of Bari. Rt. Rev. Antonio Lamberti, appointed to this see, 1897, died 17 August, 1917, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Domenico Lancellotti, b. at Montegallo, 1858, secretary of the camereria, 1904, prelate of the Holy See, 1908, appointed titular Bishop of Deleos, 29 April, 1909, transferred to Troja, 21 April, 1911, transferred to Conversano, 14 March, 1918. In July, 1911, the cathedral of the diocese was destroyed by fire, but its reconstruction was begun, with funds contributed chiefly by the government, and after being interrupted by the war, it was continued under the present bishop. During the World War 18 priests of this diocese were mobilized, and the clergy at home, as well as the laity, took an active part in patriotic and charitable works. The 1922 statistics credit this diocese with a population of 80,954; 7 parishes, 130 churches, 7 mission stations, 2 convents of men and 1 of women, 100 secular and 5 regular clergy, 5 brothers, 1 seminary, 30 seminarians, 1 college of men with 30 teachers and 400 students, 1 for girls with 10 teachers and 100 students, 7 elementary schools with about 60 teachers, 1 home for the poor, 7 asylums, and 5 hospitals.

Conza, ARCHDIOCESE OF (COMPSANA; cf. C. E., IV-350a), with the perpetual administration of Campagna, in Southern Italy. This see is at present (1922) under the administration of Most. Rev. Carmine Caesarano, b. at Pagani, 1869, appointed Bishop of Azieri 8 April, 1915, promoted 30 September, 1918, to succeed Most Rev. Nicolas Piccirilli, transferred to Lanciano 25 April, 1918. These united dioceses count a total population of 122,861, 37 parishes, 230 churches, 2 monasteries for men and 12 for women, 194 secular and 12 regular clergy, 1 interdiocesan seminary, 30 seminarians. All the elementary schools are supported by the government. The Sursum Corda Association is formed among the clergy, and the Unione popolare fra i Cattolici among the laity. A decree separating the two dioceses of Campagna and Conza is expected at any time now; this decree will make the diocese of Campagna self-governing, and unite the diocese of Sant' Angelo dei Lombardi to Conza.

Cooktown, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (COOKPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-350b), comprises North Queensland, Australia, from 18° 30' south latitude to Cape York. It is entrusted to the Irish Augustinians. Rt. Rev. James D. Murray died 13 February, 1914, and was succeeded by the present vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. John Hearey, born in Wicklow, Ireland, 1868, ordained in Rome 1891, served as Prior of New Ross and was appointed, 3 May, 1914, titular Bishop of Coracesium; he resides at Cairns. The Sisters of Mercy (50) and the Sisters of the Good Samaritan (6) are established here. By the latest statistics (1921) the vicariate is divided into 6 districts and comprises 40 stations, 9 regular clergy, 22 churches, 56 nuns, and 3 boarding schools. The total Catholic population numbers 7,000, and there are 1,200 children attending Sunday schools. Six primary schools, which are conducted in Cooktown proper, have an attendance of 900 children. All district and private hospitals permit the ministry of the priests, and although the Catholic schools do not receive any aid from the government, state scholarships may be worked out in the secondary schools.

Coppens, CHARLES, educationist and author, b. at Turnhout, Belgium, on 24 May, 1835; d. in Chicago on 14 December, 1920. He received his classical training in the Jesuit College of his native town, and, desiring to devote himself to the growing Church in America, he entered the society in 1853. After studying philosophy at St. Louis and theology at Fordham he was ordained by Cardinal McCloskey in 1865. Father Coppens spent close on sixty years in the cause of Catholic education, teaching rhetoric for seventeen years at Florissant and St. Louis, and philosophy for more than twenty years, principally in Detroit College and Creighton University. His "Practical Introduction to English Rhetoric" (1885), a pioneer work in Catholic schools, enjoyed immense popularity, as did his excellent "Act of Oratorical Composition" (1886); while his "Moral Principles and Medical Practice" (1898) was the first Catholic treatise in English on medical jurisprudence. In addition to numerous articles in Catholic magazines and reviews we are indebted to Father Coppens for several textbooks, "Logic and Metaphysics" (1892), "Moral Philosophy" (1896), a brief "History of Philosophy" (1909); and two important historical studies: "Who are the Jesuits?" (1911), and "Protestantism, How it was brought about" (1907). His "Mystic Treasures of the Holy Mass" (1904) and "Spiritual Instructions for Religious" reveal him as a ascetic writer of merit.

Copus, JOHN EDWIN, writer, b. at Guilford, England, on 24 January, 1854; d. at Milwaukee, Wis. on 19 June, 1915. He was born of Protestant parents and was educated at the Archbishop Abbot and Lydgate schools in Guilford. After teaching at Broughton-under-Blean, Kent, and Western College, Somersetshire, he became a Catholic in 1876. In days gone by some of his kinsmen had gained renown in the Church, among them being Father John Copus, who was imprisoned for the Faith by Queen Elizabeth, and Alan Copus, who wrote a "Syntaxis historiae evangelicae," and died in 1568 a canon of St. Peter's, Rome.

In 1877 Copus emigrated to Canada and later to the United States, where he engaged in journalism, becoming commercial editor of the "Detroit News" in 1882. Five years later he joined the Society of Jesus, and after studying philosophy in St. Louis and theology at Woodstock, Maryland, he was ordained by Cardinal Gibbons in 1899. His work as a Jesuit did not diminish his enthusiasm for journalism, and he established the School of Journalism in Marquette University, Milwaukee, acting as its first director from 1910 till his death. Father Copus is well known as a writer of fiction for boys, his "Harry Russell" (1903), "St. Cuthbert's" (1903), "Shadows Lifted" (1904), "Tom Losely, Boy" (1906), and "The Making of Mortlake" (1909) is still enjoying great popularity. In addition he is the author of more serious fiction like "The Month of Nison," "Lydgate's Call," "Andros of Ephesus," "Sana Teipsum," and "The Son of Siro." As a playwright he revealed his skill in "The Chancellor," "Malagrida," and a dramatization of Longfellow's "Robert of Sicily."

Cordova, DIOCESE OF (CORDUBENSIS IN AMERICA; cf. C. E., IV-360c), comprises the states of Cordova and Rioja in the Argentine Republic, and is suffragan of Buenos Aires. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Zeno Bustos y Ferreyra, O.F.M., born in Cordova 1850, ordained 1874, served as Provincial of the Argentine Republic and was appointed 27 March, 1905. He is assisted by two auxiliaries, Rt. Rev. Innocent Davila y Matos, titular Bishop of Ostracine, and Rt. Rev. José Anselm Lague, titular Bishop of Forni. In 1918 the bishop published a vigorous pastoral letter protesting against the violent manifestation and anticlerical organizations which were spreading through the country under pretext of defending universal rights. This territory, which covers an area of 156,584 sq. miles, embraces a population of 780,000. The diocese is divided into 40 parishes and counts numerous churches and chapels.

Cordova, DIOCESE OF (CORDUBENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-359b), in Spain, comprises the province of Seville and some parishes in the provinces of Badajoz and Malaga. It covers an area of about 18,871 sq. miles, and is suffragan of Seville. Rt. Rev. Ramon Guillamet y Coma, born in San Esteban de Olof 1856, ordained 1878, served as secretary to the Bishop of Gerona, chancellor of Tarragone, vicar general and chancellor maestrescuola, appointed Bishop of Leon 29 April, 1909, was transferred to this see 18 July, 1913, to succeed Rt. Rev. José Pozuelo y Herrero, died 23 March, 1913. He was transferred to the diocese of Barcelona 22 April, 1920, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Adolfo Perez y Munoz, succeeded him. Born in Soto de Campos 1864, made a prelate of the Holy See 1899, appointed Bishop of the Canaries 29 April, 1909, transferred to Badajoz 18 July, 1913, he was again transferred to Cordova 11 July, 1920. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with a Catholic population of 525,000, 130 parishes divided among 17 archpriests, 447 priests, 269 chapels, and 110 convents with 107 religious and 1,256 Sisters.

Corfu, Zante, and Cephalonia, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CORCYRENSIS, ZACYNTHIENSIS ET CEPHALONTIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-362d).—The archdiocese consists of several islands in the Ionian sea belonging to Greece. By Apostolic decree of 3 June, 1919, the suffragan sees of Zante and Cephalonia, formerly administered by Corfu, were united to the metropolitan see. The present archdiocese is made up of 5 parishes, 2 of which are in Corfu, as are 4 of the 8 churches. There is 1 convent for men in Cephalonia and 1 in Santa Maura, and 2 for women in Corfu, 1 in Zante, and 1 in Cephalonia. There are 1 college for men with about 100 students, 4 for women with about 600 students and a combined total of 36 teachers; also 1 orphan asylum, 7 confraternities for the laity, and 2 juvenile societies. In the public asylums, etc., the ministry of the priests is permitted. There are 12 secular and 3 regular priests and 1 lay brother for a Catholic population of 5,000, of whom 4,000 are in Corfu, and which is made up of 1,000 Greeks, 2,000 Italians, 1,500 Maltese, with the remainder English, French, etc. Archbishop Teodore Antonio Polito (1901-11) was succeeded by Archbishop Dominic Darmanin, who died in 1919. The present archbishop is Most Rev. Leonardo Brindisi, formerly Bishop of Naxos, consecrated at Athens 2 May, 1909, succeeding to the see of Corfu 3 July, 1919.

Coria, DIOCESE OF (CAURIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-363c), in the province of Caceres, Spain, suffragan of Toledo. This see was filled by Rt. Rev. Ramon Peris y Mencheta, born in Valencia in 1851, and appointed to this see 21 May, 1894, until his death, 6 January, 1920. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Pedro Segura y Saenz was appointed to succeed him 10 July of the same year. Born in Darazo, Spain, 1880, he was ordained in 1906, became professor of canon law at the University of Burgos in 1909, and was appointed titular Bishop of Appolonia and auxiliary at Valladolid 14 March, 1916, where he served until his transfer. This diocese covers an area of about 8,091 sq. miles, and embraces a Catholic population of 193,000. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 135 parishes, 10 archpriests, 400 priests, 138 churches, 85 chapels and 25 convents with 40 religious and 250 Sisters.

Cork, DIOCESE OF (CORCAGIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-370c), in the province of Munster, Ireland, suffragan of Cashel. The long administration of Rt. Rev. Thomas Alphonsus O'Callaghan over this diocese ended with his death, 14 June, 1916. Born in Cork in 1839 he entered the Dominican novitiate in 1857, studied in Rome and was ordained in 1863. He was made Prior of Saint Clement's in Rome in 1881, and was appointed titular Bishop of Lambese (a see since suppressed) 13 June, 1884, and made coadjutor at Cork, where he succeeded Bishop Delaney 13 November, 1886. In 1914 Bishop O'Callaghan, greatly handicapped by age and infirmity, was given an auxiliary in the person of Rt. Rev. Daniel Cohalan, appointed titular Bishop of Vaga 25 May, 1914. He was born in the diocese 1858, and studied at Maynooth, where he later served as professor of dogma, was ordained in 1882, and has since written a number of theological works. Upon the death of Bishop O'Callaghan he was transferred to succeed him, and now (1922) fills the see. From the time of his appointment as auxiliary, Bishop Cohalan has taken an active part in local social and administrative work, and it was largely due to his efforts, assisted by those of the Nationalist Lord Mayor of the city, that peace was preserved in Cork during the tragic Easter week of 1916. However, Cork has been the scene of some of the most violent demonstrations during the recent struggle, and in May, 1921, one of its priests, Rev. James O'Callaghan of the North Cathedral, was murdered by a band of armed men, who broke into the home of one of the aldermen where he had his lodgings.

By the latest census (1911) the diocese includes a total population of 192,318, of whom 169,335 are Catholic. It comprises 35 parishes, 33 parish priests, 2 administrators, and 86 curates and chaplains, 74 regular clergy, 70 churches, 7 monasteries, 12 houses of regulars, 26 convents of nuns, 4 schools under Christian Brothers, 7 under Presentation Brothers, 4 directed by Presentation Nuns, 6 by the Sisters of Mercy, and 1 by the Sisters of Charity, 1 French community and 1 French institute.

Corpus Christi, DIOCESE OF (CORPUS CHRISTI; cf. C. E., XVI-35a), in Texas, was erected out of the Vicariate Apostolic of Brownsville, 23 March, 1912, the boundaries remaining the same. The first bishop of the new diocese was Rt. Rev. Paul Joseph Nussbaum, C.P., b. Philadelphia, 7 September, 1870, appointed Bishop of Corpus Christi 4 April, 1913, retired and made titular Bishop of Gerasa 22 April, 1920. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Emmanuel B. Ledvina, D.D., appointed 30 April, 1921.

By present (1921) statistics the Catholic population of this diocese numbers about 98,000, of whom 92,000 are Mexican and the remainder chiefly American with a small percentage of German, Bohemian and Spanish. There are 31 parishes, 75 churches, 83 mission stations, 14 secular priests and 31 regulars, 189 Sisters, 1 college for boys with 6 teachers and 176 students, 4 academies, namely, Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Laredo and Rio Grande City, with 62 teachers and 1,617 pupils, 1 orphan asylum and 3 hospitals. The Knights of Columbus and Catholic Daughters of America are organized in the diocese.

Corrientes, DIOCESE OF (CORRIENTENSIS), in the Argentine Republic, suffragan of Buenos Aires. This see, erected 21 January, 1910 (see C. E., XVI-35), is filled by its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Louis Niella, born in this province 1854, ordained 1879, appointed 3 February, 1911. By a Decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Council, 13 November, 1920, the jurisdiction of the bishops of the Argentine over the female societies of St. Vincent de Paul, in all dioceses where they are organized, was established. Although not canonically erected confraternities or pious unions, the Decree nevertheless defines them as coming under the bishop's jurisdiction, as do all local societies and affiliations formed among the faithful. The diocese covers an area of 88,844 sq. miles and comprises 370,000 inhabitants. It is dedicated to the Holy Cross of Milagros, and includes 26 parishes, 48 chapels and 3 convents.

Cortona, DIOCESE OF (CORTONENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-401b), in the province of Arezzo, Central Italy, is directly subject to the Holy See. This see is filled (1922) by Rt. Rev. Michael Baldetti, born in the diocese in 1854, after ordination incorporated in the Diocese Perugia, and appointed to this see 16 December, 1901. The territory embraces a Catholic population of 30,200, scattered through 50 parishes, served by 81 secular and 36 regular clergy, 22 seminarians, 34 Brothers, 90 Sisters, and 60 churches or chapels.

Corumbá, DIOCESE OF (CORUMBENSIS), in Brazil, suffragan of Cuyabá, was erected 10 March, 1910 (see C. E., XVI-35). The first bishop, Rt. Rev. Cyril de Paula Freitas, retired and was transferred to the titular see of Antipatris, 8 February, 1918. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Maurice Da Rocha, then serving as secretary to the Bishop of Maceio, was appointed to succeed him 10 March, 1919. The cathedral is dedicated to the Holy Cross. No statistics are yet published.

Cosenza, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CUSENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-403a), in the province of Naples, southern Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Camillo Sorgenti, who filled this see for thirty-seven years, died 2 October, 1911, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Tommaso Trussoni, b. in Chiavenna 1856, papal chamberlain 13 June, 1911, appointed 14 December, 1912. In 1920 the diocese lost its vicar general, who had served in this capacity for thirty-five years, through the death of Mgr. Federico Piragino.

By latest statistics (1922) this diocese comprises 111 parishes, 164 secular and 37 regular clergy, 13 convents of men, 80 monks, 1 monastery of women, Dominicans of the second order, 1 seminary, 80 seminarians, 1 normal school for girls with 100 pupils. All the superior schools, lyceums, technical and industrial schools are under the control of the government. One periodical, "L'Unione," is published; 2 societies are organized among the clergy, and 4 among the laity, besides numerous rural federations.

Costa Rica, REPUBLIC OF (cf. C. E., IV-417d).—The area of the Republic is estimated at 23,000 English square miles, divided into seven provinces, San José, Alajuela, Heredia, Cartago, Guanacaste, Punta Arenas, and Limón. According to an estimate made on 31 December, 1918, the population was 459,423, of which approximately 300,000 were of the peon class with a small daily wage. There are some 18,000 colored British West Indians, mostly on the banana farms in the Limón Province. The largest cities are: San José (38,016), Alajuela (9,177), Cartago (14,398), Heredia (9,328), Liberia (2,639), Limón (7,790), Punta Arenas (5,283).

ECONOMIC STATUS.—The principal agricultural products are coffee (24,000,000 pounds estimated production in 1920-21) and bananas, 95,400 acres (7,129,655 bunches valued in 1918 at about $3,100,000). About 2,700 acres are under tobacco. The United States furnished more than half of the imports (59.9%) in 1918 and took a still larger share of the exports (90.46%). Coffee represented more than one-third of the total exports of Costa Rica, and bananas amounted to only a little less. Cocoa, hides and woods are also important items in the export trade. The total foreign trade in 1919 was 54,337,255 colones (1 colone equals $4653 at par); imports, 16,167,718 colones; exports, $38,169,537.

COMMUNICATIONS.—Costa Rica has in actual operation 338 miles of railway, including branches and sidings, all of 3 ft. 6 in. gauge. Of this mileage 82 miles are the property of the Government, 67 miles belong to the Northern Railway Co., and 189 miles to the Costa Rica Railway. As a matter of fact, the Costa Rica Railway is leased to the Northern, so that the whole system of some 256 miles, having its local focal point at Port Limón, is under one general management. In 1919 there entered the ports of the Republic 479 vessels of 486,131 tons.

MANUFACTURES.—There are officially enumerated 3,296 factories in the Republic, including coffee drying establishments, starch, broom, and wood-work factories. In 1919 the first attempt was made at labor organization throughout the country. There is a pronounced opposition to the continuation of the national liquor business. Liquor manufacturing is a government monopoly, and its existence is temporarily prolonged by the fact that it stands as security to the loan of 35,000,000 francs made by France to Costa Rica in 1911, France having first mortgage on the revenues of the alcohol and liquor manufacture. There is also an export tax which, in the opinion of many, tends to discourage agricultural development. The two per cent tax which was levied in 1913 on the monthly gross sales of all large business and commercial houses was abolished at the end of January, 1920.

The largest sources of income are the export taxes, customs, liquor, and direct taxes, including 2% on business and 6% on banks. The largest items of expenditures are finance, public instruction, and internal development. At the end of 1919 the internal debt was $7,440,000, and the foreign debt about $14,752,280.

EDUCATION.—In 1918 there were 315 elementary schools, the teachers numbered 950 and the enrolled pupils 25,857, the average attendance being 19,672. For secondary instruction there are at San José a lyceum for boys, with 357 pupils in 1918, and a college for girls with 350 pupils. A normal school, established in 1915 at Heredia, has 220 pupils. The towns of Cartago, Alajuela, and Heredia have each a college.

GOVERNMENT.—By the election law of 18 August, 1913, universal suffrage was adopted for all male citizens who are of age and able to support themselves, except those deprived of civil rights, criminals, bankrupts and the insane. The voting for president, deputies and municipal councilors is public, direct and free. According to the election law of 23 October, 1918, the election of president and vice-president of the Republic is made by an electoral college, composed of those who at any time of the election are senators and deputies, and by those, what at any time within a period of six months, may have been president of the Republic. The legislative power is vested in a chamber of representatives elected for four years, one-half retiring every two years. The presidents in the last decade were: Ricardo Jimenez, 1910-1914; Alfredo Gonzales, 1914-1918; Don Julio Acosta, 1918-1922.

A new penal code was adopted in 1918. Capital punishment cannot be inflicted. On 23 August, 1921, the right of suffrage was granted to all citizens of Costa Rica, including women. They must be able to read and write and be citizens by birth, naturalization or adoption.

RECENT HISTORY (1910-1921).—The boundary between Costa Rica and Panama, which had been in dispute for many years, was fixed by the arbitration of President Loubet of France in 1900. It begins at Monkey (Mona) Point on the Atlantic, follows a ridge of hills overlooking the valley of the Sixola River, westward to Mount Chirripo and Mount Pando. Thence the line strikes southeast along the crests of the Talamancas Mountains as far as nine degrees north latitude, where it turns sharply south to Burica Point, cutting Burica Peninsula in half. West of this peninsula is the Golfo River, near the mouth of which is Coto. This territory has been in possession of Panama ever since the Republic was founded, and of Colombia before that. The Golfo River empties into the Golfo Dulce about thirty miles west of Burica Point Ridge and the point where its headquarters rise is fifty miles inland. The river, the ridge, and the gulf coast form a triangle which is the territory in dispute.

It was awarded to Costa Rica by President Loubet in compensation for a considerable area of land given to Panama on the Atlantic side between the Sixola River and the ridge north of its valley extending west to Mount Chirripo. Nevertheless, Costa Rica, since 1881, has occupied the Sixola River Wedge, despite President Loubet's decision, asserting that the Loubet award was not clear. In 1914 Chief Justice White of the United States Supreme Court was asked to render a legal interpretation of it, but Panama declined to accept his interpretation; Costa Rica held the Sixola watershed and Panama retained the Coto triangle until the recent invasion. This occurred on 21 February, 1920, after which time the United States warships were ordered to Costa Rica to protect American lives and property. The dispute was finally given to the United States to arbitrate, as agreed in the treaty of 1915, whereby Panama and Costa Rica agreed to submit disputes to the United States as mediator.

In March, 1916, Costa Rica brought action against Nicaragua for violation of her rights under the Canal Treaty with the United States, and the Central Court of Justice gave a decision in her favor. A bloodless revolution occurred on 27 January, 1917, when President Gonzales Flores was deposed by the military forces at the capital. After the overthrow a provisional chief executive was created in the person of the minister of war, Federico Tinoco Granados, who on 11 April, 1917, was elected president. The United States Government, however, refused to recognize his government unless it proved that it had been elected by legal and constitutional means. In August, 1919, Tinoco left the country and Julio Acosta was elected president. During the presidency of Tinoco, Costa Rica was refused admittance to the League of Nations, but after his overthrow she was admitted, the fact in her favor being her declaration of war against Germany in 1917. Her activities included the placing of the waters and ports at the disposal of the United States for war purposes, the canceling of the letters patent of all Germans in the consular service, and the organization of a guard service along the coast and boundaries as a protection against German activities.

COTRONE, DIOCESE OF (COTRONENSIS; cf. C. E. IV-422d), in the province of Catanzaro, Southern Italy, suffragan of Reggio di Calabria. Rt. Rev. Saturnino Peri, appointed to this see 22 October, 1908, was transferred to Iglesias 16 December, 1920, and as no successor has yet been appointed the diocese is now (1922) governed by an apostolic administrator in the person of Most Rev. Carmelo Pujia, Archbishop of Santa-Severina. By 1920 statistics this diocese is credited with 15,000 Catholics, 9 parishes, 1 vicariate, 30 secular priests, 30 Sisters, 3 seminarians, and 30 churches or chapels.

Councils, GENERAL (cf. C. E., IV-423).—No council is oecumenical unless it has been convoked by the pope, who has the exclusive right of presiding over it personally or by proxy, of deciding what questions are to be debated, of transferring, suspending, or dissolving the council, and of confirming its decrees. If any of those who by law are to be called to an oecumenical council cannot come, they must send a deputy and give a satisfactory reason of their absence. The deputy can be present, as such, only at public sessions; he has no vote, but on the conclusion of the council he may sign the acts. None of those who should be present may leave before the end of the council, unless with the permission of the president, to whom he shall have made known the reason necessitating his departure. The decrees of a general council are not definitely binding until they have been confirmed by the pope and promulgated by his order. If a pope dies during a general council, it is interrupted until his successor orders it to be continued.

Codex jur. can., 222-29.

Courts, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., IV-447).—Cases brought before the ecclesiastical courts for the infliction or declaration of a penalty are called criminal, otherwise they are termed contentious. The pope alone may deal judicially with all suits involving rulers, their children and the heirs apparent to the throne, cardinals, papal legates, and residential or titular bishops in criminal cases. The tribunals of the Holy See have exclusive jurisdiction over (a) residential bishops in contentious suits—but disputes concerning the rights or temporal property of a bishop, or the mensa, or diocesan curia, may with the bishop's consent be tried before a diocesan tribunal consisting of the official and two of the older synodal judges or by the judge immediately higher; (b) dioceses or moral ecclesiastical persons subject immediately to the pope, for instance, exempt religious orders. Only a judge appointed by the pope has jurisdiction in a case which the sovereign pontiff has taken up. The suit is to be decided in the defendant's forum, but if the defendant has several fora, the plaintiff may choose between them. A peregrinus in Rome may be cited to appear there, but he has the right of returning home and of asking that the case be remitted to his own ordinary; on the other hand a person who has been stopping a year in Rome may insist on being cited before a Roman tribunal.

Court of first instance.—Usually a case is first heard in the diocesan court, where the local ordinary is ex-officio the judge; he may act, personally or through others. Each bishop must appoint an official, other than the vicar general—unless owing to the small size of the diocese it is preferable that one priest should hold both offices—with ordinary power of deciding litigation. He and the bishop form one tribunal, and he may adjudicate in all cases except those that the bishop reserves to himself. The official, who may have vice-officials as assistants, should be a priest, not less than thirty years old and skilled in law; he may be removed by the bishop; during a vacancy he continues in office, and cannot be removed by the vicar capitular; but he requires confirmation by the new bishop. If the vicar general happens to be the official during a vacancy, he ceases to be vicar, but continues as official. If the official is chosen vicar capitular, he is to appoint a new official. In addition each diocese should have a number of priests, not more than twelve, to act as judges with power delegated by the bishop; they are appointed usually in the synod and are known as synodal judges; they hold office for ten years, and can be removed only for grave cause by the bishop after consulting the cathedral chapter. It is now laid down, all customs to the contrary being reprobated and all contrary privileges revoked, that (a) contentious cases concerning the bond of holy orders, matrimony, the rights or temporalities of the cathedral and all criminal cases entailing loss of permanent benefices or excommunications are to be tried before a collegiate tribunal of three judges; (b) crimes involving deposition, perpetual loss of the right to wear clerical dress, and degradation are reserved to a tribunal of five judges. The local ordinary may have any other case tried before three or five judges, and must do so in cases of serious moment. These collegiate tribunals decide by a majority vote. Though the bishop may preside over the diocesan tribunal, except in the instances mentioned above, he is strongly advised not to do so, particularly in criminal and grave contentious suits. The judge of first instance for disputes between exempt clerical religious or in a monastery sui juris, is usually the provincial or local abbot respectively; in suits between two provinces or two monasteries, the general or head of the monastic congregation respectively, or their delegate; but between different orders or between non-exempt or lay religious, or between a religious and secular cleric or layman, the local ordinary acts as judge.

Court of second instance.—An appeal is ordinarily taken from the court of a suffragan to the metropolitan. (see APPEALS). If the first decision was handed down by a collegiate tribunal, at least the same number of judges must hear the appeal.

Court of third instance.—From the two preceding courts an appeal may be taken; if the dispute has not become res judicata, to the Sacred Roman Rota for final decision (C. E., XIII-205). If a litigant is dissatisfied with the proceedings in the Rota on the grounds of violation of secrecy, or partiality of an auditor, or if he contests the validity of the judgment, he can address himself to the Apostolic Signature (C. E., XIII-149), which may examine his complaint and, if equitable, refer the matter back to the Rota for its consideration. The Apostolic Signature, moreover, can decide questions of competency, if the judges between whom the conflict of opinion has arisen are not subject to a higher tribunal, and further it is delegated to examine and answer petitions addressed to the sovereign pontiff asking to have a suit sent before the Rota. The Apostolic Signature is never bound to state the reason for its decision, but it may do so.

Delegated Courts.—A judge delegated by the Holy See may avail himself of the services of the curial officers of the diocese in which he is to adjudicate, or of any other persons (unless restricted by the rescript); but those delegated by a local ordinary must employ the officers of the diocesan curia, unless the bishop for grave cause decrees that special assistants should be engaged.

Procedure.—The judge proceeds with the case only at the request of the litigants if the dispute is merely personal, but in criminal suits or those involving the interests of the Church or the salvation of souls he proceeds in virtue of his office. Dilatory exceptions, particularly those regarding persons, must be taken before the pleading (contestatio litis), unless the grounds for objecting arise later or the party swears that they had not come to his notice earlier; the competency of the judge, however, may be questioned at any stage of the case, and an exception based on excommunication may be raised at any time before the definitive judgment. Peremptory exceptions known as litis finita, which would stop the suit entirely if upheld, are to be taken and decided before the pleading; they may be taken later, but the party objecting must pay the costs, unless he proves that he was not responsible for the omission; other peremptory objections are to be made during the course of the trial. Counterclaims may be made after the pleadings; they are to be tried ordinarily along with the original suit. The question of surety for costs and other similar matters are generally to be discussed before the pleadings. Extension of time may be granted to either party by the judge if it is requested before the customary period has elapsed, except when the law has laid down a limit after which it recognizes no legal claim to relief; if the last day is a feast-day, the period is extended to the morrow.

The diocesan court is as a rule to be held in a hall near the bishop's residence, which should contain a crucifix prominently displayed and a copy of the Gospels; the bishop is to issue a public decree stating the day and the hour, when the court can ordinarily be approached. No one should be admitted to the trial unless the judges believe his presence to be necessary. The record of the proceedings is as far as possible to be drawn up in Latin, but the questions and answers of witnesses should be recorded in the vernacular. The actuary's signature and the seal of the court should appear on each leaf; when the signatures of the litigants or witnesses are required, if they cannot or will not sign, the fact should be recorded in the record and the judge and actuary should declare that the statements were read to the party or witness and that he could not or would not sign. In cases of appeal, indexed copies of the record, authenticated by the actuary or chancellor, are forwarded to the higher court; in case of necessity the original record could be sent. If they are sent to a place where the vernacular language is unknown the records should be translated into Latin; if they have not been properly prepared, they may be rejected by the higher court.

Parties.—The plaintiff and defendant may be compelled to appear personally; minors appear through their parents or guardians, but in suits involving spiritual interests they can act without leave of the parents or guardians, if they have attained the use of reason, and if they are fourteen years of age can appear personally, otherwise they are to be represented by a guardian chosen by the ordinary or a procurator named by them with the ordinary's permission. Religious can engage in lawsuits without their superior's consent only (a) in vindication of the rights they acquired against their order by profession; (b) when it is necessary in order to defend their rights while they are living with permission outside of the houses of their order; (c) when they wish to denounce their superior. A bishop can appear on behalf of the cathedral church or episcopal mensa; but to do so lawfully, he must listen to the cathedral chapter or council of administration or have their consent or advice, when such a sum of money as would necessitate their consent or advice for valid alienation is involved. Beneficiaries may prosecute or defend suits on behalf of their benefice, but to act licitly they should have the written consent of the ordinary or, if there is not time to obtain it, of the vicar forane. Prelates and superiors of chapters, sodalities, and colleges require the consent of these bodies; and the local ordinary may appear personally or by proxy in the name of a moral body whose administrator neglects to take action. Excommunicates vitandi or others after declaratory or condemnatory sentence cannot appear personally except to contest the justice or legitimacy of their excommunication; they may appear by a procurator to avert any other spiritual danger; otherwise they have no standing in court. Other excommunicates can generally appear in court.

In criminal cases the defendant must always have an advocate; and in contentious cases involving the public welfare or the interests of minors, the judge must appoint one to assist a litigant who has none, and may even provide a second advocate if the circumstances demand it.

The right of action in contentious suits, both real and personal, may be lost by prescription; but the question of personal status may always be raised. Criminal actions are terminated by the death of the defendant, by condonation by a lawful superior, and by delay in starting the suit; actions for affronts are barred in a year, trials for special crimes against the sixth and seventh commandments in five years; trials for simony or homicide in ten years; all other criminal actions in three years; suits, however, reserved to the Holy Office are governed by the special regulations of that body. Even if a criminal action has been barred by lapse of time, a suit may at times be brought to recover damages, and a legitimate superior may be obliged to refrain from promoting a cleric if a doubt remains as to his fitness, and even to prohibit him from exercising his ministry if scandal would result. In contentious suits the time for prescription begins to run from the moment the action could have been begun; in criminal cases it runs from the date of the offense, unless the crime is continuous in its nature or is one of a series, in which cases it begins after the last act.

For procedure followed in the court cf. C. E., IV-452. The witnesses should ordinarily testify under oath, but those who have not reached puberty, the feeble-minded, those declared or condemned as excommunicated, perjurers, or infamous, persons of depraved morals, and known bitter enemies of one of the litigants are usually not sworn, their testimony being accepted merely as corroborative. In private suits, however, the parties may allow a witness to testify without being sworn; the judge may oblige the witness by oath to observe secrecy till the proceedings are made public, or even never to make them known where there is danger of scandal or discord. Though the witnesses should ordinarily testify in court, cardinals, bishops, and distinguished persons who by civil law are exempt from appearing before a judge as witnesses, can select another place for giving their evidence, but they should notify the judge. Nuns professed with solemn vows and persons who are ill may testify at home. A witness who lives in a remote district and cannot reach the judge without grave inconvenience may testify before a commission; and those living in another diocese under similar circumstances may give their evidence before a local tribunal. The litigants may not be present at the examination of the witnesses without the judge's permission, nor may the witnesses be examined in one another's presence. However, when all the testimony has been taken, the judge may confront two witnesses or a witness and a litigant if the witnesses differ seriously and substantially from one another or from a litigant, and if, at the same time, this is the easiest way of getting at the truth and can be done without danger of scandal or discord.

The witness is questioned only by the judge; if the litigants, the promoter of justice, or the defender of the bond are present at the examination and wish to get his answer on any point, they must submit their questions to the judge to be asked by him. The questions asked of the witness should be short, candid, uncomplicated, pertinent, and should not suggest the answer; if any facts have slipped from his memory the judge may assist him in recalling the circumstances, if this can be fairly done. The witness may not read his testimony, except when there is question of complicated figures; his evidence is to be taken down verbatim by the actuary, unless the judge deems anything too trivial to be recorded; before leaving the courtroom the transcript of the testimony is to be read to the witness so that he may add, suppress, correct, or vary what is necessary; the transcript is then signed by the witness, the judge, and the notary. When the parties or the procurators have not been present at the examination, the judge may order the publication of the evidence as soon as the testimony is complete. When this has been done exception cannot be taken to a witness, unless a party can prove or, at least, swears that he was not aware of the disqualification of the witness in time to object; he may, however, challenge the validity of the examination or of the evidence itself. The witness is entitled to be reimbursed for his traveling and hotel expenses and for loss of time, the judge fixing the amount. If the party who called him does not pay within the time fixed the evidence given on his behalf by the witness is considered stricken out. The testimony of one witness is not considered sufficient proof, except regarding matters done by him ex-officio; the concurrent testimony of two unexceptionable witnesses is necessary but sufficient to establish a point, though occasionally the judge may demand more ample proof on account of the gravity of the issue or if some doubt still remains.

An incidental suit sometimes occurs, as when after the citation a question arises which, though not contained expressly in the bill, is so connected with the main controversy that it should be settled first. It may be raised verbally or by writing and is decided by an interlocutory sentence of the judge, which for just cause may be corrected or revoked by him before the conclusion of the main case. These suits deal with contumacy, the intervention of a third party to protect his own interests, and attentates or attempts of either party or of the judge to do anything during the suit, against the interests of one of the litigants and without his consent.

The next step before the discussion of the case is the publication of the acts, by which is meant that each party and his advocate may inspect the acts which up to this point have been kept secret and may obtain copies of them. When the judge has ascertained that all necessary matters have been set forth or that the legal time for adducing proofs is over, he issues a decree declaring the case concluded, and fixes a date for the parties to bring forward their defense or claim. The defense is made in writing, copies being exchanged between the parties and also prepared for each of the judges, though the president of the court may order them to be printed. Each party is entitled to reply once in writing to the allegations of his adversary. If he thinks it advisable the judge may allow a brief address to be made, but only to clear up some obscure point. The judgment must be based on the acts and proofs; if the judge cannot attain moral certainty he should announce that the plaintiff has not proved his claim and uphold the defendant, except in a causa favorabilis—or when there is a doubt about the right of two claimants to possession, in which case he should leave both parties in undivided possession. Before a collegiate tribunal decides, its members meet and each reads his decision and the reasons therefor; a discussion takes place and any judge may change his opinion; if no agreement is reached another meeting may be called within a week for further discussion. The judgment must give the main details of the proceedings and decide for or against the defendant; prescribe what the loser is to do, and how, when, and where he must do it; give the reasons for the judgment, and settle the question of costs; and be dated and signed by the judge or judges and the notary. The sentence is to be published as soon as possible; this may be done by citing the parties to hear it read, or by informing them that they can obtain copies of it from the chancery, or by sending them a copy by registered mail.

Expenses.—In contentious suits the parties may be compelled to pay something towards the expenses of the court, unless they are excused by reason of their poverty. The usual costs are fixed by the provincial council or by a meeting of the bishops, and the judge may insist on security for the costs being lodged in the chancery. The loser usually pays all the costs, but in very intricate cases or in suits between relatives or for a just cause a pro rata payment may be ordered in the sentence. The decree of execution becomes operative when the suit has been definitively settled; in cases of necessity, however, a provisional execution may be ordered. The ordinary of the court of first instance, or if he refuses or neglects the appellate judge is the executor. The judgment in real actions is to be executed at once; in personal actions, however, a delay of not less than two, or more than six months is allowed.

Criminal cases.—Criminal courts deal only with public offenses; if the offense is a violation also of the civil law the ordinary usually does not institute proceedings if the accused is a lay person and the civil authorities have taken the case in hand. When the offense is certain, spiritual punishment such as penance, excommunication, suspension, and interdict can be imposed by precept irrespective of a trial. The right of action is reserved to the promoter of justice, but a private individual may and sometimes is obliged to denounce the offender to the bishop, chancellor, vicar forane, or parish priest, and must then aid the promoter. If the offense is not public and certain there must be a special inquisition to insure that an innocent party's reputation will not suffer by his being summoned to answer a criminal charge. If the accused when cited to appear confesses his guilt, the ordinary may confine himself to a judicial correction. This correction may be administered only twice, and never when the offense entails excommunication very specially or specially reserved to the Holy See, or infamy, deposition, degradation, or privation of a benefice, or when it is necessary to pronounce a vindictory punishment or censure, or when it would not be sufficient to repair the scandal and the wrong done. When there may be no correction or if it has been administered in vain, the record of the inquisition is turned over to the promoter of justice, who at once draws up a bill and the case proceeds along the lines of contentious suits already described.

Matrimonial Suits.—Matrimonial suits of rulers, their children, and heirs apparent are to be tried only before the Sacred Congregation, tribunal, or special commission which the pope selects for the purpose; the Congregation of the Discipline of the Sacraments has exclusive jurisdiction over dispensations from ratified unconsummated marriages; the Holy Office decides all questions of the Pauline Privilege. In other cases the competent judge is the local judge where the marriage was celebrated or where the party lives, or where the Catholic party has a domicile or quasi-domicile, if the other party is not a Catholic.

Ordination Suits.—To begin a suit on the validity of ordination or its obligations, a libellus should be forwarded to the Congregation of the Discipline of the Sacraments or if the question of a substantial defect of rite is involved, to the Holy Office; the congregation decides if the case is to be sent to the tribunal of the diocese of the cleric at the time of ordination, or to the diocese where he was ordained, if the suit is based on a defect of rite or if it may decide the question itself. The defender of the bond of ordination must intervene in these suits, which, in general, follow a procedure similar to that of matrimonial cases, including appeals and the sentence of nullity.

Couserans, DIOCESE OF. See PAMIERS.

Contances, DIOCESE OF (CONSTANTIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-455c), suffragan of Rouen, comprises all of the department of La Manche, France, and carries the united title of Avranches (Abrincensis). Since 28 November, 1898, this see has been filled by Rt. Rev. Joseph Guérard, born in Loudéac 1846, ordained in 1869, and served as titular chancellor of Rennes, where he was later consecrated. The activity and generosity of Bishop Guérard during his long administration have been largely responsible for the complete restoration of the ancient cathedral. In 1903 the choir was repaired according to its original form, the high altar, stalls and episcopal throne were restored, a new floor was laid and the beautiful tower in the center took on its old beauty. Two years later the Chapel of St. John, abandoned since 1755, was opened and given the title of Chapel of the Sacred Heart, and 1916 saw the restoration of the chapel and the devotion of Notre Dame des Puits. An unused apartment in the south wing of the cathedral was converted into a chapel for relics, and new windows were added and blessed. In 1919 the restoration was completed with the repairing of the great organ, constructed in 1720 and originally belonging to the Abbey of Sarigny-le-Vieux. The same year, on 3 July, the Government gave permission for the practice of religion in the abbatial basilica, which had been denied this privilege for thirty years. On 29 January, 1917, upon the request of Mgr. Lemonnier, Bishop of Bayeux, the authenticity of the relics preserved in the episcopal chancellor was established. In 1913 the Upper Seminary was transferred to the Château of Coigny, generously placed at the disposal of the bishop by a noble English lady, Madame la Comtesse de Beauchamps, of the family of the Dukes of Coigny. By 1920 statistics the diocese counts 476,119 Catholics, 16 first class parishes, 612 succursal parishes, and 284 vicariates formerly supported by the state.

Covington, DIOCESE OF (COVINGTONENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-462c), Kentucky, comprises an area of 17,286 sq. miles and a Catholic population of some 60,600, chiefly of German or Irish descent. Upon the death of Rt. Rev. Camillus P. Maes, third Bishop of Covington, 11 May, 1915, Rt. Rev. Ferdinand Brossart was consecrated his successor 25 January, 1916. Bishop Brossart was born in Bavaria, 19 October, 1849, but was brought to this country in his infancy and made all his studies here, spending all of his priestly career in the Diocese of Covington. Before his appointment as bishop he was vicar general of the diocese for twenty-eight years. During his administration he has liquidated the debt on the old cathedral and raised large sums for the erection of the present cathedral.

The diocese of Covington at present comprises: 64 parishes, 81 churches, 17 missions with 25 stations, 84 secular priests and 10 regulars, 4 lay brothers, 584 religious (women), 23 seminarians, 1 high school with 50 boys, 10 academies with attendance of 2,130, 2 normal schools for sisters with 10 teachers and an attendance of 46, a hospital training-school with an attendance of 24, 44 elementary schools with 226 teachers and an attendance of 8,413. Among the institutions are: 1 Good Shepherd home with 105 penitents and 59 children, 2 orphan asylums with 192 children and 2 hospitals with a yearly record of 6,887. The priests of the dioceses are permitted to minister in all the public institutions, but no support is received from the Government in supporting the Catholic institutions.

Cracow (POLISH, KRAKOW), DIOCESE OF (CRACOVENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-464c), in Poland, directly subject to Rome. This see, founded in the tenth century, is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Adam Stephen Sapieha, a member of the Polish nobility, born in Krasiczyn in 1867, studied at the Gregorian College in Rome, and ordained in 1893, served as vice-rector of the Seminary of Lemberg, made a private chamberlain in 1906 and appointed 27 November, 1911, to succeed Cardinal Puzyna (d. 8 September, 1911). He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Anatolius Nowak, titular Bishop of Irenopolis, appointed 17 December, 1900. In 1920 the population of the diocese numbered 975,525 Catholics, about 3,489 Protestants and 64,811 Jews. The territory is divided into 18 deaneries, 184 parishes, and 34 filial parishes, and comprises 557 secular and 313 regular clergy, an upper and a lower seminary at Cracow, 42 convents with 712 religious, and 1,499 Sisters distributed through 119 religious houses.

Crato, DIOCESE OF (CRATENSIS), erected by a Decree of 20 November, 1914, which divided the Diocese of Fortaleza, in the State of Ceara, Brazil, and took the southern portion to form the new diocese. It is bounded on the east by the boundary lines of the States of Ceara, Rio Grande, Norte, and Parahyba; on the south by the limits of the States of Ceara and Pernambuco; on the west by the boundary lines of the States of Ceara and Piauh. These limits were slightly changed on 24 January, 1919. The diocese comprises 21 parishes and a cathedral dedicated to Our Lady of Penha. It is under the direction of its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Quintin-Rodrigues de Oliveira e Silva, born in Guixeramobim (now part of this diocese) in 1863, ordained 1887, professor and then rector of the Seminary of Crato, founder of the Catholic journal, "La Cruz," named an honorary private chamberlain extra urbem, 27 January, 1912, and appointed to the see of Piauh, which he declined 17 February, 1913, and again appointed Bishop of Crato, 10 March, 1915. Statistics are not yet published for this diocese.

Creighton University (cf. C. E., IV-480b), a free institution located at Omaha, Nebraska, U. S. A., and conducted by the Society of Jesus. In 1913 a summer school was opened in connection with the university; in 1920, the College of Commerce was established and in 1921 two new buildings were completed, to be used for law and dentistry. The institution is steadily growing, the total registration for 1921 being 1,220; 707 men and 523 women, under a faculty of 161 members, 21 religious and 140 lay professors. A high school with a registration of 415 boys, is conducted in connection with the university. The president is Rev. John F. McCormack, S. J.

Crema, DIOCESE OF (CREMENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-481b), in the province of Cremona, Italy, suffragan of Milan. Rt. Rev. Bernardo Pizzorno, now titular Bishop of Flaviopolis, filled this see from 4 January, 1911, until he retired 6 December, 1915. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Dalmazio Minoretto, born in San Dalmazio in 1861, professor in the Seminaries of Monza and of Milan, appointed 6 December, 1915. The statistics of 1920 credit the diocese with 66,900 Catholics; 53 parishes, 70 secular and 4 regular clergy, 44 seminarians, 4 Brothers, 150 Sisters, and 78 churches or chapels.

Cremation (cf. C. E., IV-481).—The practice of cremation is reprobated by the Church, and no attention must be paid to any request for it. If a person has asked to be cremated he may not receive Christian burial, unless he repented before dying; unreserved excommunication is incurred ipso facto by those who order or compel the Christian burial of such persons, while those who give it voluntarily are interdicted from entering church, the censure being reserved to the ordinary.

Cremona, DIOCESE OF (CREMONENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-483b), in Lombardy, Northern Italy, suffragan of Milan. Mgr. Bonomelli, appointed to this see 27 October, 1871, although an active and zealous worker, merited the disapproval of the Church by his uncompromising attitude on the question of temporal power. He desired a union between the Church and State, but a union which would be to the advantage of the latter, and maintained very close relations with the Italian court. When the Pope condemned the separation of Church and State, Bishop Bonomelli published a pastoral letter directly opposed to the pronouncement of the Holy Father, causing a great scandal throughout the country. He afterwards went to Rome to justify himself, but Pius X refused to receive him. In 1889 he published a well known pamphlet, "Roma, l'Italia et la realtà della cose," setting forth the necessity of a reconciliation between the two; it was published anonymously, but was known to be the work of Bishop Bonomelli. He later declared himself to be its author and, to avoid direct condemnation, announced submission to the judgment of authority, thus gaining wider publicity for his book. He died in Nigoline, 3 August, 1914, after a long illness and was mourned by all the Liberal press, which fact was in itself the bitterest criticism of the man and the prelate. However two accomplishments still stand to his credit; the reorganization of the Upper Seminary in new buildings which have a capacity of 300 students, but which so far have never housed more than 35, and the foundation of an aid association for Italian emigrants. This provides moral protection for Italians in foreign countries and enables them to procure material assistance as well.

He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Giovanni Cazzani, transferred to Cremona, 22 January, 1915. Born in the diocese of Pavia in 1867, he studied at the university, was ordained in 1889, became a professor, and then vice-rector of the seminary, and later secretary to the bishop whom he followed to Ravenna in 1901. He returned to Pavia the following year and became rector of the seminary, chancellor of the cathedral, apostolic visitor to the seminary of the province of Benevento, and private chamberlain, and was appointed Bishop of Cesena, 5 August, 1904. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 377,790 and is credited by the 1920 statistics with 230 parishes, 541 secular and 40 regular clergy, 200 seminarians, 20 Brothers, 1,475 Sisters, and 530 churches or chapels.

Crime, IMPEDIMENT OF (cf. C. E., IV-489).—According to the Code of Canon Law a valid marriage cannot be contracted between two parties: (1) who, while one of them was legitimately married, have committed adultery together and promised to marry one another or have attempted to do so even civilly—this impediment is one of the minor grade; or (2) who while one was legitimately married have committed adultery together and in addition one of them has committed conjugicide; or (3) who by mutual co-operation, whether phys-cal or moral, have caused the death of one of their spouses, even if no adultery has been committed. It may be noted that the Code in treating of cases (2) and (3) makes no mention of any intention to contract marriage. Before the Code appeared, such intention was not laid down expressly in the law as necessary, yet the necessity of it was emphasized by the standard moralists and canonists. Ignorance of the existence of this impediment prevents it from arising. One may note, however, that (a) when a dispensation is granted by the Holy See from a ratified but unconsummated marriage, or (b) when permission is given to contract a new marriage on account of the presumed death of a spouse, there is always implied, when necessary, a dispensation from the impediment of crime arising from adultery, but it is never implied in cases (2) or (3) that is, from adultery and conjugicide or from conjugicide alone.

Codez jur. can., 988; 1053.

Crime in Canon Law.—By the word crime is meant an external sinful violation of a law to which at least an indeterminate canonical sanction has been annexed; unless the contrary is apparent what the Code says about crimes applies also to the violation of a precept imposed with a penal sanction. Its quality depends on the object of the law; its gravity on the importance of the law violated, the degree of imputability, and the injury caused. It is (a) public, if it is commonly known or has taken place under such circumstances that a prudent person must easily know that the fact is about to become public; (b) notorious notoriété juris, after a lawful judgment or after confession in court; (c) notorious notoriété facti, if publicly known and committed under such circumstances that it cannot be explained away or legally excused; (d) hidden or occult, if it is not public; materially occult, if the crime is secret; formally occult, if the imputability is so.

The degree of imputability depends on the malice of the agent and his responsibility for being ignorant of the law or for not exercising proper diligence. If the law has been violated externally, deliberate ill-will is presumed in the external forum until the contrary is proved. Ignorance of the penalty annexed diminishes somewhat but does not prevent imputability; so, too, do inadvertence and error. If the law has been violated through lack of proper diligence, prudence will dictate to what extent imputability has decreased. In case of merely ecclesiastical laws, relatively grave fear, necessity, or great inconvenience will often prevent an act from being criminal. Crime is aggravated by the higher rank of the offender or of the party wronged, and also by abuse of authority in committing it. A recidivist is one who after condemnation commits a crime of the same nature under such circumstances and within such time as preclude one from judging prudently that his evil will was changed.

As a general rule all those who have concurred in a crime as conspirators, or necessary accomplices, or those but for whose influence the crime would not have been committed share equally in the guilt with the principal offender; those, however, who were superfluous accomplices, or who partially withdrew their influence, or who participated only by neglecting their duty are less guilty. Accessories after the fact, e.g., those who praise the evil done, or share in its fruits, or conceal the culprit, do not share the guilt of the principal, if, before the commission of the crime, they had no agreement with him to act thus; their acts may, however, constitute distinct crimes. These provisions about co-operation have a special importance inasmuch as certain co-operators mentioned expressly as censured in the Constitution "Apostolicæ Sedis" are passed by in silence in the provisions of the Code imposing excommunications and suspensions.

An attempted crime occurs when one does or omits something that would naturally result in an actual crime, which, however, does not happen either because the agent has changed his mind or has made use of insufficient means. If the means employed were sufficient but the crime was prevented by the intervention of a cause independent of the agent's will, we have what is called a frustrated crime. The nearer an attempted crime approaches to fruition the greater is its imputability; but other things being equal it is less blameworthy than a frustrated crime. Nothing, however, is to be imputed to one who, having set about committing a crime, voluntarily desists before its accomplishment, provided no injury or scandal was caused by the attempt.

Punishments.—The Church has an innate right, independent of any human authority, of controlling its delinquent subjects by both spiritual and temporal penalties. These penalties are: (a) medicinal, or censures; (b) vindicatory; (c) remedial. There should be a just proportion between the punishment and a crime; whatever excuses from grave guilt excuses from all penalty, and the milder view is to prevail in doubtful cases, except when there is question of the justice or injustice of a penalty inflicted by a competent superior. Only those who may enact laws or impose precepts can annex punishments for the violation of these; a vicar general, therefore, cannot inflict a penalty without a special mandate. Those who legislate may under certain circumstances annex or increase penalties to secure the observance in their own territory of existing laws, whether divine or enacted by a higher superior. When a law has no sanction annexed a lawful superior may impose a just punishment on a subject violating it, even without previous warning, in case of scandal or of an unusually grave infraction; otherwise the culprit must not be punished unless the offense took place after due warning of the impending penalty. A judge may not increase the penalty imposed by law, except where the crime was committed under extraordinarily aggravating circumstances, but he may often remit it, partially or entirely, especially where the culprit has sincerely repented and repaired the scandal given or has been or is to be sufficiently punished by the evil authorities. When the number of crimes is very great the number of penalties need not be increased proportionately; the judge might for instance, inflict the heaviest punishment annexed to any of the offenses, with or without any additional remedial penalty. If a penalty latæ sententiæ or ferendæ sententiæ is imposed as a deterrent in an individual case it should ordinarily be declared in writing or in presence of two witnesses, the reasons for the punishment being given, though these may be kept private if the superior so desires. If after a crime has been committed the penal law is changed, the milder law is to be applied in punishing; when a later law abolishes a penalty there is to be no punishment, except that censures already incurred continue. A penalty binds the offender everywhere, unless the contrary is clearly stated.

In regard to punishments latæ sententiæ, (a) affected ignorance, whether of law or the penalty alone, never excuses; (b) any diminution of responsibility, arising from the intellect or the will, excuses when the law employs the words "presume," "dare," "knowingly," "deliberately," "rashly," or similar terms implying full knowledge and deliberation; (c) when such expressions are not found in the law, crass or supine ignorance does not excuse; other degrees of ignorance excuse from medicinal but not from vindicatory punishments; drunkenness, want of care, mental weakness, passion, do not excuse from the penalty if the action is grievously sinful; nor does grave fear, if the offense involves public spiritual danger or contempt of the Faith or ecclesiastical authority. When not expressly mentioned, cardinals are not subject to penal laws, nor are bishops subject to suspension or interdict latæ sententiæ. Those who have not reached the age of puberty are excused from penalties latæ sententiæ, but they are to be corrected by the ordinary methods used in training the young rather than by censures or other more serious vindicatory penalties; their older accomplices or co-operators, however, incur the full punishment.

A medicinal or vindicatory punishment latæ sententiæ binds an offender conscious of his fault in both fora; before a declaratory sentence has been pronounced, however, he is excused from observing the censure as often as his reputation would suffer, and in the external forum he need not heed it unless the fault was notorious. No punishment can be imposed unless it is certain that the crime was committed and also that judgment has not been barred by lapse of time; furthermore, when there is question of inflicting a censure, the offender must first be reprimanded, warned to recede from his contumacy, and given suitable time to repent, should the case admit of delay; if he then remains contumacious the censure may be imposed. A judge who in the exercise of his office has imposed a penalty laid down by a superior cannot remit it. An ordinary, however, has wide powers: (a) in public cases, he can remit all penalties latæ sententiæ laid down by common law, except in cases which are still in court, or if the censure is reserved to the Holy See, or in case of inability to hold ecclesiastical offices, benefices, dignities, or of loss of active and passive voice, perpetual suspension, infamy of law, loss of the right of patronage and Apostolic privileges or favors; (b) in occult cases, he can personally or by a delegate remit all censures laid down in the common law, except those reserved specially or very specially to the Holy See. See CENSURES; EXCOMMUNICATION; SUSPENSION.

Crimmins, JOHN DANIEL, contractor, patron of arts, and philanthropist, b. at New York on 18 May, 1844; d. there on 9 November, 1917. He was the son of Thomas and Joanna (O'Keefe) Crimmins, his father being a native of Limerick City, Ireland, who had emigrated to New York in 1837. After studying in the Jesuit College of St. Francis Xavier, New York, he joined his father in the contracting business, and in 1873 he succeeded as head of the firm, with his younger brother as partner. Among the notable city works he executed were the renovation of Broadway, the construction of the Broadway Cable road, the first subways for the telegraph and telephone, and the changing of the street railways into the present electric railway with its underground power apparatus. In 1868 he married Miss Lily Louise Lalor, and at the time of his death was survived by five sons and five daughters. He was buried by the side of his wife, who died in 1888, in a mortuary chapel erected by him in the convent of the Dominican Nuns of the Perpetual Adoration, Hunts Point, New York.

Crimmins' interest in national and civic affairs was recognized by his appointment as Democratic presidential elector on three occasions, as a member of the Special Panama Committee, as Commissioner of Parks of New York City from 1883 till 1888, and as a member of the New York Constitutional Convention of 1894. But it was for his zeal in promoting the welfare of the Church and of Catholic charities that he was best known—numerous colleges, schools, hospitals, homes, and refuges, both in America and abroad, being beneficiaries of his generosity. In recognition of this spirit he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory in 1901 by Leo XIII. He was a trustee of the Catholic University of America, and of St. Patrick's Cathedral, the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, and the Foundling Hospital of New York. He was a noted patron of art. His love for America and for the Irish race and tradition was unbounded, and he was one of the most active members of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, and of the American Irish Historical Society. He is the author of two works: "Irish American Historical Miscellany," and "St. Patrick's Day—Its Celebration in New York and other American Places, 1737-1845."

Crookston, DIOCESE OF (CROOKSTONIENSIS), erected 31 December, 1909, by a division of the diocese of St. Paul (see C. E., XVI-35). It comprises 17,210 sq. miles in the State of Minnesota, and is under the administration of its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Timothy Corbett, appointed 9 April, 1910. Born in Mendota, Minnesota in 1858, he studied in France at the lower seminary of Meximieux, and was ordained in Boston in 1886 and served as vicar in Minneapolis, then chancellor to the Bishop of Duluth and pastor of the cathedral, and was consecrated in St. Paul 19 May following his appointment. The diocese is dedicated to the Immaculate Conception; the Benedictine Fathers, Sisters of St. Benedict, Sisters of St. Joseph, and Sisters of St. Francis are established here. Out of a total population of 27,621 this territory counts 24,103 Catholic whites and 3,518 Catholic Indians. The 1921 statistics credit the diocese with 41 secular and 13 regular clergy, 44 parishes, 35 missions, 20 mission stations, 2 academies for girls with 110 pupils, 8 parochial schools with 1,358 pupils, 2 Indian Industrial Schools with 244 pupils, a total of 1,802 children under Catholic care, and 3 hospitals.

Cross, DAUGHTERS OF THE (La Louvière, Belgium; cf. C. E., XVI-31a), a French institute first established in 1625 at Roy, Picardy, by Fr. Guérin, François Wallet, and Marie Samier, to provide for the Christian education of girls. Charlotte and Anne de Lancy joined the good work, and François Wallet was named "First Sister." They were not bound by vows, and became known as Daughters of the Cross, meeting many misfortunes. In 1639 the capture of Roy by the Spaniards compelled the Sisters to seek refuge in Paris, where they were received by Madame de Villeneuve, and several foundations were started. St. Vincent de Paul gave them every encouragement to overcome all obstacles. Later on, two branches of the institute were established, when Mme. de Villeneuve introduced certain innovations which were accepted by some of the members, while the others adhered to their original purpose and under Fr. Guérin returned to the cradle of the institute. The Bishop of Noyon, Mgr. de Rochebonne, in 1728 drew up the Constitutions of the community who pledged themselves to religious life, taking simple vows and adopting religious enclosure.

The mother-house at St. Quentin was in a flourishing condition at the outbreak of the French Revolution in 1789 when the Sisters were expelled and their convent seized and converted into a prison. Sister Hunégonde Duplaquet refusing to leave the convent, hoping thus to prevent its sale, was locked up in her cell and made a prisoner. After the fall of Robespierre, though the convent continued to be a house of detention, Sister Hunégonde opened a school in her room and gradually gathered around her some of her former religious Sisters. In 1837 Mgr. Simony, Bishop of Soissons, reorganized the institute by obtaining from Mgr. de Bruillard, Bishop of Grenoble, five Sisters from his diocese, who agreed to be affiliated to the Daughters of the Cross. The Society received the final decree of papal approbation from Leo XIII, 12 June, 1899.

The first Mother General was Mother Mary Henrietta Rimey, the second, Mother Caroline Got, the third, Mother Marguerite de St. Preux, and the fourth and present Superior General is Mother Héliène Afchain who, with her council, resides at La Louvière, Belgium. Owing to the laws against religious teaching in France a few of the nuns were secularized for a time. Branch houses of the order are at Bar-le-Duc, Soissons, Paris, Ryde, Southsea, and Boscombe. An English novitiate has been begun at the Convent of the Cross, Boscombe, and it is the intention of the superior general to make further foundations when the number of members has sufficiently increased.

Cross, DAUGHTERS OF THE (Liège, Belgium; cf. C. E., XVI-30b).—At the outbreak of the World War, as early as 5 August, 1914, the Belgian Congregation of the Daughters of the Cross opened at Liège a temporary hospital for the wounded soldiers, in which about 700 were received. In nearly all the houses of England a very large number of Belgian refugees found hospitality until the end of the war. Four Daughters of the Cross met with tragic deaths while on their way to the Indian Missions on board the "Persia," which was torpedoed near the Island of Crete, 30 December, 1915. The congregation now has a Cardinal Protector, granted to them by Pope Pius X. The present and sixth Superior General is Mother Marie-Victorine, elected 8 April, 1920, to succeed Mother Marie-Augustine, who had governed the congregation for twenty years. The late Provincial of the English Province, Sister M. Théophile, died 26 June, 1921. New foundations of the order are: a dispensary at Kindu, Belgian Congo (1911); hospital for Europeans and natives, orphanage, and dispensary at Lubunda, North Kabanga, Belgian Congo (1912); Institution of St. Michael, for feeble-minded children, at Spa, Belgium (1912); sanatorium for consumptives at Haslemere, Surrey, England (1917); school for young ladies at Waltham-Cross, Herts, England (1919); Central School at Jarrow, Northumberland, England (1919); Donaghmore House, Tyrone, Ireland (1920), where a hospital will be opened. The present number of foundations is 86, and the number of members is 1,610. The religious have under their care: 77 schools with 14,152 children, 18 orphanages with 1,667 orphans, 2 foundling-homes, 7 homes for preservation with 1,301 refugee girls, 11 homes for the aged with 325 inmates, 11 hospitals with 6,042 patients, 5 sanatoriums, 6 seminaries, 3 homes for epileptics with 631 inmates, 1 prison.

Cross, DAUGHTERS OF THE (Shreveport, Louisiana).—The main object of this institution, founded by Mme. Villeneuve under the direction of St. Francis de Sales, is the sanctification of its members whilst devoting themselves to Christian education. The time of probation is two years of novitiate and three years of temporary vows, after which the members take perpetual vows. The first house of the congregation was founded in Paris in 1640, and the institution spread rapidly through different parts of France. Among the bishops who asked the Sisters to establish schools in their dioceses was Bishop Balthazar Grangier of Tréguier. This convent in Tréguier, founded in 1666, was very prosperous till 1793, when the Reign of Terror compelled the community to disperse. The Sisters continued their work as religious teachers in their families and among their acquaintances, and when peace was restored to the Church of France, they reassembled in their former house at Tréguier, soon regaining their prosperity.

It was from this community that the first foundation of the Daughters of the Cross was made in America. In 1854 Bishop Martin of Natchitoches, while on a voyage to France in quest of missionary laborers, became acquainted with the community and requested their establishment in his diocese. A missionary band of ten Sisters from Tréguier, with Mother Mary Hyacinth as Superior, embarked at Havre, 24 October, 1855. Bishop Martin met them in New Orleans and they reached their destination at Cocoville, Avoyelles, Louisiana, 26 November. In spite of many hardships and difficulties, the Sisters opened their school 2 February, 1856. The population of Avoyelles parish were mostly of French descent and Catholic, though for lack of religious instruction an indifference to religious matters prevailed. The school, however, was well patronized and soon others were established: Ile Brevel (1857), Alexandria (1858), and Shreveport (1860).

The Civil War spread ruin and desolation throughout the South, and the new convent schools were closed. Other teaching congregations abandoned the field, but when peace was restored, the Daughters of the Cross reopened their schools with the exception of that at Alexandria, and in 1866 founded a new school at Monroe. In 1868 the mother-house was transferred from Cocoville, Avoyelles parish, to the suburbs of Shreveport. This is now known as St. Vincent's College and Academy. In the Dioceses of Alexandria and Sioux Falls the Sisters conduct eight academies with 1,285 pupils. The number of professed religious is 80; novices, 5; postulants, 2. In 1873 during the yellow fever epidemic in Shreveport the Sisters nursed the sick and the dying and three of them fell victims to the terrible disease, which was a great loss for the little community.

Crowley, MARY CATHERINE, author and lecturer, b. in Boston, U. S. A., d. in New York 4 May, 1920, granddaughter of Daniel Crowley, one of the first Catholics of Boston, and on the maternal side a direct descendant from Lochiel, the famous Catholic chieftain of Scotland. She was educated at the Academy of the Sacred Heart, Manhattanville, and began her literary work in 1877 as a contributor of poems and short stories to "Wide Awake," "St. Nicholas," "Ladies' Home Journal," the "Pilot," etc. In 1892 she went abroad and on her return lived for ten years in Detroit, where she was a collaborator on the Memorial History of the city. Miss Crowley was a recognized authority on the early history of Detroit, and a leader in its bicentennial celebration in 1901, the pageant being founded on descriptions in her book "A Daughter of New France." Her later years were spent in

New York, where since 1907 she edited the "Catholic Missions Magazine" and the "Annals of the Propagation of the Faith." Miss Crowley lectured extensively on art and literature, and was the author of the following novels: "Merry Hearts and True" (1889), "Happy-Go-Lucky" (1890), "Apples Ripe and Rosy" (1893), "The City of Wonders" (1894), "The Sentinel of Metz" (1897), "An Every Day Girl" (1900), "Tildere" (1900), "A Daughter of New France" (1901), "The Heroine of the Straits" (1902), "Love Thrives in War" (1903), "In Treaty with Honor" (1906).

Cruise, SIR FRANCIS, physician and scholar, b. in Dublin, 1834; d. there 26 February, 1912, was a descendant of an historic Meath family, which settled in Ireland in the twelfth century and lost lands and fortune for their open fidelity to the Faith. He was educated at Clongowes and Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in arts in 1856 and in medicine two years later. When the Mater Misericordiae Hospital was opened in 1861 he was appointed junior physician, and the same year obtained his degree in medicine from the University of Dublin. He was a prolific writer on medical topics, among his subjects being the endoscope as a means of diagnosis, cholera, and the mode of propagation of that malady, and hypnotism. His investigations into the medicinal springs of Europe, especially those of Coutrèveville, are of great importance. From 1884 to 1886 he was president of the Royal College of Physicians of Ireland, and in 1896 was knighted. Five years later he was appointed Physician in Ordinary to the king in Ireland, and later was offered a baronetcy, which he declined. To the general reader he is best known by his critical work "Thomas à Kempis and the Authorship of the Imitation," a subject to which he devoted all his leisure time and in the preparation of which he visited all the foreign libraries wherein original manuscripts were to be found. The municipality of Kempen has named a street after this Irish doctor, who vindicated the claims of their famous townsman. His work in the great Catholic hospitals as well as his labors and writings in honor of à Kempis were recognized, in 1906, by Pope Pius X, who conferred on him the Knighthood of St. Gregory.

Crusade, BULL OF THE (cf. C. E., III-543).—On 31 December, 1914, Benedict XV withdrew the privilege and favors granted to the Portuguese in the Bulla Cruciatæ and the Labbatine and Lenten indulgences, replacing them by a new series of favors contained in indulgences which are to be published yearly, till 31 December, 1924. There are seven separate indulgences, summaries or schedules of which have to be obtained each year by those who wish to enjoy the favors; the price of each summary is fixed and the proceeds of the sales must be devoted to the clerical seminaries, poor churches, and other pious works. The summaries may be obtained by any one resident in Portuguese territory; and the indulgence regarding fast and abstinence may be used in any part of the world, provided there is no scandal. The Cardinal Patriarch of Lisbon is executor of the indulgences and can subdelegate to the different ordinaries the faculties granted to him. On 12 August, 1915, in practically the same terms the Bulla Cruciatæ were renewed for Spaniards and those living in Spanish territory for twelve years beginning from 28 November, 1915.

Csanád, DIOCESE OF (CSANÁDIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-558b), suffragan of Kalocsa. According to the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, the diocesan area now lies within three separate kingdoms—two-fourths in Rumania, one-fourth in Hungary, one-fourth in Jugoslavia. The episcopal seat remains in Temesvar, Rumania. In 1920 the Jesuits founded a house in Szeged with a novitiate attached, towards which work. Mr. Joseph Varhelyi made a munificent gift. During the World War Bishop Julius Glattfelder converted the episcopal residence into a hospital, and for two years taught canon law in place of the former professor who was called to the army. Of the 50 priests assigned to the spiritual needs of the soldiers, some were wounded and one was taken captive. The seminarians to the number of about 100 fought in the army, many being wounded, while others were killed or taken prisoner. Among the recently deceased are the following persons of note: Canon Anthony Wittcnberger (d. 1916), for sixteen years director of the diocesan chancery; Joseph Nemeth (b. 1831, d. 1916), titular Bishop of Isaura and formerly administrator of the diocese; Dr. Alexander Wekerle (d. 1921), Prime Minister of Hungary, who befriended the Church as governor of Zlapodia.

The Catholic population (1921) is 970,944, for the most part German; the minority are Hungarians, Bulgarians, Bohemians, Croats, or Rumanians. The priests number 401 seculars and 673 regulars. There are 273 parishes, 13 monasteries for men and 33 for women; 1 university with 5 professors and 32 students; 5 colleges for boys and 15 for girls; 4 normal schools with 23 teachers; 19 training schools with 108 teachers; 135 elementary schools with 375 teachers; 2 orphan asylums, 1 in Temesvar and 1 in Nagybeskerek; 3 day nurseries, in Szeged, Arad, and Temesvar, respectively. The asylums are in charge of the Government which contributes nothing towards the support of the Catholic institutions. For the clergy there is a congregation of Mary, and a sodality for the laity, the Congregation of Mary, Sodality of the Sacred Heart, Rosary Society, an apostleship for the men, a society for social welfare, Society of St. Vincent de Paul, a charitable organization of the women, and a social organization of the Catholic people. The Catholic publications are numerous, totalling 11, of which 5 are political, 1 religious, 2 social, 1 devoted to music, and 2 for youth.

Cuba (cf. C. E., IV-558d).—Latin American republic in the West Indies, comprising the island of Cuba, the Isle of Pines and small adjacent islands. The area is 44,215 square miles, and the population, according to an estimate of November, 1919, was 1,898,905. The area, population, and density of each of the six provinces were as follows:

Province	Area	Population in 1919	Population Per Square Mile
Havana	3,174	697,583	219.77
Pinar del Rio.....	5,212	266,198	51.07
Matanzas	3,260	312,704	95.09
Santa Clara	8,266	657,697	70.95
Camagüey	10,076	228,913	22.71
Oriente	14,227	735,810	51.31
	44,215	2,898,905	65.34

The population in 1919 increased 261,369 over that of 1916. The whites formed 74.3 per cent and the colored 25.7 per cent of the total population. The immigrants in 1919 numbered 80,485, of whom 39,573 were Spanish, 24,187 Jamaicans, 1,236 Chinese, and 745 English. The chief cities are Havana, 363,506; Cienfuegos, 95,865; Camagüey, 98,193; Santiago de Cuba, 70,282; Guástanamo, 68,883;

Matanzas, 62,638; Santa Clara, 63,151; Manzanillo, 56,570.

EDUCATION.—Each municipality has a board of education, and government schools are being established in all towns and rural districts, as education is compulsory. In 1919 there were 334,671 children enrolled in the government schools, which had 6,151 teachers. In 1919, 223 new schools were established. In each province there is maintained a Government Institute for Advanced Education, to which are annexed the normal schools for training teachers. University instruction is given in the University of Havana, which is divided into the three Faculties of Liberal Arts and Sciences, of Medicine and Pharmacy, and of Law. According to the latest census statistics, illiteracy has been reduced to 31 per cent and is now rapidly disappearing.

GOVERNMENT.—The Provincial Government established by the United States in 1906 continued until 24 January, 1909, when the national government was resumed after the institution of electoral reforms. The present government is republican in form; the president is chosen by popular suffrage and serves four years. He appoints his own Cabinet. The National Congress consists of a Senate (24 members, 4 for each province) and a House of Representatives (118 members, 1 for every 25,000 inhabitants). A new electoral code was adopted in 1919.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The total foreign commerce of Cuba during the fiscal year 1919-20 exceeded $1,290,000,000, which, compared with 1918-19, shows an increase of $504,000,000 or of 64%. This included imports, valued at $435,257,727, and exports, valued at $855,138,341. The chief articles of export were sugar and honey ($376,000,000) and tobacco ($13,500,000), most of which went to the United States and the United Kingdom. In 1918 the tobacco manufactured in Cuba consisted of 331,705,125 cigars, 341,803,669 boxes of cigarettes and 378,426 pounds of cut tobacco. In 1918 the production of tobacco amounted to 508,980 bales (81,436,240 pounds), and in 1919-20 the sugar crop was 3,735,425 tons, valued at $1,005,451,080. The total area of the sugar plantations was 1,384,812 acres. In 1918-19 there were 211 sugar mills. The State owns about 1,250,000 acres of forest lands. In 1919 there were 3,200 miles of railway, connecting the principal towns and seaports from Pinar del Rio in the west to Santiago de Cuba in the east. The question of nationalizing the railways is under consideration. There are 1,285 miles of cart roads open to traffic.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—In 1912 the dioceses of Camagüey and Matanzas were erected, each comprising the province of the same name. In 1921 Mgr. Pietro Benedetti was made Apostolic Delegate for Cuba and Porto Rico. For Catholic statistics see SANTIAGO DE CUBA, ARCHDIOCESE OF and its suffragans.

CIVIL HISTORY.—Cuba's career as a republic has been successful, except on one occasion, 11 February, 1917, when two companies of soldiers outside the walls of Havana mutinied and the next day the entire force of government troops in Ciego de Avila, Santiago de Cuba and towns of the eastern part of the island revolted and forcibly took possession of those districts. The United States fleet was sent to Key West in readiness for any emergency, but found the Cuban Government able to control the situation. The revolution was suppressed in less than two months. Since 1909 the following have been presidents of Cuba: José Miguel Gómez (1909-13), General Mario Gracia Menocal (1913-21), and Alfredo Zayas (1921-25).

In 1919 Provost-Marshal Crowder was sent to Cuba to advise with the Government in regard to the revision of the electoral law. The law establishing obligatory military service, promulgated in 1918, was repealed in 1919.

Cubango in Angola, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., III-772d), formerly known as Upper Cimbébasia, was given its present title by a decree of 10 January, 1921. It comprises a Portuguese colony in Southern Africa and is entrusted to the Holy Ghost Fathers, the present prefect being Mgr. Louis Keiling, appointed 30 November, 1909, who resides at Catoco. The 1921 statistics credit this territory with a population of about 4,000,000, of whom 9,200 are Catholics, 8,000 natives and 1,200 Europeans, and about 1,000 catechumens. Missionary work is carried on by twenty missionary priests, assisted by 5 Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny. The mission comprises 12 churches or chapels, 7 stations, 8 schools, and 7 orphanages.

Cuenca, DIOCESE OF (CONCHENSIS IN INDIIS; cf. C. E., IV-562a), in the Republic of Ecuador, South America, suffragan of Quito. It embraces a territory of 18,305 sq. miles and has a population of 147,634, according to the last census of 1885. Rt. Rev. Manuel Maria Polit, appointed to this see 11 January, 1907, was promoted to the archdiocese of Quito 7 June, 1918, and Rt. Rev. Daniel Hermida was appointed to succeed him 10 March, 1919. No statistics are published for this diocese.

Cuenca, DIOCESE OF (CONQUENSIS OR CONCHENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-562c), in the province of New Castille, Spain, suffragan of Toledo. This diocese is now vacant. Rt. Rev. Wenceslas Sanguera y Guia, b. at Madrid, 1840, ordained 1864, appointed 19 April, 1900, and consecrated 5 August following, died 15 February, 1922. On 13 April, 1902, the tower of the beautiful cathedral church of this diocese collapsed and it was only through the generosity of the citizens, who looked upon this work of the twelfth century as a national monument, that it was possible to rebuild it. In 1908 the centenary of St. Julian, second bishop of the diocese and its patron, was solemnly celebrated, with a triduum and civil ceremonies.

This diocese comprises a population of 400,000, 326 parishes and 79 sub-parishes, 654 churches and chapels, 44 monasteries, 86 monks and 580 religious women, 494 secular and 54 regular clergy, 32 brothers, 125 sisters, 2 seminaries, an upper and a lower seminary, 194 seminarians, 2 normal schools with 18 teachers and 160 students, 297 elementary schools with 1 teacher and 12,500 pupils. Various missionary works are organized, as well as 5 homes for the aged and infirm, 5 hospitals, 1 refuge, and 1 lay charitable center. Societies are formed among the clergy and laity and 4 periodicals, "El Centro," "Voz de Catolicismo," "El Segrario" and "La Viva," are published.

Cuernavaca, DIOCESE OF (CUERNAVACENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-562c), in the State of Morelos, Mexico, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Mexico. Rt. Rev. Francisco Plancarte y Navarrette filled this see from 1898 until his transfer to Linarès, 27 November, 1911, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent (1922), Rt. Rev. Manuel Fulcheri y Pietrasanta, born in the Archdiocese of Mexico 1874, studied at the Latin-American college, Rome, where he was ordained in 1898, and served as vicerector and rector of the seminary in Mexico, and then chancellor of the diocese until his appointment, 6 May, 1912. The diocese comprises 150,000 Catholics, 42 secular priests, 40 seminarians, 34 parishes, 284 churches or chapels, and 10 Catholic schools with 2,500 pupils.

Cuneo, DIOCESE OF (CUNEENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-569b), in Piedmont, Northern Italy, suffragan of Turin. This see was filled by Rt. Rev. Andrea Fiore, from 1895 until his death, 20 January, 1914, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Gabriele Moriondo, b. in Turin, 1870, entered the Dominican Order 1888, ordained 1893, superior of the mission at Constantinople 1900, appointed 25 May, 1914. During the World War 2 priests, 1 deacon and 3 minor clerics were killed, 2 were wounded and 12 won medals of honor. The laity were well represented in the army, where they bravely did their duty. At home many associations were formed to aid the poor, the wounded and refugees. In 1917 the first centenary of the foundation of the diocese was celebrated, and in 1919 the diocese rejoiced upon the news that His Eminence Teodoro Valfré di Bonzo, bishop of this diocese (1885-95), had been created a cardinal.

The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 111,122; the entire population, with the exception of 250 Jews and Protestants. The 1922 statistics credit it with 67 parishes, 250 churches, 1 monastery of men, 4 convents of men and 32 of women, 210 secular and 22 regular clergy, 6 Brothers, 170 Sisters, 1 seminary, 80 seminarians, 1 secondary school for boys with 12 teachers and 130 pupils, 2 secondary schools for girls with 210 pupils, 1 state normal school with 22 teachers and 450 students, 1 state technical school with 16 teachers and 340 students, 6 homes, 24 infant asylums, and 10 hospitals. Homes for war orphans are maintained by the state, as well as all the elementary schools. Three organizations are formed among the clergy, and about 110 in different parishes among the laity. A weekly journal and seven monthly bulletins are published.

Curacao, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., IV-569d).—In 1920 the fiftieth anniversary of the coming of the Dominican Fathers to the vicariate was celebrated. In the same year a new congregation of teaching Sisters was established within the mission. J. J. A. van Baars, O.P., former vicar Apostolic and a zealous defender of the faith, upon his death in 1910 was succeeded by M. A. M. Vuylsteke, created vicar Apostolic in the same year. Among the recently deceased especially deserving of note are: Rev. P. Poiesz, who died in 1919, for fifteen years noted Catholic editor, poet, man of letters and friend of the people, and Rev. T. J. A. van den Donk, who died in 1920, able Catholic editor and contributor, for ten years lay teacher in the schools, ordained priest in 1896.

The Catholic population of the vicariate is 50,000, the greater part of whom are negroes and Indians; about 5,000 are either Spanish, Dutch, or Jews. Their spiritual needs are attended by secular and 34 regular priests, principally Dominicans, 44 Brothers, and 205 Sisters, of whom 139 teach in the parochial schools and 66 attend the sick and infirm. In the schools taught by the Brothers there is a total of 1,026 pupils, and in those taught by the Sisters 5,462 made up of both sexes. There are 19 parishes and 19 churches, 5 convents for men and 10 for women, 2 training schools for girls with 14 teachers and 53 pupils, 1 industrial school with 7 teachers and 35 pupils, 3 hospitals or homes besides 1 leper hospital, 2 orphan asylums, 1 insane asylum, 5 day nurseries. The men and the women of the vicariate have an association called the "Roman Catholic League of the People of Curaçao." There are 3 Catholic publications. The Catholic schools and institutions are supported by the Government.

Curates (cf. C. E., IV-570).—The right of selecting curates belongs not to the parish priest but to the local ordinary, who, however, should first consult the parish priest before making an appointment (cf. C. E., XI-538). Curates may be appointed either in the entire parish or in a particular part of it. They must reside in the parish, and as a rule they should live with the parish priest, who is to assist in training them in the ministry and report their progress to the ordinary at least yearly. They may be removed at will by the bishop or vicar capitular, but not by the vicar general without a special mandate.

Curityba do Parana, DIOCESE OF (CURYTIBENSIS DE PARANA; cf. C. E., IV-572d), in the State of Parana, Brazil, suffragan of São Paulo. This diocese, comprising a territory of 184,672 sq. miles, is under the administration of Rt. Rev. João Francisco Braga, born in Pelotas, Brazil, 1868, ordained 1900, served as secretary to the Bishop of Rio Grande do Sul, appointed Bishop of Petropolis 1 March, 1902, transferred 25 August, 1907. According to 1920 statistics the population of this territory comprises 496,538 Catholics, 36,638 Protestants, and 1000 infidels. The diocese is credited with 70 parishes, 58 secular and 30 regular clergy, and 392 churches and chapels.

Cusack, THOMAS F., Bishop of Albany, b. in New York City on February 22, 1862; d. at Albany on 12 July, 1918. He was educated at Saint Francis Xavier's College, and received his theological training at the archdiocesan seminary at Troy, New York.

He was ordained on 30 May, 1885, and before his appointment as auxiliary to Cardinal Farley, he acted as superior of the New York Apostolate, the archdiocesan mission band. He was consecrated titular Bishop of Theniscyra on 25 April, 1904, by Cardinal Farley and was transferred to the Diocese of Albany on 5 July, 1915.

Custom (cf. C. E., IV-576).—If any customs, universal or particular, at present existing and conflicting with the canons of the Code, are expressly reprobated by the canons they are to be corrected, even if they be immemorial, and they must not be revived in future; others, if centennial and immemorial, may be tolerated if the ordinary judges thought under the circumstances it would not be prudent to abolish them; the remainder are abolished unless the Code provides otherwise. This canon refers expressly to customs contra legem, not to those præter legem. The period required to legalize any custom is forty years; but if the law contains a clause prohibiting future customs to the contrary, only a reasonable centennial or immemorial custom can become lawful. A law does not revoke centennial or immemorial customs nor does a general law abolish particular customs without express mention; but any legalized custom may be revoked by a contrary custom.

Among the regulations laid down in the Code which expressly reprobate customs to the contrary are the following: A bishop may select any two clerics he desires to accompany and assist him on visitation; neither he nor any of his suite may on account of the diocesan visitation ask or accept for themselves or friends any kind of gift; the right of option in connection with dignities in cathedral or collegiate chapters is prohibited unless where it is enjoined by the deed of foundation; when a see is vacant only one vicar capitular can be lawfully chosen; in a parish there should be only one parish priest having care of souls; each parish church must have its own baptismal font, however, the vested rights of other churches are to be respected; a priest celebrating Mass must observe the rubrics and beware of adding other ceremonies or prayers arbitrarily; no one, without special leave of the pope, may receive minor orders with the subdiaconate or two major orders on the same day; without express leave of the Holy See local ordinaries or their officials may not ask any payment, when dispensations are being sought, except a small fee to cover the expenses of the chancery; admission to church for the purposes of Divine service must be absolutely free; lay and clerical administrators of any church or canonically erected pious place or confraternity must give an account of their administration to the local ordinary yearly; finally, any custom introducing a new matrimonial impediment or contrary to the existing impediments is reprobated.

Cuyaba, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CUYABENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-580c), in the State of Matto Grosso, Brazil. This see was raised to the dignity of a metropolitan 19 March, 1910, by a Decree which divided the diocese and created two new sees as its suffragans, San Luiz do Cáceres and Corumba. Rt. Rev. Carlos Luiz d'Amour, born in São Luiz de Maranhão 1836, who made his studies in the diocesan seminary, and was ordained 30 November, 1860, filled this see from 21 September, 1877, until his death, 8 July, 1921. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Francisco Agnino Correa, a Salesian, appointed to this see 26 August, 1921. Born in Cuyaba 1885, he studied in Rome, was ordained in 1909, became editor of the review "Matto Grosso," and when only twenty-nine years of age was appointed titular Bishop of Prusiade and auxiliary at Cuyaba, 2 April, 1914. As a result of his efforts a civil war which threatened the state was prevented, and the president of the Republic named him civil governor of Matto Grosso in September, 1917. On 25 October, 1919, he was made an assistant at the pontifical throne. Before the division of this diocese it covered a territory of about 862,282 sq. miles and had a Catholic population of 199,559. There were 9 parishes, 3 secular and 17 regular clergy, 27 churches and chapels, 4 religious communities (Third Order Regular of St. Francis, Salesians, Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, and Daughters of Mary Auxiliatrice), 7 Catholic schools with 500 pupils, and a Catholic journal, "A Cruz," published since 1910.

Cuypers, PETER J. H., architect and Catholic revivalist, b. in Roermond, Holland, 1827; d. 3 March, 1921. He graduated from the Academy of Antwerp in 1850 with highest honors, and returned to his native country to begin his battle for truth and fitness in architecture, for a Christian and national as against a pagan and foreign style. The definite establishment of an episcopal hierarchy in Holland in 1853, attendant upon the general Catholic revival, demanded more dignified centers of public worship, and on these Cuypers impressed the seal of his art, drawn from the best medieval traditions. For years his conception of art was virulently opposed, but finally he won official recognition in his own country and abroad. In 1897 his seventieth birthday was celebrated with national honors, and at that time he had already built 64 churches and restored 570 others, besides designing many secular buildings, and his active work continued for many years later.

In 1870 Doctor Cuypers was entrusted with the restoration of the Mainz cathedral, and the Government placed him on the Advisory Board of Historical and Artistic Monuments. In 1876 he designed the National Museum of Amsterdam, his greatest achievement in secular architecture. Among the churches built or restored by him are St. Willibrod's and the Church of the Sacred Heart in Amsterdam, the church at Eindhoven, the cathedral of Breda, St. James' and Church of Our Lady at The Hague, the Church at Jutphass, the minister of Roermond, and his crowning work, the beautiful cathedral at Haarlem. Doctor Cuypers was an officer of the French Legion of Honor, associate member of the Institute of American Architecture, of the Institute of British Architecture, and of like bodies in Petrograd, Vienna, Stockholm, Madrid, etc. He presided at the International Congresses of Architects in Brussels in 1897, in Paris in 1900, in Madrid in 1904, in Liège in 1905, in Vienna in 1908, honors which he valued for the sake of his faith and his principles of art.

Cuzco, DIOCESE OF (CUSCHENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-580d), suffragan of Lima, Peru, South America. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Pedro-Paschasio Farfan, born in Cuzco 1870, studied at the diocesan seminary, served as fiscal promoter and chancellor of the cathedral, and was appointed Bishop of Huaraz 5 March, 1907, transferred 19 April, 1918, to succeed Rt. Rev. José Gregorio Castro, retired, and transferred to the titular see of Clazomenes 13 November, 1917. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 480,680 Catholics, 14 deaneries comprising 37 parishes, 90 secular priests, 313 churches, 833 public chapels, and 4 seminarians at the seminary of Lima.

Cyclades (cf. C. E., IV-581a).—The area of the Cyclades is about 1,050 square miles; 24 of the islands possess an area of more than 9 square miles. The latest census gives a population of 130,206, but the latest estimate gives 146,000, the densest population, 156 per square mile, being found in Tinos. In recent years there has been a good deal of emigration, mostly to the mainland or to America. After the Balkan Wars the Cyclades were included among the four general administrations set up by Greece in Macedonia, Epirus, Crete, and the islands of the archipelago, receiving general instructions from the central government in Athens, but otherwise enjoying a large measure of independence. Owing to the disturbances of the World War, this abnormal arrangement has held good up to the present.

Cyprus (cf. C. E., IV-589d), island in the Mediterranean formerly administered by Great Britain under a convention concluded with the Sultan of Turkey at Constantinople, 4 June, 1878. After the outbreak of hostilities with Turkey, the island was annexed by Great Britain, 5 November, 1914. The area is 3,584 square miles; the population (census of 1911), 274,108, including 144 military population. The estimated population in 1919 and 311,108. The principal towns are Nicosia (the capital), 18,461; Larnaca, 10,652; Limasol, 11,843; Famagusta and Varosha, 6,127; Paphos and Ktima, 3,946; Kyrenia, 1,986. There are six administrative districts named after these towns.

EDUCATION.—In 1919-20 there were 741 schools open with 935 teachers and 41,887 scholars, an increase of 571 schools and 35,111 pupils since 1881. These schools were maintained at an expense of £40,829, which was raised by assessments on the villages supporting schools, and includes grants from religious bodies and private persons, as well as a grant of £12,000 from the Government. There are two secondary Moslem schools for boys and one for girls; the Greek Christian community supports seven secondary schools for boys and one for girls, on which a sum of £13,447 was expended, the Government grant being £670. The English school at Nicosia (undenominational), which is conducted on the lines of an English grammar school, and the American Academy at Larnaca (attached to the Reformed Presbyterian Mission) have continued their work, as have also a commercial school, founded at Lamythou in 1912 by Mr. D. Mtaia. The secondary schools are chiefly classical. The Moslem Idadi school's program is arranged to prepare boys for higher education at Constantinople, and the Greek Christian schools prepare their pupils for the university at Athens. The secondary school at Larnaca is a commercial lyceum.

GOVERNMENT.—The High Commission of Cyprus has the usual powers of a colonial governor. There is an executive council consisting of the chief secretary, the king's advocate, the treasurer, with three locally resident additional members. The Legislature consists of eighteen members, six being office holders, including the chief secretary, the king's advocate, and the treasurer, and twelve elected (for five years), three by Mohammedan and nine by non-Mohammedan voters.

RELIGION.—In the Archdiocese of Cyprus, a Maronite see, there were (1921) 30,300 Catholics, of whom 1,300 belonged to the island of Cyprus, 72 villages, 20 churches, 120 priests, 14 convents of Antonines with 140 monks, 5 convents of Aleppines with 100 monks, 1 convent of Antonine nuns with 20 religious, and 1 convent of missionaries of the Latin rite. A seminary with 30 students is annexed to the archiepiscopal palace, and every parish has a primary school. In 1911 Mgr. Paul Aouad succeeded Mgr. Pierre Zoghhe, deceased, as Archbishop of Cyprus. He is the author of several works in Arabic, amongst them the translation of the Summa of St. Thomas Aquinas.

The Blue Book of Cyprus gives the following statistics of other denominations represented on the island: Autocephalous Church of Cyprus (Greek Orthodox), 252,000 followers, 657 churches, 11 cenobitical monasteries, 84 non-cenobitical monasteries; Moslem, 62,000 members, 202 mosques, 15 tekyes or convents of dervishes, 8 seminaries; Armenian Gregorians, 640 members, 2 churches, 1 monastery under the Gregorian Patriarch of Jerusalem; Church of England, 400 members, 3 churches, 2 church rooms, under the Bishop in Jerusalem; Presbyterians, etc., 100 members, 1 church, chiefly attached to the Reformed Presbyterians at Larnaca; Jews, 200 members, 1 synagogue, 1 settlement at Margo and a few scattered communities. No denomination receives state aid.

Czaplicka, MARIE ANTOINETTE, scientist and author, b. near Warsaw, Poland; d. in England, June, 1921. In 1910 she came to London, with the Mianowski Research scholars from Warsaw, and studied at Somerville College, Oxford, specialising in anthropology and taking the Oxford diploma in 1912. Two years later the Oxford University Press published her "Aboriginal Siberia," with a preface by Doctor Marett. As the Mary Ewart Traveling Scholar of Somerville, she went with the anthropological expedition organized by Oxford University and the Philadelphia University Museum to the Yenisei Valley in Siberia, living for a year with the Samoyed and Tungus tribes within the arctic circle. In 1916 she published an account of her travels in her book "My Siberian Year," a serious contribution to the knowledge of the primitive tribes of Northern Asia. This was followed in 1919 by "The Turks of Central Asia in History and at the Present Day," a volume that is used as a reference book by the Foreign Office. Miss Czaplická was an accomplished linguist, and her essays on Asiatic and anthropological subjects were written in English, Russian, and Polish. She was an honorary member of Lady Margaret Hall, Mary Ewart lecturer in Ethnology, and a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society.

Czechoslovakia, new republic formed after the dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian empire, of Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, Slovakia, and autonomous Ruthenia. It is bounded by Germany and Poland on the north, by Germany, Austria, Hungary and Rumania on the south, and by Germany on the west.

The area and population of the various provinces, according to the census of 1919, were:

	Area Square Miles	Population
Bohemia	20,065	6,768,548
Moravia	8,584	2,622,271
Silesia	1,596	608,128
Slovakia	19,173	2,952,846
Ruthenia	4,670	572,023
German and Austrian territories assigned to Czechoslovakia by the Peace Conference.....	359	111,569
Total	54,438	13,636,390

For the area and population of the various provinces comprising Czechoslovakia, no late statistics are available, except for Slovakia, which in November, 1919, showed a population of 2,940,374, including 2,141,000 Slovaks, 665,000 Magyars, and 140,322 Germans. The principal cities, with their estimated population on 30 June, 1914, are: Prague and environs, 550,000; Brno, 135,000; Pilsen, 85,000; Pressburg, 85,000; Kosice, 48,000; Ostrava, 42,000; Liberec, 40,000; Usti, 40,000; Budejovice, 40,000. In all Czechoslovakia there are about 6,700,000 Czechs, 2,000,000 Slovaks, 900,000 Magyars, 3,900,000 Germans, 400,000 Russians and Ruthenians, and 130,000 Poles.

ECONOMIC SITUATION.—Agriculture is highly developed in Czechoslovakia. The crop yield has almost come up to the pre-war standard. In the crownlands formerly Austrian, but now belonging to Czechoslovakia, about half the entire area is devoted to agriculture. Cattle raising is carried on on a large scale; in spite of this, however, the country is unable to supply all its own foodstuff requirements, as during the war the yield of the soil diminished, and the stocks of cattle suffered severely. The country contains both pit coal and lignite. The pit coal output comprises about five-sixths of the total output of what was once Austria. Before the war it averaged 12.2 million tons, during the war it fell off considerably, but in 1920 it increased again to 11.1 million tons. In the latter year 1.4 million tons of coke were produced. The lignite output, which before the war averaged 21 million tons, in 1920 amounted to 19.7 million tons. In consequence of the reduced activities of the industries induced by the world's economic crisis, Czechoslovakia has a surplus of lignite and has reduced the export duties to stimulate its exportation. In 1919 the number of coal mines was 366; of employees, 110,233. The iron ore deposits are not very rich and may well be exhausted in fifty years. The gold and silver output of old Austria has fallen almost exclusively to Czechoslovakia. The output of radium-containing ores is of great importance, and in Bohemia and Moravia there are large deposits of kaolin and clay. The kaolin is of great importance to the German porcelain industry, 68,000 tons of the entire output (91,000 tons) going to Germany.

Of the entire industries of the former Austria-Hungary four-fifths are now to be found in Czechoslovakia. On account of the large decrease in population, all branches are forced to rely to a large extent on export. The number of factories in 1920 was 8,833, of which 2,000 were textile mills, 1,755 glass works and precious stone factories, 1,358 for food production, 674 for furniture and bent wood manufacture, 595 machine factories, 592 for metal manufacture, 297 paper mills, 458 chemical factories. A considerable part of the industries are in the hands of the Germans; in Bohemia nearly 47% of the industrial workers and 45% of the home workers are found in German districts. For 1919 the imports amounted to 6,555,418,562 kronen and the exports to 5,323,621,196 kronen. The imports, which consisted chiefly of cereals, cottons, woolens, and leather, came principally from Italy, the United States, Yugoslavia, Germany, Austria, and Switzerland; the exports, consisting chiefly of sugar, timber, fruit, glass, and iron, went to Austria, France, Germany, Poland, Great Britain, and Norway.

There are 8,297 miles of railway line in Czechoslovakia, of which 4,923 miles are owned by the State and the remaining 3,369 miles are privately owned.

It was the policy of the Austrian and Hungarian governments to separate Slovakia from its kindred countries, Bohemia and Moravia, and to bind it by a net of railways to the center of Hungary. The old government therefore constructed railway lines extending from Budapest, from north to south; only here and there were tracks built in a different direction, but without any interconnection, the only aim being to increase the traffic towards the Magyar center. The new Czechoslovakian government has plans not only to change this system in order to bind Moravia, Slovakia, and Bohemia more closely, but to improve the bad condition of the rolling stock. The Peace Treaty gave the Czechoslovak state the right to use certain wharves in the ports of Hamburg and Stettin. The chief port on the Danube is Bratislava (Pressburg); on the Elbe, Usti (Aussig) and Decin (Tetschen).

The debts of Czechoslovakia fall into five categories: (1) debts resulting from the war; (2) the nation's share of Austria-Hungary's pre-war debts; (3) tax of liberation, i. e., contribution to the war expenses of the allies; (4) internal debt; (5) loans of the new republic, totaling on 31 December, 1919, 3,500,000,000 francs of foreign debt and 25,000,000,000 crowns of internal debt. A Board of Audit and Control was constituted in March, 1919, to take charge of state economy, state property, and the national debt. At the beginning of 1922 the krone

($0.202 at par of exchange) had emancipated itself from the German mark and its fluctuations and had risen to its normal value.

EDUCATION.—The first task of the new Czechoslovak government was to free over 50,000 Czech children from German schools and to give them the opportunity to acquire an education in their mother tongue. Though the Magyars formed only 22% of the population of Slovakia, 90% of the schools were Magyar, there being but 300 Slovak schools for 2,000,000 Slovaks, and not a single Slovak secondary school. In one year alone the new republic established about 500 new elementary schools in Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia. In 1918-19 there were in Slovakia 3,931 elementary schools with 4,953 teachers and 390,764 pupils; of the total number of schools in the district, 756 were state institutions, the rest were denominational. In other parts of the republic the elementary schools are all state schools. Czechoslovakia has 74 gymnasia, 71 real gymnasia, 71 real schools, making a total of 216. Of the 178 secondary schools in Bohemia and Moravia, 114 were Czech and 64 German. In 1920 there were opened 2 gymnasia, 20 real gymnasia, 1 lyceum, 6 real schools, and 8 teacher's institutes. There are 4 universities in Czechoslovakia and 4 technical high schools. The law of 7 February, 1919, provided for the establishment of popular courses in civic education, and the law of 22 July, 1919, for the compulsory establishment of public libraries; another on 23 May, 1919, placed public school teachers on equality with governmental officials who possess a secondary school education.

MILITIA.—The system prevailing in the Austro-Hungarian army at the time of its collapse was adopted for a time, but the army was used primarily for defense and maintenance of internal order. On 20 March, 1920, Parliament adopted a bill to establish a militia and an army of 150,000 men.

GOVERNMENT.—The Provisional Constitution, promulgated as the Law of 13 November, 1918, was superseded on 29 February, 1920, by a new constitution passed by the National Assembly. According to its terms Czechoslovakia is a republic, with an elected president as its head. The National Parliament has two chambers, the House of Representatives with 300 members, and the Senate with 150 members, the former elected for six years, the latter for eight years, by a universal, equal, direct and secret suffrage according to the principles of proportional representation, the election to be on a Sunday chosen by the Ministry of the Interior. Voting is a civic duty which must be exercised personally, not by proxy. The Parliament meets in two regular sessions every year, and in electing the President both houses unite into a National Assembly. It has the legislative initiative, and when it is not in session a Permanent Committee, composed of sixteen members of the House of Representatives and eight of the Senate, is in office to make necessary provisions having the force of law, and to control the Executive. It cannot, however, change the constitutional laws, elect the President or impose a lasting financial burden, enlarge the military obligation, or alienate state property. The President, elected for seven years, is supreme commander of the armed forces and can declare war with the consent of Parliament, appoints the higher officers and officials, exercises the right of reprieve and is himself amenable to the laws only on a charge of high treason. All governmental and executive powers not explicitly given to the President are vested in the government, i. e., collective body of ministers (sixteen in all), which has the same responsibility as the British cabinet. There is a Constitutional Court modeled on the United States Supreme Court. Carpathian Russia, enjoying home rule, is an inseparable part of Czechoslovakia, which is divided for electoral purposes into 23 districts for the House of Representatives and 16 for the Senate. The official language is Czechoslovak, but the minority, numbering over 20%, may choose its official language and have its own schools. Freedom of speech and of the press, the protection of racial minorities, etc., are guaranteed.

RELIGION.—The population is 90% Catholic, the percentage of religious affiliations being divided approximately as follows: Catholics, 85.6%; Uniates, 4.3%; Lutherans, 4.5%; Calvinists, 2.5%; Jews, 2.7%. By the terms of the Treaty of Peace all inhabitants are entitled to the free exercise, whether public or private, of any creed, religion or belief, whose practices are not inconsistent with public order or public morals; the Czechoslovak nationals who belong to racial, religious, or linguistic minorities are to enjoy the same treatment and security in law and in fact as other Czechoslovak nationals, and in particular have an equal right to establish, manage and control at their own expense charitable, religious, and social institutions, schools and other educational establishments, with the right to use their own language and to exercise their religion freely within them. The minorities shall be assured an equitable share of the public funds for educational, religious, or charitable purposes. Marriage, the family and motherhood are under the special protection of laws. Such are the chief provisions of the Constitution of Czechoslovakia in matters touching directly upon religion, which work out in an unexpected way. In the first election (1920) the principle of proportional representation gave rise to 16 parties, 8 Czechoslovak, 5 German, and 3 Magyar. The following results give a clear idea of the composition of the population:

Name of Party	Seats in Chamber	Seats in Senate
Czechoslovak Parties
1. Social Democrats	74	41
2. Socialists	24	10
3. Progressive Socialists	3	0
4. National Democrats	19	10
5. Agrarians	28	14
6. Slovak National Peasants....	12	6
7. Popular (Catholic)	33	18
8. Tradesmen's	6	3
German Parties
9. Social Democrats	31	16
10. Bourgeois	15	8
11. Farmers	11	6
12. Christian Socialists (Catholic) ..	10	4
13. Freethinkers	5	3
Magyar Parties
14. Socialists	4	0
15. Farmers	1	1
16. Christian Socialists	5	2
Total	281	142

Although the population is over 85% Catholic, the socialist parties obtained over 50% of the available seats, while the Catholic parties obtained only 17%, to be increased, perhaps, when the remaining 19 deputies and 8 senators were up for election. This indicated that the vast majority of Catholics were affiliated with parties other than the expressly designated Catholic parties. Moreover, the Catholics obtained only one representative in the first Cabinet, appointed by the National Assembly in 1918, and none at all in the second, appointed by President Masaryk, seven months later. The ministers of the two Governments, as they are called, were divided among the parties as follows:

Name of Party	First Gov't	Second Gov't
Social Democrats	3	4
National Democrats	3	0
Agrarians	4	4
Socialists	3	4
Slovaks	2	2
Non-party	1	1

With the National Assembly and Government frankly socialistic, it is not surprising that anti-Catholic measures should be the order of the day, such as the law passed 22 May, 1919, abolishing the indissolubility of marriage and providing for divorce for a number of reasons. A Bill for the separation of the Church and State was introduced, its main points being the elimination of all expense items in the budget for religious work, the declaration of all church property as State property, and the performance by civil authorities of all marriage ceremonies. The passage of such a Bill would be contrary to the stipulations of Article I of the Treaty of Peace, but its very introduction shows the trend of the present Government. President Masaryk, formerly a Catholic, now an agnostic, is subservient to the anti-clerical Jewish elements in the government, and only Archbishop Kordac's determined defense of his rights, the growing strength of the Catholic party and the realization of the weight of papal influence in the world have checked the campaign of Church spoliation at first inaugurated. In September, 1921, an agreement between the bishops and the Government was reached, whereby high schools and colleges were to remain under the jurisdiction of the former, subject to the inspection of the latter. In 1920 Mgr. Clement Micara, consecrated titular Archbishop of Apamea, presented his credentials as papal nuncio to Czechoslovakia to President Masaryk. Doctor Krofta, Minister from Czechoslovakia to the Vatican, was present at his consecration in Rome. In the new Cabinet (1921) Mgr. Francis Sramek, a papal chamberlain from the diocese of Olmutz, is minister of railways.

In 1918 after Czechoslovakia had gained its independence, and with every national instinct fanned to white heat, a small group of Catholic priests broke away from their allegiance to the Holy See and endeavored to found a national church. The use of the vernacular in their worship and the marriage of the clergy were the first distinctive changes. Many of those who, under the Austrian régime, when Catholicism was the established religion, had been nominal adherents for reasons of convention, tradition, facility, and personal advantage, and others to whom it was an appeal for Czech liberty, joined the new Church. In 1920 its members were excommunicated by the Pope, who appointed to such dioceses as were then vacant Slovakian priests who were at the same time loyal Republicans, and permitted the use of the Czech language in the administration of the Sacraments. The schism is rapidly disintegrating, its faith, liturgy, and discipline alike being in a state of flux and confusion, and it now seeks union with the Serbian Orthodox Church. In the first national census taken in 1921 it was shown that the majority of the apostates profess no religion and are not now adherents of the National Church. The change from autocracy to democracy, from a friendly government to a hostile one, has been efficiently coped with by the Church, and in spite of a hostile government, a small schism, many apostasies, much indifference, a vigorous Serbian propaganda, and a still more influential propaganda emanating from wealthy Protestants in America, the Church in Czechoslovakia has become better organized and far more active in the space of two years than she was for three centuries under the Austrian régime.

The Church in Czechoslovakia is divided into the following sees: the prince bishopric of Olomouc (Olmütz), with its suffragan Brno (Brinn); the archdiocese of Prague with its suffragans Budejovice (Budweis), Hradec Kralove (Königgratz), and Litomerice (Leitmeritz); the diocese of Kosice (Cassovia), dependent on Eger; Banská Bystrica (Neusohl), dependent on Esztergom; Nitra, dependent on Eger; Rožnava (Rosenau), dependent on Eger; Spisz (Zips), dependent on Eger. The diocese of Munkács and Prjasev (Eperies) follow the Greek Ruthenian Rite and are dependent on Esztergom.

HISTORY.—The history of Czechoslovakia as a republic dates from 28 October, 1918, when the Narodni Vybor (National Council) took over the government of the Czechoslovak countries, including Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Slovakia, which had hitherto belonged to the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. This, however, was the culmination of a movement which dated back to 1848, when the European upheaval strengthened the Czech movement, which assumed a political shape with the establishment of the Czech language press. The outbreak of the World War found the Czechs united and ready for liberty. The bulk of them had fought for autonomy within a federalized empire, but the reign of terror with which the people's reluctance to take part in the war was met, strengthened those who demanded complete independence. The thousands of military executions, the numberless confiscations and arbitrary imprisonments, angered the people, whose soldiers were going over to the Russians and Servians in great numbers. Finally in Paris in November, 1915, a committee of exiles demanded complete independence and unity of race. Formal action severing Bohemia from Austria-Hungary was taken by the provisional government on 18 October, 1918, when it adopted a declaration of independence. On the same day the Czechs seized control of Prague, the capital of Bohemia, and the Czech flag was raised over Hradschin Castle. A general strike was proclaimed throughout the country. The Austrians made little attempt at resistance and after a few days fighting the Czechoslovak National Council gained full control. The Czech Nationalists took over the functions of the local government in Prague on 28 October. The Austrian Government fled to Vienna and the imperial military authorities handed over their power to the local head of the National Council. The republic was immediately proclaimed. Two delegations of Czech leaders, one from Prague and another from the Provisional Government at Paris, met in Geneva, Switzerland, to formulate a new constitution for the republic. On 14 November, 1918, the Czechoslovak National Assembly met in Prague and formally declared the Czechoslovak state to be a republic with Professor Thomas G. Masaryk as the first president. The Constitution was passed by the National Assembly on 29 February, 1920. In the general elections following, Masaryk was elected president (28 May, 1920).

In the meantime the Czechoslovak army was fighting gallantly in Siberia. It had been organized in Russia from the Czech and Slovak prisoners of war and fought side by side with the Russian army, keeping up the advance even after the Russian débâcle. When the Bolshevik Soviet Government signed the peace treaty at the beginning of March, 1918, the Czechoslovak army of 50,000 men was in Ukraina near Kiev. With the advance of the Austrian and German armies into Ukraina and the continual surrender of the Ukrainians into their hands, there was nothing for the Czechs to do but to retreat, despite their lack of lines of communication, of stores of materials, and of reserves. They decided to transport the army over Siberia and America to France, and with this purpose began the difficult retreat from Kiev. As proof of their loyalty to the Bolshevik government they surrendered all their arms, and in return the Bolsheviks guaranteed them unmolested passage through Siberia. Soon, however, came the order countermanding the permission and in May, 1918, Trotzsky of Russia declared war on Czechoslovakia. By this time the soldiers were strung out in a thin line from the Volga to Vladivostok. Assisted by Cossacks and Czechs, Colonel Kadlets, then commander of the Czech forces west of Irkutsk, fought his way west to Omsk, taking towns en route. Owing to the keen hostility of the Bolsheviks, the situation of the Czechoslovak forces became desperate, as they were hard pressed and near to the end of their resources. A frantic appeal to the allies was made. Japanese and American Expeditionary Forces landed at Vladivostok and fought their way far into the region of the Amur and the Trans-Baikal Provinces to protect the railway lines, which afforded the sole means of transportation of the Czechoslovak troops from the interior of Siberia to the Port of Vladivostok. In January, 1920, the United States decided to terminate its military undertaking in Siberia and ordered the withdrawal of its forces. The last of the Czechoslovak troops safely embarked from Vladivostok in September, 1920, returning home via the United States.

Under the terms of the Treaty of Versailles, a plebiscite was to be held in the district of Austrian Silesia surrounding the town of Teschen, in order to decide whether that district should be united with Poland or with Czechoslovakia. The Czechs claimed the Teschen district in the first instance on historical grounds, since the province had been part of the Kingdom of Bohemia, which they claimed to be indivisible. On the other hand there was a large Polish majority in the northeastern part of the district. In 1919 actual hostilities broke out. The controversy was settled at the Spa Peace Conference in July, 1920, where it was decided to partition the Teschen province forthwith instead of holding a plebiscite. The agreement gave a large moiety of territory, including the city of Teschen, to Poland, but Czechoslovakia had the better of the bargain in the matter of coal fields, receiving as its share valuable mines and railways.

Dacca, DIOCESE OF (DACCHENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-601b), in Bengal, India, suffragan of Calcutta. The population (1921) of this diocese numbers 18,123,300, of whom 11,730 are Catholics, exclusive of Catholics under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Mylapore. Rt. Rev. Francis Frederick Linneborn, C.S.C., D.D., died 21 July, 1915, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Joseph Legrand, C.S.C., D.D., born at Laigle, France, 1853, elected 18 August, 1916, consecrated 5 November, 1916. There are in the diocese 18 priests and 13 Brothers of the Congregation of the Holy Cross, 2 secular priests, and 40 Sisters of Our Lady of the Mission of Lyons. The educational institutions under the care of the religious orders established in the diocese are St. Gregory's School, a higher elementary boarding and day school for European boys, and St. Francis Xavier's convent, a higher elementary boarding and day school for girls. The charitable institutions consist of 2 orphanages for boys and girls. Dispensaries and day nurseries are under the care of the Sisters of Our Lady of the Mission; there also are hostels for Catholic boys and girls, and St. John the Baptist's Training School for Catechists.

The statistics of the diocese (1921) gives 13 head stations, 30 churches and chapels, and the Cathedral of the Holy Cross in Dacca. The stations between Dacca and Bahadurabad and Jagannathgunj, and jute stations on the Brahmaputra are attended from Dacca. The Holy Cross Bengali Booklet Series and the "Dharma Joyoti," a Bengali monthly, are published in this diocese.

Dahomey, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DAHOMENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-603d), a French colony in West Africa. The Faith was first preached here by the Franciscans in 1660, but with little success. Subsequently the attempts made by the Dominicans and the Augustinians also met with failure. It was not until 1861, when Fathers Borghero and Fernandez of the newly founded Society of African Missions of Lyons arrived, that the mission began to flourish. Porto Novo, the principal mission station, is now an active and prosperous parish with a flourishing school for boys and girls with 1400 students. More than 40,000 communions were given here in 1920. Wydah is the second most important mission and the seat of the Vicar Apostolic. It contains 12,000 inhabitants. Formerly a notorious center of Fetishism, it has now become a thriving mission. The negro chieftains have been won over by the Catholics and frequent the church and even the idolatrous priests are becoming reconciled to the Catholic religion. The station at Agmé is less important than formerly, as two new posts have been established in the vicinity, those of Grand-Popo and Koutonou, the latter of which is particularly prosperous and will soon rival Wydah.

The population numbers more than a million inhabitants, of whom 15,000 are Catholics and belong to the Fons, the Gorubas and Minas tribes. There are 11 principal stations with resident pastors, 32 missionary stations, 32 churches and chapels, 25 priests, 2 lay brothers, 5 communities of European nuns, 1 community of native Sisters with 11 members. The religious orders represented are the Sisters of the Queen of the Apostles (19), Sisters of the Family of the Sacred Heart (5). There is a seminary in the Vicariate with 9 students, also 1 normal school for teachers and catechists (12 students), 18 elementary schools (3,000 students of both sexes), 9 workshops (619 children), 91 catechists. Instruction was given to 362 children in the mission; there were 1,160 baptisms in a year, 51,758 confessions, 137,190 communions, and 62 marriages.

The following important events have taken place in the vicariate since 1918: the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception was consecrated in 1909; a seminary for the training of a native priesthood was opened in 1914; a normal school in 1918; a Congregation of native Sisters was founded in 1912.

Since 1920 there has been a widespread movement in favor of Catholicism.

Soon after the declaration of the World War the majority of the missionaries offered themselves for ambulance service and by their tact, self-sacrifice and earnestness rendered invaluable services to their country. Those who remained at home took up the work of the absent priests and continued the institutions which had previously been established and which signally helped to maintain order throughout the country. It is noteworthy that throughout the war not a single tribe revolted in any place where there was a residential priest. During these years of misery and distress, the Catholics were among the first who generously and willingly gave their services to their country. The teachers and catechists spontaneously gave a part of their monthly salary to the bishop to compensate for the decrease in his revenues, while a great number of Catholics voluntarily joined the army. When the Government issued the first war loan, the natives, prominent among whom were the Catholics, clearly understood their duty and were among the first to subscribe.

The present Vicar Apostolic is Rt. Rev. Francis Steinmetz, of the Lyons Society of African Missions, b. at Morschwiller in the diocese of Strasbourg, 10 January, 1868, ordained 13 July, 1890, and named missionary to Dahomey, elected bishop 20 June, 1906, and consecrated at Lyons 21 October following.

Dallas, DIOCESE OF (DALLASSENSIS), Texas, U. S. A., suffragan of New Orleans, created 16 July, 1890, subdivided through the erection of the diocese El Paso, January, 1915, comprises North Texas, embracing an area of approximately 96,000 sq. miles. In 1915 Bishop Lynch, the present (1922) incumbent, petitioned the Holy See to be relieved of the western portion of the diocese, a request which resulted in the formation of the Diocese of El Paso, composed of parts of the dioceses of Dallas, San Antonio, and Tucson.

The city of Dallas has a population of 159,960 (of whom 40,000 are Catholics), and is surrounded within a radius of fifty miles by two-fifths of the population of Texas. In forming the new diocese, Dallas contributed thirty-six churches and a Catholic population of 42,000. It is an important distributing center, rich in mineral resources, products of the soil, and has recently become an oil center. Rt. Rev. Joseph P. Lynch, the present (1922) and the third bishop of the diocese, was appointed as successor of Rt. Rev. Edward Joseph Dunne (b. 23 April, 1848; d. 5 August, 1910). Born 16 November, 1872, in the Diocese of Detroit, ordained 9 June, 1900, appointed vicar general of the diocese by Bishop Dunne, he was appointed Bishop of Dallas by Pope Pius X, and consecrated 12 July, 1911.

The latest statistics of the diocese give 60 parishes, 120 churches, 60 missions with churches, 62 stations, 61 secular and 39 regular priests, 2 convents for men, 14 for women, 483 Sisters in the various communities, 1 university with 27 professors and 186 students, 14 seminarians, 1 college for men with 72 boys, 12 academies with an attendance of 4253 in parish schools, 1 industrial school with 8 teachers and 50 pupils. The charitable institutions number: 1 home for business women, 2 Orphanages, 6 hospitals, free clinic and care is given to the sick in 5 hospitals, 1 refuge, Good Shepherd Home, and 1 medical mission. All institutions receive no compensation from the government.

Societies organized in the diocese, among the clergy: Priests' Eucharistic League; among the laity: Sacred Heart League, Confraternity of Blessed Sacrament, Catholic Daughters of America, Holy Family Sodality, Holy Name Society, Sodality of the B. V. M., St. Aloysius Sodality, and Knights of Columbus. Two Catholic periodicals are published in the diocese, "Cathedral Parish Monthly" and "St. Mary's Parish Monthly," Fort Worth.

During the World War the clergy and laity co-operated in all war activities, especially at Dallas and Fort Worth. Under the auspices of the clergy, the laity co-operating, considerable sums were expended for recreating the soldiers and assisting them in the matter of religious helpfulness. Since 1900 the diocese lost three zealous workers by the deaths of Rt. Rev. Msgr. J. Martinière, pioneer priest of the district, ministering in the early days to all the territory of 96,000 sq. miles, d. 10 April, 1910; Rt. Rev. Mgr. Louis Granger, d. 12 Jan., 1918, and Rt. Rev. Mgr. Joseph Blum, d. 1 October, 1918, both of whom labored zealously in the missions of Texas.

Damão (DAMAN, DAMAUN), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., IV-610a), is suffragan to Goa, in Portuguese India. This territory comprises four districts with a Catholic population of 87,842, of whom 39,966 are in the city of Bombay, 26,814 in the vicariate forane of Thana, 19,527 in the vicariate forane of Bassein, 928 in Damão, and 609 in Diu. Rt. Rev. Anthony Peter da Costa, the first Bishop of Damão, was succeeded by Most Rev. Sebastião José Pereira, b. 4 October, 1857, appointed titular Bishop of Epiphania and prelate nullius of Mozambique 7 November, 1897, proclaimed 24 March, 1898, transferred 17 July, 1900. He is the Bishop of Damão and Archbishop ad honorem of Cranganore. There are 5 European and 89 Indian priests aided by Franciscan Missionary Brothers and the Franciscan nuns. The educational institutions under the care of the missionaries consist of primary schools for boys and girls under the management of the parish priests, 2 high schools, 3 schools for boys and girls, a Catholic institute, and a diocesan seminary. The charitable institutions of the diocese consist of 3 homes for the poor, conducted by the Society of Nossa Senhora da Piedade, 2 orphanages with 120 orphans, a widows' home with a school for girls, a confraternity of O. L. of Piety for the benefit of old and invalid priests of the diocese. By 1921 statistics there are 50 churches, 21 chapels, and 71 head-stations.

Damaraland (cf. C. E., IV-610d), the middle part of the protectorate of Southwest Africa, formerly a German colony, now administered by the Union of South Africa, under a mandate from the League of Nations, dated 17 December, 1920. The country was captured from the Germans in July, 1915. Up to 1920 the German law was in force; new legislation has been effected by proclamations under martial law. In January, 1920, Roman Dutch was made the common law of the country and a number of Union Acts have since been applied by proclamations. Civil Courts have been established and all troops withdrawn, and although martial law has not been repealed, the government has been conducted on a civil basis for some time. For Catholic statistics see CIMBERASIA, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF.

Damascus, ARCHDIOCESE OF (DAMASCENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-611d), in Syria, was founded by the Apostles. The diocese comprises three rites, namely, the Greek Melchite (Damascensis Melchitarum), the Maronite (Damascensis Maronitarum), and the Syrian Rite (Damascensis Syrorum).

Damascus is the Patriarchal Diocese of the Greek Melchite Rite, and the episcopal residence of the Patriarch of Antioch, and has jurisdiction over the sees of Alexandria and Jerusalem, whose titulars are still schismatic. As the result of an indult it carries the title of these patriarchates and has three patriarchal vicars at Damascus, Alexandria, and Jerusalem. Since 1895 it also has jurisdiction over the Greek Catholics of Constantinople.

The Most Rev. Joseph-Demetri Cadi, b. 18 January, 1861, studied in Paris, entered the seminary of Issy in 1883, was ordained priest in 1888, professed, made prefect of the patriarchal College of Damascus, patriarchal vicar of Jerusalem, rector of St. Julien le Pauvre in Paris, 1898, appointed bishop 27 October, 1903, enthroned in Aleppo 22 December of the following year, elected patriarch and confirmed 3 July, 1919. He resides at Damascus and governs his diocese through the Patriarchal Vicar, Mgr. Homs, titular Bishop of Tarsus.

According to the 1921 census the population numbers 200,000 Mussulmans, 10,835 Greek Catholics, 19,000 Greek Orthodox, 11 secular and 15 regular priests, 14 churches or chapels.

The Maronite Rite with the episcopal residence at Reyfoun, in ancient Lebanon, is administered by Rt. Rev. Richard Seemaly, appointed bishop 1920, succeeding Rt. Rev. Bishop Massad (b. 6 January, 1859; d. March, 1919). This diocese comprises 85,000 Maronite Catholics, about 15,000 Schismatics and 200,000 Mussulmans, 52 parishes, 95 secular and 27 regular clergy, 89 churches or chapels.

The Syrian Rite, administered by Most Rev. Clement Michael Baccasce, born 6 October, 1865, in Aleppo, student of the College of the Propaganda in Rome, appointed bishop 3 June, 1900, consecrated 24 September following. According to 1921 statistics the diocese numbers 3,000 Catholics; 9 secular priests, 4 churches or chapels, 4 schools with 68 pupils.

For the Latin Rite Damascus is a titular see, the title being held by Mgr. Carlo Sica, former bishop of Foligno, now resident in Rome.

Dan (or GIAN), Cochinchinese martyr, b. at Biuhong, eastern Cochinchina, about 1845; d. at Cho-moi, about 1860. The child of honest Christian parents, she was remarkable for her filial obedience, respect, and love, not less than for her sweetness and strength of character. When only thirteen years of age she was imprisoned during the persecution by which Tu-duc, King of Annam devastated the province from 1858-1862. For two years she underwent excruciating tortures rather than renounce her faith, her sufferings finally causing her death. It was not until several years later that she was given proper burial, when her remains, together with those of eight other martyrs, were collected and buried in the cemetery at Chomoi by Van, a native priest. The cause of her canonization was introduced and signed by Pope Benedict XV, 25 May, 1921.

Daniel, ANTHONY (cf. C. E., IV-621c).—The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome, 9 August, 1916.

Danzig, formerly an important commercial city of Germany, now a free state by the terms of the Treaty of Versailles (1919). The area is about 709 square miles, and the population on 8 October, 1919, was 351,380, of which about 7 per cent are Poles. To the west, five miles distant, is the nearest Polish district. Danzig's importance as a port is shown in the latest register of shipping: in 1918, 1,237 vessels of 455,127 tons with a total cargo of 76,436 tons entered, and 1,223 vessels of 439,473 tons, with a total cargo of 109,785 tons cleared the port. The city is connected with Poland by three main railway lines: Danzig to Warsaw, 204 miles; Danzig to Lodz, 263 miles; and Danzig to Posen, 192 miles. The educational system of the city in 1919 included 38 common schools with 517 classes, 322 male and 218 female teachers, and 24,288 pupils; 3 intermediate schools with 44 classes, 46 teachers and 1,858 pupils; 5 higher schools with 81 classes and 2,464 pupils; and a technical high school with 65 teachers and 864 students. The government of the city is laid out in the new Constitution, approved by the League of Nations on 17 November, 1920, which provides for a Volkstag or Diet of 120 members elected for four years, and a Senate, consisting of a president, vice-president and twenty senators. The president and nine senators are elected by the Volkstag for six years; the vice-president and the other eleven senators for the duration of the Volkstag. The sittings of the Senate are not public. The President is the chief administrative officer. The elections are universal, direct, and secret on the basis of proportional representation, suffrage being granted to those of both sexes over twenty years of age. The official language is German, but the Polish-speaking element is to have freedom to develop its own nationality, and to use its mother-tongue in the schools, law courts, and government offices. Danzig is not to serve as a naval or military base, and in case of attack is to be defended by Poland. The public school system is to be "organically developed on the principles of undenominationalism." The proclamation of the freedom of the city and adjacent territory as well as the announcement of the Danzig-Polish treaty took place on 20 November, 1920.

Davenport, DIOCESE OF (DAVENPORTENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-640b), Iowa, comprises an area of 12,000 sq. miles, and has a Catholic population of 51,253. Rt. Rev. James Davis, D.D., is still the bishop of the diocese. According to 1921 statistics the diocese numbers 135 secular and 8 regular clergy, 92 churches with resident priests, 31 missions with churches, 13 chapels, 23 seminarians, 1 college for boys (300 students), 1 college for young ladies, 6 academies for girls, 49 parishes and missions with schools, 1 orphanage (101 orphans), 12 hospitals. The clergy are aided by the various religious communities of men and women established in the diocese.

Dayton University, in the State of Ohio, formerly known as St. Mary College, was incorporated under that name in 1878, and in July, 1920, an amendment was made to the original articles of incorporation and the name changed to "University of Dayton." It is a boarding and day college for young men under the direction of the Society of Mary, and comprises three distinct departments; the collegiate, the pre-medical, and the preparatory or high school. The collegiate department comprises the schools of arts, letters, science, education, commerce and finance, and engineering. The school of engineering was organized in September, 1910. The pre-medical department comprises a two-year course for high school graduates desiring to prepare for medical college.

In 1920 the university organized an extension course to be given evenings in any of the usual college subjects, whenever the number of registrants is sufficient to warrant it. Since 1907 a number of scholarships have been founded in the university. The total registration of students in the collegiate and pre-medical departments for 1920-21 was 131, and the faculty numbered 49. The Rev. Joseph A. Fetzlaff, S.M., is president of the university.

Deacons (cf. C. E., IV-647b).—No one may receive the diaconate unless he has begun his fourth year's theological studies. Deacons may as a matter of course be authorized to preach, but can administer solemn baptism only by permission and in exceptional cases; they can expose the Blessed Sacrament at Benediction, but may not bless with the Sacred Host, except when in case of necessity they bring the Viaticum to the sick.

Defender of the Matrimonial Tie (cf. C. E., IV-675).—Every diocese must have a priest to act as defender of the matrimonial tie. If he is not appointed merely for a special case he continues in office during an episcopal vacancy, but he requires confirmation by the new bishop. He is usually charged with defending the validity of ordinations and frequently acts as diocesan promoter of justice. Codex jur. can., 1,586.

Delaware (cf. C. E., IV-692a).—The population of the State of Delaware according to the United States census of 1920 was 223,003, an increase of 10.2% over that of 1910. The population of the city of Wilmington was 110,168. Of the total population, 192,615 were whites, 30,335 were negroes, and the rest (53) included Indians, Chinese, and Japanese. Of the native whites, there were 172,805 (native parentage, 139,876) and of the foreign-born white, 19,810. The urban population was 120,767; the rural population, 102,236. The number of illiterates over ten years of age was 10,508, or 5.9 per cent. Of the negroes, over ten years of age, 19 per cent were illiterate.

AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRY.—Delaware is mainly an agricultural state, 85 per cent of the land being in farms, which in 1920 numbered 10,140 and had a total area of 944,511 acres, 653,052 acres being improved land. The total value of farm property was $80,137,614. The chief crops are maize and wheat, but fruit and tomato growing are important. The state has oyster and other fisheries which are receiving increasing attention. The capital invested in manufacturing industries in the state in 1919 was $148,207,598, an increase of 113 per cent over that in 1914. The number of establishments was 663, of persons engaged in manufacture, 32,972; of the value of the products, $165,073,009. The tanning, currying, and finishing of leather is the most important manufacturing industry. During the war, Wilmington experienced the greatest boom of its history, on account of the powder works situated there. There is an important coastwise trade, particularly with New York, which is connected with Wilmington by a line of steamers. Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bay are connected by a canal.

EDUCATION.—The present school law was passed in 1919 and provides for a minimum school tax of $100 yearly in each district to support the schools therein, and grants $250,000 derived each year from the income tax to the elementary schools (from first to seventh grade). The State Board of Education consists of five members appointed by the governor for five years. Six months continuous school attendance in each year is compulsory for all children between the ages of seven and fourteen. In 1920 the total attendance in the free schools of the state was 37,135; the total expenditure for school purposes was $1,738,884. In 1914 the Women's College of Delaware was established by the state. The laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: in every elementary school, both public and private, of and in the state, there shall be taught at least reading, writing, arithmetic, spelling, oral and written English, history of the United States and Delaware, civics, elementary science, hygiene, sanitation, and physical training. All of these subjects shall be taught in the English language; no public money shall be appropriated in aid of any denominational school (X-3); all real or personal property used for school purposes, where the tuition is free, shall be exempt from taxation and assessment for public purposes (X-3); session of private schools must be the same as that of public schools; private schools must annually report to State Board regarding enrollment and attendance. They must also submit a monthly attendance record, and furnish such records as required by laws regulating child labor.

RECENT HISTORY.—During the European War Delaware contributed 7,487 soldiers or 2 per cent of the United States Army. In the expeditionary force, 7 officers and 80 men died; 12 officers and 200 men were wounded; 4 were taken prisoners. Delaware ratified the Federal prohibition amendment on 18 March, 1918, the ninth state to do so; the woman suffrage amendment was defeated in the state, 2 June, 1920.

CATHOLIC PROGRESS.—The Catholic population of the state in 1920 was 30,000. There are 50 churches in the diocese of Wilmington, of which 25 are in Delaware. The number of priests in the diocese is 57, and the number in the state is 42; of the latter 15 belong to religious orders. There are 13 parochial schools in the state, with 4,635 pupils. The active church membership of the leading Protestant denominations are (1916): Methodist Episcopal, 28,004; Protestant Episcopal, 4,656; Baptist, 3,651; Presbyterian, 6,197. In 1919 Dr. Frederic Joseph Kinsman, the Protestant Episcopal bishop of Delaware, resigned his see to become a Catholic.

RECENT LEGISLATION.—Recent legislation includes the regulation of child labor by means of a commission (1913), change in administration of the state government by the consolidation of several departments, a budget system, a provision for the commitment and care of the feeble-minded or criminally inclined persons, and a new school code.

Delta of the Nile. VICARIATE APOSTOLIC (DELTA NILI; cf. C. E., IV-701d), Egypt, was raised to the rank of a vicariate 17 September, 1909, with residence at Choubra. It is entrusted to the African Missions of Lyons, Mgr. Auguste Duret, titular bishop of Bubastis, being appointed first Vicar Apostolic 24 February, 1910. In 1911, Baron Empain, promoter of the Company of the Oasis of Heliopolis, offered the Society two pieces of land and the building of a church and residence gratuitously, with the condition of making Heliopolis the residential see. It was partially agreed, and Mgr. Duret with two Fathers of the African Missions took his residence there as simple occupant.

The vicariate comprises (with the four provinces under its jurisdiction and a part of the government at Cairo), a total population of, by the (1920) statistics, 3,500,000 inhabitants; Catholics of the Latin Rite, 12,000; Oriental Catholics, 12,000; heretics and schismatics, 20,000; and the rest Mohammedans. At the start of the Delta Mission, there were hardly a thousand Catholics of all the rites, attended by the Franciscan Fathers, who had only two stations. In 1920 there were 7 important stations with 7 parochial churches, 35 public chapels of the Latin Rite, 10 schools for boys, directed by the three Congregations of men in the Vicariate; African Mission Fathers, Jesuit Fathers, and Christian Brothers with 2,211 pupils; 13 schools for girls directed by the Religious of N. D. des Apotres, Good Shepherd, Sacred Heart, Charity of Bescançon, and St. Vincent de Paul, with an attendance of 4,046 pupils. A comparison of the statistics between 1915 and 1920 show a steady growth in the attendance of Catholic schools, which numbered 3,360 in 1915 and 6,256 in 1920. The charitable institutions comprise 7 dispensaries, 1 home for the aged with 100 inmates kept by the Religious of N. D. des Apotres, 3 workshops for the poor, 1 refuge, 2 orphanages for girls, 1 for boys, 1 nursery, 2 hospitals, and 1 house of the Religious de Marie Reparatrice, a contemplative order of women who conduct several pious works for ladies and young people. The vicariate is administered by 40 priests of the African Missions, 3 brothers; 29 Jesuit Fathers, 13 brothers, 3 auxiliary priests and 33 Christian Brothers, aided by 372 religious of the various congregations.

The present (1922) vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Jules Girard of the African Missions, titular Bishop of Bulla, b. 25 May, 1863, in the diocese of Puy, ordained priest 19 September, 1886, founder of St. Mark's parish in Cairo, administrator of the Vicariate Apostolic of Delta of the Nile, 1916, appointed Vicar Apostolic, 28 June, 1921, succeeding Rt. Rev. Auguste Duret (b. 2 January, 1846; d. 29 August, 1920).

Deluil-Martiny, MARY OF JESUS, foundress of the Congregation of the Daughters of the Sacred Heart, b. in Marseilles, France, 28 May, 1841; d. there 27 February, 1894. She was educated at the Visitation Convent in her native city and at the convent of the Sisters of the Sacred Heart in Lyons. For several years she remained at home and devoted herself to the spread of the devotion of the "Guard of Honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus." In 1867 with the permission of her director she took a vow of perpetual chastity, and soon after set about the foundation of a congregation of women to be devoted to the reparation of the faults of the faithful and of priests. She put herself under obedience to the Archbishop of Malines, who, on 9 December, 1872, approved the new institute to be known as the Congregation of the Daughters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

Sister Mary of Jesus built the first house of the Society at Berchem near Antwerp, and adjoining it erected the Basilica of the Sacred Heart. She then established her religious in Aix-en-Provence and at La Servianne, near Marseilles. Many houses were founded after her death, amongst them the mother-house in Rome. The constitutions were finally approved by the Holy See 2 February, 1902. The foundress was assassinated by the gardener of La Servianne, as she walked in the grounds with her community. On the expulsion of the Congregation from France, her body was removed to the Basilica of the Sacred Heart at Berchem. She had ruled her institute with great prudence and charity and given an example of the highest virtue to the perfection of her life. The introduction of her cause of canonization was signed by Pope Benedict XV, 25 May, 1921.

Denmark (cf. C. E., IV-722d).—The census held on 1 February, 1921, gives the area of Denmark as 16,566 square miles and the population as 3,268,807, including 184,133 in North Schleswig. In 1916 the population, excluding the Faroes, consisted of 1,415,833 males and 1,505,540 females. The largest cities with their population in 1916 are: Copenhagen 506,390 (with suburbs, 605,772), Aarhus 65,858, Odense 45,303, Aalborg 38,102, Horsens 25,149, Randers 24,428.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Of the total area of Denmark 80 per cent. is productive; about one-sixth of the unproductive area is peat bogs. Of the productive area 6 per cent. is forest; and of the remainder less than one-half is arable, and the residue pasture and meadows. The acreage and production of the chief crops in 1920 were as follows: wheat 156,405 acres, 189,000 tons; rye 525,512 acres, 319,700 tons; barley 596,292 acres, 512,700 tons; oats 1,012,787 acres, 684,100 tons. During the first three years of the World War, Denmark was called upon to furnish food supplies in greater quantities than ever before in her history, but the submarine campaign in 1917 cut off the supply of raw materials from abroad and the lack of fertilizers resulted in decreased production of the land. On 15 July, 1920, there were in Denmark proper 563,467 horses, 2,286,408 head of cattle, 504,241 sheep, 1,007,981 swine, and 13,997,015 hens. Denmark owes her prominent position in dairying and agriculture chiefly to the Co-operative System. The divisions of land are so small and stocks of animals are so great—nearly 60 per cent. of the Danish farms consist of less than thirteen acres each—that, without an organization to combine scientifically the productive capacity of the different farms, the country could hardly have gained the rank that is now holds. The Central Co-operative Committee has general powers of supervision over the entire country. The total value of the fisheries in 1919 was £3,006,222. The fleet in 1919 consisted of 15,422 boats. In 1920 the value of the exports was about $430,000,000; of the imports, $800,000,000. In 1918 most of Denmark's trade was with Germany, Sweden, Great Britain, and Norway. The country proper (excluding Copenhagen) had in 1919, 4197 miles of road, besides 23,654 miles of by-ways. In 1918 there were 2635 miles of railway, of which 1283 miles belong to the State. In 1920 the state debt was $51,458,894, divided into an internal and a foreign debt. The latter amounted to $14,130,282. The public debt was incurred in part by large annual deficits of former years before the establishment of parliamentary government, and in part by railway undertakings and construction of public works. The total expenditure for old-age pensions was 33,711,000 kroner, of which one-half was expended by the State. An important feature in the administration of the finances of Denmark is the maintenance of a large reserve fund. In weights and measures the country has now adapted itself to the decimal system of Central and Southern Europe.

EDUCATION.—There are 3466 public elementary schools of which 63 are in Copenhagen, 158 in other towns and 3245 in the rural districts. The total number of pupils in 1918 was 406,000. Besides the elementary schools, there were 13 government schools and 150 private schools and certain unclassified private schools, which had in 1918 an attendance of 60,000. For higher instruction there are furthermore (1919): a veterinary and agricultural college at Copenhagen with 58 professors and teachers and about 600 pupils; 203 technical school with 23,000 pupils; 21 training colleges for teachers with 1600 pupils; 81 commercial schools with 12,500 pupils; 21 agricultural or horticultural schools, and 58 popular high schools (adult schools of about 9000 pupils); a college of pharmacy with 80 students; a dental school, an art school, and a polytechnical institute. The adult schools are all private, but to them and the agricultural schools the State makes an annual grant of about 706,000 kroner. Grants are made to the grammar and middle-class schools amounting annually to about 4,000,000 kroner. The University of Copenhagen has about 100 on the faculty and a total attendance of about 3200 students.

RECENT HISTORY.—In 1916, a plebiscite in Denmark favoring the step, the Virgin Islands were sold to the United States for $25,000,000. At the same time the United States agreed to recognize Danish sovereignty over the whole of Greenland. In 1918 Iceland became a sovereign state of Denmark; this new status is the culmination of long agitation on the part of Iceland for greater equality between the two countries. The Bill granting autonomy was first submitted to the Legislature of Iceland, ratified by a plebiscite among the people of the island, and finally passed by the Danish Parliament. During the World War Denmark maintained a position of impartial neutrality, although the war had adverse economic effects on the people, as the British Government, in their policy of blockading Germany, restricted imports into contiguous neutral states. At the Peace Conference at Versailles in 1919 it was decided that the portions of Schleswig which had been taken away from Denmark by Germany as a result of the war of 1864, should decide by a plebiscite whether or not they should be attached to Denmark, and provision for this was made by the Treaty of Versailles. Schleswig was accordingly divided into three zones; the first, including the territory to the north of the line reaching from the south of Tondern to the north of Flensburg; the second comprising the center of the German population, namely the city of Flensburg; the third, including both banks of the Kiel Canal. The first voted for union with Denmark; the second to remain with Germany; and the third, being completely German, was excluded from the plebiscite. Denmark in turn was to recompense Germany for railroad property and all state buildings, also make restitution to Danish citizens for loss sustained in exchange in crowns; and to assume responsibility for the pensioning of widows and orphans, and disabled soldiers. In 1922 the Danish Parliament discussed the living apart of married couples for a year and a half as sufficient ground for divorce.

The present Constitution of Denmark is founded on the Grundlov (charter) of 5 June, 1915, as amended on 10 September, 1920. It provides for a Diet (Rigsdag), composed of two houses: the Folketing (House of Commons) and the Landsing (Senate). The King must be a member of the Evangelical-Lutheran Church, the official Church of the state; he has not the right to declare war or to sign peace without the consent of the Rigsdag. The present ruler is Christian X, who succeeded to the throne at the death of his father on 14 May, 1912. The new election law was passed on 11 April, 1920, to secure fair representation in this small country of many political parties. The old Danish law was based upon the absolute majority principle and single member-district method. The method was revised in 1915, when another electoral law retained the single-member seats, but added for distribution 23 supplementary seats among the parties which did not obtain a representation in proportion to the number of votes cast. Under the new law the principle of proportional representation is introduced. All single-member districts are replaced by large constituencies which elect members by the list ballot (scrutin de liste) method according to the proportional representation system. To make the representation of the different parties conform to their voting strength, supplementary seats are retained. Copenhagen is divided into three constituencies, each of which elects six members by proportional representation. To the 18 members thus elected are added six supplementary seats distributed to parties which may not have obtained a representative in proportion to the number of votes cast for them. The country outside Copenhagen is divided into 20 constituencies which elect 93 representatives by the proportional system. In addition there are 23 supplementary seats, 13 of which go to Jutland and 10 to the Islands of Seeland, Funen, etc., for distribution to parties which have not obtained a proportional representation.

DENMARK, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DANIOBENNENSIS), with residential seat at Copenhagen, comprises a Catholic population of 27,000, of whom 7000 are Poles, and about 100 Germans, the rest being Danes. In 1921 the northern part of the prefecture apostolic of Schleswig-Holstein was annexed to the vicariate Apostolic of Denmark and the southern part left to the care of the Diocese of Osnabruck. According to statistics for 1922 there are in the vicariate 29 parishes, 20 secular and 55 regular priests, 25 Brothers, 4 seminarians, 33 churches or chapels, 16 stations, 1 high school and 1 training school aided by the Government, 11 religious congregations of men, 11 of women with 600 sisters, 1 home, 8 asylums, and 20 hospitals. In the city of Copenhagen there are 6000 Catholics; 5 parishes and 6 chapels; a new church was consecrated in June, 1917. The Jesuit College of St. Andrew at Odrupshoi has been closed and its buildings are now occupied by the Sisters of the Assumption. The Cistercians of Bohemia have recently made a foundation in the vicariate.

The Sodality of the Blessed Virgin and the St. Vincent de Paul Society are established among the laity. New missions have been opened at Aakirkeby, Holbak, Haderslev, Hørsholm, Allerslev, Naestved, Nykobing, Maribo, Nakskov, and Svendborg. Catholic journals include, "Nordisk Ugeblad," "Katolsk Ungdom," and "Jesu Hjertes Budbringer." The Church in Denmark continues to advance and there are many yearly conversions, chiefly amongst the wealthier tradespeople. A genuine respect for Catholicism is prevalent everywhere, and the recent canonisation of Joan of Arc was celebrated by a public ceremony and her statue placed in a central square of the city, the first time a saint was publicly honored in Denmark since the Reformation. Among the recent prominent converts are Har Scavenius, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and his wife, and Count Knuth-Knuthenborg. In 1919 Mgr. Dieppen, Bishop of Bois-le-Duc, was appointed Apostolic Visitor to the Scandinavian countries by Pope Benedict XV, in order to study their condition and report on the most efficacious means for the spread of the Faith. King Christian visited the Pope in 1921, and on his return reported his visit to the vicar apostolic, a thing unprecedented in Denmark.

The first vicar apostolic Mgr. Johannes Von Euch, the apostle of Denmark, died in March, 1922. He was born at Meppen, Hanover, in 1834, studied at Mainz, and in 1860 was sent as vicar to the church of St. Anschaire, Copenhagen. Two years later he went to Fredericia in Jutland, where he created one of the most flourishing parishes in the country; on the death of Mgr. Gruder he returned to Copenhagen to succeed him as prefect apostolic. When Denmark was made a vicariate (1892) he became vicar with the title of Bishop of Anastasiopolis, and the steady progress of the Church in this country where he was universally loved is due to his tireless labor. The Holy See bestowed upon him the dignity of assistant to the pontifical throne, domestic prelate and Roman count, while King Christian X made him a Commander of the Order of "Dannebrog," the Danish Legion of Honor.

Denunciation (cf. C. E., IV-733b).—Clerics and religious joining the Freemasons or other like societies are to be denounced to the Congregation of the Holy Office (Codex jur. can., 2336).

Denver, DIOCESE OF (DENVERIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-733d), comprises the entire State of Colorado, an area of 103,645 sq. miles. The second bishop of this diocese, the Rt. Rev. Nicholas C. Mats, who had filled the see since 1889, died on 9 August, 1917, and was succeeded by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. J. Henry Tihen, D.D. Bishop Tihen was born in Oldenburg, Ind., in 1861 and ordained in 1886, after which he accompanied the Rt. Rev. John J. Hennessy to Wichita when he took charge of that see, and acted as chancellor of the diocese and rector of the cathedral until his promotion to the episcopacy. He was consecrated Bishop of Lincoln, Neb., on 6 July, 1911, and filled that see until his transfer to Denver, 21 December, 1917.

The Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception, erected at a cost of over half a million dollars, was consecrated by Bishop Tihen on 23 October of the present year (1921). The liquidation of the debt which had remained on the cathedral as well as the erection of a home for the aged, completed in 1918, and entrusted to the Little Sisters of the Poor, was due to the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. John K. Mullen. Mr. Mullen was appointed a Knight of St. Gregory by Pontifical Brief dated 10 August, 1921. This honor was also conferred on Captain John J. Lambert of Pueblo, who was largely responsible for the erection of the Sacred Heart Orphanage in that city, and who died 5 January, 1916, at the age of 79. In 1907 St. Thomas Theological Seminary was erected by the priests of the Congregation of the Mission and opened the following year. During the war, however, the Benedictine College at Pueblo was forced to close because of lack of funds to support it, and where formerly there were 10 academies in the diocese there are now 5, the others having given way to, or been transformed into parochial schools.

At present the religious orders established in the diocese are: Men: Jesuits, Benedictines, Franciscans, Dominicans, Redemptorists, Servites, Theatines, and Augustinians. Women: Sisters of Loretto, Charity, St. Joseph, Mercy, the Good Shepherd, Third Order of St. Dominic, St. Francis, St. Benedict, Charity of the B. V. M., St. Francis of the Perpetual Adoration, Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart, St. Benedict, St. Joseph, St. Francis of Assisi, Little Sisters of the Poor, Servants of Mary, Holy Cross, Presentation, Capuchin, Third Order of St. Francis, School Sisters of St. Francis, and School Sisters of Charity. There are 119 secular and 78 regular priests in the diocese, 101 churches with resident pastors and 148 missions with chapels. The various educational and charitable institutions include, 5 academies with 855 pupils, 36 parochial schools with 8,778 children, a theological seminary with 29 students, 19 of whom are from this diocese, a Jesuit college for boys with 281 students, 5 orphan asylums with 873 children, an industrial and reform school with 248 inmates, a home for the aged with 120 inmates, a home for girls and business women, and 13 hospitals with 22,189 patients annually. The Catholic population numbers 113,722.

De Roaldès, ARTHUR WASHINGTON, surgeon, b. at Opelousas, Louisiana, 25 January, 1849; d. in New Orleans, 12 June, 1918. He was educated in France by the Jesuits and graduated from the University of France in letters in 1865 and in arts in 1866. Three years later he received his degree in medicine from the University of Louisiana and in 1870 from that of Paris. During the Franco-German war he was assistant surgeon with the 6th International Ambulance Corps, was mentioned for bravery and subsequently decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honor. He served as surgeon with the Red Cross during the French Commune, and in 1872 returned to New Orleans, where from 1880 to 1883 he was in charge of the Charity Hospital of Louisiana. In 1889 Dr. De Roaldès founded the Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat Hospital of New Orleans, of which he was trustee and surgeon-in-chief until his death. He was emeritus professor of diseases of the ear, nose and throat at the Post Graduate Department of Tulane University, Louisiana, a member of many medical congresses and an officer of numerous medical societies. In 1905 the Progressive Union of New Orleans awarded Dr. De Roaldès the "Picayune Loving Cup" for the most meritorious services rendered the community during that year, the French Government offering at the same time a magnificent Sevres vase to his foundation, which subsequently received like gifts from Italy, Spain, Germany, and Russia for gratuitous services rendered their indigent sick. In 1906 he was promoted to be a commander of the Legion of Honor, and Pope Pius X conferred on him the title of Commander of the Order of St. Gregory the Great. Three years later the King of Italy made him a knight of the Order of Saints Maurice and Lazarus. Before his death Dr. De Roaldès lost his sight as the immediate result of his work for the blind. He wrote much on surgical topics. In 1921 the enlargement and renovation of the hospital established by him was begun as a memorial to him.

Déroulède, PAUL, poet and politician, b. in Paris 2 September, 1846; d. in Nice, 30 January, 1914.

He was educated in the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, Bonaparte, and Versailles, studied law and was called to the bar in 1870. Shortly afterwards he enlisted in a regiment of zouaves, was taken prisoner at Sedan, escaped and returning to France was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. After devoting a number of years to literary pursuits, he entered politics and founded the League of Patriots, an association noted for its hostility to Germany. In 1883 he went to Russia to further a Franco-Russian alliance, and later supported General Boulanger during his temporary rise to power. His anti-Semitism was marked during the Dreyfus case. In 1890 he was a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and ten years later was banished for having tried to substitute the Republican Plebiscite for the Parliamentary Constitution. He was pardoned in 1905. During the last years of his life M. Déroulède was a fervent Catholic, and died fortified by the rites of the Church. His literary productions include the popular "Songs of the Soldier" (1872), "More Songs of the Soldier" (1875), "Marches and Alarms" (1881), "The Tower of Auvergne," "Military Songs" (1888), a patriotic drama "L'Hetman" (1877); other dramas, "The Moabites" (1880) prohibited by the censor, "Messire Duguesclin" (1895), and "The Death of Hoche" (1897), "Sons of the Peasant" (1894), "The Most Beautiful Girl in the World" (1897), "Writings by the Way" (1907), "More Writings by the Way" (1907), etc.

Derry, DIOCESE OF (DERRIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-742d), in Ireland, suffragan of Armagh, is at present (1922) administered by Rt. Rev. Charles MacHugh, b. 12 August, 1852, in the diocese, rector of the seminary vicar general, prelate of the Holy See, 2 December, 1906, consecrated bishop, 29 September, 1907, succeeding Rt. Rev. John Keys O'Doherty, b. 25 September, 1833, d. February, 1907.

The population according to 1911 census was 213,878, of whom 122,528 were Catholics. There are at present (1922) 39 parishes, 82 churches, 120 secular priests, 8 convents, 200 nuns of various communities, 1 seminary, high class boarding-schools. National and primary schools are under clerical management. The charitable institutions include, 3 homes, 2 of which are for young girls and old women, and the other for boys and old men, are kept by the Sisters of Nazareth, 1 home kept by the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, for penitents and a preservation shelter. In county hospitals and all the institutions supported by public votes, the ministry of priests is unrestricted.

The events of special importance in the diocese are: the erection of the Church of St. Columcille; a church at Maghera, the laying of the cornerstone of the church of Our Lady of Lourdes, and the purchase of extensive grounds for charitable purposes, the foundation of a diocesan society for the support of sick priests and the promotion of various diocesan interests.

Desecration (cf. C. E., IV-749).—A fixed altar loses its consecration if the table is separated from the support even momentarily; in this case the ordinary can permit a priest to reconsecrate it by the short formula; hitherto an ordinary required a papal indult to authorize this. Both fixed and movable altars lose their consecration (a) if a large portion or an anointed part is broken off; (b) if the relics are removed or the sepulchre cover is broken or removed, unless when the cover is removed by the bishop or his delegate in order to repair it or to examine the relics—this exception being an innovation; a slight fracture of the cover, however, does not destroy the consecration, and any priest may repair it with cement. The desecration of a church does not affect an altar, and vice versa. (Code juris canonici, 1,170 sqq.)

Des Moines, DIOCESE OF (DES MOINENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI-35c), of which was erected August 12, 1911, comprises 12,446 sq. miles of the State of Iowa and is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Thomas W. Drumm, D.D., consecrated bishop of this diocese 21 May, 1919. He is the second bishop of the diocese, his predecessor having been the Rt. Rev. Austin Dowling, D.D., who was consecrated the first Bishop of Des Moines on 25 April, 1912, and later promoted to the See of St. Paul, January, 1919. The present (1921) statistics of the diocese show the following record: secular priests, 76; regulars, 7; parishes, 57; missions, 32 and stations, 6; 1 college for boys; 2 academies for girls; 22 parochial schools with an attendance of 2,918. Various institutions included in the diocese are: 1 monastery (Passionist Fathers); 2 homes for working women; and 3 hospitals. Three religious orders are represented: the Passionists, the Benedictines, and the Sisters of Mercy. The number of Catholics is 37,977.

Detroit, DIOCESE OF (DETROITENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-758b), established 8 March, 1833, comprises a part of the lower peninsula of the State of Michigan, U. S. A. Rt. Rev. John S. Foley, D.D., the third bishop of this diocese, who had filled the see since 1888, died 5 January, 1918, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Michael James Gallagher, transferred to this diocese 18 July, 1918. Bishop Gallagher was ordained a priest 19 March, 1893, appointed titular Bishop of Tipasa and coadjutor to the Bishop of Grand Rapids, 5 July, 1915, and on 17 November, 1918, he arrived in Detroit and was escorted to the episcopal residence by a parade of 50,000 men, while 100,000 more lined the streets to welcome him. In May, 1920, the bishop called upon the people of the diocese to contribute four million dollars to found and endow Sacred Heart Preparatory Seminary, and within three months over nine million had been subscribed and the seminary is now opened in temporary quarters with an enrollment of more than two hundred students. The faculty is composed of secular priests, but the Congregation of the Holy Cross and the Trappist Fathers have arranged to open houses of study for their candidates, in connection with the seminary. The vigorous leadership and fearless attitude of Bishop Gallagher in fighting the anti-parochial school bill, which came up at the fall elections of 1920, was responsible for its defeat and the state records show that within his diocese the issue was defeated two to one. Since the elections an act of the Legislature was passed undertaking a certain amount of state supervision of parochial schools and the diocesan authorities are co-operating, the bishop having appointed a diocesan superintendent of schools.

During the World War the diocese supplied 10 chaplains, and over 18,000 men went into the service, of whom about 1,000 gave up their lives.

Since Bishop Gallagher's incumbency 30 new parishes have been established and 12 new schools opened and the statistics now (1921) show: 202 parishes, 274 churches, 72 missions, 1 monastery for men and 1 for women, 13 convents for men and 4 for women, 336 secular and 70 regular clergy, 34 lay brothers, 1,103 Sisters, 2 seminaries with 345 seminarians. Among the educational institutions are: 1 university with 90 professors and 1,343 students, 2 colleges for women with 15 teachers and 75 students, 51 high schools with 127 teachers and an attendance of 1,143 boys and 1,796 girls, 6 academies with 68 teachers and attendance of 480 boys and 904 girls, 4 normal schools with 180 students, 131 elementary schools with 1,140 teachers and 65,887 pupils. The charitable institutions comprise homes for the aged poor, the aged and the feeble minded, 5 orphan asylums, 1 insane asylum, 2 infant asylums, 9 hospitals, 2 refuges, and 3 settlement houses. The Eucharistic League and "Pactum Sacerdotum," are established among the clergy, and the Holy Name and St. Vincent de Paul societies, National Catholic Welfare Council of men, National Catholic Council of women, League of Catholic women, Association of Holy Childhood, Catholic Study Club and Salve Regina are organized among the laity. A periodical, "The Michigan Catholic," is published. The Catholic population numbers 492,767.

Detroit, UNIVERSITY OF.—This institution, under the care of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, was founded in 1877 and incorporated 27 April, 1881, according to the general law of the State of Michigan, under the corporate title of "Detroit College," with power to grant such literary honors and confer such degrees as are usually conferred by similar colleges in the United States. The growth of the institution and the advancing prominence of its alumni, and most of all the almost unprecedented progress of the city in population and extent and diversity of industrial and commercial enterprise, constituted at once a warrant and a demand for new development in its educational work. For this reason, on the expiration of the original charter in 1911, the authorities effected a new organization on a broader basis, and incorporated under the title of "The University of Detroit." At present (1922) the different departments of the university, along literary, philosophical, Family Sodality, Holy Name Society, Sodality of

The School of Law was established in 1912, carries on instructions in two courses: a day course and an evening course. Total registration (1921-22) 275 students.

The School of Engineering offers a five-year co-operative course in civil, chemical, electrical, mechanical, and aeronautical engineering. It includes alternate bi-weekly periods at the university and in actual engineering practice in the shops. This practice is made possible by an arrangement of the university with the engineering, manufacturing and public service establishments of the city. The employment is under the united control of the university and the employer. Total registration, 236.

The School of Commerce and Finance was organized in 1916 to meet the demand for supplementary training along commercial and industrial lines. The course covers a four-year period. Studies and lectures in economics, law, business administration, accounting, cost accounting, sociology, advertising, salesmanship, ethics, languages, etc., are arranged to develop careers as certified public accountants, business analysts, advisors or executives. Total registration, 679.

The College of Arts and Sciences extends through four years and embraces instruction in the departments of religion, philosophy, economics, political science, sociology, education, language, literature, history, science, and mathematics. The aim of the course is to give the student a complete liberal education, which will train and develop all the powers of the mind, and will cultivate no one faculty to an exaggerated degree at the expense of the others. Total registration, 115.

The university also maintains a standard high school. The law department has a very complete library, numbering about 15,000 volumes, the School of Commerce and Finance about 10,000 volumes, and the high school library about 30,000. The "Law Review" and "Varsity News" are published in the university, and "The Cub" in the high school. The faculty comprises: the president, Rev. William T. Doran, S.J., 70 professors, 63 lecturers, 7 instructors, 18 associate professors, 3 assistant professors and 4 laboratory assistants.

Devine, ARTHUR, theologian and devotional writer, b. at Kilmactiege, Sligo, Ireland, 1 December, 1849; d. at St. Paul's Retreat, Mount Argus, Dublin, 20 April, 1919. He was educated at home, entered the Passionist Order in 1865 and made his ecclesiastical studies at St. Paul's Retreat, Mount Argus. He was professed in 1866, and was professor of theology at Mount Argus for two years preceding his ordination in 1872. The greater part of his priestly life was spent in England and Scotland, principally at St. Joseph's, Highgate Hill, London, where he was lector of theology for nearly thirty years. From 1884 to 1887 he was consultor to the Provincial of his Order. The last twelve years of his life were spent as professor of theology, Scripture, and canon law at Mount Argus.

Father Devine was greatly interested in the revival of the Irish language, preached many sermons in Irish, and instituted a course of Sunday instructions for Irish speakers at Mount Argus. During intervals of parish and literary work he gave many missions and retreats to religious. He was the author of "Convent Life," "The History of the Passion," "The Creed Explained," "The Sacraments Explained," "The Commandments Explained," "A Manual of Ascetical Theology," "A Manual of Mystical Theology," "The Ordinary of the Mass Explained," "Frequent and Daily Communion," "The Law of Christian Marriage," and "Pentecostal Sermons," several articles in the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA and various contributions to the "Homiletic Monthly," "The Passionist Record," and other Catholic magazines.

De Waal, ANTON MARIA, archaeologist, b. at Emmerich-am-Rhein, Prussia, 4 May, 1837; d. in Rome, 23 February, 1917. He was educated at the gymnasium of his native town and at the Academy of Münster and was ordained in 1862. The following six years were spent as professor in the seminary at Gaesdonk; he then went to Rome where he was successively curate at Santa Maria dell'Anima, chaplain at the German College, Santa Maria dell'Anima; assistant rector and rector of Campo Santo de' Tedeschi (C. E., III-244d), which he organized in its present form in 1876; and consultor of the Commission for Historical Studies. During the siege of Rome (1870) he served as chaplain with the Papal army. For over seventy years Father de Waal was president of the German Reading Association in Rome and presided at the First Archaeological Congress at Salóna, Dalmatia. He was magister of the Collegium Cultorum Martyrum and a member of the French Archaeological Society. In 1896 Pope Leo XIII made him a prelate of the Holy See and in 1900 conferred on him the dignity of prebendary Apostolic, to which was added later the decoration Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice. The highest honors accorded him include those of Commander of the Austrian Order of St. Joseph, Knight of the Prussian Order of the Eagle (2nd class), of the Saxon Order of Albertus (2nd class), of the Prussian Order of the Crown (2nd class).

Mgr. de Waal was a contributor to the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, editor of the archaeological section of "Römische Quartaschrift" and the author of "Valeria" a novel (5 eds.), "Die Blinde vom Aventin," "Konigin Serena," "Die Swanzigste September," "Die alten frommen Stiftungen bei Sankt Peter," "Rompilgor," a guide for pilgrims to Rome (9 eds.); "Katakombenbilder," a novel (3 eds.), "Judas Ende," a novel (3 eds.), "Der Campe Santo der Deutschen zu Rom," "Roma sacra" (2 eds.), etc., etc.; several short plays and novels.

The excavations of St. Sebastian on the Appian Way in Rome begun in 1915 by the Commission of Sacred Archaeology at the request and with the help of Mgr. de Waal, and continued by the excavation office have led to the most important discoveries. It was in the hope of settling the controversies concerning "La Platonía" that Mgr. de Waal inaugurated this work. Ancient liturgical, hagiographical and historical documents attest the existence in Rome of a triple memoria of the Apostles Sts. Peter and Paul. The first two are their lambs under the altars of the basilicas respectively dedicated to them. The third is on the Appian Way ad Calacumbas, on the spot where today the basilica of St. Sebastian, originally a basilica of the Apostles, stands. Opinions differ about the foundation of this third liturgical commemoration, but the one finally adopted by the majority of archaeologists is that the bodies of the saints were translated there by the Christians of Rome to save them from profanation during the persecution of Valerian. Since the Middle Ages scientists believed that the exact spot where the bodies reposed was in a subterranean chapel called "La Platonía" under the basilica of St. Sebastian. In 1894 the discovery of an inscription revealed the fact that this chapel had served as the tomb of St. Quirinus, Bishop of Siscia, whose remains had been transferred to Rome. Whence arose bitter disputes, Mgr. de Waal holding in opposition to those who believed the chapel had held the three bodies, that the bodies of the Apostles were elsewhere, probably under an altar called "the altar of relics." Further discoveries complicated matters and it was in the hope of finding something conclusive on the subject that Mgr. de Waal inaugurated the excavations of St. Sebastian. On this precise point they did not realize his hopes, but they led to many other most important discoveries, uncovering the oldest of Christian tombs yet known in Rome, and the ruins of "la Triclia," the walls of which are covered with inscriptions in the names of St. Peter and St. Paul. They give a new and valuable proof of the sojourn and death of the two apostles in Rome. The construction in 1919 of a large garage in the Viale Mazzini, between the Lateran and the Porta Tiburtina led to the discovery of one of the most curious funeral monuments ever found in Rome, of very ancient origin, containing many paintings, seemingly Christian in origin. The excavation office which conducted the works has decided to give over the monument to the Commission of Sacred Archaeology. In 1920 building operations northeast of the Villa borghese led to the discovery of the cemetery of St. Pappilius, of the clearance of which the Commission took charge. From day to day new monuments of great archaeological value are being unearthed.

Diakova, Diocese of (DIAKOVARENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-760d), suffragan to the see of Zagrab. After

The archdiocese has about 440,000 inhabitants, mostly Catholic, and is divided into 7 ecclesiastical districts, 59 parishes, and 1 curato with 66 secular and 17 regular priests, 6 lay brothers, and 13 nuns. There are two missionary orders of men, the Lazarists and Redemptorists. The Lazarists have charge of the archiepiscopal seminary and college, which has 79 seminarians and 60 students, and their church of the Sacred Heart is renowned throughout Brazil, being magnificently constructed and decorated and having a large congregation. In connection with it Leo XIII erected an archconfraternity and established there a guard of honor of the Sacred Heart, and Benedict XV accorded it the rights of a minor basilica. The Redemptorists have a convent attached to their beautiful church of São Geraldo in Curvello. The orders of women are the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, and the Poor Clares. There are 3 colleges for girls with 21 instructors and 940 students. The most important of these is the College of Our Lady of Sorrows at Diamantina, in charge of Sisters of Charity, and the other schools are of Pernambuco under Sisters of Charity and the other in charge

Digby, MABEL, Superior General of the Society of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, b. at Ashford House, near Staines, Middlesex, 7 April, 1835; d. at Ixelles, Brussels, 21 May, 1911. She was the daughter of Simon Digby of Osbertstown, Kildare, Ireland, and Elizabeth Anne Morse, only daughter of Mr. John Morse of Sprowston Hall, Norfolk. She belonged to the Protestant branch of the Digby family, but in 1852 her mother and elder sister were received into the Church at Montpellier, France, where the family resided for several years. Her conversion followed two years later under circumstances that seemed to foreshadow the call to some special mission, and worked an extraordinary change in her character. In 1855 she was admitted into the Society of the Sacred Heart by its Superior, Sister M. de la Croix, and in 1856 she was elected Superior of the same Society in Belgium. She died at Ixelles, Brussels, 21 May, 1911.

and two years later made her vows at the novitiate in Conflans. She was then sent to Marmoutiers, Tours, where she worked for thirteen years, the last eight of which were spent in the position of superior. In 1872 Mother Digby went as superior vicar to Roehampton, the house of her order in England, a post which she filled for twenty-two years. The Society flourished under her wise guidance and six new houses were opened in England; she also made the first foundation in Australia, where the Society now has many houses.

In 1894 on the death of the superior general Mother Digby became one of the assistants general and took up her work at the mother-house in Paris. The newly elected superior general died the following year, and Mother Digby was unanimously chosen to succeed her. One of her first works in this new position was to visit the houses of the Order in Canada, the United States and Mexico, where no superior general had ever been. The great work of her generalate, however, was the conducting of the retreat of her order from France, where by the nefarious Laws of Suppression forty-six houses were closed in rapid succession. The crisis found her prepared, for with characteristic insight she seemed to have realized from the beginning what the outcome would be. For every house closed in France a new one was opened elsewhere, so that when the work of destruction had been completed the Society as a whole counted a larger number of centers than it has possessed in the days of peace. Every member of the Society found another home in other lands alike in spirit and rule to the one from which she had been expelled. In 1909 Rev. Mother Digby transferred the mother-house of the Society to Ixelles, Brussels, and it was there that she died. Her body was taken to Roehampton where she had worked for so many years.

Digne, DIOCESE OF (DINIENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-793b), Basses-Alpes, France, includes the titles of the suppressed dioceses of Riez and Listeron in the department of Aix. The present (1922) incumbent of the see, Rt. Rev. Jean Joseph Martel, was born 21 September, 1860, at St. Benoît in the diocese, studied at Aix and Digne, was ordained priest 29 June, 1885, was professor at the Lower Seminary, went to Paris in 1885, made preceptor, general secretary of the bishopric and the director of the "Semaine religieuse" in 1891; honorary canon in 1893; superior of the Institute of the Immaculate Conception and vicar general, appointed bishop 27 November, 1917; proclaimed 10 March, 1919, succeeding Mgr. Lenfant (b. 6 January, 1858; d. 6 August, 1917). According to the (1922) statistics the diocese comprises a population of 107,231; 292 parishes, of which 94 have no resident priests, 367 priests in the parishes and 75 others, 12 convents, diocesan missionaries established in 1918. In 1917 the late Bishop Lenfant restored the public daily prayer in the chapter.

Dignities, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., IV-794).—A capitular dignity is a canonry, which not merely is entitled to precedence but confers, or formerly at least conferred, jurisdiction in the internal forum, e. g. the archidiaconate, or archipresbyterate. Though the erection of the office of capitular dignity and appointments thereto are reserved to the Holy See, a bishop may, with the consent of the chapter, restore the office if it has fallen into abeyance.

Dijon, DIOCESE OF (DIVIONENSIS; cf. C. E., IV-794c), comprises the entire department of Côte d'Or in France, and is suffragan of Lyons. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. J. R. Maurice Landrieux, born in Triquy, France, 1857, ordained 1883, served as secretary to Cardinal Langéuieux, made an honorary canon in 1888, vicar general in 1894, titular canon in 1901, archpriest of the cathedral 1912, appointed bishop 6 December, 1916, to succeed Rt. Rev. Jacques-Louis Monestes, who was appointed 11 August, 1911, d. 31 March, 1915. During the World War 211 priests and 65 seminarians were mobilized from this diocese, and of this number 15 priests and 11 seminarians gave up their lives, 3 were decorated with the légion d'honneur, 2 with the médaille militaire, and 81 with the croix de guerre. By latest statistics the diocese is divided into 37 deaneries comprising 520 parishes and counts a Catholic population of 350,044. A former bishop of this see, Bishop Dadolle, was honored by Cardinal Maurin in 1919, when he placed a bust in the church of Villemontais, the bishop's native town, in the diocese of Lyons.

Dimissorial Letters (cf. C. E., IV-797b) can be granted for the ordination of a secular by his "proper" bishop, provided he have taken possession of his see, even if he be not yet consecrated. By the term "proper," so far as seculars are here concerned, is meant only the bishop of the diocese in which the candidate has a domicile together with origin or a simple domicile without origin; in the latter case the candidate must swear that he intends to remain perpetually in the diocese, unless he is a cleric already incardinated in another diocese by first tonsure, or is a student for the service of another diocese, or is a professed religious. Letters may be granted by a vicar general, authorized by his bishop. A vicar capitular with the consent of the chapter can grant letters if the bishop has been dead a year; before that time they can be granted only to those who have received or are about to receive a benefice, or to one who is to occupy an office which the needs of the diocese require to be filled without delay. A vicar capitular granting dimissorial letters in violation of these provisions incurs ipso facto suspension a divinis; he is forbidden moreover to grant the letters to one who had been rejected by the bishop. Anyone who had himself ordained without letters or with forged dimissorial letters would be ipso facto suspended from the order received. Vicars and prefects apostolic, abbots or prelates nullius, even non-episcopal, can grant letters for minor and major orders to seculars under their jurisdiction. Letters are not to be granted until the prescribed canonical examination into the candidate's antecedents has been made. Letters for exempt religious are granted by the major superiors, but only for tonsure and minor orders in the case of those who are professed of simple vows; non-exempt religious are treated like seculars. The regular superior must address his letters to the bishop of the diocese in which the religious house is situated, except when that bishop grants permission, or belongs to another rite, or is absent, or is not holding ordinations at the prescribed time, or is dead and has left no one with episcopal orders to take his place. On the other hand, a bishop in granting letters may direct them to any bishop in communion with the Holy See who is of the same rite as the candidate, the restrictions placed formerly on the suburbicarian cardinals and clerics who had remained more than four months in Rome having been removed.

Diocesan Chancery (cf. C. E., IV-799).—In each curia a priest is to be appointed by the bishop as chancellor; his chief duty is to take charge of the diocesan archives, arranging them in chronological order and compiling an index of their contents. He is by the very fact a notary, and if necessary should have an assistant or vice-chancellor. He can be removed or suspended by the bishop, his successors or superior, but not by the vicar capitular without the consent of the chapter.

Codez juris canonici, 372-84.

Diocese (cf. C. E., V-1).—In canon law the word diocese includes abbeys and prelatures nullius, and the word bishop includes abbots and prelates nullius unless the context shows otherwise. Without a particular apostolic indult special parishes for the faithful of different races or speech living in the same city or territory may not be created in future; no change is to be made, however, in those already existing without consulting the Holy See. The bishop is to group the parishes of his diocese into larger units known as vicariates forane, deaneries, archpresbyterates, etc. If this seems impossible or inopportune, he is to consult the Holy See, unless it has already provided for the difficulty. If the bishop's rule is entirely impeded by captivity, exile, or legal disability, ordinarily the vicar general or an ecclesiastic delegated by the bishop takes his place; if the delegate is similarly impeded the cathedral chapter is to nominate its vicar to act with the powers of a vicar capitular; if the bishop should become excommunicated, interdicted, or suspended the metropolitan, or if he is unable or is the bishop in question, the oldest of the suffragan bishops is to notify the Holy See.
Codez juris canonici, 315-17; 429.

Disciples of Christ (cf. C. E., IV-29e).—I. Since the death of the founder, Alexander Campbell (1866), in the expansion of this Church, disagreement arose on the two points of ecclesiastical organization and the use of instrumental music in the churches, the two parties being termed the "Progressives" and the "Conservatives." In the United States report for 1890 all were included under one head, but in 1906 and 1916 the objections of the "Conservatives" led to their classification as a separate denomination known as Churches of Christ. The "Progressives" (Disciples of Christ) reported in 1916, 1,226,028 members, 6,815 church edifices and 5,938 ministers. It is especially flourishing in the middle-western states. Although the Disciples of Christ are known also as "Christians" they are not to be confused with the "Christian Church" (American Church Convention).

II. CHURCHES OF CHRIST.—As noted above this sect is listed separately now in the United States reports. In 1916 it reported 317,937 members, 4,342 church edifices and 2,507 elders (ministers).

H. K. Carroll's statistics for 1921 listed for the two bodies 8,506 ministers, 14,416 church edifices and 1,483,515 members in the United States ("Christian Herald," 7 March, 1921).

Discussions, Religious (cf. C. E., V-34).—Catholics are warned not to engage in religious or moral discussions or conferences, especially public, with non-Catholics, without leave of the Holy See, or, in urgent cases, of the local ordinary.

Codez juris canonici, 1,325.

Disparity of Worship (cf. C. E., V-37).—The Church grants no dispensation from the impediment of disparity of worship unless (1) there are just and grave causes; (2) the non-Catholic party gives guarantees that the danger of perversion for the Catholic party will be removed, and both parties promise that all the children will be baptised and brought up only in the Catholic faith; (3) there is a moral certainty that the promises will be fulfilled. Regularly the promises should be in writing. The impediment now arises only between an unbaptized person and a person baptized in the Catholic Church or converted to the Catholic Church from heresy or schism. Formerly it arose also if the baptized person had received baptism in a heretical or schismatical Church and had never embraced Catholicism. If at the time of marriage one of the parties was commonly reputed to have been baptized or if his baptism was doubtful, the marriage is to be considered valid until it is proved with certainty that one of the parties had been baptized and the other had not. If a parish priest is certain that a Catholic who has received a dispensation from this impediment has either personally or by proxy gone before a non-Catholic minister to be married, or is about to do so later, he may not assist at the marriage, unless for very grave reasons; and then only after the removal of the danger of scandal and after consulting the ordinary. If a dispensation for the marriage has been granted it is forbidden to observe any sacred rites, unless very serious evils would result, in which case the ordinary may allow some ceremony but never the celebration of Mass.

Codez juris canonici, 1076-71; ATRINHA, Marriage Legislation, s. v.; for a discussion of the question of guarantees cf. HARRINGTON in Eccl. Review, LXV (1921), 257-62, and O'DONNELL in Irish Eccl. Rec., XVIII (1921), 411-18.

Dispensation (cf. C. E., V-41).—Though the pope can dispense from all ecclesiastical laws, he rarely does so personally, as he usually acts through the Roman Congregations. Applications are to be made therefore to the Congregation of the Council for dispensations from the disciplinary laws governing the clergy and laity; to the Congregation of the Sacraments in matters regarding the disciplinary laws of the sacraments; to the Holy Office in questions of the Pauline privilege, mixed marriages, disparity of worship, or the Eucharistic fast of priests celebrating Mass; and to the Sacred Penitentiary for all dispensations regarding the internal forum, both sacramental and extra-sacramental.

No one except the pope personally or through the Congregations can dispense from the general laws of the Church, even in a single case, unless he is explicitly or implicitly authorized to do so; thus ordinaries are empowered to dispense when it is difficult to have recourse to the Holy See and at the same time delay would likely result in serious evil, but this is permitted only in cases in which the Holy See is wont to grant a dispensation. The power of the bishops, parish priests, and vicars-general are now of ordinary jurisdiction. The inclusion of the vicars-general among the ordinaries involves an important change, as their power of dispensing now arises from a general mandate, whereas heretofore it was conferred only by special mandate. The power of dispensation granted in the Code belonging generally as it does to ordinary jurisdiction can be delegated in accordance with the general rules governing delegation.

Local ordinaries may dispense from diocesan laws, and also from the laws of national and provincial synods, in particular cases and for just cause, but not from pontifical laws especially passed for their dioceses, except when it is difficult to communicate with the Holy See and at the same time there is danger of serious evil in delay. Where a doubt of fact arises they may dispense from laws imposing nullity or incapacity, provided the pope is wont to dispense from them. A dispensation granted by an inferior without a cause that is, considering the circumstances, just and reasonable, is neither licit nor valid.

In canon 4 of the Code is stated that "acquired rights, privileges and indulgences which have been hitherto granted to physical or moral persons by the Apostolic See and which are still in use and unrecalled, remain in vigor, unless they are expressly revoked by the canons of this Code." On 25 April, 1918, a decree was issued by the Consistorial Congregation. After pointing out that many of the powers of ordinaries formerly acquired only by special concession were now granted by the general law, the decree provided among other things that except in places subject to the Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith—for which suitable regulations will be issued at an opportune time—in all dioceses subject to the common law, all faculties granted to ordinaries for the external forum, and contained in twenty-five-year briefs, and ten-year, five-year, three-year formulae, will cease from 18 May, 1918. However, local ordinaries in America, the Philippine Islands, the East Indies, Africa—except the territories along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea—and Russia, may, for a period of five years from 18 May, 1918, dispense from the minor impediments to marriage; they may also grant sanationes in radice for marriages contracted invalidly on account of one of these minor impediments, but the party who is aware of the impediment is to be warned of the effect of the sanatio. Moreover, they can dispense for the same period from the major impediments of the ecclesiastical law, whether public or occult, even when multiple (except impediments arising from priesthood or affinity in the direct line when the marriage has been consummated) and also from the prohibitory impediment of mixed religion, if the petition for the dispensation has been sent to the Holy See, and in the meanwhile an urgent necessity for the dispensation arises.

Irregularities (cf. C. E., VIII-173).—Any ordinary may personally or by another dispense his subjects from all irregularities arising from occult crimes, except those arising from crimes brought into the judicial forum and those arising from voluntary homicide or the efficacious abortion of a human foetus or from co-operation in these crimes. No mention is made of the power of dispensing from the irregularity of illegitimacy for the reception of tonsure and minor orders, hitherto enjoyed. Confessors have the same power in urgent secret cases in which it is impossible to reach the ordinary and there is danger of serious evil or scandal, but this power is granted to them only to enable the penitent to exercise licitly the orders he has already received. In asking for a dispensation from irregularities or impediments, all must be mentioned; a general dispensation, however, removes all those that have been omitted bona fide (with the exceptions just mentioned), but not those omitted mala fide. In the case of voluntary homicide, the number of offenses must be given, under penalty of nullity. A general dispensation to receive orders is valid for major orders, and those who have been dispensed can obtain non-consistorial benefices, even with the cure of souls annexed; but for appointment as cardinal, bishop, abbot or prelate nullus, or higher superior in an exempt clerical religious order a special concession is required. Dispensations granted in the extra-sacramental internal forum are to be in writing and an entry concerning them should be made in the secret archives of the curia.

Ordination.—Ordinaries can dispense for a just cause: from the publication of the names of secular candidates for orders which is to be made in their parochial churches; also from the intervals of time that should elapse between the reception of different orders, not, however, so that two sacred orders, or minor orders and the subdiaconate should be received on one day, or the four minor orders, or tonsure and minor orders together.

Parishes.—With the consent of the synodal examiners ordinaries may dispense candidates of known ability from an examination in theology, etc., before giving him a parish.

Vows and Oaths.—Local ordinaries can dispense their own subjects and even peregrini from unreserved vows or oaths, provided the rights of a third party are not injured thereby.

Index.—In urgent cases the ordinary can allow one of his subjects to read a book forbidden by the Holy See.

Feasts, fasting, and abstinence.—Local ordinaries, and even parish priests, in particular cases and for just cause, can dispense their subjects, even when away from their territory, and peregrini in their territory from the common law regarding feasts, fasting and abstinence. Superiors in exempt clerical religious orders have the same power over their subjects and those who live in their houses by day and night, such as guests, servants, students. Ordinaries, moreover, can dispense a whole diocese or a place from the laws of fast and abstinence for reasons of health or on an occasion of a great gathering of the faithful.

Penalties.—Ordinaries can remit the penalties latae sententiae imposed by the general law, in public cases, except: (a) when the case has come into the judicial forum; (b) censures reserved to the Holy See; (c) incapacity to receive benefices, offices, dignities, or positions of trust in the Church, or privation of active and passive voice, perpetual suspension, infamy of law, privation of the right of patronage and of privilege or favor granted by the Holy See. In occult cases, the ordinary can, personally or by another, remit all penalties latae sententiae of common law, except censures reserved very specially or specially to the Holy See. Hitherto he could dispense only in the case of light crimes and of suspension for certain occult offenses. In more urgent occult cases if by the observance of a vindictory punishment latae sententiae a culprit would betray himself and thus incur infamy and give scandal, a confessor can suspend in the sacramental forum the obligation of undergoing the penalty, but he must impose on the culprit the obligation of having recourse, at least within a month, by letter and by his confessor, to the Sacred Penitentiary or to a bishop having power to deal with the case, if this can be done without grave inconvenience, and of submitting to the orders he receives. If in any extraordinary case this recourse is impossible the confessor himself may dispense, but subject to those conditions under which he may absolve from censures in similar circumstances. This is a notable change in the extent of powers granted to confessors.

Cause for granting dispensations (cf. C. E., V-45).—There must be a sufficient just cause for the licit granting of a dispensation. If a person alleged a false cause or concealed part of the truth, it would not invalidate a dispensation granted from a minor matrimonial impediment, even if the sole motive for granting it were false; but in any other case at least one true motive cause is necessary, but sufficient, for validity, even when the rescript contains the words "motu proprio."

Codex juris canonici, 80-86; VERMEERSCH-CREUSERS, Epitome jur. can., 136-56.

Dispensations, MATRIMONIAL (cf. C. E., V-44a).—A local ordinary may dispense from the publication of the banns of marriage of his subjects for a just cause anywhere; if the parties have different local ordinaries the right belongs to the ordinary in whose territory the marriage is to take place; if it is to be celebrated in a third territory, either of the ordinaries mentioned may dispense. When there is imminent danger of death local ordinaries, in order to secure peace of conscience of the party or parties concerned and to legitimize their offspring where necessary, should that be necessary, may dispense their own subjects in any place and all others residing at the moment in their territory from the formalities to be observed in contracting marriage (presence of a priest and two witnesses), and from each and every impediment, public or occult, whether simple or multiple, of ecclesiastical origin, except those arising from the priesthood or from affinity in the direct line if the marriage has been consummated; scandal must be avoided, and if there is question of disparity of worship or of mixed religion the usual guarantees must be given. When a case of this kind arises and it is impossible to go to the ordinary, the same dispensing power is enjoyed by the parish priest or any priest lawfully assisting at the marriage; or by the confessor, but the latter's power is only for the internal forum in sacramental confession. A local ordinary can dispense from any of the impediments just mentioned if it is discovered (that is, made known to the priest or ordinary, Acta A. S., 1921, 178) when everything is ready for the marriage and the ceremony cannot be deferred until a dispensation is obtained from the Holy See, without probable danger of grave evil; he is empowered likewise to use these faculties to validate a marriage already contracted, if there is the same danger in delay and time does not allow an application to the Holy See. Under the same circumstances a like power is enjoyed by the parish priest, assistant priest and confessor, as mentioned above, but only for occult cases, when it is not possible to reach the local ordinary or at least not without danger of violating secrecy. The parish or assistant priest in this case should, however, notify the local ordinary at once about the dispensation granted in the external forum, and the fact should be recorded in the marriage register.

Unless it is ordered otherwise by the sacred penitentiary a dispensation from an occult impediment granted in the extra-sacramental internal forum is to be recorded in the secret archives of the curia; no other dispensation is necessary for the external forum, even if the occult impediment should ever become public, though another would be required if the dispensation had been granted only in the sacramental internal forum. As regards marriage contracted or to be contracted, whoever enjoys a general indult for dispensing from a given impediment can, unless the indult explicitly states the contrary, dispense from it when it is multiple. Whoever has a general indult for dispensing from several impediments of different kinds, whether diriment or impedient, can dispense from these impediments even if they are public, occurring in one and the same case (modifying C. E., V-749a). But if an impediment from which he cannot dispense coexists with one or more over which he has control in virtue of an indult, recourse must be had to the Holy See in connection with all of them; however, if after obtaining the dispensation from the Holy See, one or more impediments from which he can dispense are discovered, he may use his power to dispense from it. When a dispensation has been granted from a diriment impediment by ordinary power or power delegated by a general indult, though not by a rescript in particular cases, the offspring, already born or conceived, of those who are dispensed are thereby legitimized, excepting adulterous or sacrilegious offspring.

A dispensation from the impediment of consanguinity or affinity in any degree, if granted, is valid, even if any error as to the degree chanced to be made in the petition or concession, provided the real degree is more remote, or even if another impediment of the same kind in an equal or more remote degree was not mentioned. A dispensation granted by the Holy See in case of an unconsummated marriage or permission granted to contract a new marriage on the presumption of the death of a spouse, always contains a dispensation from the impediment of crime due to adultery with a promise of or attempted marriage, if necessary, but not from the impediment of crime arising even in part from conjugicide. While an application for a dispensation from public impediments may be made directly to Rome by the parties concerned, it is customarily made through the ordinary (the bishop or vicar-general) of the place of domicile or quasi-domicile, of either party, but usually of the bride; or of the Catholic party if the impediment affects him directly. Such dispensations when entrusted to the ordinary of the petitioners shall be executed by the ordinary who has given the testimonial letters or who transmitted the petition to the Holy See, even if the parties, at the time when the dispensation is to be put into effect, have given up their domicile or quasi-domicile and gone into another diocese never to return, but he is to notify the ordinary of the place where the parties wish to marry (Ayrinhac, n. 102).

Expenses.—Except a small contribution to meet the chancery expenses in obtaining a dispensation for one who is not poor, local ordinaries or their officials cannot exact any payment for the dispensation without the express permission of the Holy See. Any custom to the contrary is now reprobated; formerly it was customary to levy a tax approved by bishop of a province; if ecclesiastics exact anything now in violation of this law they are bound to restitution. Whoever dispenses in virtue of power delegated to him by the Holy See is to make express mention of his pontifical indult in using it.

Divine Charity, DAUGHTERS OF (cf. C. E., V-52a).—The foundress and first superior general of this congregation was Mother Franziska Lechner, who died 14 April, 1894. She was succeeded as superior general by Mother M. Ignatia Egger, who was born 25 February, 1844, and entered the order in 1869. She celebrated the jubilee of her profession in October, 1920, and still performs the duties of her office, notwithstanding her advanced age, having been re-elected superior at the last general chapter of the order in July, 1918. Sisters Xavier Egger, Helene Banard, Valeria Morvay, and Ludovika Binder were named assistants general. The International Eucharistic Congress, held in Vienna in 1912, was solemnly celebrated in the houses of the Order in Vienna, and in preparation for it a solemn Eucharistic triduum was held in the mother-house. The golden jubilee of the order was celebrated in November, 1918. The cardinal protector of the order is Cardinal Januarius Granito Pignatelli de Belmonte, who succeeded Cardinal Serafino Vanutelli in this office upon the latter's death in 1915. The apostolic visitation of the congregation was begun in August, 1921, by Mgr. Franz Hlawati, replacing Cardinal Friedrich Gustav Piffl. In October, 1920, the congregation was divided into provinces. The then existing Austrian province was divided and from it four provinces were erected, one in each of the following countries: Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia, Hungary and Poland. Permission was received for the erection of an American province in January, 1921.

The first foundation in America was made in 1913, when Sister Valeria Morvay, general of the order, and Sister Kotska Bauer established in New York St. Mary's Home for servants out of employment, positions being secured for them. The Sisters also gave religious instruction at various places. There was a wide field for activity, and on several occasions Sisters were called from the branch houses in Hungary to the American foundation. After the foundation was well established Sister Valeria Morvay returned to Hungary, and Sister Kotska Bauer was made superior of the North American houses. Since then she has been made provincial superior of the American province of the congregation. At the present time there are seven foundations in the United States: St. Joseph's Hill, Arrocher, Staten Island, provincial house, novitiate, day and boarding school; St. Mary's Home, New York City, for servants seeking employment; Convent of Our Lady of Hungary, Perth-Amboy, N. J., school; Convent of St. Ladislaus, New Brunswick, N. J., school, kindergarten, and day nursery; St. Stephen's Convent, Trenton, N. J., school; St. Stephen's Hungarian Convent, Bridgeport, Conn., kindergarten and classes for religious instruction; South Bethlehem, near Philadelphia, Penn., school and kindergarten. Permission to establish a novitiate in North America was granted in July, 1913. In June, 1920, a foundation was made in South America at Serro-Azul, Diocese of Uruguayana, Brazil, with a day school, boarding school, and kindergarten.

Many new foundations have been made in Europe in the last thirteen years. A new Marian Institute was opened in Trappan in April, 1909, the old institute being bought by the city authorities for a charitable institution. The new institute cares for poor servants and is also a home for ladies; the Church of the Sacred Heart, erected in connection with it, was dedicated in June, 1910. The home for children at Alt Dejvitz, near Prague, was taken over by the Sisters in April, 1909, and a Sunday school for girls was later established there. The Sisters were obliged to give up the establishment in September, 1921, when the provostship was requisitioned by the Czech Government and taken from the bishop. During the period of its existence 699 children were cared for in the home and 281 were taught in the Sunday school. A home for children was erected at Hochstrass-Stassing in 1908 and dedicated 25 May, 1909; 40 foundlings are educated there. The training school for women of the Marian Institute at Cracow was granted its charter in June, 1909. The secondary and boarding school at Szepesszombat, Hungary, was taken over by the Sisters in August, 1909, and opened the following October, the chapel being dedicated in September, 1910; it is the only Catholic school in the vicinity. A new building was added in August, 1909, to the Sisters' establishment at Biala, Galicia, where they conduct a secondary and primary school where German and Polish are taught, a training school for female teachers, industrial school, kindergarten at Wolkesdorf, enlarged and dedicated in 1909, was given to the Sisters and consecrated in 1914. The culinary department at the house of correction and agricultural institute at Korneuburg, Lower Austria, was placed in charge of three Sisters of Divine Charity in March, 1910. A new chapel and addition to the home for aged and infirm Sisters and invalided servants at Breitenfurt was built in May, 1910, and dedicated 3 November, 1911. The Marian Congregation for young women was established at the Empress Elizabeth Home for Girls and 17 new members received 8 December, 1910. A poor-house with 12 inmates at Lichtenegg, Lower Austria, was taken over by the Sisters 30 January, 1911. The addition to the kindergarten at Hochstetten was dedicated in September, 1911. An institute and home for servants erected at Budapest by the League of Catholic Housewives was opened by the Sisters, 9 September, 1911, the Sisters giving up their work there in June, 1912. In September, 1911, a school for girls was opened at Marczali, Hungary. The Sisters at Unter-Stinkenbrunn took up the work of caring for the sick in their homes in October, 1911. A villa and extensive woodlands were purchased 5 October, 1911, at Pale near Serajevo, where a school was built and dedicated 5 August, 1913. The new kindergarten and work school at Gerasford was dedicated in March, 1912. The charter for the women's training school at Serajevo as received in March, 1912. The new foundation of St. Cecilia's Home for children at Aspersdorf, near Oberhollabrunn, was blessed 15 June, 1913; the principal work there is the kindergarten. The new country house at Wola-Fustowska near Cracow, was blessed 12 July, 1913. A rural housekeeping school at Maria Frost, near Graz, was opened in October, 1913. A house in Vienna was purchased in January, 1914, for the Marian Institute, serving also as a home for old ladies and civil service employees, and the institute was further enlarged in October, 1916, by the purchase of another house in Vienna. A school and boarding house was opened at Swaffham, Diocese of Northampton, England, in June, 1914, and the chapel was opened 30 October, 1920. A home for children of reservists at Serajevo was taken over by the Sisters in September, 1915. The children's home at Hochwolkersdorf, Lower Austria, was managed by the Sisters from June, 1918, to June, 1919. The Marian Home for homeless girls, established by the Women's Association of Graz was taken over by the Sisters from September, 1918, till July, 1920. In August, 1919, the Sisters took over the kindergarten founded by Baroness Mayer-Melnhof at Schloss-Weyer in Styria, and later on opened an industrial school. A branch was opened in September, 1919, at Koberwitz, Czechoslovakia, where the Sisters nurse the sick in their homes, and they plan to open a kindergarten there. The children's home founded by the Children's Protective and Aid Association, Vienna, was taken over by the Sisters in October, 1919, with 40 boys. The Sisters extended their sphere of activity in November, 1919, to Pabjanice, Russian Poland, where they established a school for girls, a kindergarten, and religious instruction in various schools. Permission was received in March, 1920, to open a secondary school at the Convent of Maria Loretto at St. Andra in Carinthia. The boarding school of St. Maria in Weltrus, near Prague, was purchased 30 June, 1921, to be used as a boarding school and novitiate for the province of Czechoslovakia. In July, 1913, the Sisters withdrew from the crèche at Wernstadt in Northern Bohemia, where they had been established since 1907 and where 162 children were cared for. In January, 1919, the Sisters withdrew from the Convent of St. Anthony at Schwarzen, where they had been established since 1898, and since when 1485 children were taken care of in the kindergarten and 2171 children were instructed in the industrial school. During the war most of the institutions were used as hospitals for the sick and disabled soldiers, of whom about 25,000 were cared for.

At present there are 1005 members of the congregation; 386 members have died since the foundation of the order. The sisters own 36 institutions and in addition have 31 other institutions under their care, making a total of 67 institutions. These are training schools for women teachers, secondary and elementary schools, housekeeping schools, commercial schools, Sunday schools, industrial schools, kindergartens, day nurseries, homes for children, boarding places for orphans and other girls, homes for ladies, homes and employment bureaus for poor servants, homes for invalided and incapacitated servants, and hospitals for sick and mentally defective children. Among those under the care of the Daughters of Divine Charity are 3694 servants, 410 orphans, and 9509 school children. There are 163 commercial school students, 1690 industrial school students, 192 boarding school pupils, 2454 kindergarten children, 456 private pupils, and 372 training school students. In the hospitals are 103 sick and 56 weak-minded and crippled.

Divine Providence, SISTERS OF. I. SISTERS OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE (St. Jean-de-Bassel, Lorraine; cf. C. E., V-52d).—The reverting of Lorraine to France at the close of the World War restored the general mother-house of the Sisters of Divine Providence to its mother-country. During the war the common destinies of the conflict were felt more or less at the mother-house, but no damage or ruin was suffered in the property. Early in the war, 20 August, 1914, the French and German troops met in sharp conflict on the grounds of the convent of St. Jean-de-Bassel; those slain in that engagement, 116, are buried in a common grave on the convent grounds, while more than 800 wounded in the same engagement were cared for by the Sisters in the convent itself. In the change from the German to the French tongue in the school throughout Lorraine and Alsace, the Sisters experienced but little difficulty, and everything has prospered. The boarding and normal school in Pecq, Belgium, which was the most important establishment held by the congregation in that country, was destroyed completely by the bombardment by the Allies, October, 1918, in the great drive to push the Germans from the country; the Belgian Government has since rebuilt the school, King Albert himself having taken active interest in its re-establishment. There are (1921) 566 professed Sisters in Lorraine, 294 in Alsace, 91 in Belgium. They have charge of boarding schools, industrial schools, primary and secondary schools, and also nurse the sick.

The history of the American Province of the Sisters of Divine Providence of St. Jean-de-Bassel since 1909 is one of expansion. In that year Mother Maria Houlné, provincial, was appointed superior general of the entire congregation, with residence at St. Jean-de-Bassel, Lorraine, and Mother Mary Lucy Damidio, one of the three original members of the American foundation, succeeded to the office of provincial. In 1909 there were 11 parochial schools in 2 dioceses and 1 archdiocese; in 1921 there are 24 in 6 dioceses and 1 archdiocese. In 1909 there was 1 academy; ten years later there are 3, all in the home-diocese of Covington. St. Camillus Academy, Corbin, was completed in 1915 and named in memory of Bishop Maes, who had strongly encouraged its erection. The academy is beginning to realize the great hopes he had for its future. Situated in the heart of the famed mountain region, which is anti-Catholic, though the people have the kindest natural impulses, the academy trains the Catholic girls of the mountains in new ideals, fitting them to return to their people to reshape conditions and assume the responsibilities of Catholic womanhood. The majority of the pupils enrolled are non-Catholics, and every year there are conversions to the Faith. The removal of prejudice, the kindly attitude of the people towards the school, and the interest manifested in it by all classes of people are altogether admirable. The attendance approximates 200, of whom 48 are boarders and mostly Catholics; only a small percentage of the day pupils are Catholics, for Corbin is a small town with few Catholic families.

In 1919 the provincial house of the congregation was transferred from Newport to Melbourne, Ky. The erection of the new St. Anne Convent at Melbourne was begun in 1918, and on 11 November, 1919, it was solemnly blessed as the provincial house by Bishop Brossart of Covington. Mt. St. Martin's Convent at Newport was then remodeled and converted into a young woman's home with resident chaplain. The present condition of the American Province is this: 302 professed Sisters, 7 novices, 39 aspirants, 3 academies, 24 parochial schools, 1 infant asylum, the domestic departments of 6 institutions, 1 home for aged women, Staten Island; 1 home for French emigrant girls, New York City; 1 home for Catholic ladies, Baltimore; the Y. W. I., Mt. St. Martin, Newport, Ky. The Sisters work in the Archdioceses of Cincinnati, Baltimore, and New York, and in the Dioceses of Covington, Columbus, Cleveland, Toledo, Providence, and Wheeling.

II. SISTERS OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL (Rappoltswiller, Alsace; cf. C. E., V-52b).—The present superior general of the congregation is Mother Josepha Kleinhans, who succeeded Mother Marie Aimée Schaeffer in 1919, the latter being in poor health. Mother Marie Aimée was exiled during the World War (1917-19) and decorated with the Legion of Honor in 1919. She had been vicar general from 1905. The superior since 1912 is Abbé Ignace Fahrner. The following is a list of institutions of the congregation with the number of Sisters in each. In Alsace: mother-house (236 Sisters) and boarding school (26 Sisters) at Rappoltswiller; boarding and day school, Colmar (42 Sisters); boarding school, Hagenau (20); industrial school, Herrlisheim (13); girls' orphanage, Hilsenheim (19); preparatory school for normal school, Issenheim (11); day school, Mulhouse (39); boarding school, Rouffach (32); boarding and day school, Strassburg (45); vacation and convalescent home, Soultzbach (10); boys' orphanage, Willerhof (21); reformatory for girls, Bavilliers near Belfort (16). In Upper Saône: reformatory for boys (34 Sisters) and house of retreat (12 Sisters) at Frasne-le-Château. In 1916 the Sisters opened a vacation and convalescent home at Marlenheim; in 1917 ten Sisters undertook the direction of the bureau of the departmental orphanage at Bischwiller; in 1919 the convalescent home at Bennwihr was founded. The industrial normal school opened at Rappoltswiller in 1913 was transferred in 1920 to the large buildings of the Deaf-Mute Institution at Issenheim, which were vacated when the deaf-mutes were transferred to the care of the Sisters of the Holy Cross. In May, 1921, the direction of the Orphanage of St. Francis at Douvaine, Upper Savoy, was given to the Sisters of Divine Providence. The Sisters direct 314 primary public schools in Alsace and have about 44,000 children under instruction. The congregation numbers 1,740 members. The revision of the Code of Canon Law affects only minor details of the Constitutions.

III. SOCIETY OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE (Friedrichsburg, Germany; cf. C. E., V-52c).—Since 1909 the activity of this congregation has extended to the following recently established works: management of the household of the workmen's home, Muenster (1911), 6 Sisters; management of the household of a boarding school, kindergarten, St. Joseph's House, Muenster (1920), 3 Sisters; in Muenster and at other places the infant schools have been changed into kindergartens, and to these have been added in Muenster 3 shelters for children, 1 crib, and 2 cooking schools (1915), 76 Sisters; advanced school for women, St. Mauritz (1920), 8 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, ambulant nursing, Aldenarde (1915), 6 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, higher school for girls, school for cooking, Beckum (1919), 11 Sisters; management of the household of the workmen's hospice, Bochum (1919), 4 Sisters; higher school for girls, kindergarten, needle-work school, Borghorst (1910), 8 Sisters; young girl's home, housekeeping school, Cleve (1919), 8 Sisters; management of the household of St. Maurus, Coesfeld (1918), 3 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, Datteln (1910), 6 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, boarding house for ladies, Dinslaken (1912), 5 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, Duisburg Hochfeld (1911), 6 Sisters; Sunday school, ambulant nursing, Duisburg St. Peter; kindergarten, needle-work school, Emmerich (1920), 3 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, cooking school, Ennigerlok; kindergarten, needle-work school, ambulant nursing, Erkenschwick (1913), 4 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, workwomen's society, Gronau (1910), 4 Sisters; management of the household of the workmen's house and Kolping-house, kindergarten, needle-work school, children's shelter, day shelter, lyceum, Hamm (1914), 13 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, Hamm St. Joseph (1916), 7 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, Haltern (1915), 6 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, ambulant nursing, Heessen (1915), 5 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, Horstermark (1911), 4 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, orphanage, higher school for girls, Lobberich (1917), 7 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, ambulant nursing, Marienbaum (1916), 4 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, ambulant nursing, Meaun (1910), 6 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, ambulant nursing, Meerbeck (1918), 6 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, ambulant nursing, Moers (1918), 4 Sisters; lyceum, Osterfeld (1921); kindergarten, needle-work school, cooking school, Oelde (1912), 5 Sisters; management of the household of the workmen's house, Recklinghausen Hillerheide (1916), 3 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, boarding house for ladies, Recklinghausen St. Paulus (1913), 5 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, boarding house for ladies, Recklinghausen St. Paulus (1913), 5 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, refuge for girls, Recklinghausen Sud (1911), 4 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, Recklinghausen Ost (1921), 4 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, boarding house for ladies, Rheinberg (1913), 4 Sisters; housekeeping school, nursing home for sick Sisters, Telgte Marienheim (1913), 20 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, nursing home for the aged, Warendorf Franz H. (1916), 5 Sisters; orphanage, needle-work school, cooking school, Sunday school, Werne (1912), 7 Sisters; lyceum, Wesel (1918), 17 Sisters.

At Steyl, in the Diocese of Roermond, Holland, St. Joseph's Convent, till now a German boarding school, has become the provincial mother-house for Holland, with the novitiate and a higher Dutch school establishment, Mulo school. The provincial superior is Sister Vincentia (Oldemeyer). Other foundations in the Diocese of Roermond are: nursing home for the aged and kindergarten, at Helden Panningen; elementary schools, kindergarten, and needle-work school, Maasniel (1913); elementary schools (8-10 classes), kindergarten, needle-work school, Speckholzerheide (1910), 9 Sisters; elementary schools, kindergarten, needle-work school, Velden (1913), 4 Sisters. Recent foundations in the Diocese of Hertogenbosch are: elementary schools, kindergarten, needle-work school, Bergharen (1910), 6 Sisters; country housekeeping school, elementary schools, boarding house for gentlemen and ladies, needle-work school, nursing of the aged, kindergarten, Lierop (1911), 12 Sisters. In the Archdiocese of Utrecht works recently undertaken are: elementary schools, housekeeping school, needle-work school, boarding house for ladies, nursing of the aged, ambulant nursing, Lent (1910), 14 Sisters; boarding house for ladies, Arnheim.

In Brazil the provincial mother-house with novitiate is the Convent of the Sacred Heart, at Florianopolis, where the Sisters also have a boarding school and a higher school. The provincial superior is Sister Benvenuta (Rohling). Works undertaken by the Sisters in Brazil since 1909 are: elementary schools, needle-work school, ambulant nursing, Santo Amaro (1910); elementary school, Faragua (1917), 3 Sisters; elementary school, needle-work school, kindergarten, São José (1913); elementary school, ambulant nursing, Pelotas (1918), 5 Sisters; elementary school, Tijucas (1918), 3 Sisters; elementary school, Gaspar (1920), 3 Sisters; management of the hospital, elementary school, Laguna (1912), 4 Sisters; kindergarten, needle-work school, elementary school, Rio Negro (1913), 5 Sisters.

The total number of members of the congregation is 2038, and the total number of houses 156. There are 104 houses in Germany, 22 houses in Holland, and 30 houses in Brazil. Sister Bertha, superior general for over twenty years, died in 1912 and was succeeded by Sister Hildegundis (Dillmann), who died three years later. The present superior general is Sister Berthilde (Engelbert), who was elected at the general chapter in 1916 and has safely guided the congregation through difficult years.

IV. SISTERS OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE (Mainz, Germany; cf. C. E., V-52d).—The first superior of this order, Mother Mary de la Roche, governed but seven years, when she was superseded by Mother M. Vincentia, who filled this important office for twenty-five years. Then followed in succession Mothers Walburga, Athanasia, and Sebastian, the last of whom died recently. At present the direction of the community is under the guidance of Mother M. Josepha. The Sisterhood numbers about 1,000 members actively engaged in 100 branch houses in the diocese of Mainz and Limburg. In recent years several large institutions have been established: the Ketteler Institute, for aged invalids; the St. Hildegarde Hospital, a training school for nurses. In conformity with the revised code of Canon Law the general superior is elected for a term of six years, which may be extended to another term only by the consent of the Holy See.

Since 1909 the number of members in the American Province has increased to 300. The provincial house is at Pittsburgh, Pa. Several new branch houses have been opened in the last decade. The activity of the community consists mainly in the education of youth. The number of Sisters actively engaged in educational work is about 200, and the entire enrollment of pupils is about 8,000. In addition to the parish schools the Sisters conduct a boarding and day school for young ladies. The course of instruction embraces three distinct departments: academic, commercial, and industrial. In 1916 Toner Institute, commonly known as the "Seraphic Home for Destitute Boys," was taken over. In recent years the activity of the Sisters has been extended to the care of the sick; and at present St. John's General Hospital, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa., Gadsden General Hospital, Gadsden, Ala., and St. Elizabeth Hospital, Granite City, Ill., are the property of the community. Since the introduction of this Sisterhood into the United States it has been successively governed by Mothers Xavier, Frances, Theresia, and Aloysia.

V. SISTERS OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE (San Antonio, Texas; cf. C. E., V-53b).—The first foundation was made at Austin, Texas, U. S. A., in 1866, but in 1868 was removed to Castroville, Texas. In 1866 the mother-house was transferred to San Antonio, Texas. The Constitutions received final papal approbation from Pope Pius X, 12 December, 1912. The Sisters, now numbering 50, have charge of one college—Our Lady of the Lake—and 79 schools and academies in Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and New Mexico, attended by 12,000 pupils. The congregation has erected a house of studies known as Providence House of Studies on the Sisters' college grounds at Washington, D. C.

Divine Savior, DAUGHTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., V-54a).—The congregation follows the Rule of St. Augustine, and is under the direction of a superior, Canon Franz Kamprath, the superior general, Mother Cecily Wehner, and six councillors general. The mother-house is at Vienna and has 75 dependencies, of which the following are property of the congregation: a house of convalescence, 4 houses for Sisters who attend the sick in their own homes, 4 educational establishments (a seminary for female teachers, primary and Burger-school, kindergarten, school for housekeeping), 3 kindergartens in connection with a needle-work school and private care of the sick. The Sisters are also active in the following institutions: 15 hospitals (5 of which are in Vienna), 9 houses for Sisters who attend the sick in their dwellings, 7 poorhouses, 15 kindergartens in connection with a needle-work school and private care of the sick, 10 homes for children, 8 other various charitable institutions. The congregation numbers 1,234 members who work in the Archdiocese of Vienna, the Dioceses of St. Polten and Linz (Austria), Brun (Moravia), Parenzo-Pola (Italy), Trier (Germany), Hertogenbosch (Holland).

Divine Savior, SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., V-53d).—On 18 August, 1911, the community received the first papal approbation, the "Decretum laudis." In 1912 a new novitiate was opened at Obermaier-Meran, Tyrol; in 1918 another at Budapest, Hungary; in 1919 one at Berlin, Germany; and in 1921 one at Boerwang, Bavaria. From 1914 to 1919 the Sisters undertook the nursing of wounded soldiers in hospitals at Meran, Munich, Vienna, in Hungary and Jugoslavia. Mother Liboria Hansknecht, former provincial-vicereine at Milwaukee, Wis., was elected superior general of the Congregation 27 July, 1921, succeeding Mother Ambrosia Vetter, who had been at the head of the community since the death of the first superior general, Mother Maria de Willenweber, in 1907. The founder of the congregation, Fr. Francis Jordan, died 8 September, 1918, and was succeeded by Fr. P. Pfeiffer. The community lives according to the rule given them by their founder. Since 1909 new foundations have been made in Italy, Belgium, Germany, and Austria. In the United States the Sisters have houses at: Milwaukee (provincial house), St. Nazians, Wausau, Columbus, and Portage, and conduct schools at Almena, Bloomer, Cross Plains, Dickeyville, Edson, Sheboygan, Schoolhill, and Cadott. The congregation has a total membership of 400, with 34 foundations. The Sisters are in charge of schools, kindergartens, orphan asylums, homes for the aged, and hospitals, and also nurse the sick in their homes.

Divine Savior, SOCIETY OF THE (SOCIETAS DIVINI SALVATORIS; SALVATORIANI; cf. C. E., V-53c), founded at Rome 8 December, 1881, by Rev. John Baptist Jordan (b. 1848 at Gurtweil, Baden, Germany; d. 8 September, 1918, at Tavel, Ct. Fribourg, Switzerland), who took in religion the name Francis Mary of the Cross, and was superior general of the Society until his death. The Society's original name, "Die Katholische Lehrgesellschaft," i. e., Society of Catholic Instruction, was, upon the advice of the Sacred Congregation for Religious, changed by the founder, in 1894, to its present name, the S. D. S. Fr. Jordan had in his youth been apprenticed to decorative painting; he began to take up his studies for the priesthood when about twenty years old. Having been ordained in Freiburg (Baden) in 1878, he continued to pursue his studies in Rome, particularly those of Oriental languages, in which he distinguished himself. He was more or less acquainted with eleven ancient and twenty-seven modern tongues. Before definitely turning to the founding of his work he went, with the blessing of Pope Leo XIII, on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and having returned thence, with the same pope's blessing, he applied himself to the difficult task which he recognized as his vocation and God's holy will. The saintly man's life was one of prayer, struggle, and suffering for his life-work, which he saw crowned by the Church with the seal of approval. The steadfast companion, firm support, and prudent adviser of Fr. Jordan from the first beginnings of the Society was the learned and saintly Fr. Bernard Luethen, in religion Fr. Bonaventura, who therefore may rightly be called the co-founder of the Society with Fr. Jordan. He was born at Paderborn, Westphalia (Germany), in 1846, and ordained there in 1872. Having left his home diocese on account of circumstances prevailing in those troublous times of the Kulturkampf, he became chaplain of the Cassianum of Ludwig Auer, at Donaueschingen, Bavaria, and was at the same time for several years the able and forceful editor of "Ambrosius," an influential Catholic review for the clergy, which was published there. For the remainder of his life, his thirty years in religion (d. 1911), he was the intimate associate of Fr. Jordan.

The Society of the Divine Savior is a religious congregation with the ordinary three simple vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, which for the first few years are pronounced as temporal vows, and afterwards in perpetuity. The Society's aim is "religious enlightenment," viz., to spread God's kingdom on earth by every possible means, both in civilized countries and in foreign missions. The distinctive habit of the Salvatorians is a black robe, the loose folds of which are held in place by a girdle of the same color, the ends of the latter hanging down at the side. The rosary is worn suspended from the girdle. This costume is completed by the clerical Roman collar. When going out an upper garment consisting of a mantle with cape is usually worn. The Society obtained its final approbation from the Holy See in 1911. At present the Society numbers about 500 members, of whom about 200 are priests, the others being scholastics, lay brothers, and novices; these are distributed over 32 Salvatorian houses and colleges in Italy, Germany, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Rumania, Switzerland, Belgium, England, the United States of America, Colombia, and Brazil. The mother-house of the Salvatorians, where the superior general with his staff resides, is in Rome, near St. Peter's. In this, the greatest church of the world, the care of the Chapel of the Blessed Sacrament was entrusted to the S. D. S. in 1920 by the cathedral chapter with the approval of the late Pope Benedict XV, by formally handing over the keys of the chapel to the superior general, who appointed one of the Fathers as chaplain for the time being. The Society's spacious mother-house serves also for the time being the social needs of both the parish of St. Peter's and another neighboring parish, offering accommodations for social gatherings and performances. The present superior general, successor to Fr. Jordan, is Rev. Pancratius Pfeiffer, S. D. S., a native of southern Bavaria, who made all his studies at the Gregorian University. Previous to his present office he had been procurator general of the Society for a number of years. In the Society's fourth general chapter, which was celebrated in Rome in 1921, he was re-elected to the office of superior general for a second term of six years.

In England the Society has a mission center with a parish attached to it at Wealdstone, Middlesex, near London. This house belongs to the Anglo-American Province of the S. D. S., the provincial of which resides at St. Nazianz, Wis., U. S. A., where the Salvatorian Fathers conduct the Salvatorian College, a preparatory seminary for both aspirants to the secular priesthood and postulants of the S. D. S. The Fathers there, besides doing parish work, also publish a monthly for young folks, the "Manna," the "Manna Almanac," and the "Apostelkalender," this latter in German. In the German-speaking countries of Europe the Society is likewise doing its share in the apostolate of the press. Besides several books of individual members that have been published on ascetic, biographical, missionary, belletristic topics, the Society is publishing the "Manna" ("Illustrierte katholische Jugendschrift"), "Der Missionaer" ("Illustrierte Monatshefte fuer christliche Haus"), the "Apostelkalender," the "Manna-Kalender," the "Salvator-Kalender." The two monthlies are going out in about 100,000, and the three year-books in about 300,000, copies from the German center of the Society's press endeavors, the Salvator-Verlag, in Bavaria. Another field of activity that the Salvatorians are engaged in is social work. In Vienna (Austria), besides instructing many thousands of children in the public schools in Christian doctrine, the Fathers conduct and foster various associations and institutions for the young and the working classes. To the late Rev. Gregory Gasser, S. D. S. (d. 1913), who spent his life in this worthy cause, is due the organization of the "Katholische Volksbund" in Austria. In Berlin six Salvatorian Fathers are engaged in different branches of social work, one of them having been appointed Director of the "Charity Association for Greater Berlin." He also acts as official Berlin correspondent of the National Catholic Welfare Council News Service of the U. S. A. In Westphalia the Salvatorian Fathers and Brothers conduct an institute for homeless and endangered boys, to whom they impart a good school education and whom they train in different trades and handicrafts, thus placing them on a sound basis for an honest life in human society. The institution is considered a model of its kind.

In all their houses and colleges the Salvatorian Fathers exercise the care of souls, either as their main occupation or as secondary, viz., by conducting parishes or doing parish work at the place of their residence or in the surrounding neighborhood, by supporting parish work, by giving missions and spiritual retreats to both religious communities and lay people, by supplementary parish work at special occasions, or by taking the place of parish priests during the time of their absence. The first foreign mission placed in charge of the S. D. S. was the Prefecture Apostolic of Assam (British India), then, in 1889, newly erected. In this promising vineyard there labored 13 Salvatorian missionaries, aided by 4 Christian Brothers of Ireland, 6 Loretto Sisters of Ireland, 4 Missionary Sisters, and 46 native catechists, extending their activity over 9 principal and 56 secondary stations with 23 churches and chapels, and as many elementary schools, 1 middle English school, 1 boarding and day school for girls, 1 college, 4 orphan asylums, 2 homes for old people, 6 dispensaries. Several books and one periodical in the Khasi tongue had been published by them. At the beginning of the World War all the Salvatorian Fathers, Brothers, and Sisters were obliged to leave the mission on account of their German nationality, and were later on deported to Europe. Neither were they allowed to return to their loved field of labor after the war, despite the entreaties of their bereft Christians. For this reason the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda was forced to transfer this mission to another religious congregation, and its choicest fell on the Salesians of the Italian Province. The same Propaganda has in the meantime assigned the Salvatorian missionaries a new mission field in the province of Fokian, in Southeast China.

Divine Word, Society of the (Steyl, Holland; cf. C. E., V-54a).—The founder of the Society, Arnold Janssen, died at the age of seventy-three, 15 January, 1909. He had lived to see the membership of the organization number 500 priests and 600 brothers. He was succeeded by Nicholas Blum, under whose efficient management new missions were founded in South America, the Philippine Islands, the Dutch East Indies, and Japan. He directed the society through the adversities of the war and died 29 October, 1919. The third general of the society is William Gier, elected at the 5th general chapter, the most important and far-reaching assembly of the society. The rule was here made to harmonize with the new Canon Law, and provisions were made for greater expansion of the mission work. New impetus is given the work among Greek Catholics, in Ukraina, missions are contemplated in different parts of the world, and a new era of prosperity seems to be dawning for the society. Recent activities are given in the following paragraphs.

UNITED STATES.—St. Mary's Mission House.—One of the last important works blessed by the founder was the erection at Techny, Ill., of St. Mary's Mission House for the training of American boys for the foreign missions. Pope Pius X gave his Apostolic Blessing to the new foundation, and on 2 February, 1909, the mission house was opened with six boys in attendance. On 26 April Archbishop Quigley, of Chicago, dedicated the mission college. The first six boys were graduated from the college course on 24 June, 1915. The following fall saw them ready to enter the newly erected American novitiate of the society, and on the feast of Our Lady's Nativity they received the habit of clerics. The first scholastics made their vows on 8 September, 1916, and the first ordination of priests took place 1 May, 1921. After twelve years of progress St. Mary's reports the following figures: 33 priests, 29 scholastics, 51 Brothers, 20 brother-novices, 7 postulants, 20 candidates for the brotherhood, 190 candidates for the priesthood.

The society is responsible, to a great extent, for the present missionary spirit in the Middle West. Through its Mission Press about 5,000,000 missionary pamphlets have been printed and distributed throughout the country within the past ten years. The "Christian Family," a monthly family Catholic magazine, was first issued in 1906. It has at present more than 100,000 subscribers. The German Catholic monthly, "Familienblatt," reaches about 15,000 subscribers. The "Little Missionary" first appeared in September, 1915. It is issued in each school month, and is read by 100,000 school children and adults. The official organ of the society in the United States is "Our Missions," launched on 15 January, 1921. It contains missionary information from all the fields of the society, and is sent to about 40,000 friends, benefactors, and subscribers. The society also fostered the "Catholic Students' Mission Crusade," the first convention being held at Techny 27-30 July, 1918.

An event of far-reaching importance for the Mission House was the sending forth of the first mission band, which sailed from Seattle 3 December, 1919. The first American missionaries of the society were Rev. Fred Gruhn, Rev. Clifford King, and Rev. Robert Clark. The latter two went forth as scholastics, and after spending a year in the seminary at Yenchowfu, S. Shantung, were ordained to the priesthood 10 October, 1920, being the first American boys taken into the society as priests.

Sacred Heart Mission House.—In 1912 the society established its second American mission house at Girard, Erie Co., Pa. The work has progressed well. Reports of 1921 show: 8 priests, 5 Brothers, 70 students preparing for the priesthood.

Sacred Heart Novitiate.—The third foundation of the society is located at East Troy in the diocese of Milwaukee, on the shores of beautiful Lake Beulah. The novitiate was transferred from Techny to East Troy 8 September, 1921. At present there are 10 novices, with 2 priests and 2 Brothers.

Negro Missions.—At the suggestion of Archbishop Quigley the society undertook to work among the negroes of the South. Mother Katherine Drexel came to the aid of the first missionaries and made their pioneer efforts a success. The first mission was opened at Vicksburg, Miss., in 1906. To-day there are 260 Catholic negroes in the congregation and about 300 children in the well equipped school. Jackson, Miss., was the scene of the second mission in 1909. Among a negro population of 11,000 there was not a single Catholic. In spite of enormous difficulties, the work has made progress and to-day 120 Catholic negroes attend the church. There are 350 children attending school, about 80 being Catholic; 10 Sisters and 2 priests are working in this mission. In May, 1910, the mission at Meridian was opened. The Catholics number about 100; school children, 250; Sisters, 9; priests, 2. At Little Rock, Ark., a start was made in October, 1910. There are 2 priests, 8 Sisters, 210 Catholics, 300 school children. Greenville, Miss., welcomed the missionaries in 1913. The first Catholic high school for negroes was opened in this mission in 1917. The first seminary for negro priests is another noteworthy foundation. These negro priests will be religious, affiliated with the Society of the Divine Word, but having their own specific work in the missions among their own people. The seminary has been transferred to Bay St. Louis, Miss., and is known as St. Augustine's Mission House. There are 30 candidates at present. In 1917 the society took charge of St. Monica's parish in Chicago, the only parish for negroes in the archdiocese. There are about 250 children in the school, taught by the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament. The number of Catholics is difficult to estimate, owing to peculiar conditions, and constant moving.

EUROPE.—In 1906 the society had 6 mission houses in Europe. The number has grown to 22, distributed as follows: 4 in Holland, 11 in Germany, 2 in Austria, and 1 in Poland, Spain, Hungary, Switzerland, and Italy.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Philippine Islands.—On 15 August, 1909, the first two missionaries landed in the Philippine Islands and opened a mission in Abra, Northern Luzon. The religious condition in the province was deplorable at that time. Abra was the stronghold of Aglipayism and had no Catholic school. To these difficulties were added the severe poverty of the missionaries, the long journeys on foot, the difficult Ilocano dialect that had to be mastered, and hard living conditions. It is not surprising that five missionaries succumbed in a short time. But the fruits of these sacrifices were sweet: Aglipayism is all but dead in Abra, many pagans have embraced the Faith, an effective system of Catholic schools has been established. The report of the mission for 1920 shows: 23 schools with 2,007 pupils, 49 teachers, 12 churches and chapels, 15 priests, 8 residences of missionaries, 3 Brothers, 23 Sisters, 50,000 Catholics, 12,500 heathen.

Nyagata, Japan.—In 1907 the district of Nyagata was given to the society. The mission lies 100 miles northwest of Tokyo. It was erected into a prefecture apostolic in 1912. There is a population of 6,206,000, of whom only 466 are Catholics. A seminary with 10 candidates has been opened. An orphanage and hospital are successfully maintained. Figures for 1920 show: 14 priests, 12 Sisters, 10 residences of missionaries, 6 churches and chapels. In a new territory assigned to the missionaries there is a population of 5,000,000 and scarcely any Catholics. The capital of this new district is the famous city of Nagoya.

Sonda Islands, Dutch East Indies.—The mission is known as the Endehe-Flores mission and comprises also the Dutch part of the Island of Timor, besides many intervening groups of islands lying to the east of Java. The district was taken over from the Jesuits in 1912, erected into a prefecture apostolic in 1913, and to-day it is one of the most flourishing mission fields of the society. The 1920 report shows: 26 priests; 12 Brothers, 30 Sisters, 10 catechists; 5653 boys in 75 elementary schools, 1151 girls in 10 schools; 601 boys in 4 boarding schools, 349 girls in 2 boarding schools, 171 teachers, 18 churches and chapels, 40 oratories, 50,000 Catholics, and 4000 catechumens.

South Shantung, China.—During the war the mission of South Shantung was in great danger. Eleven missionaries were deported, while the remaining 52 were permitted to keep up their work only after the Washington administration made a vigorous protest against their deportation. This protest had been induced by enterprising American Catholic prelates. Three American missionaries were then sent to China and the danger ceased. In 38 years this mission has made over 98,000 converts. On 1 September, 1921, the mission reported 77 European and 3 American priests, 20 native priests, 97 Sisters, 33 seminarians, 92 collegians preparing for priesthood, 13 Brothers, 2 hospitals, 13 dispensaries, 743 orphans cared for, 10,800 children baptized in 1921, of whom 7700 were in articulo mortis, 6 high schools, 98 elementary schools, 185 prayer and 724 winter schools, 5735 pupils, 98,190 Catholics and 43,680 catechumens in a population of 12,000,000. New mission fields have been assigned to the society in Kansu, Ili, and Honan.

Australian New Guinea.—The Prefecture Apostolic of New Guinea has come nearest to the self-supporting stage. Through large coconut plantations a fair income is assured to the mission. Figures for 1920 show: 27 priests, 22 Brothers, 35 Sisters, 6467 Catholics, 47 schools, 2170 pupils, 31 chapels, 23 main stations and 23 substations. On 6 December, 1921, the first American Sisters left San Francisco for this mission. The pioneer band numbers four. The first American priest and Brother left the United States 3 March; the New Guinea mission thus has 6 American missionaries.

South America.—In the Argentine Republic at Buenos Aires a mission college has been opened for only 600 are in school. The mission shows 35 priests and 6 Brothers.

In the Indian missions of Paraguay the society conducts 2 schools with 24 boys and 19 girls in attendance. There are 2 mission stations with 5 priests and 6 Brothers. This mission is a relic of the old Jesuit Reductions. It belongs to the Diocese of Asuncion, and the superior of the mission is the delegate of the bishop to the Indians. Difficulties in the mission are numerous, owing to the nomadic instincts of the people.

The society is working in 6 dioceses in Brazil, with the care of 200,000 Catholics. There are 5 colleges with 600 students, 1 seminary with 40 students, and a mission house with 17 candidates of the society. Some of the parishes have as many as 40,000 Catholics. There are 70 priests and 25 Brothers working in Brazil.

Statistics.—Figures for the United States for 1922 show 56 priests, 29 scholastics, 11 clerical novices, 62 Brothers, 20 Brother novices, 7 Brother postulants, 230 students for the priesthood, 15 Brother aspirants, total 430. The appended chart shows the figures for March, 1921, throughout the world.

Divorce, DECLARATION OF NULLITY (cf. C. E., V-59a).—Those who are permitted to impugn the validity of a marriage by complaint before the ecclesiastical courts are: (a) the married parties, in all cases of separation or declaration of nullity, unless they are responsible for the impediment; (b) the promoter of justice when the impediment is public in its nature; all other parties are restricted to denouncing the marriage as null to the ordinary or promoter of justice. If from a trustworthy, unimpeachable, authentic document it is evident that there has existed an impediment of disparity of worship, orders, solemn vow of chastity, ligamen, consanguinity, affinity or spiritual relationship, and it appears equally certain that no dispensation has been granted from the impediment, the ordinary, after citing the parties and calling in the defender of the bond, can declare the nullity of the marriage without the necessity of the usual ecclesiastical trial. Unless the defender of the bond is certain that the declaration is justified he must appeal, and the judge of appeal having heard him is to decide whether to confirm the declaration or send the matter back to the court of first instance to follow the regular procedure.

PAULINE PRIVILEGE (cf. C. E., V-60a).—Before the privilege can be used the baptized convert must ask the unbaptized partner (a) whether he or she is willing to be converted and to receive baptism, and (b) if he or she, at least, consents to live in peace without insulting God. Usually these demands are to be made with the authorization of the convert's ordinary; but they are valid if made privately by the convert, and even licit if the usual procedure cannot be followed, though they would be worthless in the external forum unless corroborated by at least two witnesses or in some other authorized manner. The convert would lose the right to marry again if after baptism he or she gave the unbaptized party just cause for separating. The decrees regarding marriage contained in the Constitutions of Paul III, Pius V, and Gregory XIII for certain foreign mission territories have been extended to the adjoining regions. In case of doubt the law favors the Pauline privilege. The Code states that the dissolution of a marriage, even consummated, between unbaptized persons in virtue of this privilege is in favor of the Faith, that is it favors the liberty of the baptized party, but it does not restrict the word baptized to Catholics.

the training of young men for the society. There are 100 candidates. The missions report: 185,000 Catholics, 7 colleges with 1783 students, 2 seminaries with 73 seminarians, 73 parochial schools with 4112 pupils, 87 priests, and 57 Brothers.

In Chile two colleges have been established and a parish erected at Osorno in 1911. There are 35,000 Catholics in this parish. Of 6000 school children SEPARATION (cf. C. E., V-63b).—Tacit condonation of adultery takes place if the innocent party after learning of the sin freely continues relations with the culprit; moreover, condonation is presumed unless within six months the guilty party has been dismissed, left, or duly accused. The Code does not uphold the view of certain theologians that if the innocent party later committed adultery, he would be bound to receive back his guilty spouse. It mentions as other causes for separation (a) adhesion to a non-Catholic sect; (b) giving a non-Catholic education to the children; (c) leading an ignominious or criminal life; (d) a grave danger to body or soul which can be avoided only by separation. For these and similar causes the party may separate with the ordinary's approval, or even without it, if there is danger in delay. When the reason for the separation is at an end, married life is to be resumed, but if the separation was authorized by the ordinary for a given or an indefinite time, the innocent party need not return until the time expires or until the ordinary tells him to do so.

Doctor (cf. C. E., V-72).—Those who have obtained the degree of doctor are entitled to wear a ring and stone, but not at sacred functions. Other things being equal, doctors and licentiates are to be preferred in the collation of ecclesiastical offices and benefices. Auditors of the Rota must be doctors in both canon and civil law, the chancellor of the Congregation of Rites a doctor of canon law, and advocates and procurators in processes of beatifications and canonizations before the same congregation must be doctors of canon law, and also at least licentiates of theology. Honorary degrees may be conferred by the Congregation for Seminaries and Universities of Studies.

Doctrine, CHRISTIAN (cf. C. E., V-83).—Priests and other clerics, unless legitimately prevented, must assist their parish priest in teaching Christian doctrine, and if the local ordinary judges it necessary to utilize the services of religious, their superiors, even if exempt, on being requested by him, must personally or by their subjects teach the catechism especially in their own churches, without detriment, however, to religious discipline. Exempt religious, if they teach non-exempt persons, must observe the bishop's regulations concerning religious instruction. Religious superiors should see that the lay brothers and servants receive a catechetical instruction at least twice a month.

Codez juris canonici, 1329-36.

Domicile (cf. C. E., V-103).—Domicile is acquired by residence in a parish or quasi-parish, or at least in a diocese, vicariate or prefecture apostolic; this residence, however, should either be conjoined with an intention of remaining there permanently if no reason for departing arises, and should be continued for a period of ten years. Before the publication of the Code domicile was only parochial, and was never acquired by residence alone. Quasi-domicile is acquired in the same way as domicile, if the residence is either conjoined with the intention of remaining for at least the great part of a year, or has actually been prolonged for that time. By quasi-domicile also one acquires full parish rights and a proprius parochus. A minor who has ceased to be an infant, that is, who has completed his seventh year, can acquire a quasi-domicile of his own, as can a wife not legitimately separated from husband; if she is legitimately separated, however, she can acquire a domicile also. Those who are insane have necessarily the same domicile as their guardians, but the Code does not state what happens when the guardian has only a quasi-domicile.

Though not referred in the Code as a domicile of origin, a child's place of origin is fixed by the place where his father had his domicile or, in defect of domicile, his quasi-domicile when the child was born, or where the mother had hers if the child was illegitimate or posthumous; if the parents were vagi, it is the place where the child was born; if the child was a foundling, the place where it was discovered.

Dominican Republic (SANTO DOMINGO; cf. C. E., V-110c), is the eastern division of the island of Haiti. The area is estimated at 19,332 square miles and the population at 1,900,000. According to the census of 1919 the city of Santo Domingo had 26,812 inhabitants and the city of Puerta Plata 7370, Santiago de los Caballeros 14,744, San Pedro de Macoris 10,000, La Vega about 8000, Samana and Sanchez about 2000 each.

EDUCATION.—The expenditure on education in 1919-20 was $943,880. In 1920 there were 972 public schools in the Republic (6 secondary), with 105,000 pupils (51,585 in 1918), and 1544 teachers. The Professional Institute was formed by presidential decree on 29 November, 1914. A commission appointed by the Government thoroughly investigated the educational situation and prepared and recommended the following laws, based on its findings: Compulsory School Attendance, School Administration, General Studies, University, Theological Seminary, Organic Law of Public Education, School Revenues. The first six laws were promulgated in April, 1918, and constitute the school code of the country. There are also 6 industrial schools for girls, 2 schools of fine arts, 2 correctional schools, and the Central University at the capital. The country is divided into six school departments and each department into school districts. There is also a Board of Education in each school district and a General Board of Education and a General Superintendent for the whole country. The establishment of obligatory education has brought the number of school children from 18,000 to 100,000. Prior to the United States occupation there were 30 rural schools; on 1 January, 1920, there were 647 rural schools.

GOVERNMENT.—The constitution of the Dominican Republic provides for a National Congress, consisting of a Senate of 12 members and a Chamber of 24 Deputies. The executive power is vested in the president (chosen for six years, by an electoral college), and in seven ministers. This system of government has been in abeyance since 1916, when a military government by United States naval officers was proclaimed. The military governor combines, for the time being, the functions of a president and Congress. United States naval officers are administering the different government departments.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The foreign trade of the Dominican Republic reached a new high record in 1920, amounting to $105,257,117, an increase of $43,636,098, or 71% over the 1919 trade, and 535% greater than the trade in 1913. The imports, valued at $46,768,258, came chiefly from the United States (90%); the exports, $58,767,041, went chiefly to the United States also (88%). Of the total area about 15,500 square miles is cultivable and about 3,000,000 acres suitable for grazing. Tobacco is grown in the northern part, the production in 1918 being 33,439,648 pounds. The production of sugar from 17,000,000 acres in 1920 was 1,326,438 bags (320 pounds each); of coconut, about 1,500,000. The railways of the Republic have an extent of approximately 150 miles; in addition there are about 255 miles of private lines on the large estates. The Dominican Central Railway, which formerly belonged to an American company, became, by virtue of a contract made by the Government in February, 1908, the property of the Republic. The vigorous continuance of the extensive road-building campaign marks the Government's chief attainment in recent years. Up to the end of 1918 the revenue of the government was derived chiefly from customs duties on imports and exports and from internal revenues. A property tax was inaugurated in 1919. The customs collections for 1920 were estimated at $7,500,000. The national debt is about $13,100,000. A treaty between Santo Domingo and the United States, ratified on 8 February, 1907, authorized an issue of $20,000,000 in 5% bonds, secured as to principal and interest by a first lien on the customs revenues of the Republic, the general receiver being appointed by the President of the United States. The interest of this has been regularly paid and it is expected that in 1925 the whole debt will be regulated.

HISTORY (1910-20).—In 1911 President Ramón Cáceres was assassinated. The new president was forced by revolutionary outbreaks the next year to resign, and until the constitution could be revised and the general elections held, Archbishop Alejandro Nouel, Metropolitan of the Republic, was asked to serve as provisional president. He resigned, however, early in 1913, and was succeeded by José Nordas Valdés. A revolution broke out in Puerto Plata and was quelled by the threats of the United States to refuse the payment of the custom collections to the rebellious party. At the regular elections of 1914 Jimenez was elected to succeed Ramón Báez (elected provisional president in place of Valdés, who resigned). He was impeached and on 26 July, 1916, Francisco Henriquez y Carvajal was chosen provisional president. The United States would not recognize him because he refused to accept the continuance of American control over the customs and the constabulary. The deadlock and disorders that followed caused the intervention of the United States and the establishment of temporary military government for "the purpose of restoring order." There was desultory fighting between the natives and the United States marines, and the latter finally reached Santiago, where on 6 December, 1916, the American flag was raised. Since then order has been maintained by the American forces, numbering 5000 marines. There was an American military provost marshal in the capital of each province, who attended to the policing of each province. At the head of the administration was a military governor and rear admiral of the United States Navy. The administration continued mainly in the hands of the Dominicans, who directed their school system, their courts, and their town governments. To the United States authorities was reserved the control of the treasury and customs and the appointment of the governors of the provinces. On 14 June, 1921, a proclamation was issued by the United States Military Commission setting a date eight months ahead for the withdrawal of the American forces and the restoration of the national Dominican Government, but the conditions of withdrawal were such that the Dominicans refused to accept them. In January, 1922, Archbishop Nouel, in answer to a request from the managing editor of the New York "Nation," stated that in his opinion, and that of prelates from all parts of South and Central America, the American occupation was in no way based on any principles of right and justice, and the intervention was unjustified.

Down and Connor, DIOCESE OF (DUNENSIS ET CONNORENSIS; cf. C. E., V-147b), in Ireland, includes Antrim, the greater part of Down and the Liberties of Coleraine, in Londonderry. On 20 September, 1908, Most Rev. John Tohill was consecrated Bishop of Down and Connor to succeed Most Rev. Dr. Henry, who had died in March of that year. Doctor Tohill, d. 4 July, 1914, and the present bishop, Most Rev. Joseph McRory, was consecrated his successor 14 November, 1915. Before being appointed bishop, Doctor McRory was professor of Sacred Scripture and Oriental languages at Maynooth College from 1887 and elected vice-president of the college in 1912. A diocesan chapter was organized on 20 December, 1920, by the authority of Pope Benedict XV, but in general the growth of Catholicity in this diocese has been retarded during the past year by the violent intolerance of the Orangemen in Belfast.

At the present time (1921) the Irish Catholic population numbers 180,000, and the diocese comprises 60 parishes, 116 churches, 5 monasteries, 2 convents for men and 16 for women, 160 secular priests and 22 regulars, 30 lay Brothers, 160 nuns, 1 seminary with 200 seminarians, 7 high schools with 45 teachers and attendance of 1028 boys and 379 girls, 1 training school with 9 teachers and attendance of 100, 245 elementary schools with 570 teachers and attendance of 27,154, 2 industrial schools with 10 teachers and attendance of 270. Among the institutions of the diocese are: 1 orphan asylum, 1 home for the aged, 1 home for the blind, Mater Infirmorum hospital in Belfast, 3 refuge homes, and 1 day nursery. Practically all the public institutions allow the priests to minister in them, and the Catholic industrial schools receive aid from the government. Various Gaelic and temperance societies are organized among the clergy and the St. Vincent de Paul Society and Catholic Truth Society among the laity.

Doyle, WILLIAM, b. at Dalkey, Ireland; killed in battle near Ypres on 16 August, 1917. He made his collegiate studies under the Rosminian Fathers at Ratchiffe, England, and became a Jesuit at Tullabeg, Ireland, on March 31, 1891, where his elder brother was a novice. He studied philosophy at Enghien, Belgium, and Stonyhurst, England, and theology at Milltown Park. He followed the usual course as professor and prefect of discipline in various colleges, and was a missionary for a time at Dublin and Limerick. On November 10, 1914, he offered himself as a military chaplain but it was not until a year later that he was appointed to the Royal Irish Fusiliers. Later he was attached to the 8th Dublins. As a chaplain in the World War Father Doyle attracted attention by his heroic devotion to duty, by the holiness of his life and by the influence he exerted over Protestants as well as Catholic soldiers.

His biography by Alfred O'Rahilly, reveals a most winning personality, and a priest of great holiness of life, but at the same time portrays him as following a form of asceticism which can scarcely be considered the normal method of the Order to which he belonged.

Drisdale River (cf. C. E., XVI-68b).—A mission in Australia under the jurisdiction of the Benedictine Abbey of New Norcia (q.v.). The present administrator, Rt. Rev. Anselm Catalan, O.S.B., abbot nullius of New Norcia, b. 16 November, 1878, professed 24 March, 1895, ordained 20 September, 1902, was appointed abbot of New Norcia 30 June, 1915, and appointed that same day apostolic administrator of Drisdale River.

Dromore, DIOCESE OF (DROMORENSIS; cf. C. E., V-160c), in Ulster, Ireland, is suffragan of Armagh with residential see at Violet Hill, Newry. Rt. Rev. Henry O'Neill, late bishop of the diocese (b. 3 January, 1843; d. 9 October, 1915), was succeeded by Most Rev. Edward Mulhern, b. 29 January, 1863, in the Diocese of Clogher, studied in the seminary of St. Macarten, ordained priest 1888, professor, then president of St. Macarten Seminary, rector of Bundoran, canon of Clogher, consecrated Bishop of Dromore 31 January, 1916, which see he still occupies, and under whose capable administration the advancement in Catholic life has been maintained and quickened.

According to an estimate made in 1922 the diocese numbers a Catholic population of 43,069, non-Catholics 68,905; there are 19 parishes, 17 parish priests, 2 administrators, 39 curates, 4 regulars, 6 monks, 76 nuns, 42 public churches, 1 seminary, 1 priory, 1 monastery, and 7 convents. Under complete Catholic control are 7 church, 1 technical, and 2 industrial schools, 64 elementary schools attended by 7113 pupils, while religious education in schools has been modeled on a scheme which produces satisfactory results.

Drummond, LISTER MAURICE, convert, b. in England 1856; d. at Hampstead, London, 27 February, 1916; was the grandson on his mother's side of the second Baron Ribblesdale. In 1875 he was received into the Church, and for the rest of his life was a most zealous, active Catholic. He studied law, in 1879 was called to the bar at the Inner Temple, and for several years served as revising barrister on the Southeastern Circuit. In 1892 he acted as secretary to the Irish Evicted Tenants' Commission, and in the same capacity in 1906 to the Worcester Election Commission. In 1913 he was appointed metropolitan police magistrate, a position in which his powers of sympathy and practical kindness won him universal esteem and affection. With his friend, Father Philip Fletcher, Mr. Drummond founded in 1887 the Guild of Our Lady of Ransom, a union of intercession by prayer and good works "for the Conversion of England and of individuals; for apostates and for those in danger of apostasy; and for the forgotten dead." For years he was chairman of the Central Council of the Westminster Catholic Federation, and in 1913 and 1914 chairman of the Central Council of the Catholic Confederation. His favorite works were tract distribution and lecturing on the Catholic religion; for many years he was the Guild's chief lecturer in Hyde Park in the summer months. In recognition of his apostolic work Pope Leo XIII presented him, in 1901, with the insignia of the Order of St. Gregory.

Dublin, ARCHDIOCESE OF (DUBLINENSIS; cf. C. E., V-171d), includes nearly all Wicklow and portions of the Counties Kildare and Wexford in Ireland, and has three suffragan dioceses: Kildare and Leighlin, Ferns, and Ossory. The present year (1921) saw the death of the Archbishop of Dublin,

Most Rev. William J. Walsh (q.v.), who had filled the see from 2 August, 1885, until his death on 9 April. On 27 October, 1920, the Most Rev. Edward J. Byrne, D.D., Bishop of Spigaz, was consecrated auxiliary to Archbishop Walsh, and upon the death of the latter he succeeded him as Archbishop of Dublin. Before his consecration as bishop, Doctor Byrne had been vicar general of the Irish College in Rome, to which position he was appointed in 1901, and later, upon his return to Ireland, he was appointed to the pro-cathedral in Dublin, and a vicar general of the diocese.

The present records of the diocese of Dublin show the following statistics: 77 parishes; 193 churches; 8 novitiates for men; 16 convents for men and 102 for women; 305 secular priests and 317 regulars; a few lay brothers with each religious community of men; 1 seminary with 67 seminarians. The various institutions under the care of religious orders are: 2 asylums for the blind; 2 asylums for the deaf; 10 hospitals; 5 orphanages for girls; 6 orphanages for boys; 2 homes for the aged; 1 home for widows; 5 homes for working women; 4 industrial schools for girls and 3 for boys; 1 reformatory for boys and 1 for girls; and 4 penitentiaries. The Catholic population numbers 434,586.

Certain public institutions: 7 workhouses, 2 lunatic asylums, 2 prisons, and 9 military barracks permit the ministry of the priests of the diocese. The Government assists in the support of the University College and intermediate and primary schools. Among the clergy of the diocese the Eucharistic League and the Priests Social Guild are organized, and among the laity the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, Society of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Catholic Truth Society of Ireland, St. Vincent de Paul Society, Aid Society for Catholic discharged male prisoners, and boys clubs.

The brothers are very active in the educational work of the diocese, the following orders being represented throughout the diocese: Christian Brothers in charge of 19 schools have their novitiate at St. Mary's, Marino; de la Salle Brothers in charge of 2 schools; Carmelite Brothers with 2 houses; Hospital Brothers of St. John of God with 1 house and the Presentation Brothers in charge of 2 schools.

Dubuque, ARCHDIOCESE OF (DUBUQUENSIS; cf. C. E., V-179c), in the State of Iowa. Upon its promotion to an Archdiocese in 1893 Dubuque was given the suffragan sees of Davenport, Lincoln, Cheyenne, and Omaha. In 1911 Clinton County, comprising a large Catholic population and many parishes and schools, was taken from the Archdiocese of Dubuque and attached to the Diocese of Davenport.

The fourth bishop and second archbishop of Dubuque, Most Rev. John J. Keane, resigned from the see on account of failing health, 3 April, 1911, and died 22 June, 1918. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most. Rev. James John Keane, then Bishop of Cheyenne, born in Pine Island, Minnesota, 26 August, 1857, studied at St. John's College, Collegeville, Minn., and in the Grand Seminary, Montreal, where he was ordained in 1882. For some years he was president of St. Thomas College, St. Paul, and later pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Minneapolis. In 1902 he was appointed to the see of Cheyenne, where he led the life of an active missionary bishop, traveling much, ministering to the spiritual needs of his people and even visiting various parts of the country, giving lectures to Catholics and non-Catholics, with the proceeds of which he endowed his struggling diocese. In Dubuque he has systematized the administrative work of the archdiocese, multiplied its schools and churches, and established a diocesan paper. A persistent advocate of temperance, he was for years president of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America. His distinctive work, however, has been the upbuilding of higher education, and several buildings have been added to the diocesan college and an adequate endowment secured for it through his work. His leadership in the Church is widely recognized, and he is well known as an able speaker. In his public utterances he has never ceased to plead for the larger Catholic spirit that looks beyond local needs to the interests of the universal Church.

The (1921) statistics of the archdiocese show 176 parish churches, 56 mission churches and 52 chapels, 257 diocesan and 14 regular clergy, 1 college for men with 615 students, 2 high schools for women with 225 students, 2 high schools for boys with 400 pupils, 7 academies for girls with about 2000 pupils, 92 parochial schools with over 15,000 pupils. Among the charitable institutions are: 1 orphanage with 250 inmates, 10 hospitals each accommodating from 30 to 150 patients, 1 industrial home with 100 inmates and 1 Home of the Good Shepherd. About 200 Sisters of various communities are engaged in conducting the hospitals and other charitable works, and about 700 are engaged in the schools. The Catholic population of the archdiocese is 111,500, out of a total population of 700,000. During the World War more than 5000 Catholic men entered the service from this territory and six of the clergy served as chaplains.

Duhem, PIERRE MAURICE MARIE, was b. in Paris, 10 June, 1861; d. at Cabrespine, France, 14 September, 1916. He was a pupil of the Collège Stanislas and the higher Normal School of Paris, and was connected with the Universities of Lille, Rennes, Bordeaux, and Louvain. He was also Corresponding Member of many scientific societies; and the author of several voluminous works on physics. He founded the Association of Catholic Students at Bordeaux in 1913, for with him religion and science always went hand in hand. He was not merely a physicist; his purpose was to build a solid foundation for all science. His reputation was world-wide and his confrères place him on the same plane as M. Henri Poincaré. He remodeled the history of science. He was profoundly Catholic, and said in his article, "Physique de croyant": "Assuredly I believe with my whole soul all the truths that God has revealed and the Church teaches. I have never concealed my faith, and I trust from the bottom of my heart that He from Whom I have received it will prevent me from ever being ashamed of it."

Duluth, DIOCESE OF (DULUTHENSIS; cf. C. E., V-188c), suffragan of the Archdiocese of St. Paul, comprises the counties of Aitkin, Carlton, Cass, Cooke, Crow Wing, Itasca, Lake, Pine, Koochiching, and St. Louis, in the State of Minnesota, U. S. A., covering an area of 22,354 square miles. In 1910 part of the original diocese was taken to erect the Diocese of Crookston, thus making possible a more intensive cultivation of the field in both jurisdictions. The golden jubilee of the ordination of Rt. Rev. James McGoldrick, first bishop of the diocese, was celebrated June, 1917, and the following year Bishop McGoldrick died, 2 January. His successor, Rt. Rev. John T. McNicholas, O. P., was appointed 18 July, 1918, and consecrated in Rome by Cardinal Boggiani 8 September, taking possession of his see 15 November following. Born in Kiltimagh, Ireland, 15 December, 1877, ordained 10 October, 1901, later made master of novices, professor at the House of Studies and National director of the Holy Name Society. He was serving as Socius to the Master General of the Order in Rome at the time of his appointment. Bishop McNicholas immediately began an active campaign for more priests, and at present (1922) 50 ecclesiastical students are preparing for work in this diocese.

The Cathedral parish was divided and plans for a large school and new cathedral in the east end of the city are already partially realized. A united effort of all the parishes and missions has been successfully made to secure a substantial sum for education and the needs of parishes and institutions. Twenty-three new parishes have been organized since the division of the diocese in 1910.

A house of the Third Order of St. Dominic has been established and is occupied by the Sisters of Corpus Christi Chapter. These women from the English Province undertake any welfare work desired by the bishop and teach catechism in missions and stations. A boarding house for working girls under their direction has also been established.

The Benedictine Sisters have made extensive additions to St. Mary's Hospital and to the mother-house in Duluth. The statistics of the diocese at present are as follows: Priests, diocesan and religious, 72; churches with resident pastors 49; missions with churches 43; stations 37; college and academy for young women 1, with 130 pupils; high school for boys 1, with 200 pupils; high school for girls 1, with 150 pupils; parish schools 11, with 3304 pupils; orphanage 1, with 117 children; hospitals 2; home for the aged 1, with 74 inmates; ecclesiastical students 50; total number of children under Catholic care 3901; total Catholic population 64,215, of whom 3000 are Slavs, 1520 Indians, 5000 Italians, 2000 Germans, 4000 Poles, 8000 French Canadians, and the remainder Americans.

Dunedin, DIOCESE OF (DUNEDENSIS; cf. C. E., V-191a), in New Zealand, Oceania, comprises the districts of Otago, Southland and Stewart Island, and is suffragan of Wellington. Rt. Rev. Joseph Whyte, the present (1922) administrator of the see, b. in 1868 in the Diocese of Dublin, studied at St. Kieran's College, was ordained in 1893, arrived in New South Wales in 1894, where he became professor at St. Patrick's College, appointed Bishop of Dunedin 22 April, 1920, succeeding Rt. Rev. Michael Verdon (b. 31 May, 1839; d. 22 November, 1918).

The diocesan statistics for 1922 are: parishes 24; churches 71; stations 45; secular priests 43, regular 28; Brothers 11; nuns 240; 1 seminary with 60 seminarians; boarding schools and high schools 8; primary schools 29; Magdalen asylum 1; industrial and preservation school 1; orphanage 1; Nazareth house 1; girls' hostels 2; all under the care of the religious communities established there, receiving practically no grants from the Government. The diocese numbers a Catholic population of 26,000, nearly all of Irish descent or Irish born.

In February, 1921, the golden jubilee of the diocese was celebrated, together with the arrival of the first nuns (Dominicans); Mgr. Cerretti, the apostolic delegate, visited the diocese in 1916, and Mgr. Cattaneo, his successor, in November, 1921.

Societies organized in the diocese are: Eucharistic League among the clergy, and Hibernian Society, Celtic Clubs, Children of Mary, and Sacred Heart Associations among the laity. The diocesan newspaper, "New Zealand Tablet," established since 1873, has done great work in extending religious and educational facilities among the people.

Dunkeld, DIOCESE OF (DUNKELDENSIS; cf. C. E., V-193d), in Scotland. Since the revival of this see it has been held by five bishops. The third bishop, Rt. Rev. Angus MacFarlane, d. 24 September, 1912, was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Robert Fraser, consecrated 25 May, 1913. After a very short administration Bishop Fraser died 28 March, 1914, and the present bishop of Dunkeld, Rt. Rev. John Toner, was appointed to succeed him (consecrated 15 October, 1915).

The total number of secular priests in the diocese (1921) is 37; regulars (Redemptorists), 12; missions and chaplaincies, 17; churches, chapels, and stations, 31; and parochial schools, 15. There are two monasteries for men (Redemptorists and Marist Brothers); 3 convents of women (Sisters of Mercy, Little Sisters of the Poor and Sisters of Charity); the Catholic institutions comprise a home for aged poor, a House of Mercy for servants, a working girls' home and a children's refuge in charge of the Sisters of Charity. The Catholic population of the diocese is estimated at between 35,000 and 40,000.

Dunkers (cf. C. E., XV-90d).—Although in recent years an attempt has been made to unite the Progressives (officially, Brethren Church) and the Conservatives (officially Church of the Brethren), on the other hand another sect of Dunkers, The Church of God (New Dunkers), organized in 1848, was first listed in the United States reports in 1916. It has a membership of less than a thousand. The Church of the Brethren carries on foreign missionary work in India, China, Sweden, and Denmark, reporting (1916) 19 stations, 66 American missionaries, and a membership of 1803. The Brethren Church has missions in Argentina, and in Central Africa, employing 10 missionaries. The body known as "German Seventh Day Baptists" affiliates regularly with the Seventh Day Baptist General Conference. The five bodies of Dunkers reported in 1921 in the United States 1262 churches, 3767 ministers, and 122,932 members.

Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pa., was founded in 1878 and incorporated in 1882 under the title of "The Pittsburgh Catholic College of the Holy Ghost," with power to confer the usual college degrees. On 30 March, 1911, the charter was amended and under the title of "The University of the Holy Ghost" it was authorized to give degrees in Law, Medicine, Dentistry, and Pharmacy. On 27 May following the title was changed to that of "Duquesne University." The present college building was dedicated in April, 1885, the original building being abandoned at that time. In 1894 a Gothic chapel was built adjoining the university; the library comprises several thousand volumes. The schools of law, oratory, social service, and accounts are conducted in a part of the Vandergrift Building awaiting the erection of new college buildings.

The university is conducted by the Fathers of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost, but the faculty includes a number of lay professors as well. A board of advisers, composed of business and professional men, chosen irrespective of creed or political affiliation, works in conjunction with the university faculty, and no steps of importance are taken without the approval of this board. In 1920-21 over 2500 students were registered in all departments of the university. The president is the Very Rev. Martin A. Behr, C. S. Sp. L.L.D.

Durango, ARCHDIOCESE OF (DURANGUENSIS; cf. C. E. V-208d), in Mexico. Bishop Francesco Mendoza, the present (1922) incumbent was born 14 November, 1852, in the diocese of Zamora, professor and rector of the seminary, chancellor and archdeacon of the cathedral, appointed Bishop of Campeche, 11 December, 1904; consecrated 2 February, 1905, promoted to the Archdiocese of Durango, 7 August, 1909, proclaimed 27 November, 1911, succeeding Mgr. Santiago Zuriba y Manzanera, b. 29 November, 1834, d. 26 January, 1909. According to 1920 census reports the archdiocese comprises a total population of 351,600 of whom 350,000 are Catholic; there are 50 parishes, 250 churches or chapels, 125 secular and 9 regular priests, 3 monasteries for men, properly so called, with churches, Carmelite, Augustinian and a Franciscan monastery in Sombrete; 7 for women, 1 seminary with 50 seminarians, 9 colleges, 4 for boys with 10 teachers and 350 boys, 5 for girls with 25 teachers and 450 pupils; the charitable institutions include, 1 home, 1 hospital conducted by nuns, 1 asylum. There are several societies organized among the laity, one among the clergy. The Catholic press is represented by three periodicals. The events of special importance in the archdiocese since 1908 are the ravages done to all ecclesiastical institutions by the revolutionists, the destruction of the Sagrario, and the beautiful church of St. Francis, as well as other beautiful edifices, and the entire confiscation of church goods, seminaries, colleges, etc.

Durazzo, ARCHDIOCESE OF (DYRRACHIENSIS; cf. C. E., V-209a), in Albania, is directly dependent on the Holy See; it has a total population of nearly 200,000, of whom 12,500 are Catholics. The present incumbent, Most Rev. Primo Bianchi (b. 16 March, 1852), has occupied this see since 1893. According to the (1922) statistics the diocese numbers 10 secular and 7 regular priests and 46 churches and chapels.

E

Ecuador, REPUBLIC OF (cf. C. E., V-278c).—Owing to the unsettled boundary line, the area of the South American republic is uncertain, but it is estimated at 116,000 square miles. The last census was in 1903, when the population was 1,323,590; the latest estimate in 1915 gave a population of 2,000,000. The chief towns are Quito, the capital, with 70,000 inhabitants; Guayaquil, 93,851; Cuenca, 50,000; Riobamba, 18,000; Ambato, Loja, and Latacunga, each about 10,000; Bahia, 8000; Esmeraldas, 4000. There has been some discussion about selling the Galapagos islands (2400 square miles in area, population, about 400). These form the Archipelago of Galapagos, officially called "Colon."

EDUCATION.—In 1912 public instruction was improved. During the school year 1919-20 there were 1664 schools in operation in the Republic, 1359 of which were government schools, 168 municipal, and 137 private schools. The total attendance in 1919-20 was 92,512 (50,502 males and 42,010 females). The attendance at the government schools was 63,395; at the municipal schools, 16,055; in the private schools, 13,062. The total expenditure on elementary education in 1920 was £200,401, on secondary education, £90,817, and for the universities, £72,435, making a total of £313,707. The number of students at the universities was 744.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The staple produce of Ecuador is cocoa, the production in 1919 being 22,474 cwts. The coffee exports in 1919 were 3,729,461 pounds. The exports of rubber in 1919 were 886,373 pounds, but are now declining, on account of the destructive methods used in the collection of the product. The chief imports come from the United States, Great Britain, and Peru. According to a report made by the director of statistics in 1920, the 1918 trade included imports valued at £16,690,720 and exports at £27,449,536. There were in 1920, eight factories for cotton and woollen textiles, giving an annual production of 610,000 yards of cotton cloth and 100,000 yards of woollen cloth; also 13 sugar works, flour mills, breweries, and chocolate factories.

COMMUNICATIONS.—In 1918 the steam vessels entering the ports of Ecuador numbered 160 with a tonnage of 195,537; clearing 153 with a tonnage of 181,537. There is now discussion of a proposed line between Quito and the coast, which will render accessible a fertile area of some 1,000,000 acres. A concession of half of the land has been granted the railway by the Government. In 1917 Ecuador had 365 miles of railway and 4360 miles of telegraph.

The foreign debt on 31 December, 1919, amounted to £3,558,861 and the internal debt to £2,262,448, making a total of £5,821,309. About 70 per cent of the revenue comes from customs duties, 15 per cent from taxes on cocoa, real estate, white rum, and tobacco; 6 per cent from salt, and the rest from excise, rents, and postal rates.

GOVERNMENT.—The new constitution dates from 28 December, 1906. The executive power is vested in a president elected for four years. The legislative power is given to a Congress of two Houses, the first consisting of thirty-two senators, two for each province chosen for four years, and the second of forty-eight deputies, on the basis of one deputy for each 30,000 inhabitants, chosen for two years, both elected by adults who can read and write. From 1833 to 1908 Ecuador had twenty presidents. The President in 1912 was Gen. Leonidas Plaza Gutierrez, who had also been president from 1901-05; in 1916, Dr. Alfredo Baquerizo Moreno; in 1920, Señor Luis Tamajo.

Until October 20, 1918, most of the Indians were virtually in bondage and peonage, and debt servitude in its worst forms existed on the landed estates, but by a legislative decree on that date, peonage was abolished. Military service was made compulsory on 24 May, 1921. The boundary dispute with Colombia was settled by a treaty in 1917; that with Peru still remains unsettled.

RELIGION.—The State recognizes no religion but grants freedom of worship to all. For Catholic statistics see QUITO, ARCHDIOCESE OF, and its suffragans.

Edmonton, ARCHDIOCESE OF (EDMONTONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII-329d), in the Province of Alberta, Canada, was formerly known as the Diocese of St. Albert. It was divided first to form the vicariate of Saskatchewan, and again (30 November, 1920) to form the see of Calgary. At the same time the remainder of the diocese was made an archdiocese and the name changed to Edmonton. The present boundaries of the archdiocese are as follows: on the north the 55th degree of latitude, on the east the 110th degree of longitude, on the south the northern boundary of Township 30 in the province of Alberta, and on the west the Rocky Mountains. Rt. Rev. Emile J. Legal, Bishop of St. Albert, was made archbishop of Edmonton and filled the see until his death, 10 March, 1920. He was succeeded 7 September of the same year by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Henry Joseph O'Leary, who had been consecrated Bishop of Charlottetown 22 May, 1913. Archbishop O'Leary was born at Richibucto, Diocese of Chatham, 13 March, 1879, studied at the Seminary of Montreal and Canadian College, Rome, was ordained 21 September, 1901, and installed as Archbishop of Edmonton 8 October, 1920.

At the present time (1921) the archdiocese has a Catholic population of 55,000, attended by 93 regular and 37 secular priests. There are 61 parishes, 128 churches, 139 missions, 45 stations, 3 communities of men and 16 of women, with a total of 474 Sisters, 15 lay brothers, 14 boarding schools, 34 primary schools, 8 hospitals, and 2 orphan asylums. The Royal Alexandria Military Hospital permits the priests of the diocese to minister in it. During Archbishop O'Leary's incumbency a seminary, juniorate and college have been established, and a Catholic paper, "The Western Catholic," has been put into circulation. The Priests' League and Knights of Columbus are established. During the World War many of the French priests returned to fight for their native land, the laity enlisted in large numbers, and the Knights of Columbus took a prominent part in the C. A. H. Campaign.

Edmund, CONGREGATION OF SAINT (cf. C. E., V-293b).—The congregation is dedicated to St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, whose body is preserved incorrupt at Pontigny Abbey. There are about 100 priests. Before the laws of spoliation in France the mother-house was at Pontigny Abbey and the congregation also possessed the Abbey of Mont-St.-Michel and colleges at Laval, Chateau Gontier, and Sens. The mother-house is now at Hitchin, Herts, England. At St. Michael's College, Hitchin, there are 150 students. St. Michael's at Winooski, Vermont, U. S. A., has 200 students. There is an Apostolic School and novitiate at Swanton, Vermont, and the Fathers also have houses at Forsyth and St. Labre's Mission, Diocese of Great Falls, Montana, U. S. A. In the United States there are 15 priests, 4 scholastics and novices, 20 juvenists, and 2 lay brothers. Many of the French Fathers are working in France.

Education (cf. C. E., V-304).—As the education of one's children is a primary end of matrimony, giving a child a non-Catholic education is a sufficient reason for granting a matrimonial separation. When a matrimonial separation is granted for any cause, the education of the children is normally to be entrusted to the innocent party; if one of the parties is a non-Catholic, it is to be confided to the Catholic; however, in either case if the good of the children demand it, and their Catholic education is properly provided for, the ordinary may decide otherwise. Catholic parents or guardians who knowingly entrust their children to be educated or instructed in a non-Catholic religion incur excommunication lato sententia reserved to the ordinary, and are, furthermore, suspected of heresy.

Educational Association, CATHOLIC, of the United States, a voluntary organization of Catholic educators and other persons who have an interest in the welfare of Catholic education in the United States of America. The association was formed at St. Louis, Mo., in July, 1904. In May, 1898, representatives of the seminaries and Catholic colleges of the country met at St. Joseph's Seminary, Yonkers, N. Y., for a conference on the conditions and problems of Catholic higher education. A second meeting of these representatives was held at Philadelphia in September, 1899. The work of this conference lapsed until April, 1904, when representatives of several seminaries met and decided to revive the conference and to hold a meeting in St. Louis in July, 1904. An Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities of the United States was formed in Chicago, Ill., in April, 1899. Annual meetings were held and printed reports of the proceedings and addresses of each meeting have been issued. The Parish School Conference was formed in Chicago in July, 1902. A second meeting was held in Philadelphia, and at this meeting a committee was appointed and empowered to bring about a union of the various educational conferences on a basis that would preserve the purely voluntary character of the movement. This result was accomplished at St. Louis in 1904, when representatives of the three conferences met and decided to form the Catholic Educational Association of the United States. Rt. Rev. D. J. O'Connell, D. D., was elected first president general of the association, and Rev. Francis W. Howard was elected secretary general.

Annual meetings have been held since the year 1904. The meetings are held at the invitation and under the patronage of the bishop of the diocese in whose see the conference takes place. The following are the places and years in which meetings have been held: St. Louis, Mo., 1904; New York, N. Y., 1905; Cleveland, Ohio, 1906; Milwaukee, Wis., 1907; Cincinnati, Ohio, 1908; Boston, Mass., 1909; Detroit, Mich., 1910; Chicago, Ill., 1911; Pittsburgh, Pa., 1912; New Orleans, La., 1913; Atlantic City, N. J., 1914; St. Paul, Minn., 1915; Baltimore, Md., 1916; Buffalo, N. Y., 1917; San Francisco, Cal., 1918; St. Louis, Mo., 1919; New York, N. Y., 1920; Cincinnati, Ohio, 1921; Philadelphia, Pa., 1922. Printed reports of the proceedings and addresses have been issued each year containing valuable information and discussions relating to the important phases and current problems of Catholic education, and many pamphlets and reprints of papers read at the meetings have been circulated.

The principal purpose of the association is to provide a suitable means whereby representative Catholic educators of the country can meet in conference for the discussion of their problems. While the educational policy of Catholics has been formed to a very marked degree by the influence of these conferences, there is no binding force in the resolutions of the association, and it can have no legislative authority to enforce its recommendations. In the constitution the aims of the association are stated as follows: "The objection of this association shall be to keep in the minds of the people the necessity of religious instruction and training as the basis of morality and sound education; and to promote the principles and safeguard the interests of Catholic education in all its departments; to advance the general interests of Catholic education, to encourage the spirit of co-operation and mutual helpfulness among Catholic educators, to promote by study, conference, and discussion the thoroughness of Catholic educational work in the United States; to help the cause of Catholic education by the publication and circulation of such matters as shall further these ends."

The association is composed of three departments: the Seminary Department, the Department of Catholic Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Parish School Department. Each department regulates its own affairs, but the governing body of the association is the executive board, in which each department has equal representation. Each department may form sections to care for special phases of its own work. The general officers are elected annually at a general meeting of the association, and the executive board elects a secretary general, who is the executive officer of the board and of the association.

The association has had the good will and generous patronage of the bishops of the country, and many of its recommendations have been received with favor by them. Each year Catholic educators have been honored and encouraged by a paternal message from the Holy Father, and the Apostolic blessing. At the present time (1922) there are 26 members in the Seminary Department, 106 members in the Department of Catholic Colleges and Secondary Schools, and 2000 members in the Parish School Department. Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Shahan, D. D., is now the president general of the association. The general office of the association has been located at Columbus, Ohio, since 1904. In all the years of its existence, the association has defended the right of the Church to found and maintain her own schools, colleges, and seminaries; and through the medium afforded by the association Catholic educators have been able to promote in a substantial manner the thoroughness of Catholic educational work in the United States in all its departments.

FRANCIS W. HOWARD.

Eger (AGRIA, ERLAU, JAGER), ARCHDIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., I-230c), in Hungary. His Eminence Cardinal Samassa, who was appointed Archbishop of Agria 1873 and created a cardinal in 1905, died 20 August, 1912, and was succeeded by his coadjutor, Most Rev. Louis Szmrecsanyi, the present (1921) incumbent. Born in the diocese of Cassovia, 1851, and ordained 1873, Archbishop Szmrecsanyi was appointed to the titular see of Magydos 14 November, 1904, and made auxiliary to the Archbishop of Zagrab, and on 26 March, 1912, he was promoted to the titular see of Cyraa and made coadjutor. In 1910 there were in this territory 661,579 Latin Catholics, 83,619 Greek Catholics, 492 Orthodox Greeks, 455,205 Protestants, 69,279 Jews; 200 parishes, 348 secular and 51 regular clergy.

Egypt, an independent sovereign state in alliance with Great Britain. The total area of Egypt proper, including the Libyan Desert, the region between the Nile and the Red Sea and the Sinai Peninsula (excluding the Sudan), is about 350,000 square miles, but the civilized area includes only 12,226 square miles. Here the population is 12,750,918, or 1061 persons to the square mile. The principal towns with their populations according to the census of 1917 are: Cairo, 790,939; Alexandria, 444,617; Port Said, 91,090; Suez, 30,996; Damietta, 30,984. The natives numbered 12,512,257; English, 24,356; French, 21,270; Italians, 40,198; Turks, 30,796; Greeks, 56,735. Of the population in 1917, 4,044,324 were engaged in agriculture and fishing, 489,296 in industries, 280,561 in commerce, 142,386 in professional pursuits, 2,579,577 in domestic work, and 4,302,259 in unproductive or unknown occupations.

RELIGION.—In 1917 the population consisted of 11,653,148 Moslems, 854,773 Orthodox, 59,581 Jews. Of the Christians 47,481 were Protestants, 107,687 Catholics, and 14,416 of various Christian creeds. Thus the Moslems formed 91.43% of the community, and the Christians 8.03%. The "Egyptian Almanac" for 1917 gives the following data concerning the Coptic Orthodox Community: "The head is the Patriarch, Kyrillos V, who lives in Cairo and is assisted by twelve Mutrans and two bishops. There are numerous Coptic convents, among the most important being Deir el Azra, Deir Amba Samuel, Deir Antonius, Deir Amba, Deir el Azra, Deir el Surian, Deir Amba Bishoi, Deir Makarios el Misri, all for men. There are five convents for women in Cairo. The Coptic churches in Egypt number about 600, some of them being over 1000 years old. The high Court of the Community, or Meglis el Milli el Ala, is presided over by the Patriarch and eight others elected by the Community. The Meglis was instituted by Decree of 14 May, 1883, and was modified by Law No. 3 of 1912. It has branches in all the Mutrianias and bishoprics. There are two other courts: a court which looks into the personal complaints of the clergy, and an Assembly (El Magma), whose members consist of the Mutrans and certain of the higher clergy to amend the existing laws and to initiate fresh legislation. Ecclesiastical education is given in three special schools, two of which (Cairo and Alexandria) are for the training of young men for the priesthood, and the third for arifs, or blind young men who desire to devote themselves to the Church."

EDUCATION.—The lack of education among the inhabitants is revealed in the illiteracy statistics of 1917, the proportion of native Egyptians able to read and to write being, males 120 per 1000, females 18 per 1000. The effects of the Government to correct this state of affairs is seen in the increase in the budget of the Ministry of Education from £E. 685,203 in 1919-20 to £E. 1,013,503 in 1920-21. Even thus the budget still amounts to only 2 per cent of the State budget, and further liberal increases are necessary in order to cope with the growing educational demands. In 1921 there were under the management of the Ministry of Education 165 vernacular schools and 61 Europeanized schools with a total attendance of 40,423; under its inspection 3790 vernacular schools and 182 Europeanized schools, with a total attendance of 279,310 (41,711 girls). In 1920 there were 53 provincial council schools and 60 private schools for 18,174 primary pupils; the total attendance in the Government primary schools was 10,749. The provincial councils maintain 517 elementary schools, and also gave grants-in-aid in 1920 to 2714 elementary schools (maktabs under inspections). There are 8 Government secondary schools and 32 private secondary schools, the latter under the inspection of the Ministry of Education and varying greatly in efficiency. Progress is being made toward the establishment of a state university at Cairo. Under other Government departments are the school of law (353 students), the military school (90 cadets), the veterinary school (19 students), the higher school of agriculture (99 students), the intermediate school of agriculture (108 students), the police school (95 cadets), and 2 reformatories.

GOVERNMENT.—The present status of Egypt (1922) is that of a sovereign state in alliance with Great Britain. To Great Britain are reserved for its own discretion the following matters: (1) Security of British imperial communications in Egypt; (2) defence of Egypt against all foreign aggression or interference, direct or indirect; (3) protection of foreign interests and foreign communities in Egypt. The British protectorate, which was established in 1914, has been terminated, and the country is left free to work out such national institutions as may be suited to the aspirations of her people. There is uncertainty about the future Legislative Assembly of Egypt. The Law of 1883 created a Legislative Council, a General Assembly, and Provincial Councils, which were consultative rather than legislative. In 1913 the first two were amalgamated into a new body called the Legislative Assembly. The Government, however, was not bound by the resolutions of the Assembly, and moreover, never called the Assembly after 1913.

The Capitulations, i. e., concessions or extra-territorial rights secured by resident foreigners from the Sultans of Turkey, have presented a hard problem to the Egyptians. The multiplicity of jurisdictions arising out of them, and the facilities which they give to men of uncertain nationality to escape the local jurisdiction, greatly complicate the problem of law and order, while the exemption of foreigners from direct taxation, other than land and house tax, cripples the Government in raising revenue, since in practice it is impossible to impose on Egyptians taxes from which foreigners are exempt. The capitulations of Germany and Austria were terminated by the recent Treaties of Versailles and St. Germain; those of Greece by an agreement signed with Great Britain at Athens in 1920.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—The cultivable area of Egypt proper was estimated, in 1919, at 7,691,793 feddans (1 feddan=1.038 acres), and of this 2,829,215 were uncultivated for want of reclamation. Forced labor (corvée) has been abolished, but the inhabitants may be called out to guard or to repair the Nile banks in flood time. The agricultural population (Fellahin) forms about 62 per cent of the whole. A large proportion of them are land-holders on a small scale, and the others are laborers, the relation between employer and employee being hereditary. The economic prosperity of Egypt is regulated by the demand for the finer qualities of cotton, and to avoid any recurrence of the financial depression that invariably follows when the demand for the product ceases, the Government took steps to encourage the production of foodstuffs and to restrict the cotton area to one-third of each holding. In 1919 the area and production of cotton was 1,574,000 jeddans and 5,572,000 qantars (1 qantar = 99.05 lbs.). The area under cotton in 1920 was 1,827,868 jeddans; the area under wheat, 1,146,715 jeddans. In 1919 the sugar exported amounted to 12,689 tons, valued at £ F. 654,656, and the cotton exported to 6,708,906 qantars, valued at £ E. 65,441,901. The foreign trade in Egypt in 1920 was valued at $914,233,898, an increase of $298,910,281, or of 48 per cent over 1919. The increase, however, is due largely to advanced prices rather than to increased quantities. The imports in 1920 were valued at $507,701,557. The United Kingdom comes first in the amount of trade with Egypt, the United States a close second. In 1920 the mineral production included 110,000 tons of phosphate; in 1918 232,000 metric tons of petroleum and 27,000 tons of iron ore.

In March, 1920, there were (exclusive of sidings) 2330 miles of rails worked by the State and 721 miles of rails of agricultural light railways owned by private companies. In May, 1918, Cairo was connected by railway with the Palestine system by the completion of a swing-bridge over the Suez Canal at Kantara. The working expense of the railways represents an average of about 72 per cent of the gross receipts. By a decree of 18 October, 1916, the monetary unit of Egypt was made the gold Egyptian pound of 100 piastres. On 1 April, 1920, the debt of Egypt amounted to £93,198,140 sterling. Work is proceeding on the Blue Nile Weir, but is suspended on the White Nile Dam, which was begun in 1914, forty miles south of Khartum. The raising of the Assuan Dam was completed in 1912. The dam was raised sixteen feet and the thickness increased about an equal amount. The capacity of the dam is increased from 1,000,000,000 cubic meters to 2,423,000,000 cubic meters, its depth from 65 feet to 88 feet, and the extent of the river affected from 140 miles to 185 miles.

RECENT HISTORY.—Egypt declared war on Germany in August, 1914, and with the entrance of Turkey into the war, the English replaced the Turkish suzerainty by a protectorate placed over the country. During the struggle the borders of Egypt, especially around the Suez Canal, were the scene of several military conflicts. In January, 1916, the Sennusi along the western border involved the defenders of Egypt in several minor military engagements near Mersa-Matruh and near Barani. In March of that year the British captured Sollum, which the Arabs had held since their invasion of Egypt in 1915, organized the conquered province into a separate administrative area and named it the Western Governate. On the eastern frontier, around the Canal, the Turkish armies under German leadership were particularly active, engaging in several encounters near Tussum (2 February, 1915), and at Quatia Oases (23 April, 1916). At Kati (4 August, 1916) the British troops, composed of Australians and New Zealanders, under Sir Archibald Murray, succeeded in inflicting a decisive defeat on the Turks. The year 1918 witnessed the great outbreak of the revolutionary movement which had been simmering in Egypt for several years. Throughout the war Egypt was the training-ground of the British territorial regiments, the Indian, Australian, and New Zealand troops.

"Egypt for the Egyptians" became the rallying cry even before the war, which, on account of the obnoxious protectorate, enhanced the movement against British dominion. The movement spread to the Bedouins of the desert, who joined the townsfolk and fellahan in making trouble for the British. The Egyptians complained of the cruel treatment of native soldiers, the prohibition of the meetings of the Legislature during the war, harsh censorship of newspapers and political discussion in the state schools, and the suppression of nationalistic activities. They resented the increasing number of British officials in the Egyptian Government, disliked the idea of the political subordination of the Moslem to Christian rule, as contrary to the spirit of Islam, and in view of the scant consideration received after the war, felt that their nation had made too many sacrifices during the struggle. Their delegates decided to present their case to the Peace Conference at Versailles, and after several months of delay caused by their arrest and deportation by the British officials were not permitted to state their case at all. In the meantime the increasing disorders in Egypt caused the British Government to send General Allenby as High Commissioner to Egypt with full military and civil powers to restore order. He declared promptly that the policy of Great Britain was to develop the autonomy of Egypt under British protection. A mission was sent to the country in 1920 under the presidency of Lord Milner to formulate plans for the practical application of this policy. On 28 February, 1922, an announcement was made, declaring the British protectorate in Egypt at an end, and on 16 March Egypt was declared to be a constitutional monarchy with the Sultan Ahmed Fuad Pasha as King.

CATHOLIC HISTORY.—In 1921 Mgr. Andrea Cassulo, titular Archbishop of Leontopolis, was appointed Apostolic Delegate to succeed Mgr. Birante. There are two vicariates apostolic in Egypt for Catholics of the Latin Rite, the Vicariate of the Delta of the Nile (q.v.) and the Vicariate of Egypt, erected in 1839, and comprising at the present time Upper Egypt and the mission of Lower Egypt. In 1920 it contained 61,117 Catholics of the Latin Rite and 17,416 of other rites, 1352 of whom were served by missionaries of the Latin Rite. There were 94 Latin priests, 245 Brothers, 469 Sisters, 17 parishes, 8 succursal parishes, 27 residential stations, 55 churches, and 27 chapels.

For statistics of the Uniat Coptic Church see ALEXANDRIA, PATRIARCHATE OF; ALEXANDRIA, DIOCESE OF; HERMOPOLIS, DIOCESE OF; THEBES, DIOCESE OF.

Eichstätt (EYSTADIUM), DIOCESE OF (EYSTEL-LENSIS or AYSTELLENSIS; cf. C. E., V-364c), in Bavaria, lies north of the Danube and is suffragan to Bamberg. The diocese comprises about 200,000 Catholics. There are 214 parishes, 488 churches, 10 mission stations, 1 abbey and 8 monasteries for men and 1 abbey and 58 monasteries for women, with 816 Sisters. The secular priests number 375, regulars 43, of whom 22 are in monasteries. There is 1 seminary at Eichstätt, which has a philosophico-theological academy with 10 professors and 66 students. In the diocese there are 2 Latin high schools (Vollgymnasium with 9 years' course), 2 high schools (Halbgymnasium with 6 years' course), 5 scientific high schools (Realschulen, 150 to 250 students; one has over 350 students), 1 normal school (6 years' course, 112 students), 1 normal school for girls conducted by the English Ladies (6 years' course, 96 students). All these schools receive support from the Government. In every parish there are from 1 to 3 common elementary schools with 50 to 70 pupils. In the cities and in outlying districts throughout the diocese there are 30-40 hospitals and 16 day nurseries.

The following societies exist among the clergy: 1 diocesan union, 4 Marian Congregations, 1 scientific association for all Bavaria. Among the laity there is an association for Catholic workmen in every city, 1 Catholic Men's Association, 8 Journeymen's Associations, 30 boys' clubs. Parents' associations for the support of Christian schools have been established in many places. Twelve Catholic newspapers and periodicals are printed in the diocese. Since 1907, 9 churches were built and many were enlarged and repaired, 8 parishes were founded, 4 hospitals erected, and 10 convents were established.

The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Leo de Mergel, O. S. B., b. at Rohrbach, Bavaria, 9 December, 1847, ordained 29 March, 1873, made president general of the Bavarian Benedictine Congregation, appointed to the see of Eichstätt, 28 October, 1905, and consecrated 27 December following.

Einsiedeln, Abbey of (cf. C. E., V-367b), a Benedictine monastery in the Canton of Schusyz, Switzerland. Eighteen of the priests care for 9 parishes which are incorporated in the monastery, 14 are spiritual fathers and confessors at various convents and institutions, 8 are custodians of the monastery property, while those who live in the monastery are engaged in teaching. Connected with the monastery there is a theological school for the Benedictines, also a gymnasium with a lyceum (8 classes), attended by 320 students, 250 of whom are boarders. Lately an agricultural school has been established. The present abbot, Rt. Rev. Thomas Bossart, b. at Altshofen, near Lucerne, 16 September, 1858, was ordained 20 April, 1884, elected 30 May, 1905, blessed 11 July, 1905, and published 11 December following.

Election (cf. C. E., V-374).—If the right of election belongs to a college, and the president neglects to notify more than one-third of the electors, the election is thereby invalid, unless those who were neglected have taken part in it. Convocation of the electors before the vacancy of an office which is to be held for life is null in canon law. Voting by letter or by proxy is forbidden, unless there is a private law authorizing this procedure. Voting must be free, secret, and unconditioned; no one can vote for himself validly. After each scrutiny or each session, if more than one ballot has been taken, the votes must be burned. The party elected must signify his acceptance or refusal within eight days after receiving notification of the result, otherwise the election is null; formerly the period allowed was one month. Unless common law or a private statute expressly declares otherwise, the decision of a collegiate body is to be obtained as follows in order to have the force of law: when the invalid ballots have been eliminated an absolute majority of the votes decides the election; if two polls have failed to secure an absolute majority, a relative majority suffices at the third poll; if that has resulted in a tie, the presiding officer may cast a deciding vote; if he should be unwilling to do so, the candidate among those who have obtained the highest vote and who is senior in orders, or by first profession, or by age, is selected.

The election of the mother superior of a monastery of nuns (moniales) is presided over by the local ordinary or his delegate with two assistants to count the votes, who must remain outside of the enclosure. If the nuns are subject to regulars, the regular superior presides; however, in this case timely notice should be sent to the ordinary, so that, if he wishes, he may assist personally or by proxy with the regular superior, and, if he assists, preside. The ordinary confessors of the nuns may not act as the assistants referred to above. In case of the election of a mother general of a congregation the local ordinary of the place of election is to preside personally or by proxy, and may confirm or rescind the election as he thinks proper if the congregation is diocesan.

Elizabeth, Sisters of Saint (cf. C. E., V-388b).—To facilitate its management the congregation was divided into 10 provinces by resolutions of the general chapter, 14 November, 1898. The principal province has its mother-house and novitiate at Breslau. Other provincial houses with provinces are: Königsberg (East and West Prussia); Halle (Saxony and Thuringia); Stockholm (Sweden and Norway); Christiania (Norway and Denmark); Rome (Italy); Berlin (Brandenburg-Pomerania); Reinbek (Schleswig-Holstein); Posen (Gnesen-Posen); Neisse (Upper Silesia). The present superior general is Mother Mercedes Rother, appointed 1 September, 1920. The congregation has 403 settlements and 3456 members. Besides their original task of nursing the sick, the Sisters have other spheres of activity, listed in the following statistical record.

In 1920 they were in charge of 44 hospitals and infirmaries with 1006 patients; 39 orphan asylums and houses of refuge with 1836 inmates; 1 asylum caring for 23 mentally deficient girls; 20 homes accommodating 1442 working women; 18 houses for communicants with 1087 wards; 24 pump-rooms and convalescent houses caring for 2237; 213 kindergartens with 8631 children; 44 schools for house-keeping and needle-work with 1847 pupils; 61 associations of maid-servants and working women with 3060 members; 10 crèches with 359 infants; 11 day nurseries with 780 nursing infants; 4 milk kitchens caring for 717 nursing infants; 30 public kitchens distributing 156,048 meals; 15 primary schools with 3709 pupils; 8 boys' lunch rooms, and homes for retired working men and priests, accommodating 437. The Sisters have charge of public schools only in the mission stations. Of the 131,835 sick people cared for in 1920, 74,062 were nursed in their own dwellings, 57,773 in 84 infirmaries and 5 military hospitals. This required 1,397,685 days of nursing and 309,282 night-watches. Dispensary help was given to 257,496 persons. There were 587,993 meals given to the poor and poor sick.

El Paso, Diocese of (ELPASENSIS), in Texas, U. S. A., suffragan of Santa Fé, which was erected by Decree of 3 March, 1914, covers an area of 68,394 sq. miles, comprising the counties of El Paso, Culberson, Hudspeth, Presidio, Jeff-Davis, Reeves, Brewster, Terrel, Pecos, Crane, Ward, Loving, Winkler, Ector, Andrews and Gaines in the State of Texas, and the counties of Grant, Luna, Dona Ana, Otero, Eddy, and a part of Sierra and Lea in the State of New Mexico.

The material condition of the diocese is somewhat difficult, owing to the moderate fortune of the Catholic Mexicans. The moral condition is generally good, and greater progress is anticipated for the future. The number of priests has increased, and their growth in holiness of life gives confidence of a bright future. During the past five years there have been erected more than 45 churches and chapels, 10 parochial schools, and 2 orphanages, without increasing the diocesan debt, due to the generosity of the people, who are generally poor. Five years ago there were only 13 canonically erected parishes; there are now (1922) 39 parishes, 39 churches, 84 missions, and about 25 mission stations, 28 secular and 36 regular priests; 15 elementary schools with 4535 pupils, 3 academies, 1 training school for nurses, 2 industrial schools, 2 orphanages, and 1 day nursery; about ten of the public institutions admit the ministry of the priests. The religious communities represented in the diocese are: men, 6 (Jesuit and Franciscan Fathers); women, 9, with 110 nuns in the various communities, which are Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, Sisters of Loretto, Sisters Servants of the Sacred Heart of the Poor, Sisters of the Incarnate Word of San Antonio, Texas, Sisters of the Precious Blood, Sisters of St. Joseph, and Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, all in charge of the various institutions in the diocese. There are two houses of novices, one for the Jesuits, and the other in Silver City for the Sisters of St. Joseph.

The Catholic population in the confines of the diocese is 112,504, Spanish and English-speaking, and they are administered at present (1922) by Rt. Rev. Anthony Joseph Schuler, S.J., first Bishop of El Paso, b. 20 September, 1869, in the diocese of Erie, ordained 27 June, 1901, rector of the Sacred Heart Church in Denver, appointed bishop 17 June, 1915, consecrated 28 October, 1915, succeeding Rt. Rev. John J. Brown, preconized Bishop of El Paso 22 January, 1915, resigned the same year. Events of special importance in the diocese since 1915 are: the visit ad limina of the bishop, the dedication of the new cathedral, and the general building up of the diocese. One periodical, "La Regista catolica," is published in the diocese.

Elphin, DIOCESE OF (ELPHINENSIS; cf. C. E., V-394c), in Connaught, Ireland, includes nearly the whole of the county of Roscommon, and a large portion of Sligo and Galway, with cathedral church and residence at Sligo. Bishop John Clancy, b. 23 December, 1856, d. 19 October, 1912, was succeeded by Most. Rev. Bernard Coyne, b. 1854, educated at Summerhill and Maynooth, ordained priest 1879, rector of Boyle 1890, canon theologian of Elphin 1896, vicar general 1910, consecrated Bishop of Elphin, 30 March, 1913. In the census of 1911 the total population numbered 122,128, of whom 115,262 Catholics and 6866 were non-Catholics. There are at present (1922) 33 parishes, 101 secular and 4 regular priests, 86 churches, 14 chapels, 10 convents, 4 monasteries, 1 college, 3 intermediate schools. Societies of St. Vincent de Paul are organized throughout the diocese.

Emesa (or Hama), DIOCESE OF (EMESENSIS), a residential see for the Greek-Melchite and Syrian Rites. It is an archdiocese of the Greek-Melchites with the united title of Hama or Apama (Apamenensis), and the archbishop resides at Yabrud, by which name the diocese is sometimes called. The present incumbent is Most Rev. Flavian Kfoury, born in Lebanon, served as Abbot General of the Basilians of the Baladite Congregation, and appointed bishop 21 November, 1901. The 1920 statistics credit this diocese with approximately 7230 Catholics of the Greek-Melchite Rite, 7000 of other rites, 10,000 Schismatics, and 180,000 Mohammedans; 12 secular and 4 regular clergy, 12 churches, and 8 schools with 215 pupils.

It is also an archdiocese for the Syrian Rite, with the united titles of Hama and Nebek. At present (1922) it is administered by a patriarchal vicar, Rt. Rev. Theophilus Joseph Giorgi, titular Bishop of Arethusa. There are 2200 Catholics of this Rite, 4 secular priests, and 5 churches or chapels. Emesa is a titular see for the Latin and Maronite Rites; the Latin titular is Most Rev.

Alberto Vassallo di Torre Grossa, appointed 3 December, 1913, Internuncio to Argentina, residing in Buenos-Aires. The Maronite titular is Rt. Rev. Joseph Sakr, consecrated 11 February, 1911, patriarchal vicar at Bikorka.

Emigration Societies.—An act to limit immigration of aliens into the United States was passed 19 May, 1921, by which the number of aliens of any nationality who might be admitted during any fiscal year should be limited to 3 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as shown by the census of 1910. This was the culmination of the agitation for restrictive immigration that had been going on for the previous decade. The law was to continue in force until 20 June, 1922, but it was further extended for two years from that date. This, with the results of the great World War, during which period the old time immigration activities almost ceased, seriously impaired the traditional work of the older emigrant aid societies. The large number of Italians and Polish immigrants, however, were well cared for by their respective societies. In 1921 the National Catholic Welfare Council established a Bureau of Immigration at New York and sent a commissioner abroad to develop the aspect of the work which was thus taken up on an international scope.

Emmet, THOMAS ADDIS, physician and writer, b. 29 May, 1828, at the University of Virginia; d. in New York, 1 March, 1919. He was the son of John Patten Emmet, and the grandson of the Thomas Addis Emmet, physician, patriot and exile, and brother of Robert Emmet. His mother was Mary Byrd Farley Tucker. He was educated in St. Thomas Hall, Flushing, L. I., and in the University of Virginia and received his degrees of M. D. and LL. D. in Jefferson, Pa., in the year 1862. He was the president of various medical societies and of the Irish Federation of America. The medical body of New York regarded Dr. Emmet as one of their chief glories, though the method he advocated in obstetrics was for a long time a subject of severe criticism, but he lived to enjoy his complete vindication. He was so intense in his Irish patriotism that he found great difficulty in obtaining a publisher for "The Irish Under English Rule." He became a convert to the Faith by listening to a single sermon of a Redemptorist missionary who was explaining the necessity of submitting one's intelligence to the authority of the Divine Teacher in order that proper homage might be made by that supreme faculty to the Creator. He was so thoroughly acquainted with the doctrines of the Faith that he needed no instruction, having lived all his life with Catholics and having married a Catholic. He was baptized a quarter of an hour after hearing the sermon which swept away the only difficulty that he had about the Faith. His "Incidents of My Life" was published in 1911. His last literary work was the life of his two great ancestors, Thomas Addis and Robert Emmet.

England (cf. C. E., V-431b).—The area of England in statute acres (land and inland water) in 1921 was 32,559,868 acres, of which 594,185 were included in the county boroughs and 31,965,683 in administrative counties. In 1921 the population of England was 35,678,530, of whom 16,984,087 were males, and 18,694,443 were females. The increase in the period between 1911 and 1921 was 4.8%. In 1921 Greater London had an acreage of 443,449 statute acres; of this, 74,850 acres belonged to the administrative county and City of London;

368,599 acres to the outer ring. The population of the administrative county and city was 4,483,249; of the outer ring, 2,992,919, a total of 7,476,168. The other large cities with their respective populations are: Birmingham 919,438; Liverpool 803,118; Manchester 730,551; Sheffield 490,724; Leeds 458,320. Of these, Birmingham, Manchester, and Sheffield made the greatest gains in population since 1911. Blackpool made a gain of 64%, its population in 1921 being 99,640. The movement of the population of England and Wales is seen in the following statistics:

Year	Estimated Population	Total Births	Illegitimate Births	Deaths	Marriages
1910	35,791,902	896,962	36,635	483,247	267,721
1920	37,609,600	957,994	44,267	466,213	379,658

In 1919 the total immigration was 201,504, compared with 22,824 the year before; the total emigration in 1918, was 25,970; in 1919, 193,601; in 1920, 283,705. The destinations of British subjects leaving the United Kingdom for non-European countries in 1920 were mainly the United States (90,429), British North America (134,079), Australia (49,357), British South Africa (20,019), India and Ceylon (19,326).

EDUCATION.—The war had important and far-reaching effects on the educational institutions and educational system of Great Britain, and has also led to important measures for the organization and development of educational methods. It was estimated that 500,000 school children under fourteen were employed before the war; 600,000 others were estimated to have withdrawn from school during the first three years of the war. Attendance at colleges fell off, compulsory school attendance laws were suspended, and many school buildings were taken over for military purposes. Reorganization was urgently needed. The matter was taken over by the Reconstruction Committee, later the Reconstruction Ministry, which introduced a Bill in May, 1918, requiring children up to fourteen years of age to give full time to school education and requiring compulsory part-time education for children between fourteen and eighteen. According to the provisions of this Education Act of 1918, elementary and secondary education in England and Wales is under the control of the Board of Education. The local administration is vested in the councils of counties, of county boroughs, of non-county boroughs with a population of over 10,000, and of urban districts with a population of over 20,000. The local authorities maintain all public schools and control the expenditure necessary for the purpose. "Non-provided" schools simply furnish the building, but must comply with the directions for secular instruction. Education funds are derived from State grants (to the extent of at least half the net expenditure recognized by the Board of Education), local rates, etc.; the education authorities have borrowing powers. Elementary education is free and compulsory for those between the ages of five and fourteen, which may be extended to fifteen. All children under the age of eighteen must attend a continuation school for 320 hours in the year, unless they have received full time education up to the age of sixteen. The student's employment may be suspended during the day on which attendance is necessary at these schools. No child under twelve years of age may be employed, and children over that age may be employed on school days only after school-hours and before 8 p. m. In schools provided by them the local authorities must not pay for religious instruction; in schools not provided by them, they can neither forbid nor impose religious instruction.

In 1919 the elementary schools in England and Wales numbered 21,473, and the attendance was 7,100,000. In 1920 there were 12,266 voluntary schools for ordinary public elementary education with 2,730,000 pupils, and 8705 council schools with 4,355,000 pupils; total ordinary elementary schools, 20,971 with 7,085,000 pupils. The average attendance at these schools in 1918-19 was 5,108,000 and the number of teachers 168,000. The higher elementary schools numbered 44 with 11,550 registered pupils. Of the special schools 57 were for the blind (3200 pupils), 50 for the deaf (4600 pupils), 198 for the mentally defective (15,500 pupils), 162 for physically defective children (11,400), and 53 were "certified efficient" schools.

In 1917-18 1061 recognized secondary schools (with 238,314 full-time pupils) were on the grant list; in addition there were 134 other secondary schools with about 26,000 pupils; 10 preparatory schools with 1140 pupils, and a number of technical institutions, art schools, nautical schools, and part-time schools. Of the continuation schools, 56 received grants in 1918-19, and the attendance was 21,628. There are also provisions for nursery schools, holiday and school camps, playing fields, physical training, and the medical inspection of places of higher education. On 31 March, 1919, there were 59 poor-law schools, and in 1920, 87 training colleges for teachers for elementary schools in England with accommodation for 13,542 students. The following table taken from the Statesman's Year Book (1921) shows the number of students and professors at the Universities of England, 1920-21:

Universities	Professors, etc.	Students
Oxford	100	4200
Cambridge	160	4360
Durham	174	1250
London	1250	7000
Manchester	265	3000
Birmingham	187	1880
Liverpool	224	2540
Leeds	250	1930
Sheffield	169	3100
Bristol	210	1000
Total	2989	30,260

The members of the Board of Education are: a president appointed by the Crown, the lord president of the privy council, the principal secretaries of State, the first commissioner of the treasury, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The president or secretary may sit in Parliament.

GOVERNMENT.—The supreme power of the British Empire is vested in Parliament, which is summoned by the sovereign, by advice of the Privy Council, at least twenty days before its assembling. Under the Parliamentary Act of 1911, its duration is limited to five years, but during the war it was extended to eight years. It consists of a House of Lords and a House of Commons. To the House of Lords belong the peers of the realm, who hold their seats by hereditary right, or by creation of the sovereign, or by virtue of office (Law Lords), or by election for duration of Parliament (Scottish peers), or by election for life (Irish peers). In 1920 the voting strength of this house was 700. The House of Commons consists of members representing county, borough, and university constituencies in the three divisions of the United Kingdom. English or Scottish peers are ineligible for the House of Commons, but Irish peers can be admitted. Under the Parliament (Qualification of Women) Act, 1918, women are also eligible, and the first woman took her seat in December, 1919. Under the Parliament Act of 1911, all money Bills passed by the House of Commons, may become law, even without the consent of the House of Lords, and any Bill introduced by the House of Commons and passed three times may become law despite the opposition of the House of Lords. According to the Act of August, 1911, members of the House of Commons, hitherto receiving no salary for their services, now are paid.

The Representation of the People Act, 1918, extended the franchise so that in 1920 over one-half of the population (21,778,000) qualified for registration, including 8,856,000 women. For every 70,000 of the population, a member is elected to the House of Commons, which now has a total membership of 707. The suffrage is given to all male electors twenty-one years of age or over, and to women electors of thirty years of age or over. There is also the university franchise to be qualified, for which a man must be twenty-one and a woman thirty, and each must have taken a degree, or in the case of a woman, have fulfilled the conditions which would entitle a man to a degree.

The unity of the Cabinet is expressed by the Prime Minister, although it is but a short time (since January, 1906), that the existence of the Prime Minister has been formally recognized, and special precedence accorded him. He is usually the leader of his party, and the cabinet members chosen by him are chosen for their general political importance, although each is responsible for the conduct of some department of the State, and ready to answer any questions or give any information on any point of its administration, in the House of Commons and the House of Lords. A cabinet defeated on an actual vote of the House of Commons must resign or persuade the king to dissolve Parliament. With the approval of the sovereign the Prime Minister also nominates the Privy Council, which includes the following classes: All cabinet ministers, ex-cabinet ministers, diplomatic corps, honorary members, as princes and bishops, learned and scientific men, the Lord Chancellor, Master of the Rolls, Lord Chief Justice, Judges of the Supreme Court, and Judge Advocate General. From it have developed the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries, also the Board of Trade, and the Board of Education. The Privy Council possesses also judicial functions, being the Final Court of Appeals for the Colonies, India, and the Ecclesiastical Courts of the country. Its number is unlimited, at present about 300, but at its meeting only a few members are present, usually members of the Government. The Ministry of Health, newly organized in 1919, has charge of the Poor Laws, the Unemployed Workingmen's Act, the Old Age Pensions Act, and sanitary legislation; the National Treasury is under a Commission, consisting of the First Lord of the Treasury, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and three Lords Commissioners.

Since January, 1918, the Board of Trade has been organized in two main divisions: the Department of Commerce and Industry and the Department of Public Service and Administration. The Ministry of Labor, created under the Act of 1916, combines the powers and duties of the Board of Trade under the Conciliation Act (1896), the Labor Exchange Act (1909), the Trade Board Act (1909), the National Insurance Unemployment Acts (1911-18), and Part I of the Ministry of Munitions of War Act (1915). In 1919 the Board of Agriculture was reorganized into five departments: Intelligence, Land and Supplies, Finance and Economics, Fisheries, and Welsh. The first three form the Minister's Administrative Council. The Home Office has five secretaries: the Home Secretary, the Foreign Secretary, the Secretary for War, the Secretary for the Colonies, and the Secretary for India, but legally they all share the same office, and each can perform the duties of the others. There must always be one secretary in the metropolis, and all sit in the cabinet. The Charity Commissioners assist in carrying out the War Charity Act (1916), and the Blind Persons Act (1920). A Ministry of Pensions was constituted in 1916 to administer the pensions and grants awarded for disablement sustained in war service. In 1917 it took over from the statutory committee the direct administration of medical treatment. In 1919 a Ministry of Transport was set up to improve the means of locomotion and transport.

Under the National Insurance Acts (1911 to 1920), provision is made for compulsory insurance against loss of health, for the prevention and cure of sickness, and for compulsory insurance against unemployment. The National Health Insurance Act is administered by the Ministry of Health in England and Wales, and concerns all persons between the ages of sixteen and seventy, employed by the time or piece, and earning less than £250 a year, whether or not they are British subjects. In 1919 fifteen million and a half workers were insured; the total income in 1918-19 was about £30,500,000 (including £8,500,000 contributed by the state), and the total expenditure, £20,250,000. The Unemployment Act is administered by the Board of Trade through Employment Exchanges, Trade Unions, and Friendly Societies. By the Unemployment Acts of 1920 and 1921 all persons insured under the National Insurance Acts except agricultural workers, domestics, and outworkers, are compulsory insured against unemployment. About twelve million persons were insured under these Acts (8,500,000 men and 3,500,000 women). The total income (1918-19) was £4,600,000 (including £1,100,000 from state funds); total expenditure, £600,000. Under the Old Age Pensions Acts (1908-19) there were in 1919, 920,198 pensions payable in the United Kingdom; the estimated cost in 1920-21 was £25,969,000. The Poor Law, which relieves paupers in their homes, or in the workhouses, or poorhouses, is administered by the local government board through boards of guardians. A board of guardians is elected for each of the 653 poor law unions. The amount expended in 1917-18 in England and Wales was £18,423,883.

For purposes of local government, England is divided into sixty-two administrative counties, including the county of London. Each county is governed by justices, and a popularly elected council, aided by a prescribed number of aldermen, elected for six years. The county councillors, elected for three years, are also the local educational authorities. The counties, with the exception of the County of London, are subdivided into county districts, which are either urban or rural; each has a district council. In each civil parish in a rural district there is a parish meeting, or if the town has over 300 inhabitants, a parish council.

In all the great towns local business is administered by a municipal corporation, which derives its authority from charters granted by the Crown. There are three kinds of boroughs: county boroughs, quarter session boroughs, and small boroughs of special and ancient jurisdiction. The first are out of the jurisdiction of the county councils, but all have a mayor, aldermen, and burgesses. The ecclesiastical parish is now of slight importance in the sphere of local government. The National Assembly of the Church of England Act, however, conferred increased privileges on the laity and provided for the institution of a Parochial Church Council, a Parochial Church meeting, and a National Assembly of the Church of England.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE WAR.—During the World War the Privy Council and Parliament both played an important part in the conduct of affairs. The whole administration was deeply affected. Acts of Parliament were numerous, as well as Royal Proclamations and Orders in Council. Legislative action was necessary not only to secure success in the field and on the seas, but also to preserve a national life immune from social and economic disturbance. New Duties were imposed on many old established departments, and the policy of other departments considerably affected. A temporary moratorium was authorized; a Currency and Bank Notes Act, providing for the issue of paper bank notes, was passed; also Acts for the control of foreign trade, the defense of the realm, trading with the enemy, hoarding of supplies, the establishment of prize courts, an increase of the army to one million men, a new system of registration; the restriction of the sale of liquor, compulsory military service, and the creation of new ministries.

In the meantime there was a remarkable series of developments in the British cabinet and ministry, involving not only many changes of personnel, but also fundamental changes in the constitution of the cabinet and its relation to Parliament. At the outbreak of the war two members of the cabinet and one under-secretary resigned because of their objections to taking an active part in the war. In February, 1915, action was taken which emphasized the control of the cabinet over the proceedings of Parliament, for the government proposed taking the entire time of the House of Commons for the discussion of its measures, formally taking away from the English Parliament the so-called "Parliamentary initiative." The new cabinet was reorganized into the new Coalition Cabinet, a total of twenty-three members—something new in English history. This, however, was not satisfactory, and so there came into existence the War Cabinet of five members, which took over the active functions of the old War Committee, and which was the superior deciding body over the whole group of ministers. The constitution of the "Imperial War Cabinet" may be taken as a formal recognition of the equality of status between the various parts of the British Empire. In July, 1918, the prime minister of each dominion was given the right to maintain a cabinet minister, either as a resident or as a visitor to London, to represent him at the meetings of the cabinet held between the plenary sessions. In 1919 the "Standing Committee of Home Affairs" (established in 1918 to discuss questions of imperial policy and domestic questions requiring the co-operation of several departments) and the War Cabinet was dissolved, and a full cabinet of twenty members constituted. A meeting of prime ministers was summoned for June, 1921, to act along the lines of the Imperial War Cabinet and to deal with pressing problems.

ARMY AND NAVY.—The land forces of the United Kingdom consist of the regular army and the territorial army. The regular army is paid for by the imperial exchequer (and by some dominions), and serves both at home and overseas. The territorial army serves only at home in peace time, but is liable to service overseas in time of war, subject to the consent of Parliament. Only volunteers serve. For military purposes the kingdom is divided into seven districts (commands), and the London district. The land forces are administered by an army council presided over by the Secretary of State for War; the territorial army to a large extent by county associations. The soldiers are trained chiefly at the Royal Military Academy, the Royal Military College, and the Staff College. The total personnel on 1 March, 1921, was 341,000, of whom 201,000 were British troops, 55,600 emergency soldiers, and 84,200 Indian and colonial troops. The garrison on the Rhine includes 15,000 men; 9300 British soldiers are stationed in Constantinople, 18,000 in Palestine, 77,000 in Mesopotamia. The home garrison numbers 140,500, the territorial army 100,000. In 1920 the estimated enrollment in the British navy was 127,500, as against 415,000 at the date of the armistice on 11 November, 1918. The administration of the navy is in the hands of the First Lord of the Admiralty, a cabinet minister. In the Disarmament Conference of 1921-22 at Washington, United States, it was decided that the limit of Britain's navy should be 22 major ships with a net tonnage of 580,458, but she was given the right to construct two new ships, provided she scrap four old ones, thus making a total of 558,950 tons to her credit after the new ships are completed. The reorganization of a Far Eastern fleet, the East Indian Squadron, and the Australian, Canadian, and New Zealand navies is in process. In May, 1912, the Royal Flying Corps came into existence. In 1918 an Air Ministry was formed, and the control of the air forces was vested in an Air Council. In April, 1921, a separate Secretary of State for Air was appointed. The Air Force at that time numbered 20,880 men, and the gross expenditure (estimated) in 1921 was £19,033,400.

JUSTICE.—The different courts or sessions are graded according to the importance of the case with which they have to deal. In criminal matters, beginning with the lowest, the gamut runs through petty sessions, quarter sessions, high court, court of criminal appeal. Civil disputes between private citizens are tried at the county court, divisional court, the high court, or the court of appeal. Supreme above all other courts and able to hear appeals from all is the tribunal of the House of Lords, consisting of the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, ex-Lord Chancellors, and eminent peers holding life peerages only, and known as Law Lords. There are besides two other divisions of the high court: the Court of Chancery, and the Court of Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty. There is in addition the Bankruptcy Court, and also special commissions dealing with railways and canals.

INTERNAL COMMUNICATIONS.—The railway mileage in 1919 was 23,725; total capital paid up at end of year, £1,325,000,000; number of passengers carried, 1,551,200,000; working expenses, £187,058,000; net receipts, £53,070,000. The Government control of the railways as a war measure lasted from August, 1914, to August, 1921. In 1918-19 there were in the United Kingdom 2720 miles of tramways and light railways open for public traffic, of which 2047 miles were operated by electric traction. Of the total mileage 1705 miles were worked by local authorities and 1015 miles by companies. In England and Wales the total length of canals, according to the latest statistics, was 3641 miles.

FINANCIAL STATUS.—The revenue in 1920-21 was £1,425,984,666 (£=$4.55), of which £134,003,000 came from customs; £199,782,000 from excise; £7,073,000 from motor vehicle duties; £47,729,000 from estate, legacy, succession, corporation, etc., duties; £28,591,000 from stamp taxes; £650,000 from land taxes; £1,900,000 from house duties; £394,146,000 from property and income taxes; £219,181,000 from excess profit taxes; £650,000 from corporation profits tax; £20,000 from land value duties. The total non-tax revenue was £394,259,666. The total consolidated fund services, which are mainly bestowed on the national debt, cost £378,047,000 in 1921; and the total supply services, including the army, navy, and civil service, cost £317,381,000; total expenditure chargeable against revenue, £1,196,428,000. In the civil service estimates for 1921-22 the expenditure for public education was £63,518,000; old age pensions and Ministry of Pensions, £137,707,000; civil demobilization and resettlement, etc., £18,325,000; loans to dominions and allies, £5,000,000; others, £123,265,000. The estimated expenditure, chargeable against capital in 1921-22, was £10,472,500. The excess profits tax, which was 50% in 1915, was increased to 60% later, and finally to 80%, producing £223,116,000 in 1917-18, £283,976,861 in 1918-19, and £289,208,046 in 1919-20. From April, 1915, to April, 1920, incomes of and below £130 a year were exempt from the income tax. From April, 1920, exemption is allowed to bachelors with earned incomes below £150 (or unearned below £135), and to married person with earned incomes below £250. The income from the supertax, i. e., that paid by persons with incomes exceeding £2500 a year, in 1919-20 was £340,000,000, and the estimated number of persons chargeable 48,000. On 30 November, 1920, the approximate national debt of Great Britain was £7,735,628,000.

PRODUCTION AND INDUSTRY.—The general distribution of the surface of England in 1920 was as follows: mountain and heath grazing land, 2,732,000 acres; permanent pasture, 12,667,000 acres; arable land, 11,181,000 acres; woods and plantations (1913), 2,697,000 acres; total surface, excluding water, 32,386,000 acres. The acreage and yield of the principal crops in 1920 was: wheat, 1,875,000 acres, 6,669,000 quarters; barley, 1,637,000 acres, 6,335,000 quarters; oats 2,266,000 acres, 10,746,000 quarters; turnips and swedes, 988,000 acres, 14,193,000 tons; hay, 6,069,000 acres, 8,211,000 tons. In 1920 the live stock included 1,884,902 horses (for agriculture only), 11,770,274 cattle, 23,407,072 sheep, 3,113,314 pigs. In England and Wales in 1920 there were 80,737 holdings between one and five acres; 194,059 holdings between 5 and 50 acres; 129,703 holdings between 50 and 500 acres; and 13,49% holdings of over 300 acres. Up to the end of 1914 the total quantity of land acquired for small holdings by the various local authorities in England and Wales, according to the Small Holdings and Allotments Act (1908), was 198,104 acres, let to 13,327 individual tenants and 5 associations; and the land acquired for allotments was 23,522 acres, let to 130,526 individual tenants and 52 associations. On 1 May, 1918, there were estimated to be about 1,400,000 allotments in England and Wales (500,000 before the war). The Board of Agriculture makes grants for scientific research in agriculture, under the Development and Roads Improvement Funds Act, 1909 and 1910, which provides for a national fund for the development of agriculture, forestry, fisheries, and analogous resources of the United Kingdom. The forestry area of England is 1,720,330 acres.

On 31 December, 1918, there were registered in the United Kingdom 6867 sailing boats and 11,334 steam vessels with a total tonnage of 10,100,945.

TEXTILES.—In 1920 1,560,000,000 pounds of cotton were used in the textile industry, 865,000,000 pounds of wool, 67,000,000 pounds of flax. The value of the products exported (in thousands of pounds) was: cotton, 401,700; woolen, 135,000; linen, 23,900. The home production of wool in 1920 was estimated at 106 million pounds, and of flax at 27 million pounds. The fall in the price of cotton and the break in Far Eastern Exchange had a depressing effect on the cotton production; in the year 1920 the exports were 4,496,557 yards as against 7,075,252 yards in 1913, but the value of the 1920 exports was three times greater. The value of the woolen exports was five times their value in 1913. The volume of production in most industries is below that of 1913, owing to lack of foreign markets, shortening of hours of labor, government interference, and other conditions.

COMMERCE.—In 1919 the imports free of duty (exclusive of bullion, specie and diamonds) amounted to £1,381,634,807, 84.9 per cent. In 1920 the value of the exports was £1,557,974,984, of which £1,335,569,027 was the value of British goods. In 1913 the total was much less, £634,820,326, but values have risen greatly since that year. Trade with Russia has come to a standstill; that with Germany has been slowly increasing. The outstanding feature in the recent trade statistics has been the heavy buying from and the light selling to the United States.

The total loss of United Kingdom merchant vessels from the outbreak of the war in August, 1914, to the end of October, 1918, was 9,031,828 tons; new construction in that period amounted to 4,342,296 tons; purchases abroad, 530,000 tons; enemy tonnage captured, 716,520 tons, causing a net loss of 3,443,012 tons.

MINING.—The recent miners' strikes emphasize the close connection of the coal industry with the industrial life of the nation. During the war the Government fixed the prices, guaranteed a certain amount of profits to the mine owners, and retained the remaining profits. After the war the Government's surplus was enormous, owing to the sale of coal abroad at famine prices in response to the enormous demands of the continent. To this the miners objected, saying that it should go into lowering the price of coal and raising their wages. The quarrel between the miners who insisted on keeping the mines nationalized and the Government, which desired a return to normal conditions, had a decided influence on the coal exports of 1920, which was only 25,000,000 tons as against the yearly average of 73,000,000 tons in 1909-13. In 1920 the production was 58,000,000 tons less than the production of 1913. However, the depreciation of mine equipment, the run-down condition of the coal transport equipment, and the reduction of the working day are factors to be considered, as well as the loss of foreign markets. In 1913 5,993,000 tons went to Russia, in 1920 only 92,000 tons; to Germany, 4,563,600 tons in 1913 as against 13,000 tons in 1920; to South America, 6,892,000 tons in 1913 compared with 880,000 tons in 1920. The steel production of 1920 was greater than that of any pre-war year. In 1920 8,000,000 tons of pig iron and 9,055,000 tons of steel ingots and castings were produced.

RELIGION.—The Established Church of England is Protestant Episcopal. The King, as Supreme

Governor of the Church of England, nominates all the bishops and archbishops. There are three archbishops at the head of the three provinces of Canterbury, York, and Wales, and 43 bishops and 39 suffragan and assistant bishops. The latest statistics give 14,614 civil parishes. Of the marriages celebrated in 1919, 59.7% were in the Established Church, 5.2% in the Roman Catholic Church, 11.5% were Nonconformist marriages, 0.04% were Quaker marriages, 0.5% Jewish, and 23.1% civil marriages in the Registrar's office. The Unitarians have about 350 places of worship; the Catholic Apostolic Church about 80; the New Jerusalem about 75. The Salvation Army included (1919) about 24,600 officers and employees, 11,170 corps and outposts, and 71,400 local officers.

In 1914 an act was passed disestablishing and disendowing the Church in Wales; it came into force 31 March, 1920.

By Apostolic Letters of Pope Pius X, 28 October, 1911, the Catholic Church in England and Wales, which had previously consisted of one province, was divided into three; on 17 February, 1916, a fourth province, that of Cardiff, was added; on 22 March, 1917, the new diocese for Essex was erected, receiving the name of Brentwood, on 20 July, 1917. As at present constituted the dioceses are divided as follows: Westminster (1850), consisting of the Archdiocese of Westminster and five suffragans, Brentwood, Northampton, Nottingham, Portsmouth, and Southwark; Birmingham (1911), consisting of the Archdiocese of Birmingham and three suffragans, Clifton, Plymouth, and Shrewsbury; Liverpool (1911), consisting of the Archdiocese of Liverpool and four suffragans, Hexham and Newcastle, Leeds, Middlesbrough, and Salford; Cardiff (1916), consisting of the Archdiocese of Cardiff and one suffragan, Menevia. The number of priests, secular and regular in England, according to the English "Catholic Directory" for 1922, is 3962; the number of churches and chapels, 1933. There are 1196 Catholic elementary schools with 316,917 pupils, and 431 secondary schools with 43,695 pupils. The Catholic population is approximately 1,931,990. For further statistics see articles on the dioceses mentioned above.
